TO THE
CHRISTIAN READER.

Especially to the suffering Saints in these Three Nations.

Christian Reader,

Thou hast here presented to thy view that strange sight which so much astonished Moses, Exod. 3. 3. A Bush burning with fire, and not consumed: A lively Emblem of the Church, oft times all on a light flame with the fire of Persecution, and yet so far from being consumed, that The Blood of the Martyrs proves the Seed of the Church: And indeed she is the only, and true Salamander, that can live in the fire: Yet this, not by any strength of her own, but because the Angel of the Covenant, even the Lord Jesus Christ is in the Bush, either to slack the fire, or to strengthen the Bush, and make it incombustible. In this Book thou mayest see, as in a Mirror, what hath been the lot and portion of the Church and People of God from the Creation hitherto, viz. Through many tribulations to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Here thou hast a certain and infallible mark of the true Church of Christ, viz. To be hated and persecuted by the Devil and his Instruments. Here thou mayest see what is the constant concomitant of the semel Eccle-

Act. 14. 22.

Gospel, when it is received in the love and power of it, viz. Persecution, according to that of the 1 Thel. 1. 4. Apostle. Ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, &c. Neither yet is God an hard Master in dealing thus with his faithful Servants. He knows that heavy afflictions are the best benefactors to heavenly affections; and that grace is hid in nature here, as sweet Water in Rose Leaves, which must have the fire of affliction put under to distil it out. He knows that when afflictions hang heaviest, corrupt affections hang loofest upon his Children. Yet doth not the
Lam. 3. 33, 34. Lord afflict willingly, nor grieve the Children of Men, to crush under his feet all the Prisoners of the Earth; but he will hereby try who are his in deed and in truth, not in name and profession only: For as the Eagle tries her young ones by turning their Faces to the Sun beams, so those Christians that can outface the Sun of Persecution, are sincere indeed.

One thing is very remarkable in this History, that usually before any great Persecution beset the Church, the holy Men of those times observed that there was some great decay of zeal, and of the power of Godliness, or some mutual contentions and quarrels amongst the People of God, or some such sin or other that provoked God against them; and then, as the Shepherd sets his Dog upon his Sheep, when they go astray to bring them in, and then rates him off again: So God lets loose wicked Persecutors upon his own Children, but it's only to bring them in unto him; and then, he not only restrains their rage, but casts the rod into the fire. If judgment begin at the House of God, what shall the end of them be that obey not the Gospel of God? Much excellent use may be made of this History: As, teaching us,

That

That whosoever will take Christ truly, must take his Cross as well as his Crown, his Sufferings as well as his Salvation.

That Persecution is the Bellows of the Gospel, blowing every spark into a flame; and that Martyrs Ashes are the best compost to manure the Church, their Blood to water it, and make it fertil.

That Gods Children are like Stars, that shine brightest in the darkest night: Like Torches, that are the better for bearing: Like Grapes, that come not to the proof, till they come to the press: Like Spices, that smell the sweetest, when pounded: Like young Trees, that root the faster for shaking: Like Vines, that are the better for bleeding: Like Gold, that looks the brighter for scouring: Like Glowworms, that shine best in the dark: Like Juniper, that smells sweetest in the fire: Like the Pomander, which becomes more fragrant for chafing: Like the Palm-tree, which proves the better for pressing: Like the Camomile, which the more you tread it, the more you spread it. Yea God knoweth that we are best, when we are worst, and live holiest, when we die fastest; and therefore he frames his dealing to our disposition, seeking rather to profit, than to please us.

That when God exposeth us to Persecution, he expects our speedy and thorow Reformation, if we desire the affliction to be removed. For as it were to no purpose for the Finer to put his Gold into the fire, except it lie there till it be refined: So were it to small purpose for God to lay afflictions on us, if so soon as we whine and groan under his hand, he should remove them, before we be bettered thereby. Whereas afflictions, like Lots Angels, will soon away, when they have done their errand. Like Plaisters, when the sore is once whole, they will fall off of their own accord.

5. That we should with patience submit to the afflicting hand of the all-wise God, and our merciful Father, saying with the Church, I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him: Considering also that impatience under affliction, makes it much more grievous. As a Man in a Feaver, that by tossing and tumbling, exasperates the disease, and encreaseth his own grief.

6. That all that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. It hath been the portion of all the Saints, 1 Tim. 3. 12. from the Creation hitherto. What Son is there whom the Father Chasteneth not? One Son indeed God had without sin, but not without sorrow; for though Christ his natural Son, was sine corruptione, without corruption, yet not sine correctione, without correction; though he was sine flagitio, without crime, yet not sine flagello, without a scourge. And if they did these things to the green Tree, what shall be done to the dry? And behold the wonderful wisdom of God herein! who by these afflictions separates the sin that hates, from the Son that heloves, and keeps him by these thorns from beaking over into Satans pleasant pastures, that would fat him indeed, but to the slaughter.

Luk. 23. 31. In an Appendix to this Book, I have added the Lives of fundry of our Modern Divines, which I conceive not to be heterogenial to the rest of the Work; for though they were not Martyrs, yet may they well be stiled Confessors, in regard of the great Persecution and Sufferings, which most of them met withal whilst they lived here. And if any ask the reason why I have added no more? It is because my intelligence comes in so slowly; and if such as

are able, will take the pains to inform me, I shall (if God spares life) add more to the end of the next Impression of my Lives of the Fathers, and Modern Divines. I hope that these my weak and poor endeavors will not prove ungrateful, nor be judged unseasonable, considering the times wherein we live: For if the same sins abound amongst us in these days, which have been the forerunners of Persecutions formerly; we have cause to fear the worst, and to prepare for it; Forewarnd, forearm-
The reading of this History will manifest what wonderful constancy, and patience the Saints have shewed in their greatest sufferings; what hath been the power of Almighty God in their support; and what miserable ends many of their Persecutors have come to. My hearty desire is, That by reading of this Book, God may have the glory, and thy Soul the comfort, and I shall be well appayed for my pains, Who am,

What? yet more Books? what Spirit now inspires
Your Pen to write of Torments, Wars and Fires?
What? Will that Pen that drew to th' Life before,
Change stile, draw Death, and speak of Life no more?
What blustering Boreas rais'd these stormy Winds,
Which blew down Churches, shook the steddiefst Minds,
Sure Hell's broke loose, and Devils in the flesh
Are come out thence to try their wits afresh.
Who ever heard Troy's story with his ears,
And could restrain his eyes from shedding tears?
I quake to hear what Saints in former days
Ne're shook to feel, so they might win the Bays.
They conquer'd all; Their patient disposition,
O' recame both Pope, and spanish Inquisition.
They conquer'd Kings, and won the Crown at last;
Preft towards the Prize, forgetting what was past.
The Story's sad; 'tis true, yet the Authors skill
Hath made that pleasant which in't self is ill.
Away long-winded Volumes, Times disease;
This Author doth our phansies better please.
Large Books are endless; but 'tis his design
T'enclose great Volumes in his single Line.

MR. SAMUEL CLARKE,
ON HIS MARTYROLOGY.

OH, Welcome home, Divine Drake, welcome home,
First girdle of the World of Martyrdom.
Who seeks for more, can no new thing descry.
Y' have left no room for new discovery.
These Maps and Charts you bring, nay every Letter Makes you the worlds great Patron, it your Debtor.
To call't a Map doth but a Part imply,
'Tis the whole Globe of Martyrology.
A little History of the Martyrs deaths.
Pisgah's too far to see the Holy Land,
Stand here on Calvary, and view't at hand.
Let others brag at large, whose fancy 'tis
To say a SAINT by a Periphrasis.
Who doth this Book of yours with theirs confer, Finds Saint and Martyr in one Character.
Though (some there be) that differ from the rest
In judgment, and account short Writing best:
Those I am sure will praise you when they eye
Your skill in Tachygraphiography.
Th' are many words make Volumes, do but look
And you shall see 'tis matter makes a Book.
All Volumes of this Subject here are set As't were contracted in an Alphabet.
In Characters, for brevity, 'tis good
That Vowels be by Cons'nants understood.
The least is best if no essential be Wanting to make't a perfect Entitie.
Man's but the World Epitomiz'd, but this Compendium of Saints and Martyrs is.
Its commendation is it self, 'tis best Though't were without this my Probatum est.

TO THE
CHRISTIAN READER
OF OUR
ENGLISH MARTYROLOGY.

Christian Reader,

History (saith one) is of Noble, and necessary use, because by setting before us what hath been, it premonisheth us of what will be again: Sith the self same Fable is acted over again in the world, the persons only are changed that act it, Eccles. 1. 9. The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be: And that which is done, is that which shall be done, and there is no new thing under the Sun. This is most true, especially in regard of the state of the Church in this world, which hath been, and ever will be Militant, till, as a Bride, she be adorned, and prepared for her Husband. But in the meantime (as St. Paul said of himself) bonds, and afflictions abide her in every Age and Country: Rev. 21. 2. Acts 10. 22. For the shadow doth not more necessarily follow the Body, than tribulations the Gospel. That Scripture must be fulfilled: All that vwill live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution. 1 Tim. 3. 12. And indeed this ensuing History will make it good, wherein, as in a Perspective, you may look back upon all the Persecutions which the Church of England for almost One Thousand Five Hundred years together, and therein you shall see as their conflicts, so their conquests, as their tribulations, so their triumphs, whilst the Saints of God assured themselves, That a their

their light afflictions, vvhich vvhere but for a moment, vvrought for them a far more exceeding and eternal vveight of glory. Hence it is that many of them mentioned in this Book have gloried in their tribulations: Have counted it as a special favour that God had honored them so far as to suffer for his name sake: And instead of complaining of the number and weight of their afflictions, have rather wondered that they were not more nor greater. For as the reason why a Perspective Glass draws remote objects close to the Eye, is, because it multiplies the species: So they by Faith apprehending an infinite and everlasting glory, conceived any thing through which they looked upon it, to be but short, and vanishing.

Indeed sometimes we shall find some of these Worthies at the first encounter (through the violence of temptation, and humane frailty) giving back: But as the fire by an Antiperistasis gathers heat when it's compassed about with the cold air, so they (according to the nature of true grace) have gathered strength by their relapses. And no marvel though such weaknesses sometimes appear in the strongest Christians; For as the Stars shine but with a light borrowed from the Sun; so unless God shine secretly into our Hearts, and give light, and heat to our graces, they will neither appear for our comfort nor support in the dark hour of temptation. Yet as a workman hath neither lost nor lessened his skill, because he either wants Tools, and cannot work, or hath bad Tools, and therefore cannot work so well as if he had better: So neither doth it follow that grace is abated in the Soul, because it's not so able, vigorous, and active when God withdraws his exciting, and cooperating grace, as when he pleaseth to afford them.

Some may think this labor of mine superfluous, because these things have been so largely, and fully handled by that faithful, and laborious servant of Christ, Master Fox in his Acts and Monuments. But such may be pleased to take notice, that Master Fox writes not only a Martyrology, but a general History of the Church; so that had I only gathered together what lieth dispersed, and scattered in those Three great Volumes of his concern.

concerning this subject, I suppose my pains would not have been accounted (at least by some) useles: But besides, I have turned over many other Authors, out of whom I have supplied what was wanting in Master Fox, and (I think) made this History of the Persecutions of the English Church more compleat than ever it was before. I considered also that in these times many want money to buy, and leasure to read larger Volumes, who yet may find both money, and time to purchase, and peruse so small a Volume as this is. I hope I can truly say, that my eye, and aim that hath not been at any mans prejudice, but at the advancement of Gods glory, and the publick good, which that I may attain, I desire thy prayers for him who is

Thy servant to promote thy

Faith, and comfort,

On our English Martyrs, and Martyrologers, Master FOX, and Master CLARKE.

HEN Israel out of Egypt came,
A Pillar of Cloud and of bright Flame
Him guided in his doubtful way,
As golden Phœbus guides the day;
And when he hides his purer light,
Silver Cynthia steeres the night:
Doubts any well-disposed Man
Which is the Road to Canaan?
(As vile Seducers subtil Arts
Sometimes make nutant pious Hearts:
But never more than now with us
Did vvalk the Ignis fatuus.)
Lo here a Pillar for his Guide,
A Cloud of Martyrs, that did ride
In fiery Chariots to their Crown;
These let his Eyes be fixt upon.
Their flaming death he shall not die
Perhaps, but one that's cold and dry,
But their bright lives a Copy are
Which must guide his, as did the Star
The Eastern Sages to the Sun
Of Righteousness. Lives that were spun
So very fine, and choicely even,
That they were near of Kin to Heaven.
Burning and shining lights they were,
As Christ said of his Harbinger.

Persons

Persons that deeply did abhorre
The doctrine of the Scarlet Whore:
And no less Protestant Latitude,
Which holy Fervor doth exclude.
The narrow way they nimbly trod,
Their Zeal presented them to God,
An Holocaust continually:
Not then alone vwhen they did fry
In furious flames, and so asserted
Gods sacred Truth, by most deserted.

What would they say were they alive,
To what we see? How would they grieve!
O vwhat a Martyrdom vwould it be,
All England in a Flame to see!
First (which is sad) Political,
Then (worse) Ecclesiastical.
To see Faith failing, Love massacred,
And violated all that's sacred.
To see Gods Oracles not prized,
His faithful Messengers despised.
His Day made little of, his House
A Stable, Baptism frivolous.
His zealous People that oppose
Abaddons Fury, counted Foes.
Repentance folly, Prayer a bable,
Nor better the Communion-table.
To see Brownism, Arminianism,
Anabaptism, Socinianism, Mechanick Dawism, Blasphemies,
Ancient and new-sprung Heresies,
With saddest Schismes that ever were,
(Made without either Wit or fear.)
And more than can be enumerated,
(They are so many) Tolerated.
To those Heroick Souls these things
Would have been forer sufferings

Than

Than Dungeon, Fire and Faggot were:
For them they chearfully could bear;
But these so sad, so execrable
They would have found Intolerable,
( Just like a wounded Spirit;) for so
Gods faithful ones now living do.
Who had they many Centuries
Of Lives, would gladly sacrifice
Them all to th' flames, to do away
Our darkness, and restore the day:
And all Revolting do so hate,
That for a Realm they'll not abate
The least degree of vvhhat they know
Gods Children ought to be and do.

Says any one, you need not tie
Your self so short, take liberty.
Those tedious duties vvhich you do,
Save well you may, and be fav'd too.
You are i'th' ancient way, 'tis true:
But there is now found out a new,
Which through a pleasant Plain doth lie;
That other is too hard and high.

They answer, Poor seduced Wretch,
How talkest thou? did not Christ preach
Strait is the Gate, narrow the Way?
Who Talents owe, Mites must not pay.
Think'st thou we do too much? Alas,
We do too little. Is our Pace
Swifter than needs? It is too dull.
Seem we too hot? We are too cool.
Then they resolve henceforth to bear
More fruit, and better every year.
The rather because there's many a one
That did bear fruit, but now bears none.
And some bear bitter fruit. They were Once sweet wine, now sharp vinegar.

Once

Once fragrant Roses, that did feed
The sense, now an unfavoury weed
Once like pure honey, now like gall,
Or like the Angels since their fall;
Who do oppose with all their might
What once they dearly loved, Light.
Now gracious Souls, the more they see
In other Men deficiency,
The more they will themselves apply
To duty, so to make supply.
And the more active others are Against the light, the greater care
They always to preserve it take.
Great enmities, great courage make.
Witness this Cloud of Witnesses.

Blessed be God that such as these, (Men with the height of grace endued, Stars of the greatest magnitude,)
Were our dear Mothers Sons, and crown'd
VVith their impressions English ground.

Blessed be God for that full Pen
Of Reverend Fox, that Man of Men!
A Man inspir'd by him that had An Inkhorn by his side, and made Marks in his Mourners Fronts, to free
Them from approaching misery.
A Fox, whom that Quaternion
Of Beasts, described by St. John,
So full of Eyes, rejoyc'd to see
Added to their Society.

Blessed be God for this fair hand
Of Reverend Clarke, that can command
Many voluminous Books to come Into one neat Compendium.
Our Martyrs here he doth present
Epitomiz'd; what's his intent?

To

To pleasure such as cannot buy
The greater Martyrology.
And such as leisure want to read
What's largely there historied.
Also to inflame the Chill, and bring
To steadfastness the wavering.
Right Christian ends. O may he see Abundant fruit grow on this tree.

Mr. SAMUEL CLARKE,

ENGLISH MARTYROLOGY.

BUt stay! what smell is this so near the Graves?
 who's that, corruption from corrupting saves?
 whose Tombs are these I see? whose Bones? whose Dags?
 Are these the holy Reliques of the just?
 Then sure some curious Chymist hath been here,
 And Limbeck's holy Asbes: Oh, come near,
 And taste this Quintessence; smell what Perfumes
 Evaporate out of the Martyrs Tombs.
 Oh, were't not pity then these Tombs should stand Seal'd up, say not, A sacrilegious Hand
 Hath violated these their Monuments,
 How should they else have sent forth such sweet Scents?
 Egyptian Embalmes might keep a while
 Some Carcass from corrupting, and beguile
 Poor hungry Worms of tasting of those Feasts,
 To which Death had invited them as guests.
 The Roman could bereave the Grave, and burn
 His Friends, and put up th' asbes in an Urn:
 And after many Generations past,
 Could shew what did remain of first and last,
 Methodically placed altogether,
 His Grandfirs Grandfir, and his Fathers Father.
 Poor shifts to save an Earthy tottering frame,
 Which death, the Souls true Heirs, as right doth claim,
 But yet corruption plays both for the Mother,
 Takes Life from one, and doubles't to another.
 Here such are found, whose Posthume lifes full bloom,
 Phoenix-like springs from Asbes barren womb.
 They antedate the Resurrection,
 And live Two lives, where others live but one.

Your obedient Son,
 JOHN CLARKE.

The

The BOOKSELLER to the READER.

Courteous Reader, I thought it not impertinent to give you an account of the works of this worthy Author Mr. Samuel Clarke, who hath been a very laborious Instrument of the publick good, not only by his painful preaching of the Gospel of Christ for many years, but likewise hath undeniably manifested the same to the world in Print.

Reader, my design is only to give you an account of the Books published by him, they so eminently declare his praise, that for me to endeavor it would be presumption, and a diminution of his fame, which are as follow, viz.

First, The Marrow of Ecclesiastical History in Two Parts, the First containing the Life of our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, with the Lives of the Ancient Fathers, Schoolmen, and Modern Divines; the Second, containing the Lives of Christian Emperors, Kings and Sovereign Princes, whereunto are added the Lives of inferior Christians, who have lived in these latter Centuries; and lastly, are subjoyned the Lives of many of those who by their virtue, and valour obtained the Sir-name of Great; divers of which give much light to sundry places of Scripture, especially to the Prophecies conferring the Four last Monarchies, with the Effigies of many of the most eminent of them in Copper Plates. Fol.

2. The General and English Martyrology, with divers Lives which were formerly Printed in several Volumes I have here compleated in One, he that shall please to add the above mentioned Book unto this will have a compendious Church History, with the Rise, Reign, and Ruin of most Hereticks, and Heresies which have disturbed her peace from the beginning of the world to this present Age, as also Gods various and providential dealings with the same.

3. A Mirrour, or Looking-glass both for Saints and Sinners, held forth in many Thousand Examples, wherein is represented, as Gods wonderful goodness and mercy to the one, so his severe judgments against the other, with a Geographical History of the world in Two Volumes in Fol.

4. A Description of the Seventeen Provinces, commonly called the Low-Countries, as also of the Rivers, Cities, Commodities, Strong Towns, Forts, and other things remarkable therein. price 1. s.

5. Medulla Theologiae, containing sundry cases of Conscience, Fol. with some other small Books.

Your kind reception of these Four large Volumes, viz. The Lives, Martyrology, and Examples in Two Volumes, may be an encouragement to me to make publick more of this Authors works, which he hath already prepared for the Press; the world hath had some experience of a part of one of them, called Medulla Theologiae, &c. Alphabetically composed. That which is already Printed endeth in part of the Letter C; but since he hath compleated the whole Alphabet: And likewise he hath finished another Book, called, Flores Theologiae, both which elaborate pieces, he is very desirous might be made publick for the advancement of Religion, and Piety.

Yours W. B.

THE
Mentioned in the OLD TESTAMENT.

CHAP. I.

The Persecution of the Church in the first Ages of the world, and so forward till the Incarnation of Christ.

THe first Murtherer and Persecutor that was in the World, was the Devil; and the first method and means that he made use of to carry on this persecution, was by subtilty and large promises, That by eating the forbidden fruit, they Gen. 3. 11 should have their eyes opened, and should be as gods, knowing good and evil: And hereby he drew our first Parents from their obedience unto God, and cheated them of that blessed and happy estate which God had created them in. Since which time, his enmity against the Church and Children of God, hath never ceased; but by his effectual working in the children of disobedience, he hath provoked and stirred up one Man to be the Persecutor and Devourer of another. Thus he provoked Cain to rise up against, and to slay his brother Abel, and though the Scripture be silent how the wicked Cainites, the sons of Men, behaved themselves towards the Sons of God; yet doubtless they persecuted them with the Tongue, if they proceeded no further. Can we imagine that Noah, that was a Preacher Noah; of Righteousness in the midst of a perverse generation, could escape without hatred, scorn, and contempt? How many jeers (think ye) had he whilest he was building the Ark, as doting and dreaming (not of a dry Summer, but) of a wet Winter? The Earth in his days was said to be corrupt, and filled with violence; Gen. 6. 11 which violence certainly was principally exercised against the Church of God: And afterwards when the World was reduced to a very small number, yet then Satan had his cursed Ham that persecuted and mocked his own Father, the righteous Noah. Was not Lot also persecuted and scoffed at in Sodom? Gen. 19. 9. Was not Isaac, in Abrahams house, mocked by Ismael? Gen. 21. 9. Was not Jacob hated and persecuted by his Brother Esaü? Gen. 27. 41. Joseph by his Brethren? Gen. 37. 4. And that because he brought unto his Father their evil report, Vers. 2. Was he not afterwards cast into a Pit by them? Vers. 24. Then sold to the Ismaelitisb Merchants, who carried him into Egypt, Vers. 28. There he was persecuted by his whorish Mistress, Gen. 39. 17, 18. Cast into prison, where his feet were hurt with B Fetters,

Fetters, and he was laid in Irons, Psal. 105. 18. But these were but small persecutions in comparison of those which followed.

The Israelites in Egypt.

For when the children of Israel were multiplied in Egypt, Paraoth, King of Egypt, set over them Task-masters to afflict them with their burdens, Exod. 1. 11. thinking thereby to eat up, and wear them out; and when that prevailed not, they made them serve with rigor, and they made their lives bitter with the hard bondage in Mortar, and in Brick, and in all manner of service in the Field: All the service wherein they made them serve, was with rigor, Vers. 13, 14. And when this prevailed not, the King commanded the Midwives, Siprah and Pnah, when they did the office of a Midwife to the Hebrew women, and saw them upon the stools, if they were delivered of a Son, they should presently kill him, Vers. 15, 16. And when these Midwives neglected his commands, he charged all his people, that every Son that was born to the Israelites, should be cast into the River Nilus, Vers. 22.

Moses.

Moses was persecuted by Pharaoh, who sought to slay him; which caused him to flee into the Land of Midian, Exod. 2. 15. And when God sent him back into Egypt, to deliver his people from the house of bondage, how did Pharaoh persevere and proceed in his persecuting the People of God; he caused Straw to be taken from them, and yet the number of Bricks to be continued: And when the task was not done, the officers of the children of Israel were cruelly beaten, Vers. 14. And when God had brought out his people with an high hand from under the Tyranny of the Egyptians, and carried them into the Wilderness, how did Satan stir up some sons of Belial against Moses and Aaron, even Korah and his complices, Two hundred and fifty Princes, who cried out against them. Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the Congregation are holy, even every one of them, Numb. 16. 3.

Moses and Aaron.

Israel in the time of the Judges.

Afterwards, when the children of Israel were settled in the Land of Canaan, they were often grievously oppressed, and persecuted by the wicked and idolatrous Nations that lived amongst them, and round about them; as first by Chushan-Rishathaim, King of Mesopotamia, who tyrannised over them eight years, Judg. 3. 8. Then by Eglon, King of Moab, who slew many of them, and oppressed them eighteen years, Vers. 13, 14. Then by the Philistines, Vers. 32. Then were they mightily oppressed for twenty years together, by Jabin, King of Canaan, Judg. 4. 2, 3. Then did the Midianites persecute them with so much cruelty, that they were forced to forsake their Houses, and to make them Dens and Caves in the Mountains, to shelter and hide themselves from them, Judg. 6. 2. Yea, for seven years together, they tyrannised over them: And when the Israelites had sown their Land, they came up in such multitudes, that they destroyed the increase of the Earth, and left no sustenance for Israel, neither Sheep, nor Ox, nor Ass, Vers. 3, 4. Then the Philistines again, and the Ammonites lorded it over Israel, and brought them into great distress for eighteen years, Judg. 10. 8. After that, the Philistines, yet again, oppressed them for forty years together, Judg. 13. 1. And afterwards they slew of them, in two Battles, Thirty four thousand, and carried away the Ark of God also, 1 Sam. 4. 2, 10, 11. Then in Saul's time, these Philistines so distressed Israel, that the people were forced to hide themselves in Caves and Thickets, and in Rocks, and in high places, and in Pits; yea, some of them forsook their own Countrey, and fled beyond Jordan, 1 Sam. 13. 6, 7. and the Land was so enslaved to them, that there was not a Smith to be found in Israel, but the Philistines either slew them, or carried them away captives; so that the Israelites were fain to go to the Philistines to have their Instruments of Husbandry set in order, Vers. 19, 20.

time.

David.

How David was persecuted by Saul, all his time, the Scripture doth amply set forth, 1 Sam. 19. &c. And was not he persecuted grievously, when cursed and railed upon by Shimei, 2 Sam. 16. 5, 6, &c. The Church of God was afterward persecuted under Rehoboam's Reign, by Shishak, King of Egypt, who took Jerusalem, and carried away the Treasures of the Lords House, and of the Kings House into Egypt. And again under Asa, by Baalsha, King of Israel, 1 King. 15. 16. And by Zera, the Ethiopian, who came against Judah with an Army of a

Mentioned in the Old Testament.

Thousand thousand Men, and Three hundred Chariots, 2 Chron. 14. 9. Yea, so malicious and subtle is Satan, that he sometimes stirs up one Saint to persecute another, as he stirred up good King Asa to persecute the Prophet of the Lord, who dealt plainly and faithfully with him, by casting him into prison, 2 Chron. 16. 10. Asa persecutes a Prophet.

Micaiah also was persecuted and imprisoned by Ahab, 2 Chro. 18. 25, 26. Under Jehoshaphat, the Church of God was persecuted by the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites, whom God destroyed, by setting of them one against another, 2 Chro. 20. 23. Micaiah;

After the return of the Jews from captivity, the People of the Land labored to weaken the hands of the Men of Judah, and troubled them in the building of the Temple, and hired Counsellors against them, to accuse them to Cyrus and Ahasuerus: They wrote also against them to Artaxerxes, that they were a rebellious people; and that if they should be suffered to build Jerusalem, they would neither pay toll, tribute, nor custome to the King, Ezra 4. 4, &c. And having by this malicious suggestion gotten authority, they came upon the poor People of God, and enforced them to give over their work. Yea, and afterwards, when by the command of the Lord; the Jews had again set upon the building, Tatnai and Sbether-Bosnai came up to discourage and discharge them from it; and when this prevailed not, they wrote against them to King Darius. Again, when Nehemiah came to Jerusalem, and began to build the Wall of the City, how were they scorned and jeered by Sanballat, Tobiah, and Gesbem? And when the work prospered in their hands, and jeers would not prevail to stop it, they then conspired to fight against Jerusalem, and so to hinder it; but neither that

Then they accused the people of God of treason and rebellion, ver. 6. &c. Then they hired a false Prophet to terrifie Nehemiah, ver. 10. 12. Then they corrupted, and held intelligence with some of the Nobles of Judah to betray him; notwithstanding all which designs, God preserveth Nehemiah, and the building of Jerusalem is finished. And thus far the sacred Scriptures of the Old Testament have given us a certain Register of the Persecutions, Martyrdoms and sufferings of the Church and Children of God for the space of about three thousand five hundred years; from the creation of the world, to the Restauration of the Jewish Polity under Nehemiah.

After the death of Eliashib the High-Priest, Judas his Son succeeded, and after him John his Son, which John had a Brother called Jesus, who was much favoured by Bagoses, General of Artaxerxes, who promised him the Priesthood, which made him take occasion to quarrel with his Brother John, who thereby was so much provoked against him that he slew him in the Temple; Bagoses being informed hereof, came with his Army to Jerusalem, and kept the Jews in bondage seven years, making them tributaries, so that before they could offer their daily sacrifice, they were compelled to pay for every Lamb, fifty Drachmes. After the death of John, Jaddus his Son succeeded in the Priesthood, in whose time Alexander the Great passed over the Hellepont, and having overcome the Lieutenant of Darius, he conquered many Countries in Asia minor, intending suddenly to come upon Jerusalem. Jaddus being informed of his intention, was sore afraid; he therefore offered sacrifice, and commanded the people to make their prayers unto God, for direction and protection in this common danger: and when he heard that Alexander approached, he caused the Priests and people to put on white garments, and himself, attired in his Priestly robes, went before them; when Alexander espied them, he himself marched before the rest of his company, and coming to the High-Priest, he fell down on his face before him: then did all the Jews circle him in round about, and with one voice saluted him. Alexander's chief Commanders were wonderfully astonished at this deportment of the King, and thought he was out of his wits: and Parmenio stepping to him, asked him what he meant thus to adore the High-Priest of the Jews, when as all other men adored him; Alexander answered, I do not adore him, but that God whom the High-Priest worshippeth, for in my sleep I saw him in such an habit when I was in Macedonia, consulting with my self how I might conquer Asia; and he bad me make no delay, assuring me that he would both guide me and my Army, and would deliver the Empire of the Persians into my hands: Then gave he the High-Priest his hand, and went with him to the City, and coming to the Temple, he offered sacrifice according to the direction of the High-Priest; then did Jaddus shew him Daniels Prophecy, wherein his Victories over the Persians, and his Monarchy were foretold, which much rejoiced Alexander: then did he command the Jews to ask some favours at his hands; the High-Priest requested only that they might live after the Ordinances of their fore-fathers, and that every seventh year they might be exempted from taxes and tributes, which he fully granted: they besought him likewise that the Jews which were in Media and Babylon, might be permitted to live after their own Laws, which he willingly promised, and so departed: this was about the year of the World 3632. and before Christs Nativity 332.

After

After the death of Alexander, his Kingdom was divided amongst his Captains, amongst whom Ptolemy the Son of Lagus held Egypt, who falling out with Antigonus that held Asia minor, there grew great Wars between them, wherein Ptolemy won from him all Syria, and going to Jerusalem on a Sabbath day under pretence to offer sacrifice, the Jews suspecting nothing, he surprized the City, carrying away many of the Jews into captivity into Egypt: but after his death, his Son Ptolemy Philadelphus at his own cost redeemed an hundred and twenty thousand of them paying twelve Crowns a piece for each of them, and sent them back into their own Country: He sent also by them fifty talents of gold for the temple, and obtained of Eleazer the High-Priest, the Law of the Jews and 72 Interpreters (out of every Tribe some) who translated it into Greek in 72 days: and having finished their work, Ptolemy returned them with great rewards for themselves, and with many rich presents to Eleazer.

The Persecution of the Church of God under Antiochus Epiphanes, before the Nativity of Christ about 168 years.

Afterwards the Jews being divided amongst themselves, one part of them went to Antiochus, telling him that their purpose was to forsake the Religion and Ordinances of their forefathers, and to follow that of the Kings, and to live after the manner of the Greeks, entreating him to license them to live in Jerusalem; which Antiochus assenting to, they went to Jerusalem, where they behaved themselves very wickedly, but finding opposition from the other party of the Jews, they sent for Antiochus, who led his Army against Jerusalem, and encamped before it, and by his faction within, had the gates opened, and the City betrayed to him, about the year of the World 3796. and before the Nativity of Christ 168.

Being entred Jerusalem he slew many of the faithful Jews, and having taken great spoils, he returned back to Antioch.

Two years after he came to Jerusalem again, and having seen what quantity of gold was in the Temple, and what a huge number of Presents and precious Ornaments were in the same, he was so overcome with covetousness, that he violated all conventions and conditions formerly made, equally raging against his own and the adverse party, sparing neither friend nor foe: then he spoiled the Temple, and carried away the Vessels dedicated unto God, the golden Table, the golden Candlestick, the Censers, &c. leaving nothing behind him of any value; yea, he inhibited the godly Jews from offering their usual and daily sacrifices to God, and having spoiled the whole City, he slew many of the Inhabitants, and carried the rest away into Captivity, with their Wives and Children, to the number of ten thousand: He also burned the fairest buildings of the City, and brake down the Walls, and raised a Fortrefs in the lower City, and having inclosed it with high Walls, he planted a Garrison of Macedonians therein, with whom remained the scum of the Apostate Jews. He also caused an Altar to be erected in the Temple, on which he commanded Swine to be offered in Sacrifice, contrary to the Law.

He constrained the Jews to forsake God, and adore those Idols which himself he worshipped; he forbad them to circumcise their Children and appointed Overseers to constrain them to fulfil his Commandments, so that many for fear of punishment nishment conformed themselves to his will; But such as were of upright hearts, and valiant minds, little respected his menaces: whereupon they were beaten, and exposed to cruel punishment many days together, in the midst of which they yielded up the ghost; for after they were whipt, and maimed in their bodies, they were tortured and crucified; the women were strangled, and the circumcised children were hung up about the necks of their Parents; and where any Books of the sacred Scriptures were found, they defaced, and burnt them, and such with whom they were found, were put to most cruel deaths.

At this time there dwelt at Modin (a Village of Jury) one whose name was Matthias, a Priest of the rank of Joarib, that had five Sons, John called Gaddis, Simon called Matthes, Judas called Maccabeus, Eleazer called Aaron, and Jonathan called Apphas. This Matthias often complained to his Sons of the miserable state of their Countrey, of the sacking of their City, the profanation of the Temple, and the miseries of the people, telling them, that it was better for them to die for the Law, than to live in Ignominy. When therefore the Kings Commissaries came unto Modin, and commanded the people to sacrifice according to the Kings Edict; they first applied themselves to Matthias, as to the most Honourable person amongst them, requiring him first to offer sacrifice, that others might follow his example, promising that the King would much honour him for it. Matthias answered that he would by no means commit that Idolatry, assuring them, that though all other Nations, either for love or fear, should obey the Edicts of Antiochus, yet that he, nor his children could be induced to forsake the Religion of their fathers. As soon as he had thus spoken, a certain Jew stepped forth to offer sacrifice according to the command of the King, where-with Matthias, inflamed with zeal, was so displeased, that he and his Sons fell upon him, and with their Swords hewed him to pieces; he also slew Apelles the Kings Captain, and some other Souldiers, who would have withstood him. Then he overthrew the Altar, and with a loud voice, he said, If any one be affected to the Laws of their Fathers, and to the service of God, let him follow me? and so he retired into the deserts with his Sons; the like did the rest, with their wives and children, hiding themselves in caves and dens. The Kings Captains having intelligence hereof, with the Garrison that was in the Citadel at Jerusalem, they pursued them into the desert, and having overtaken them, they first endeavoured by persuasions to draw them to Idolatry; but the Jews absolutely refusing to yield to their wicked wills, resolved rather to die than to submit to them, and to commit such impiety; whereupon these bloody persecutors assailed them on the Sabbath day, and burned them in their caves, who neither resisted their enemies, nor closed up the mouths of their caves, supposing it to be a violation of the Sabbath, if they should fight or work upon that day; some thousands of men, women and children were there stifled; yet divers escaped, who joyned themselves with Matthias, and chose him for their Captain. Then did he inform them, that they ought to fight on the Sabbath day, if they were assailed by their enemies, and prevailed with them not to be guilty of their own death, by their neglect to defend themselves; and so having assembled a sufficient number, he destroyed the Altars, and slew those that had forsaken their Religion: commanding others to circumcise their children, and driving those from every place, whom Antiochus had set to see his Laws executed. But when he had thus governed one year, he fell sick, and perceiving his end to approach, he called his Sons, and exhorted them to follow his steps in maintaining the Law of God, and fighting for their Countrey, telling them, that then they should have God for their Assister, who will not forsake those that love and fear him, but taking pleasure in their virtues, will once more grant them favour to recover their former peace and liberty; and saith he, God will establish you in the possession of your ancient Laws; and though our bodies be mortal, and subject unto death, yet the memory of our virtuous actions is enfranchised by immortality; make therefore no difficulty to hazard your lives in so good a cause: But above all things I exhort you unto concord, cord, and in whatsoever any one of you shall be found more naturally apt and fitted than another, let him prosecute the same without any contradiction from the rest. I charge you to obey your Brother Simon (who is a politick and valiant Man) in whatsoever he shall counsel you; but make Judas your Captain, who is both valiant and strong, for he shall revenge the injuries and outrages which have been done to our Nation, and shall put our Enemies to flight: Second him therefore with Men of valor, and such as fear God, and by this means you shall be sure to prevail.

CHAP. IV.

The Life of Judas Maccabeus.

After Matthias his death, Judas took upon him the Government of the Wars; and by the help of his Brethren, and other Jews, he drave the Enemies out of the Countrey, purging the Land of all the uncleanness that had been brought into it. But when Apollonius, who was Antiochus his General in Samaria, heard of it, he gathered his Army together, and invaded Judæa, against whom Maccabeus went forth, and after a terrible Battle, overthrew him, slew Apollonius, and many of his Soldiers; took his Camp, and therein a very rich booty; and Judas gat Apollonius his Sword for his part in the spoil. Then Seron Governor of Calosyria gathered all his Forces together, and hired many Apostate Jews to joyn with him, and so marched against Judas, as far as Bethoron: Judas also advanced towards him, but when he perceived that his Soldiers were unwilling to fight, by reason of the inequality of their numbers; and for that, they had eaten no Meat, but had fasted for a long time, he encouraged them, saying, That the means to obtain the victory, consisted not in the greatness of their number, but in their devotion towards God; whereof they had evident examples in their Forefathers, who with a small number, had often defeated many thousands of their enemies, &c. Hereby he so prevailed with his Soldiers, that, dreadful of the number of their enemies, they all together ran upon Seron, and after a cruel fight, routed his Army, and slew him, together with eight hundred of the Syrians; the rest escaped by flight.

Antiochus hearing of these things, was highly displeased, and therefore he assembled all his Forces, and hired many mercenaries; but having mustered his Army, he found that his treasure failed him to pay so great a multitude; whereupon he resolved, first to go into Persia, to gather up his tributes; and in the mean time, he made Lyfias his Vicegerent, a Man of great esteem with him, and one that governed all the Countreys from Euphrates, to the Borders of Egypt: With him he also left some Elephants, and part of his Army, commanding him expressly, That when he had conquered Judæa, he should make the Inhabitants thereof his slaves, and sell them to those that would give most for them, and that he should destroy Jerusalem, and utterly abolish that race. Lyfias having received this commandment, sent Ptolemy, Nicanor, and Gorgias, (Men of great authority about the King) with an Army of Forty thousand Foot, and Seven thousand Horsemen, to invade Jury; who marching as far as the City Emmaus, encamped in the Field, and increased their Army with many Syrians, and Apostate Jews. There came also divers Merchants a long with them to buy the prisoners that should be taken, bringing gieves along with them to manacle the prisoners withal. Judas having viewed the Camp, and number of his Enemies, encouraged his Soldiers, exhorting them to repose their confidence and hope of Victory in God. He also appointed a Fast, that they might humble themselves, and call upon God, by Supplications and Prayers, for success in such an extream danger. Then he told them, that God would have compassion upon them, and give them strength to stand against their Enemies, and to put them to shame.

The

His Exhortation to his Army.

The next day he Marshall'd his Army by thousands, and by hundreds, and sent away all that were newly married, or that had lately bought possessions, according to the Law. And then he said unto the rest, My Countrey-men and Companions, we never yet had any occasion more necessary, wherein we ought to express our courages, and contemn dangers, then at this present: For now, if you fight valiantly, you may recover your Liberties, which ought the more to be prized, because thereby you may win opportunity to serve God, and so live an happy life; but if ye prove cowards in the fight, you shall be branded with perpetual infamy, and hazard the utter extirpation of our Nation. Think therefore, that if you fight not, you must die; and on the contrary, assure your selves, that in fighting for your Religion, Laws, and Liberty, you shall obtain immortal glory: Be ready therefore, that to morrow morning you may bid your Enemies battle. Immediately news was brought him, that Gorgias with Five thousand Foot, and a thousand Horsemen, was sent forth under the conduct of some Fugitives, by night to fall upon him. Whereupon he resolv'd the same night to break into the Enemies Army whilst they were thus divided. Having therefore refresh'd himself and Army, leaving many Fires in his Camp thereby to deceive the Enemy, he march'd all night to seek them out. Gorgias finding that the Jews had forsaken their Camp, conceited, that for fear they were fled into the Mountains, and therefore he resolv'd to search them out diligently. But in the morning, Judas accompanied only with Three thousand Men, and those but ill armed, because of their poverty, shew'd himself to the Enemies that were at Emmaus, and having view'd their Warlike Discipline, and mighty number, and how well they were incamp'd; he encouraged his followers to fight valiantly, telling them, That God would deliver their Enemies into their hands, and thereupon causing his Trumpets to sound, he rush'd in upon his Enemies with such fury and resolution, as altogether affrighted and discourag'd them; and having slain such as resist'd, he pursu'd the rest as far as the Plains of Idumea, &c. In this fight about Three thousand of the Enemies were slain; yet would he not suffer his Soldiers to take the spoil, telling them, That as yet they were to fight with Gorgias and his Army; but so soon as they had (through Gods mercy) with the like valor beaten them, they might then securely enrich themselves by the prey of all their Enemies. Gorgias, with his Army, being upon an Hill, and discovering the flight of their Friends, and the Jews readiness to give them Battle, were so affrighted, that they all fled; whereupon Judas with his Men return'd to gather the pillage, and having found great store of Gold, Silver, Scarlet, and Purple, he return'd to his dwelling with joy, praising God for their happy success.

Lysias hearing of this overthrow was much enrag'd, and presently assembled another Army of near sixty thousand chosen foot, and five thousand Horsemen, wherewith he went to invade Judea and encamp'd in Bethsura: Judas hearing of it, came forth against him with ten thousand men, and seeing the number of his enemies so far to exceed his, he earnestly cry'd unto God, that it would please him to fight with, and for him; and then charg'd the vanguard of the enemy with so great force, that he discomfited, and slew about five thousand of them. Lysias perceiving hereby the resolution of the Jews, who would rather die than lose their liberty, he return'd with the rest of his Army unto Antioch, where he continued, and entertain'd many mercenaries, to make a greater Army for the conquest of the Jews: In the mean time Judas assembled the people, and told them, that having obtained so many victories, through the mercy of God, they ought now to go up to Jerusalem, and purify the Temple that was desolate, and to offer unto God the sacrifices that were ordained by the Law. Then going up with a great multitude of people, he found the Temple desolate, the gates burn'd, and grass growing within the same: grieving therefore at so sad a spectacle, he began to weep, and all the people that were with him, and having chosen out some of his best Souldiers, he commanded them to force the Garrisons which were in the fortresses, whilst himself purg'd the Temple. Then he caus'd to be made a Table, a Candlestick, and Altar for incense, all of gold; he put up a rail rail also, and set Gates to the Temple: and having thrown down the Altar of burnt-offerings that was profaned by Antiochus, he built a new one of stones neither hewed nor hammered: Then on the Twenty fifth of Chassén [September] were lights set in the Candlestick, perfumes laid upon the Altar, loaves set upon the Table, and sacrifices offered upon the new Altar, which was the same day three years wherein before the sacred service was changed into profane and hateful impiety. Then did Judas with his Country-men celebrate a Feast unto the Lord for eight days, praising God with Hymns and Psalms: He enclosed the City also with a Wall, and built high Towers thereon, in which he planted Garisons against the incursions of the enemies. He fortified also the City of Bethsara, that it might serve as a Fort against the enemy.

But the Nations round about them, being greatly displeased with this prosperity of the Jews, oppressed divers whom they surpris'd by Ambushes and Treachery; whereupon Judas warred against them to hinder their incursions: He slew many of the Idumeans, and brought away a great prey out of their Country, and shut up the Sons of Baan their Prince, who lay in wait for the Jews, and after a siege, he overcame them, setting fire on their Towers, and killing all the men that were therein. After this he made War upon the Ammonites, who had a mighty Army under the conduct of Timotheus: with these he fought and overcame them, and took their City of Jazor, and burned it, leading their Wives and Children into captivity, and so returned into Judea: But the neighbouring Nations hearing of his departure, assembled themselves together against the Jews in Galaad, who retiring into the Fort of Dathema, sent to Judas, requesting him to come and relieve them: And whilest he was reading their Letters, other Messengers came out of Galile, informing him that they were assaulted by the Inhabitants of Ptolemais; Tyre, and Sydon, and others thereabouts.

Hereupon Judas commanded his Brother Simon to take three thousand chosen men, and with them to relieve those Jews that were assailed in Galile: And himself with his Brother Jonathan, accompanied with eight thousand fighting men, marched into Galaad, leaving the rest of his Forces under two other Captains, whom he commanded to have a watchful eye over Judea, yet not to joyn Battel with any enemy till his return. Simon in Galile fought against his enemies, discomfited them, pursued them to the Gates of Ptolemais, and slew about three thousand; and having gathered their spoils, he released many Jews that were Prisoners, restored their goods to them, and so returned home. But Judas having passed Jordan, and marched three days journey, he met the Nabathians; who told him that his Brethren were besieged in their Castles and Cities, and some of them were already brought into great extremity and penury: Hereupon he first assailed the Inhabitants of Bozra, took their City, set it on fire, and killed all the men that were able to bear arms: Then marching all night, he came early in the morning to the Castle, where the Jews were besieged by Timothies Army. The enemies were just then raising their Ladders to scale the Walls, and applying their Engins for battery: Then did he encourage his men to fight valiantly for their Brethren that were in danger, and causing his Trumpets to sound, he distributed his Forces into three Battalions, wherewith he assaulted the enemies, but they, hearing that it was Maccabæus, were struck with so great a fear, that immediately they fled: Judas with his men pursuing them, slew about eight thousand, and then marching to Malla [a City of the enemies] he surpris'd it, slew all the men therein, and burnt it with fire: After which he destroyed Chassomo, Bosor, and divers other places.

Shortly after Timothey leavied another great Army, hired many of the Syrians, and drew forth all his Allies to his assistance; with these he marched to Jordan, exhorting them valiantly to oppose the Jews, and to hinder their passage over the River, telling them that if the Jews gat over, they were sure to be put to the worst: Judas hearing hereof, marched hastily against his enemies, and having passed the River, he presently set upon them, killing some, and grievously affrighting the rest, who casting away their arms, immediately fled; some of them to save themselves fled into a Temple called Carnain, but Judas having taken the City and Temple, slew them and burnt the same. Then did he lead away with him all the Jews that lived in Galaad, together with their Wives, Children and substance, and brought them into Judea.

When he drew near to the Town of Ephron, they had Baricadoed up his way that he could not pass: Then did he send Ambassadors to them, to desire them to open his passage; which when they refused, he besieged the City, took it by assault, burned it down, and slew all the men that were therein. After having passed over Jordan, they came into Judea with great joy and gladness, praising God, and offering sacrifices of thanksgiving to him, for the safe return of his Army: For that in all those Battels and encounters, he had not lost one Jew.

But whilest Judas and Simon were gone upon these expeditions, the two Captains which he had left to command the Garisons of Judea, being desirous to obtain the reputation of valiant men, took their forces, and went towards Jamnia, against whom Gorgias, Governour of that place, issued out, and slew two thousand of them; the rest fled to Judea.

The Idumeans overcome.

Afterwards Judas and his Brethren warred against the Idumeans, took divers of their Cities, and with a great booty returned home with great joy. Antiochus in the mean time being in Persia, heard of a wealthy City called Elymais, in which was a rich Temple of Diana, &c. Thither he went, and besieged it, but the Inhabitants sallied out, and with great loss drave him from thence, whereupon he returned to Babylon: There also news was brought unto him of the overthrow of his Captains in Judea, and that the Jews were grown strong, which together with his former defeat, so wrought upon him, that he fell sick, and finding no hope of recovery, he called his most familiar Friends to him, and told them that his sickness was violent and desperate, and that he was plagued with this grievous affliction, so that he had tormented the people of the Jews, destroyed their Temple, committed horrible Sacriledg, and contemned the reverence of God: But now he vowed, that if it would please the Lord to restore him, he would become a Jew, and do many great things for the people of God: As also that he would go through all the known world to declare the power of God. Notwithstanding which, the Lord knowing his Hypocrisie continued to plague him after a terrible manner: He had a remediless pain in his Bowels, and intollerable torments in all his inward parts: His Body bred abundance of Worms, which continually crawled out of the same: yea, he so rotted above ground, that by reason of the intollerable stink, no man could endure to come near him, neither could he himself indure the same. And thus this vile Person, who had formerly in a proud and insolent manner protested that he would make Jerusalem a common burying place, and the streets thereof to run with the Blood of Gods people; by Gods just judgment ended his life in extream misery: But before his death, he called Philip one of his chief Captains, and made him governour of his kingdom, requiring him to be very careful of his Son Antiochus.

Antiochus Eu-
pator.

Then was Antiochus proclaimed King, and surnamed Eupator: About which time the Garisons, and Apostates that were in the Fortres at Jerusalem, did much mischief to the Jews: For setting unawares upon those that came to the Temple to worship, and to offer their sacrifices, they slew them: Hereupon Judas resolved to cut off these Garisons, and to that end he assembled all the people, and besieged them, and having made certain Engines, and raised divers Rams, he earnestly prosecuted the Siege: But divers of those Apostates, escaping by night, went to Antiochus, desiring him not to suffer them to perish, who for his Fathers sake, had forsaken their Religion, &c. Then did Antiochus send for his Captains, commanding them to raise a mighty Army, which accordingly they did, gathering together a hundred thousand Footmen, and twenty thousand Horsemen, men, and thirty two Elephants; with these Forces he departed out of Antioch, and made Lysias General of his Army: Then did he besiege Bethsura, a strong City, but the Inhabitants valiantly resisted him, and sallying out, burned his Engines which he had prepared for Battery. The King continuing the Siege for a long time, Judas hearing of it, raised his Siege from before the Castle of Jerusalem, and marched towards Antiochus his Army, and when he came near to the enemies Camp, he lodged his Army in certain streights, called Beth-zacharia.

Bethsura besieged.

The King hearing thereof, raised his Siege from Bethsura, and marched towards the streight where Judas with his Army was; The King first caused his Elephants to march thorow the streight: About each Elephant were a thousand Footmen, and a hundred Horsemen for his guard, each Elephant carried a Tower on his back, furnished with Archers: The rest of his Forces he caused to march two ways by the mountains, commanding them with huge shouts and cries to assail their enemies, and to uncover their golden and brazen bucklers, that the reflection thereof might dazle the eyes of the Jews; yet was not Judas at all amated, but entertained the Army with a noble courage, slaying about six hundred of the forlorn hope: But Eleazer, Judas Brother, seeing a huge Elephant armed with royal trappings, supposing that the King was upon him, he ran against him with a noble courage, and having slain divers that were about the Elephant, he thrust his sword into the belly of the Beast, so that the Elephant falling upon him, slew him with his weight.

Eleazer slew, and is slain by an Elephant.

Judas seeing the great strength of his enemies, retired back to Jerusalem; and Antiochus sent back part of his Army against Bethsura, and with the rest he marched on towards Jerusalem. The Bethsurites despairing of relief, and their provisions failing them, surrendered their City, having the Kings Oath that no outrage should be offered to them, yet he thrust them out of the City and placed a Garison in it. He spent also a long time in besieging the Temple at Jerusalem, they within defending it gallantly. For against every Engine that the King erected, they set up a contrary Engine: Their only want was of Victuals, because (it being the seventh year) the Land had not been tilled; whereupon divers of them fled away secretly, so that very few remained for the defence of the Temple. But behold the good providence of God! just then came tidings to Antiochus, that Philip coming out of Persia, intended to make himself Lord and Master of the Country, whereupon Antiochus concluded to give over the Siege and to march against Philip: But first he sent an Herald to Judas, promising them peace, and liberty to live according to their Religion, which conditions Judas accepting of, took an Oath from the King for performance, and so surrendered up the Temple. Whereupon Antiochus entred the same, and seeing it so impregnable a place, contrary to his Oath he commanded his Army to level the Wall that environed it, and then he returned to Antioch, leading away with him Onias, surnamed Menelaus, the High-Priest, whom by the counsel of Lysias, he put to death, because he had advised his Father to enforce the Jews to forsake their Religion: A just reward for so wicked a Fact.

Bethsura surrendered.

The Temple besieged.

A special providence.

Perfidiousness.

A just judgment.

Antiochus finding that Philip had already conquered much of his Country, went strait against him, fought with him, and slew him.

Presently after Demetrius the Son of Seleucus took possession of Tripolis in Syria, and setting the Diadem upon his own Head, he leavied an Army, and invaded the Kingdom of Antiochus. The people generally submitted themselves to him, and laying hold upon Antiochus and Lysias, they brought them both to Demetrius, who caused them to be slain.

To this new King, divers Jews (banished for their impiety) together with Aleimus their High-Priest, resorted, accusing their Nation, and in particular Judas and his Brethren for killing their Friends, and banishing such as were Friends to Demetrius. Demetrius was much moved with these reports, and therefore he sent a great Army under Bacchides, a valiant and experienced Captain, tain, with commission to kill Judas and his Confederates. Bacchides with his Army marched into Judea, sending an Herald to Judas and his Brethren, pretending peace, when he intended to surprize them by subtilty and treachery. But Judas seeing that he came with so great an Army, found out his drift, and would not trust him : yet many of the people were deceived with his Proclamation of peace, and therefore submitted to live under his government, first having received an Oath from him, that neither they, nor any of their Followers should be endamaged. But when they had committed themselves to him, he falsified his Oath, and slew sixty of them.

Perjury.
Perfidiousness.

Then removing his Army from Jerusalem, he came to the Village of Bethzeth, where, apprehending many of the Jews, he slew them all, and commanded the rest in the Country to obey Alcimus, with whom he left a part of his Army, and so returned to Antioch unto Demetrius.

Alcimus his subtilty and
cruelty.

Alcimus by his feigned and familiar deportment, drew many more of the wicked Jews to joyn with him, and then he went with his Army thorow the Country, and slew all that took part with Judas. Judas perceiving that hereby many upright men, and such as feared God were slain : He also with his Army went thorow the Land, and slew all the Apostates that were of Alcimus his faction. Whereupon Alcimus repaired to Demetrius, and made grievous complaints against Judas, who fearing that if Judas prospered, it would be prejudicial to his estate, he sent Nicanor to make war against him, and having furnished him with a sufficient Army, he commanded him that he should not spare any one of that Nation.

Nicanor sent against Judas.

His subtilty;

Nicanor coming to Jerusalem, offered no act of hostility, endeavouring to entrap Judas by subtilty, sending him a peaceable message, wherein he protested that he would do him no injury, and that he came only to express the good affections of Demetrius to the Nation of the Jews.

Judas in danger.

Judas and his Brethren being deceived with this glozing message entertained him and his Army. Nicanor then saluted Judas, but whilest he was conferring with him, he gave a sign to his Souldiers to lay hands on him ; But Judas discovering the treason, brake from him, and escaped to his Army. Then did Nicanor resolve to make open War upon him, and bad him Battel near to a Burrough called Caper-salama, where he obtained the victory, and constrained Judas to retreat into the Fortres at Jerusalem ; There did Nicanor besiege him for a while, and then retired : At which time certain of the Priests and Elders met him, and having done their reverence, they shewed him those sacrifices which they intended to offer to God for the Kings prosperity : But he Blaspheming, threatned them, that if they did not deliver Judas into his hands, he would destroy the Temple at his return. Hereupon the Priests wept abundantly, praying unto God to defend the Temple, together with those which called on his Name therein, from the outrage of their enemies.

to retreat.

Nicanor's
Blasphemy.

Nicanor coming near to Bethoron, received a great supply of Souldiers out of Syria. Judas also was about thirty furlongs distant from him not having above a thousand men, yet he exhorted them not to fear the multitude of their enemies, but to set courageously upon them, expecting help from God ; and so encountering with Nicanor, there was a very doubtful conflict, yet Judas had the upper hand, and slew a great number of the enemies. Nicanor himself also fighting valiantly, was slain ; whereupon his Army fled : But Judas speedily pursuing, made a great slaughter of them, and by sound of trumpet, giving notice to the neighbouring places, the Inhabitants thereof betook themselves to their weapons, and meeting those that fled, they slew them, so that no one escaped from this Battel, though they were at least nine thousand men.

Battel.

Nicanor slain.

Hereupon ensued a little peace to the Jews. Shortly after Alcimus the High-Priest, intending to beat down an old Wall of the Sanctuary, was suddenly stricken by God, became speechless, and fell to the ground, and having endured many grievous torments for many days, he died miserably. Then did the people people by a general consent give his place to Judas: who hearing of the great power and victories of the Romans, sent two of his intimate Friends to Rome, to intreat the Romans to be their Allies and Confederates, and to write to Demetrius to give over his Wars against the Jews.

The Embassadors coming to Rome, were entertained by the Senate, and friendship concluded betwixt them, upon these conditions, That none under the Romans should war against the Jews, nor furnish their enemies with Victuals, Ships or Silver: That if any enemies should assail the Jews, the Romans should succour them to the uttermost of their power, That if any made war upon the Romans, the Jews should succour them, That if the Jews would add or diminish any thing from this Association, it should be done with the common advice of the Romans; And that what should so be ordained, should remain irrevocable.

A League betwixt the Jews and Romans.

Nicanors death, and the discomfiture of his Army being reported to Demetrius, he sent another Army under Bacchides, who coming into Judea, and hearing that Judas was encamped at Bethzeth, he marched against him with twenty thousand Footmen, and two thousand Horsemen. Judas had not in all above two thousand men, who seeing the multitude of Bacchides Army, were afraid, so that some, forsaking the Camp, fled away, insomuch as there then remained with Judas but eight hundred men. His enemies also pressed so upon him, that he had no time to re-assemble his Forces, yet he resolved to fight with those eight hundred men, whom he exhorted to be of good courage, and to fight valiantly: But they answered, That they were not able to make head against so great an Army, and therefore they advised him to retire, and stand on his guard, till he had gathered more Forces: Judas replied, God forbid that the Sun should see me turn my back upon the enemies, though I die, and spend my last blood in this Battel, yet will I never soil my former worthy actions by an unbecomming flight. And so having encouraged his Soldiers, he commanded them without apprehension of danger, to bend themselves altogether against the enemy. Bacchides drew out his Army, arranged them in Battle, placing his Horse-men in the Wings, his Archers, and light-armed men in the Front, and then the Macedonian Phalanx, and so causing his Trumpets to sound, and his Soldiers to shout, he charged his enemies. Judas did the like, and encountered Bacchides, so that there was a most cruel conflict, which continued till Sun-set.

A terrible Battel.

Judas perceiving that Bacchides, and the flower of his Army fought in the right Wing, he chose out the most resolute of his Soldiers, and drew them towards that quarter, and set upon them, brake their Squadron, and thrusting into the midst of them, he forced them to flee, and pursued them as far as to the mount Aza; But the left Wing followed Judas, and so enclosed him on the back part. He seeing himself thus enclosed, resolved with his Followers to fight it out to the last. He slew a great number of his enemies, till at last he was so wearied, that he fell to the ground, and was there slain: His Soldiers seeing him dead, betook themselves to flight. Simon and Jonathan his Brothers, by intreaty recovered his Body, carried it to Modin, where they interred it, all the people weeping divers days for him; and Jonathan his Brother succeeded him in the Government.

CHAP. V.

The Martyrdom of the Maccabees.

Whilst Antiochus Epiphanes wsliving, he thrust out Onias the High-Priest from his Office, and put into his room Jason his Brother, whereupon Jason promised to pay him yearly three thousand six hundred and sixty Talents of Silver. This wicked Jason presently forced all the people to forsake their Religion, Religion, and to build Baths: He hindered the defence and building of the Temple. Hereat God was very wroth, and stirred up Antiochus to go to Jerusalem, where he was gallantly entertained by the Jews. Then did he presently make an Edict, That whosoever of the Jews refused to offer Sacrifice to the Gods, he should presently be broken to pieces on the wheel. But those that were godly did little esteem that Edict.

cruel Edict.*

Constancy.

Subtily.

Courage.

Antiochus perceiving that the rigour of his Edict prevailed little, and that many chose rather to die, than to forsake their Religion, he sitting in an eminent place, and calling all the Jews together, caused Swines-flesh to be sacrificed on the Altar, and to be offered to every Hebrew to eat. Amongst the multitude thus assembled, there was one Eleazer, a Priest, a man that feared God, and one who was very aged, of a reverend countenance, and famous for his virtue; To him Antiochus said, Be advised by me, holy old man, to avoid those torments which are prepared for the obstinate; preserve thy reverend age, and condemn not the benefit of life; Take the sacrifice, and eat of the Swines-flesh, for no wise man will credit the Jews opinion to refuse that meat which nature hath ordained for mans use, as well as any other: why should this Beast be more abominable than others? &c. Or, suppose your Laws are to be observed, yet will they excuse thee, seeing thou sinnest not voluntarily, but by compulsion? To whom Eleazer answered; we, O Antiochus, follow not vanity, but the Verity of Religion, and fear of torments cannot make us embrace another: But suppose that the Religion left us by our Fore-fathers had no firm ground, yet should not torments make me forsake it. Do not esteem it a small matter to eat forbidden meat, and to taste of that which is sacrificed to Idols; For it is a profane thing to touch things that are profane, and we are taught by our Law to suffer with patience whatsoever, for Gods cause, is inflicted upon us, &c. And therefore I refuse this prophane meat, well knowing what I ought to eat, as warranted by Gods Law, which I have learned to obey, &c. and herein will I persist, though with tyrannous hand thou pluck out mine eyes, or with a sharp knife wring up my entrails. Think not that because I am old, my Body is feeble: If I must be sacrificed for Gods sake, thou shalt find me as lusty and constant as a young man, and most joyfull in torments. Prepare an extraordinary fire, or what else thou pleasest, thou shalt find me more constant in the midst of all torments, then I am now before they come, &c. The chaste, and pure company of Fathers shall receive me into their number, where I shall not fear (O impious King) thy threats, &c.

His admirable
patience.

His zeal.

Whilst Eleazer spake thus boldly, the Soldiers haled him to be tortured, and stripping him naked, they hanged him up, and whipped him: and whilst on either side he was beaten, one cried, Obey the Kings pleasure and command. But this worthy man was not overcome by torment, but suffered as though he had been in a sleep: and fixing his venerable eyes upon Heaven, he knew in whom he believed, and to whom he sacrificed his life; and beholding the flesh on each side of his Body rent and torn with stripes, and the Blood issued out abundantly, he admired his own patience, and thanked God the Author of it: At last finding his own frailty, scarce able to endure such torments, he fell upon his face, which with stripes was all rent, and torn, still glorifying God, as he did before: Then a Soldier, to gratifie the King, like a mad man, did spurn, and tread upon him, to encrease his sufferings: But Eleazer, strong in body and mind, like a Champion of the true God, did never shrink at those pains, but by patience overcame the cruelty of his tormentors, so that his torturers admired that he should be able to bear them: Then the Kings Officers said, How long wilt thou forbear to obey the King? Eat Swines flesh and free thy self from all that thou endurest. Eleazer, though hitherto he had been silent in all his torments, yet could he not hear such profane counsel without answering, whereupon he cried out; we Hebrews are not so effeminate as to forsake the way of salvation wherein we walk to our old age, neither are we taught for fear of contumely, which will not long endure, to give others an occasion, and example to sin, &c. wilt thou, O Tyrant, esteem of us if we should yield unto thee? nay, thou mightest justly reprove our inconstancy: Then did the Soldiers, by the Kings command, command, cast him into the fire, and poured stinking and loathsome liquors into his Nostrils, all which he patiently suffered, till he was consumed in the flames: Yet when nature began to fail, lifting up his dazled Eyes to Heaven, he said; Thou, O God, art he from whom life, and salvation proceedeth: Behold I die for observing thy Laws: Be merciful to this thy Nation, and forsake not them whom hitherto thou hast protected in thy bosom, and under the shadow of thy wings; let my death end all misery, &c. and so he joyfully yielded up the Ghost.

Antiochus was but more incensed hereby, and therefore he caused seven Children of the Hebrews to be brought to Antioch, who being young, and therefore, as he thought, weak, and unable to endure torments, he presumed that either by perswasion, or fear, he should enforce them to forsake their Religion.

Then he commanded these seven, together with their Mother Salomona now aged, to be brought before him: They were of excellent beauty, and worthy Children of so vertuous a Mother. The Tyrant beholding them, with a merry countenance, craftily spake unto them: I wish your good, O admirable young men, do not therefore like mad men resist my commands: Avoid not only torments, but death also: I desire not only to exalt you to honour, but to encrease your riches, and possessions: Contemn therefore your own superstition, and embrace our Religion: if you refuse this (as I hope you will not) I will devise all torments, that by a lingering, and painful death, I may consume you: And to terrifie them the more, he caused all sorts of Instruments for torment to be brought forth before them, as Wheels, Rods, Hooks, Racks, Cauldrons, Cages, Gridirons, &c. with Engins to torment the Fingers, and Hands, as Gauntlets, Auls, Bellows, Brazen-pots, and Frying-pans, &c. Then said he, Obey me, O prudent young men, for if I command that which is a sin, yet do not you offend, being compelled to it.

Antiochus his subtilty.

But these Holy young men, inflamed with a divine Spirit, contemned these torments, and despised both threats and flatterie, denying to eat of the sacrificed Swines-flesh, and saying; wherefore, O Tyrant, dost thou Persecute us that are innocent? We desire to die; and will, till death expels life, firmly keep that which God commanded and Moses taught us: and therefore seek not, O Tyrant to seduce us by protesting thy unfeigned love: Thou lover of injustice, Master of cruelty, deviser of iniquity, the pardon thou profferest is more painful to us than punishments: we contemn death, and esteem not thy words, our Master Eleazer having taught us to despise them. why dost thou expect such pusillanimity in us young men, when of late thou foundest such courage in an old man? Thou canst not know our minds except by tearing our Bodies thou searchest them out: we will willingly for our God suffer any thing; and expect Heaven; whilst thou for thy cruelty to innocents, shalt be reserved to eternal Fire.

The seven Brethrens courage.

The Tyrant greatly moved herewith, caused them to be beaten with Bulls-pizels: First commanding Maccabeus the Eldest to be stripped, and stretched out upon a Rack, and his Hands to be bound, and so to be most cruelly beaten, who so wearied his tormentor by suffering, that they rather desired to give over, than he requested it: Then was he put upon a Wheel, and a weight hanged at his Feet, and so stretched round about it, that his Sinews and Entrails brake; yet all this while he called upon God, and then said to the Tyrant: O bloody Tyrant, who persecutest the Majesty of God; I whom thou thus tormentest, am no witch, nor Murderer, but one who dies for observing Gods Law: And when the tormentors, overcome with compassion, willed him to submit to the Kings pleasure, he said; O ye wicked Ministers of Tyranny! Your wheels are not so sharp and cruel, that I thereby will be forced to forsake Heaven, whereon my mind is fixed: Tear my flesh, yea if you please, roast it at the Fire: Torture each parcel of my Body with several cruelties; yet you shall not be able to force us young men to impiety.

Maccabeus his courage.

His resolute Speech.

As he thus spake, a Fire was kindled, and he thus racked on the Wheel, was thrown into it, and by flames was so burned that his Bowels appeared, yet was his his mind unmoved; and in the midst of his torments he cried thus to his Brethren; O beloved Brethren, make me your example; despise the alluring bates of this world; obey God rather than this Tyrant, who can if he please humble the proud and mighty, and exalt the dejected: Then was he taken from the Fire; and slain alive; His Tongue was pulled out of his Head, and he put into a Frying-pan, and so he departed out of this life, to the admiration of his enemies, and the joy of his Mother, and Brethren.

Aber's torments.

Then was the Second Brother, called Aber, haled by the Soldiers; and the Tyrant shewed him all those instruments of torment, and asked him if he would eat of the sacrifice: which he, denying to do, his Hands were bound with Iron Chains, and being hanged up thereby, the skin of his Body was slain from the crown of his Head to his knees, so that the entrails in his Brest were seen: Then was he cast to a cruel Libard, greedily thirsting after Blood, but the Beast smelling at him, forgot his cruelty, and went from him, without doing him any harm: This increased the Tyrants rage, and Aber by his torments grew more constant, crying aloud, O how pleasant is that death to me, which is caused by all sorts of torments for Gods sake! yea, the more pleasant, because I know I shall be rewarded in Heaven; Let these torments, O Tyrant, satisfie thy cruelty, for my pain is not increased by them, but my pleasure, as thou shalt find by my patience in these sufferings; I am more willing to suffer than thou to punish, yet my pain is less in suffering, than thine by inflicting: I am tormented for keeping the Law, thou by Gods justice shalt be banished from thy Regal Seat, yea, eternal torments are prepared for thee, which neither thy prophane mind is able to endure, nor thy power to decline, &c. And so shortly after he yielded up his soul to God.

Machir brought forth.

His courage.

Then Machir the Third Son was brought, whom all pitied, and exhorted by his Brothers examples to forsake his opinion, and so decline the punishment; But he being angry at such Counsel, replied, One Father begat us, one Mother bore us, one Master instructed us, &c. Therefore no longer prolong the time in vain; I came to suffer, not to speak, use all the Tyranny that possibly you can against my Body, yet have you no power over my Soul. This so moved the Tyrant, that he devised new torments beyond the reach of humane wit, and commanding a Globe to be brought, he caused him to be tied about it in such sort, that all his Bones were put out of joint, hanging one from another in a most pitiful manner; yet was the Holy Martyr nothing dismayed; Then the skin of his Head and Face was pulled off, and then was he put upon the Wheel, but he could be wracked no worse; for all his Bones were dislocated before; The Blood issuing from him abundantly, he said, we, O Tyrant, endure this torment for the love of God, and thou the Author of such cruelty, shalt be punished with everlasting pain: Then was his Tongue cut out, and he being put into a fiery Frying-pan, resigned his Spirit unto God.

His Speech at death.

Judas his courage.

Next followed Judas the Fourth Brother, whom all the people perswaded to obey the King: But he said, Your Fire shall not separate me from the Law of God, nor from my Brethren; To thee, O Tyrant, I denounce destruction, but to such as believe, salvation: Try me thou cruel wretch, and see if God will not stand by me, as he did by my three Brethren now in glory, &c. The cruel Tyrant hearing this, was so enraged, that he leaped down from his Chair to torment this Martyr himself; He commanded also his Tongue to be cut out, to whom Judas said, Thy cruelty will nothing avail thee; our God needs not by voice to be awaked, &c. He heareth such as call upon him with their hearts, and knows our thoughts afar off, &c. Cut out my Tongue if thou please, would thou wouldst so sanctifie all the parts of my Body, &c. and think not that thou shalt long escape unpunished: Then was his Tongue cut out, and he being bound to a Stake, was beaten with Ropes ends, which torments he bore with admirable patience: After which he was put upon the Wheel, where he ended his life, and went to the rest of his Brethren.

Then

Then spake Ach the Fifth Brother, Behold, O Tyrant, I come to be punished before thou commandest me; therefore hope not to alter his mind that desireth to be tormented: The Blood of my innocent Brethren hath condemned thee to Hell; I shall make up the Fifth, that by it thy torments may be increased: what offence have we committed that thou thus ragest against us? &c. All that thou canst allege against us is, that we honour God and live in obedience to his Laws, and therefore we esteem not punishment, which is an honour to us; Though no part of us be left untormented, yet we shall be the more rewarded by God. Then at the command of the King the Executioner cast him into a Brazen-pot, where he was prest down with his Head to his Feet, and afterwards he suffered all the torments inflicted on his Brethren; But he was so far from being discouraged, that suddenly starting up, he said, Cruel Tyrant, how great benefits dost thou (though against thy will) bestow upon us! yea the more thou ragest, the more acceptable to God shalt thou make us; Therefore I shall be sorry if thou shewest me any mercy: By this temporal death, I shall go to everlasting life. And having thus finished his sufferings, he died.

Then was Areth the Sixth Brother brought, to whom the Tyrant proffered the choice of honour, or punishment; But he being grieved at this proffer, said, O Tyrant, though I be younger in years than my Brethren, yet the constancy of my mind is not inferiour; as we have lived, so we will die together in the fear of God: Hasten therefore thy torments, and what time thou wouldest spend in exhorting me, spend it in devising torments for me. Whereupon Antiochus in a rage, commanded him to be tied to a Pillar with his Head downwards: Then caused he a Fire to be made at such a distance, as might not burn, but roast him: Then he made them prick him with Awles, that the heat might pierce the forer: In these torments much blood, like froth, gathered about his Head and Face; yet said he, O noble fight! O valiant war! O strife between piety and impiety! My Brethren have past through their Agonies, whose crown of Martyrdom is the punishment of their Persecutors. I willingly follow them, that as by Blood I am conjoined to them, so by death I may not be separated from them. Devise, O Tyrant, some new torment, for I have overcome these already: O Master of cruelty, enemy of Piety, and Persecutor of Justice! we young men have conquered thy power, thy Fire is cold, and heateth not: Thy weapons are bended, and blunted in our Bodies; Our God giveth us more courage to suffer, than thou hast to punish, &c. As he thus spake, they pulled out his Tongue with an hot pair of Tongs, and lastly frying him in a Frying-pan, he gave up the Ghost.

His Speech at death.

There being now only the youngest Brother left, called Jacob, he, presenting himself before the Tyrant, moved him to some compassion, wherefore he called the Child to him, and taking him aside by the hand, he said, By the example of thy Brethren thou seest what to expect if thou disobeyest me; Therefore deliver thy self from these torments, and I will give thee what honour my Kingdom can afford: Thou shalt be a Ruler, General of my Army, my Counsellor &c. But when this prevailed not, he called his Mother, who coming, and standing by her Son, the Tyrant said to her, O worthy woman, where now are all thy Children? yet thou hast own remaining; advise him therefore not to ruin himself, and to leave thee Childless by his obstinacy, &c. The Mother bowing her self to the King, said to her Child in Hebrew, that she might not be understood of others, Pity and comfort thy sorrowful Mother, O my Son, who bare thee nine Months in my womb, gave the suck with my Breasts three Years, and with great care have brought thee up hitherto. I pray thee, dear Son, consider the Heavens and Earth, and remember that God created them all of nothing, &c. Fear not therefore these pains and torments, but imitate thy Brethren, and contemn death, that in thy day of mercy I may receive thee with thy Brethren again in Heaven. Then did he desire to be unbound, which being granted, he immediately ran to the torments, and coming where was a Frying-pan red hot, he said to the King; Cruel Tyrant, I now know thee; not only to have been cruel to my Brethren, but even cruelty it self. Wretch that thou art, who gave thee these Purple Robes? who exalted thee to thy Kingdom?

Even he whom thou in us dost Persecute, whose Servants thou tormentest and killest, for which thy self shalt suffer eternal torments; Though thou art above others, yet he that made other men, made thee also of the same nature, for all are born, and must die alike. He that kills another, sheweth that he himself may be killed; Thou tearest and tormentest thine own Image all in vain? In thy fury thou killest him, whom God created like thy self, &c. Thou pullest out our Tongues, tearest our Bodies with Flesh-hooks, and consumest us with Fire; But they that have already suffered, have received everlasting joys, and everlasting punishments attend thee. Think not that I expect any favour, I will follow my Brethren, and remain constant in keeping Gods Law. The Tyrant herewith enraged, caused him to be tormented; But his Mother comforted him, and with her kind Hands held his Head, when through violence of the torturers, the Blood issued out of his Mouth, Nose, and Privy parts; The tormentors not ceasing till his life was almost spent; But then giving over, God gave him strength to recover, and to endure more than any of his brethen had done. At last his Hands and Arms being cut off, with his Eyes lift up to Heaven, he cried, O *Adonai! be merciful unto me, and receive me into the Company of my Brethren, &c. Then was his Tongue pulled out, and he of his own accord going into the fiery Frying-pan, to the great admiration of Antiochus, died.

The Mother seeing all her Children dead, was inflamed with a holy Zeal to suffer Martyrdom also; and despising the Tyrants threats, she offered her Motherly Brest to those torments which her Children had suffered before her. Indeed herein she excelled them all, in that she had suffered seven painful deaths, before she came to suffer in her own Person, and feared in every one of them, lest she should have been overcome. She alone with dry Eyes did look upon them whilst they were torn in pieces, yea, she exhorted them thereunto, rejoicing to see one torn with Flesh-hooks, another racked upon the Wheel, a third bound and beaten, a fourth burned, and yet she exhorted the rest not to be terrified thereby; and though her grief in beholding their torments was greater than that which she had in Child-birth, yet did she frame a cheerful countenance, as if it had been one triumphing; wishing rather the torments of their Bodies than of their souls; For she knew that nothing was more frail than our lives, which are often taken away by Agues, Fluxes, and a thousand other ways. Therefore when they were first apprehended, she thus exhorted them in the Hebrew tongue, O my most dear and loving Children, let us hasten to that Agony which may credit our profession, and be rewarded by God with eternal life. Let us fearlessly present our Bodies to those torments which aged Eleazer endured. Let us call to mind our Father Abraham, who having but one only Son, willingly sacrificed him at Gods command, and feared not to bring him to the Altar, whom with many Prayers he had obtained in his old age. Remember Daniel, the three Children, &c. Antiochus being enraged against her, caused her to be stripped naked, hanged up by the Hands, and cruelly whipped: Then were her Dugs and Paps pulled off, and her self put into the red hot Frying-pan; where lifting up her eyes and hands to Heaven, in the midst of her Prayers she yielded up her chaste soul to God. But God suffered not the cruel Tyrant to escape unpunished, for in his Wars against the Persians, the Lord struck him with madness, his intrals were devoured with Worms, and stinking like a Carrion, in the extremity of his torments he gave up the Ghost.

Concerning this Antiochus, Daniel, chap. 8. 9, 10, &c. saw in the Vision, that there came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great towards the South, and towards the East, and towards the pleasant Land, and it waxeth great even towards the host of Heaven, and it cast down some of the host, and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them: Yea, he magnified himself even to the Prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of the Sanctuary was cast down. And an host was given him against the daily Sacrifice by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground, and and it practised and prospered. Which afterwards is thus interpreted by the Angel unto Daniel. ver. 23. &c. In the latter time of their Kingdom, when the Transgressors are come to the full, a King of fiery countenance, and understanding dark sentences shall stand up, and his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power, and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper, and practise, and shall destroy the mighty and holy people: And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand, and he shall magnifie himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many: He shall also stand up against the Prince of Princes, but he shall be broken without hand.

rable death.

Herod the Great, hearing by the Wisemen of one that was born King of the Jews, and being informed by the chief Priests and the Scribes, that the place of his birth should be Bethlehem of Judah; he sent forth Soldiers, and slew all the Children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the Coasts thereof, from two years old and under, hoping thereby to have destroyed Christ. For which cruel fact, amongst others, the Lord gave him over to such a spirit of phrensie, that he slew his own Wife, his Children, and nearest Kinsfolks, and familiar Friends. And shortly after, Gods heavy judgment fell upon him by a grievous sickness, which was a slow and slack fire in his inward parts; and withal, he had a greedy appetite after food, and yet nothing sufficed him: He had also a rotting in his Bowels, and a grievous Flux in his Fundament; a moist and running humor about his Feet, and the like malady vexed him about his Bladder; his Privy Members putrified, ingendring abundance of Worms, which continually swarmed out. He had a short and stinking Breath, with a great pain in breathing; and through all the parts of his Body such a violent Cramp, as Humane strength was not able to endure. Yet longing after life, he sent for Physitians from all parts, by whose advice he went to the hot Bathes of Calliroe: But finding no ease thereby, his torments still increasing, he sought to lay violent hands upon himself, if he had not been prevented by his friends, and so in extream misery he ended his wretched life.

Then Herod the Less, having married the Daughter of Aretas, King of Arabia, put her away, and took Herodias, who had forsaken her Husband Philip, Brother to Herod. For which incestuous and adulterous marriage, John Baptist plainly reprov'd him; whereupon at the instigation of Herodias, Herod first imprisoned him, and afterwards cut off his Head: But the Lord left not this murder long unpunished, for Aretas raising an Army against Herod, for that ignominious dealing with his Daughter, in a pitched Battle wholly overthrew him, and cut off all his Hoast. And not long after, Herod falling into disgrace with the Roman Emperor, he, with his incestuous Herodias, were banished to Vienna in France, where they ended their wretched lives with much shame and misery.

After the Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ, Peter and John, having cured a Man that was born lame, and Preaching Jesus to the People, upon that occasion they were apprehended, and cast into Prison by the Priests and Captain of the Temple; who the next day, having examined them, threatned to punish them, if they spake any more in that Name, and so dismissed them. Yet afterwards, the High Priests and the Sadducees again laid hands on the Apostles, and cast them into the Common Prison: But in the night time the Angel of the Lord opened the Prison doors, and released them, Acts 5. 18, 19. The next day, as they were Preaching to the People, they were again apprehended, and carried before the Council, Vers. 26, 27. At whose command they were beaten, and so dismissed, Vers. 40.

The Apostles beaten.

Then were false witnesses suborned against Steven, who accused him for speaking blasphemous words against Moses, and against God, Acts 6. 11. For which, being apprehended and brought before the Council, he was there condemned, led out of the City, and stoned to death, Chap. 7. 58.

Steven stoned.

After this there was a General Persecution raised up against the Church of Christ in Jerusalem, whereby all the faithful were scattered abroad throughout the Regions of Judea and Samaria, except the Apostles, Chap. 8. 1. Saul also made great havoc of the Church, entering into every house, hating both Men and women, and committing them to Prison, Vers. 3.

But Saul, after his Conversion, Preaching Christ boldly, the enraged Jews took counsel, and lay in wait to kill him, watching the Gates of Damascus, where he then was, both day and night: But the Disciples took him by night, and let him down over the Wall in a Basket, whereby he escaped, Acts 9. 23, &c.

Paul persecuted.

Then rose up a third Herod, called also Agrippa, who not taking warning by his Predecessors calamities, fell to persecuting the Church of Christ; and sending for James, the Brother of John, before him, he condemned him to be Beheaded. Concerning whom, Clemens reports, That he which drew James before the Tribunal Seat, when he saw him so chearfully embracing the Sentence of Death, was exceedingly moved therewith, and voluntarily confessed himself to be a Christian, and so was condemned to be Beheaded with him. As they went in the way to Execution, he requested the Apostle James to pardon him, who after a little pause, turning to him, said, Peace be unto thee, and kissed him; and so they were Beheaded both together. Herod seeing that the death of James pleased the Jews, he took Peter also, and delivered him to four Quartermions of Soldiers to keep him in Prison, intending after the Passover to put him to death: But the night before he should suffer, as he was sleeping, bound with two Chains to two Soldiers, and the Keepers watching before the Prison doors, an Angel came and awaked him, causing his Chains to fall off; and so going before him, he led him out of prison, causing the Iron Gate to open to them, and having brought him out of danger, left him. But this cruel Persecuting Herod escaped no better than his Predecessors had done; for being arrayed in glittering and royal Apparel, and sitting upon his Throne, he made an Oration to his People, who like flattering Court Parasites, gave a shout, saying, It is the voice of a God, and not of a Man. Whereupon the Angel of the Lord immediately smote him, and he was eaten of Worms, and gave up the ghost, Vers. 21, &c. in the Fifty fourth year of his Age, and the seventh of his Reign, and under Claudius Caesar.

Then the wicked Jews stirred up the Gentiles against Paul and Barnabas at Iconium; so that being in danger to be stoned to death, they fled into Lycania, Acts 14. 2, 3, 6.

Paul and Barnabas persecuted.

Again, at Lystra they stirred up the Gentiles against them, whereupon Paul was stoned and drawn out of the City, and left for dead: But it pleased God that he revived, and so escaped to Derbe, Vers. 19, 20.

Paul stoned.

Afterwards Paul and Silas, for casting a Spirit of Divination out of a Damocel at Philippi, were dragged before the Rulers, who caused them to be whipt, and cast into Prison. But the Magistrates afterwards, hearing that they were Romans, were much afraid, as having done more than they could answer, and therefore they came to them, released them out of Prison, and besought them to depart out of their City, Acts 16. 23, 39.

Paul and Silas whipt.

Presently after at Thessalonica, the Jews again stirred up the People against Paul and Silas, and raising up an uproar, they fought for them in the house of Jason; and not meeting with them there, they drew forth Jason himself, and some Brethren before the Rulers, who giving security for their forth-coming, were were dismissed. Yet these wretched Jews followed Paul to Berea also, and there stirred up a Persecution against him, whereby he was forced to depart. At Corinth also they made an Insurrection, caught Paul, and brought him before Gallio, Deputy of Achaia; and when he would be a Judge of no such matters, they took Softheues the chief Ruler of the Synagogue, and beat him before the Judgment Seat, Acts 18. 12, 17.

Acts 24. 27.

Afterwards at Ephesus, Demetrius that made Silver Shrines for Diana, raised an uproar, and having caught Gaius and Aristarchus, Pauls Companions, they with them rushed into the Theatre. But this tumult being allayed by the wisdom of the Town Clark, Paul hasted away into Macedonia, Chap. 19. 29. &c. Paul at last returning to Jerusalem, the Asian Jews finding him in the Temple, stirred up all the People, and laid hands on him: But as they were about to kill him, he was rescued by the chief Captain of the Romans, Chap. 21. 31, 32. Then being brought forth before the Council of the Jews, he was first smitten by the command of the High Priest, Chap. 23. 2. And afterwards being in danger of being pulled to pieces, he was again rescued by the Captain, Vers. 10. Then above forty of those desperate Jews, bound themselves under a Curse, that they would neither eat nor drink, till they had killed him, Vers. 12, 13. Hereupon he is sent to Felix at Cesarea, who kept him in Prison till his accusers came, Vers. 24, 25. Then being accused by Tertullius, he clears himself; yet because he would not bribe Felix, he is kept prisoner still. Festus succeeding Felix, the Jews importune him also for sentence against Paul, or that he might be sent for to Jerusalem, laying wait in the way to kill him, Chap. 25. 3. But when that was denied them, they went to Cesarea to accuse him there; whereupon he is forced to appeal to Cesar, Vers. 11. Then he was sent to Rome, and there committed Prisoner to the Captain of the Guard, Chap. 28. 16. where he continued Prisoner at large for two years, and then being released, he visited the Churches of Greece and Asia. Afterwards, probably, he Preached in Spain and France; and at last, returning into Italy, he was again apprehended, and imprisoned at Rome, where also he suffered Martyrdom, as afterwards you shall hear.

Pauls Martyrdom.

The Jews being much displeased, that they could not reek their teen upon Paul, turn themselves against James, the Brother of Christ: Him therefore they bring, and set him in the midst of them, requiring him publicly to renounce the Faith of Christ. But he on the contrary, made a bold and open Confession of Jesus, to be the Son of God, and the Saviour of the World. Then did they set him upon a Pinnacle of the Temple, again requiring him in the audience of all the People, to tell them which is the way of Jesus Crucified: To whom he answered, Why ask you me of Jesus, the Son of Man, when as he sits at the right hand of God in Heaven, and shall again come in the Clouds of the Air? This so enraged the Scribes and Pharisees, that they threw him down headlong: But he not being dead with the fall, gat upon his knees, and said, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. Then one taking a Fullers Club, struck him on the Head, and brained him.

The Martyrdom of James. His constancy in Prayer.

This James was surnamed Justus, of whom Agesippus writes, that his knees were as hard as Camels knees, by reason of his continual kneeling in Prayer. But shortly after his death, Vespasian came into Judea, and subdued the Jews; and his Son Titus destroyed Jerusalem, and the Temple.

Andrew, the Brother of Peter, Preached the Gospel to the Scythians, Sogdians, and Ethiopians, and was at last Crucified by Ageas, King of Edessa.

Phillips Martyrdom.

Philip Preached the Gospel in Phrygia, and at last was Crucified at Hierapolis.

Bartholomew.

Bartholomew Preached to the Indians, and (as some say) was beaten with cudgels to death; or as others, he was flayed alive, and then Beheaded.

Thomas.

Thomas Preached unto the Parthians, Medes, and Persians, &c. And in India he was slain with a Dart.

Matthew

Matthew Preached to the Ethiopians, and at last, by the command of the King, was ran thorough with a Sword. Matthew.

Simon Zelotes Preached in Mauritania and Africk, and at length was Crucified under Traian, being above one hundred and twelve years old. Simon Zelotes.

Judas, the Brother of James, Preached to the Edeffeans, and at last was slain by the command of the King. Judas.

Matthias Preached first in Macedonia, and afterwards coming into Judea, he was by the Jews first stoned, and then Beheaded. Matthias.

Mark the Evangelist Preached in Alexandria, and the Neighboring Regions, and afterwards was burnt by the furious Idolaters. Mark.

C H A P. VII.

The First Primitive Persecution which began, Anno Christi 67.

THis First Persecution was begun by Domitius Nero, the Sixth Emperor, An. 67. or thereabouts. The occasion whereof was this, Nero having passed over the first five years of his reign somewhat plausibly, he then began to fall to all manner of prodigious Impieties; and amongst other wicked designs, he had a great desire to consume the stately Imperial City of Rome with fire, pronouncing King Pryamus an happy Man, because he beheld the end of his Kingdom and Countrey together. Yea, said he, let not all be ruined when I am dead, whilst I am yet alive. And for the effecting of this villany, he sent divers to kindle the fire in sundry places; yea, some of his own Bed-chamber were seen to carry Flax, Toe, Torches, &c. to further it; and when any attempted to quench it, they were threatned for it: Others openly hurled Fire-brands, crying, They knew what they did; there was one would bear them out. This fire first began amongst the Oylmen and Drugsters; the Night Watch and Pretorian Guards, did openly cherish it; and when it was thoroughly kindled, Nero went up to the top of Mecenas Tower, which overlooked the whole City, where he fed himself with the sight of infinite Burnings, and sang to his Harp the Burning of Troy.

*Nero sets Rome

Amongst other stately Buildings that were burned down, the Circus or Race-yard was one, being about half a mile in length, of an Oval form, with rows of Seats one above another, capable to receive at least a Hundred and fifty thousand Spectators, without uncivil shouldrings. But the particulars were innumerable, the damage ineffimable; besides which, many thousands of people perished; the flame and smook smothered some, the weight of ruins crushed others, the fire consumed others; others threw themselves into the fire, out of sorrow and despair, and Villains slew many.

burnt down.*

But Nero finding that this fire, which continued burning nine days, brought a great Odium upon him: To excuse himself, he transferred the fault upon the Christians.

Christians, as if out of malice they had done it, and thereupon he raised this First Persecution against them. For there was at this present a flourishing Church of Christians in Rome, even before S. Paul's arrival there, and Nero's own Court was secretly garnished and enriched with some of those Diamonds, whose salutations the Apostle remembers in his Epistle to the Philippians. But whilst Nero with their Blood, sought to quench and cover his own infamy, he procured to himself new Envy; whilst many that abhorred Christians for their Religion, commiserated their sufferings as undeserved. Some he caused to be sewed up in the skins of wilde Beasts, and then worried them to death with Dogs; some he crucified, others he burnt in publick, to furnish his Evening sports with Bonfires. Many he caused to be packed up in Paper stiffened in molten Wax, with a Coat of Searchcloth about their Bodies, and bound upright to Axle-Trees, many of which were pitched in the Ground, and so set on fire at the bottom, to maintain light for Nero's Night sports in his Gardens. Some of them were gored in length upon Stakes, the one end fastened in the Earth, the other thrust into their Fundaments, and coming out at their Mouths.

Nor did this Persecution rage in Rome alone, but it was extended generally over the whole Empire, insomuch, that a Man might then have seen Cities lie full of Dead Mens Bodies, the old lying there together with the young; and the Dead Bodies of Women cast out naked in the open Streets, without all reverence of their Sex: Yea, his rage and malice was so great, that he endeavored to have rooted out the very name of Christians in all places. Whereupon Tertullian said; That it could be no ordinary goodness which Nero condemned: And, saith he, we glory on the behalf of our Sufferings, that they had such a Dedicator as he. But this Great Persecution, like a blast, did spread the Religion that it blew, and having continued four years from the first rising, it expired in two most shining Blazes, viz. In the Martyrdom of the two Great Apostles, Peter and Paul, Peter was crucified with his Head downwards, which manner of Death himself made choice of; and whilst he thus hung upon the Cross, he saw his Wife going to her Martyrdom, whereupon he much rejoiced; and calling her by her name, he bad her remember the Lord Jesus Christ. At the same time, also Paul, before Nero, made a Confession of his Faith, and of the Doctrine which he taught; whereupon he was condemned to be Beheaded, and the Emperor sent two of his Esquires, Ferega and Parthemius, to bring him word of his death. They coming to Paul, heard him instruct the People, and thereupon desired him to pray for them, that they might believe; who told them, that shortly after they should believe and be baptized. Then the Soldiers led him out of the City to the place of Execution, where he prayed, and so gave his Neck to the Sword, and was beheaded. This was done in the Fourteenth, which was the last year of Nero.

CHAP. VIII.

The Second Primitive Persecution, which began Anno 96.

Character.

After the Death of Nero, there succeeded first Vespasian, and then his Son Titus, in the Empire, under both, whom the Church had rest; but Titus associating to himself, his Brother Flavius Domitian in the Government of the Empire. This wicked Monster, first slew his Brother, and then raised the Second Persecution against the Church of Christ. His Pride was so great, that he commanded himself to be worshipped as God; and that Images of Gold and Silver should be set up for his honor in the Capitol. His cruelty was unmeasurable. The chiefest Nobles of the Roman Senators, either upon Envy, or for their Goods, he caused to be put to death. Having also heard some rumors of Christ's Kingdom, he was afraid, as Herod had been before him: And thereupon commanded all of the Lineage of David to be sought out and slain. At last two poor Christians that came of Judas, the Brother of Christ, according to the Flesh, were brought before Domitian, and accused to be of the Tribe of Judah, and of the Line of David: Then did the Emperor demand of them what stock of Money and Possessions they had? To whom they answered, That they two had not above thirty nine Acres of Land, out of which they payed Tribute, and relieved themselves by their labor and industry, withal shewing him their hard and brawny hands, by reason of their labor. Then did he ask them of Christ, and of his Kingdom: to whom they answered, That Christ's Kingdom was not of this World, but Spiritual and Celestial; and that he would come at the last day to judge the quick and the dead. Hereupon he despised them as simple and contemptible persons, and so dismissed them. He punished an infinite company of Christians that were famous in the Church, with exile and loss of their substance. Under this Persecution was, that S. John the beloved Disciple was first put into a Vessel of Boiling Oil, and coming safe without hurt, out of the same, he was then banished into the Isle of Patmos, Anno 97. where he continued till after the death of Domitian, but was released under Pertinax. At which time he returned to Ephesus, where he lived till he was a hundred and twenty years old. During his abode there, he was requested to repair to some place not far off, to order their Ecclesiastical Affairs, and being in a certain City, he beheld in the Congregation a young Man, mighty of Body, of a beautiful countenance, and fervent mind: Whereupon, calling the chief Bishop unto him, he said, I commend this Man unto thee with great diligence, in the witness here of Christ and of the Church. The Bishop having received this charge, and promised his faithful diligence therein, John spake the like words to him the second time also, after which he returned unto Ephesus. The Bishop having received this young Man, thus committed to his charge, brought him home, kept, nourished, instructed, and baptized him; and the young Man so profited under him, that at the last he was made the Pastor of a Congregation. But having by this means more liberty then before, some of his old companions began to resort unto him, who first drew him forth to sumptuous and riotous Banquets, then inticed him to go abroad with them in the nights to rob and steal, and to much other wickedness. And he being of a good wit, and stout courage, ran like an unbridled Horse to all manner of disorders and outrage: And associating to himself many loose and dissolute companions, he became their Head and Captain, in committing all kinds of Murder and Felonies. Not long after, upon some urgent occasions, S. John was again sent for into those parts, where having decided those controversies, and dispatched those businesses for which he came, meeting with the aforementioned Bishop, he required of him the pledge, which before Christ and the Congregation, he had committed to his custody. The Bishop herewith amazed, supposing that he meant it of some Money committed to him, which yet he had not received, not daring to contradict the Apostle, he thereupon stood mute. Then John perceiving that he was not understood, said, The young Man, and the Soul of our Brother committed to your custody, I do require. Whereupon the Bishop, with many tears, said, He is dead: To whom John replied, How, and by what death? The Bishop answered, He is dead to God, for he is become a wicked and vicious Man, and a Thief; and now he doth frequent these Mountains, with a company of Thieves and Villains like himself, &c. The Apostle rending his Garments, with a great lamentation, said, I left a good Keeper of my Brothers Soul, yet in an Hour and quick presently. Which being done, he went strait to the Mountains, and was no sooner come thither, but he was taken by the Thieves that watched for their prey, to whom he said, I came hither for this cause, Lead me to your Captain. And so being brought before him, the Captain all armed, looked fiercely upon him, and soon coming to the knowledge of him, he was stricken with such shame and confusion, confusion, that he began to flee; but the old Man followed him as fast as he could, crying, My Son, why dost thou flee from thy Father? An armed Man from one naked? A young Man from an old Man? Have pity upon me my Son, and fear not, there is yet hope of Salvation; I will answer for thee to Christ, I will die for thee, if need be, as Christ died for us, I will give my life for thee: Believe me, Christ hath sent me. He hearing these things, first, as in a maze, stood still, lost his courage, cast down his weapons, then trembled, and wept bitterly; and coming to the old Man, he embraced him with many tears, only his right hand he kept hid and covered. Then the Apostle, after he had promised and assured him, that he should obtain pardon of our Saviour, falling upon his knees, he prayed for him, kissing his murdering right hand, which for shame he durst not shew before; and then brought him back to the Congregation, where he fasted and prayed continually for him, comforted and confirmed him with many Scripture promises, and left him not, till he had restored him to his former office, and made him a great example of Gods Mercy to repentant sinners.

Protasius Gervasius. Timothy and Dionysius Martyred.

In this Persecution, Simeon Bishop of Jerusalem, after many torments, was Crucified to death; and an innumerable company of Martyrs suffered for the like testimony of the Lord Jesus, amongst whom was Flavia, the Daughter of Flavius Clemens, a Roman Senator and Consul; who amongst many others was banished into the Isle of Pontia.

This Law also was made by the Roman Senate, Nam debere demitti Christianos, qui semel ad tribunal venissent, nisi propositum mutent. That Christians should not be let go that were once brought before the Tribunal Seat, except they renounced their Religion. Yea, that which stirred up the Emperor more to persecute the Christians, were those abominable lies, and malicious slanders raised against them by the Heathen Idolaters; as that they were a People that lived in Incest, that in their Nightly meetings, putting out the Candles, they ran together in all filthy manner; that they killed their own Children, and used to eat Mans flesh; that they were Seditious and Rebellious, and refused to swear by the Fortune of Cesar, and would not adore his Image in the Market-place. And in brief, that they were pernicious to the Roman Empire: Yea, whensoever any thing hapned amiss to the City of Rome, or to her Provinces, either by Famine, Pestilence, Earth-quakes, Wars, unseasonable Weather, &c. it was presently imputed to the Christians. Besides also, there were a number of wicked Promoters and Accusers, that for lucre sake, to have the possessions of the Christians, accused and persecuted them to the death. Also when the Christians were brought before the Magistrates, they gave them an Oath, requiring them to declare the truth, whether they were Christians, or no; and if they confessed, then by the Law, sentence of Death was passed against them. Yet were not these Tyrants content by Death to destroy their Bodies, but the kinds of Death were divers and horrible; whatsoever the cruelty of Mans witty and wicked invention could devise for the punishment of Mans Body, was practised against the poor Saints of God; Imprisonments, Stripes, Scourgings, Rackings, Tearings, Stoning, Plates of Iron burning hot, laid to the tenderest parts of their Bodies, deep Dungeons, strangling in Prisons, the Teeth of Wild Beasts, Gridirons, Gibbets and Gallows, Tossings upon the Horns of Bulls, &c. And when they were thus killed, their Bodies were laid on heaps, and Dogs left to keep them, that none might come to bury them; neither could any Prayer or Intreaty obtain leave that they might be Interred. Notwithstanding all which horrible punishments, the Church of Christ daily increased, being deeply rooted in the Doctrine of the Apostles and Apostolical Men, and watered plentifully with the Blood of the Saints.

Also in this Persecution, Protasius and Gervasius were Martyred at Milain. Timothy was stoned to death at Ephesus, by the Worshippers of Diana. Dionysius Areopagita was slain with the Sword at Paris, &c.

C H A P. IX.

The Third Primitive Persecution, which began Anno Christi 108.

Domitian being slain by some of his own Servants, Nerva succeeded him; who was a good and merciful Man, stayed the Persecution against the Christians, called them home from Banishment; so that the Church enjoyed Peace in his time: But he reigning only thirteen Moneths, Trajan, a Spaniard, succeeded him, who in the tenth year of his reign, raised the Third Persecution against the Church, which was far more cruel than either of the former: In as much as Plinius Secundus, an Heathen Philosopher, seeing the lamentable slaughter of the Christians, moved with pity, he wrote to Trajan concerning the same. That whereas there were many thousands of them daily put to death, there were none of them which did any thing contrary to the Roman Laws, worthy of Persecution, saving, That they used to gather together in the Morning before day, and sing Hymns to a certain God that they worshipped, called Christ; in other things, they were godly and honest. And for proof hereof, saith he, I caused two Maidens to be laid on the Rack, and with Torments, to be examined about the same; but finding nothing in them, but only lewd and immoderate Superstition, I resolved to surcease further inquiry, till I received further Instructions from you about this matter, &c. Trajan having read this Epistle, returned answer, That it was his mind, that the Christians should not be sought after; but if they were brought and convicted, that then they should suffer execution. Whereof Tertullian speaking, saith, O confused Sentence! He would not have them sought for as Men innocent, and yet would have them punished as Men guilty. Now though upon this Act, the rage of the Persecution was somewhat abated, yet many evil disposed Men, and cruel Officers there were, which ceased not to afflict the Christians in divers Provinces; especially if any commotion was raised in any of them, then presently were the Christians blamed for it. Trajan sent a command to Jerusalem, That whosoever could be found out of the Stock of David, should be inquired for, and put to death. Hereupon some Sectaries of the Jewish Nation, accused Simeon, the Son of Cleophas, to come of David's Line, and that he was a Christian. Of which Accusers it happened, that some of them were taken to be of the Stock of David, and so most righteously were executed themselves, who sought the destruction of others. In this Persecution suffered Phocas, Bishop of Pontus; whom Trajan, because he would not sacrifice to Nerone, caused to be cast into a hot Lime-Kiln, and afterwards to be put into a scalding Bath, where he ended his life in the cause of Christ. As also Sulpitius Servidianus, and Nereus; and Achilleus suffered Martyrdom in Rome, Sazaris in Asia; then also Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, was apprehended and sent to Rome, where he was devoured of Wild Beasts; and besides these, many thousand others.

After the death of Trajan, succeeded Adrian, who continued this Third Persecution against the Christians; at which time, Alexander, Bishop of Rome, with his two Deacons; as also Hermes and Quirinus, with their Families, suffered Martyrdom. Also about this time, Zenon, a Nobleman of Rome, with above ten thousand more, were slain for Christ's sake. Also in Mount Ararath were ten thousand Christians Crucified, Crowned with Thorns, and thrust into the side with sharp Darts, after the example of the Lords Passion. Eustachius, a Noble Captain, whom Trajan had sent out to War against the Barbarians; after (through Gods Mercy) he had valiantly subdued his Enemies, was returning home with victory; Adrian for joy, went to meet him, and to bring him home with triumph: But by the way, he would needs sacrifice to Apollo, for the victory obtained, willing Eustachius to do the same with him. But when by no means he could be perswaded thereto, coming to Rome, he with his wife and children, suffered Martyrdom, by the command of the Ingrateful Emperor. Also Faustinus and Fabius, Citizen of Brixia, were Martyred with many torments; which caused one Calocerius, beholding their admirable patience in the midst of their cruel torments, to cry out, Vere magnus est Deus Christianorum. Verily great is the God of the Christians; whereupon being apprehended, he was made partaker of their Martyrdom. Also Eleutherius, Bishop in Apulia, was Beheaded, together with his Mother Anthea. Also Symphorissa, a godly Matron, was often cruelly scourged, afterwards hanged up by the Hair of her Head; at last had a huge Stone fastened to her, and so was thrown into the River: After which, her seven Children, in like manner, with sundry and divers kinds of torments, were all of them Martyred by the Tyrant. These seven Children of Symphorissa, were fastened to seven Stakes, then Racked up with a Pully, and afterwards thrust thorow: Crescens in the Neck, Julianus in the Breast, Nemesius in the Heart, Primitivus in the Navil, Justinus was cut in every Joynt of his Body, Statens run thorow with Spears, and Eugenius cut asunder from the Breast to the lower parts, and then all of them were cast into a deep Pit. Adrian being at Athens, sacrificed to the Idols after the manner of the Grecians, and gave free leave to whomsoever would, to persecute the Christians, which should refuse it. Whereupon, Quadratus, Bishop of Athens, a Man of admirable Zeal, and famous for Learning, exhibited to the Emperor, a learned and excellent Apology, in defence of the Christian Religion; the like also did Aristides, an excellent Philosopher in Athens. There was also one Serenus Granius, a Man of great Nobility, who writ pithy and grave Letters to Adrian; shewing, That it was neither agreeable to Right nor Reason, that the Blood of Innocents should be given up to the rage and fury of the People, and be condemned for no other fault, but for their Opinions. Hereupon the Emperor became more favorable to them; writing also in their behalf to Minutius Fundanus, Proconsul of Asia, That if they had no other crime objected against them, but their Religion, they should not be put to death. Yet notwithstanding all this, the rage of the Heathen multitude did not cease from Persecuting the People of God; imputing to them whatsoever mischief and judgments befel them: Yea, they invented against them all manner of contumelies, and false crimes to accuse them of, whereby many in sundry places were molested and put to death.

After Adrian succeeded Antoninus Pius, who being informed of the cruel sufferings of the Christians, wrote this Letter to his Commons of Asia, forbidding them to persecute the Christians any further; which Epistle he thus concludes, If any hereafter shall offer any vexation and trouble to Christians, having no other cause; but because they are such, Let him that is appeached, be released, and freely discharged, and let his accuser sustain the punishment, &c.

By this means then the Tempest of Persecution began in those days to be appeased, through the merciful Providence of God: Who would not have his Church to be utterly overthrown and rooted up thereby. The rod of the wicked shall not always rest upon the lot of the righteous, Psal. 125. 3.

CHAP. X.

The Fourth Primitive Persecution, which began Anno Christi 162.

After the death of that quiet and mild Prince Antoninus Pius, his Son M. Antoninus Verus succeeded in the Empire; A stern and severe man by nature, who raised the fourth Persecution against the Christians; wherein a great number of them, who truly professed Christ, suffered most cruel punishments and torments, especially in Asia, and Fraxe, among whom was Poly carp Bishop of Smyrna, who was burnt at a Stake at Smyrna, together with twelve others that came from Philadelphia.

Also Germanicus a young man, did most constantly persevere in the Doctrine of Christ, whom when the Proconsul of Asia desired to remember his age, and to favour himself, he would by no flatteries be withdrawn from his steadfastness, but remaining constant; was thrown to the wild Beasts, whom he allured and provoked to come upon him, and devour him; that he might be the more speedily delivered out of this wretched life. Also in this Persecution suffered Metrodorus, a Minister, who was consumed by fire; and Pionius who after much boldness of speech, with his Apologies exhibited, and his Sermons made to the people in defence of the Christian Faith, and after much relieving and comforting such as were in Prisons and distress, at last was put to cruel torments, and then burned in the fire. Also at Pargamopolis in Asia, suffered Carpus, Papilus, and Agathonica, a woman, who after their most constant and worthy confessions, were put to death.

Germanicus Confessory.

Metrodorus Minister of Christ, who was consumed by fire.

Carpus, Papilus, and Agathonica.

At Rome, Felicitas with her seven Children were martyred, whereof her eldest Son, after he was whipt and grievously scourged with rods, was prest to death with leaden weights: The two next had their Brains beaten out with Mawls: The fourth was thrown down head-long from an high place, and brake his Neck: The three youngest were beheaded; and lastly, the Mother was slain with the Sword.

Felicitas and her seven Children.

Also Justin Martyr, a man that excelled in Learning and Philosophy, and a Great Defender of the Christian Religion, who had delivered to the Emperor and Senate an Apology in defence of the Christians, suffered Martyrdom in this Persecution.

Justin Martyr who delivered an Apology to the Emperor and Senate.

There was in Egypt a certain Woman married to a Husband that was given much unto lasciviousness, whereunto she her self also had been formerly addicted, But being instructed in the Christian Religion, she became a chaste and godly Matron, and endeavoured to persuade her Husband also therunto: But he, continuing in his filthy life, she resolved to be divorced from him, yet at the request of her Friends, she forbore, to try if by any means he would be reclaimed: But he going to Alexandria, and living more licenciously than before, she sued out a bill of Divorce, and so was separated from him: Then did this malicious wretch accuse her to be a Christian, which was no less than death, whereupon she being in great peril, delivered up a supplication to the

- the Emperor, craving but so much favour, that she might go and set her Family in order, and then she would be ready to answer to all such crimes as should be objected against her: This Petition the Emperor granted; Her Husband perceiving that he was frustrated of his expectation, went and accused Ptolemaeus (who was her instructor in the faith of Christ) that he was a Christian. Ptolemaeus loving the truth, and not thinking it good to hide his profession, confessed it: Therefore being brought before Urbicius the Judg. he was by him condemned to die; Whereupon one Lucius a Christian, standing by, said to the Judg, what reason, I pray you, or equity is this, that this man, who is neither Adulterer, Fornicator, Murtherer, nor Felon, nor guilty of any other crime, should be condemned for his name, and profession of Christianity? These manner of Judgments (O Urbicius) are neither honourable for the Emperor, nor for the estate of the Senate of Rome: Then said Urbicius, Methinks thou also art a Christian, which Lucius confessing, the Judg without any further delay, commanded him also to be had away to the place of Execution; To whom he answered, I thank you with all my heart, that hereby you release me from most wicked Governors, and send me to my good and loving Father, who is God of gods, and King of Kings. Also a third man coming to the Judg, and using the like liberty of Speech, had the like sentence of death, and was crowned with the same crown of Martyrdom.
- Also one Concordus, a Minister of the City of Spoletto, because he refused to sacrifice to Jupiter, and did spit in the face of the Idol, after divers cruel torments sustained, was Beheaded with the Sword.
- Many others also suffered Martyrdom at the same time, because they sharply reprehended Idolatry, and refused at the Emperors command, to offer sacrifice to Idols, for which they were Beheaded.
- Many Christians also suffered in France, the History of whom was written, and set forth by their own Churches, and directed to the Brethren of Asia and Phrygia; wherein they write, that Satans Instruments were so maliciously active against them, that they could not be safe any where, neither in the Markets, Shops, nor their own Houses. Yea, they were forbidden to come into any publick places: But God in Mercy took out of the Tyrants hands, such as were weak amongst the Christians, and set up others, as Pillars, who were able to abide all sufferings; and valiantly to withstand the enemy, notwithstanding all the opprobrious punishments they could devise; yea, by their admirable patience they shewed that all the sufferings of this present time were not to be compared with the glory which they expected to be revealed in them. First they suffered whatsoever the frantick multitude could inflict upon them, by railings, scourgings, drawings and halings, flinging of stones, imprisonment, &c. Then were they led to the Market place, where the Captain and other City-Officers, commanded them to Prison, after they had made confessions of their Faith publicly, till the return of the chief Governor; Who being come back, he used all extremity that possibly he could against them. At which time a noble young man, called Vetius Epagathus, being replenished with fervent zeal and love, both to God and the Brethren, could not suffer the wicked Judgment which was given against the Brethren: Whereupon he desired the Governor to hear what he had to say in their behalf, in whom was no impiety found: But the people cried out against him, and the Justice denied his lawful request, withal, asking him whether he himself were not a Christian? unto which, with a loud and bold voice he answered, I am a Christian; And thus was he received into the fellowship of the Martyrs. By this worthy example the rest of the Brethren were more animated to suffer Martyrdom: Yet some there were as yet weak, and not so well prepared for sufferings, of whom there were ten that fainted, which filled the rest with great heaviness. Their example also caused such as were not yet apprehended to be less forward in adventuring themselves; yet every day were some apprehended, which were worthy to fill up the number of them which were fallen.

Against

Against the Christians were their Heathen Servants examined, and being threatned with extream torments, they were enforced to confesse against their Masters, that at their meetings they kept the Feasts of Thieftes, and incest of Oedipus, and many other suchlike crimes, not fit to be named, which things being bruted abroad, every one began to exercise their cruelty against the people of God; yea, their familiar Friends disdained and waxed mad against them.

Christians
slandered.

Then was all manner of cruelty used against them, especially against Sanctus, Deacon of the Church of Vienna, and Maturus, but a little before Baptized, but yet a worthy Soldier of Christ. Also against Attalus and Blandina, concerning whom (say they) we were all afraid, especially her Mistress, lest through weakness she should not stand to her profession; But, through Gods Grace, she was so admirably replenished with strength and boldness, that they which had the tormenting of her by course from Morning till Night, for very weariness gave over, and fell down, confessing that they could do no more against her, marvelling that she yet lived, having her Body so torn and rent as it was: professing that any one of those torments alone had been sufficient to bereave her of life. But this blessed Virgin became stronger and stronger in her sufferings, and as often as she spake these words, I am a Christian, and have not committed any evil, she was wonderfully comforted.

worn.

Note!

Sanctus also, who in his torments had endured more pains than the nature of man was able to stand under, when the wicked thought to have heard him utter some Blasphemous words, through the intollerableness of his pains, abode notwithstanding so constant in mind, that they could neither extort out of him, what Countryman he was, where brought up, what his name was, whether a bond-man, or a free, but to every question he answered, I am a Christian: When therefore they had used all other kinds of torments, they clapped plates of Bra's red hot to the tenderest parts of his Body, wherewith, though he was grievously scorched, yet shrunk he not for the matter; yea though his Body was all drawn together with the scorching fire, so that he retained not the proper shape of a Man, yet did he draw comfort from Christ, so as to rejoyce in these tribulations. After a while they brought him again to new torments, hoping thereby to enforce him to a recantation; at which time his Body was so sore and swollen, that he could not suffer a man to touch him: But contrary to their expectation, his Body in these latter torments was so supplied and restored, that he recovered the former shape and use of his members, so that these second torments, through the Grace of Christ, proved a sovereign medicine to him.

Admirable
constancy.

A miracle of Mercy.

Satan also now thinking that he was sure of Biblis, who was one of those that had denied Christ, and hoping to prevail with her, a weak and feeble Woman in the Faith, to damn her soul by Blaspheming God, brought her to the place of Execution; But she, in the midst of her torments returning to her self, and by those pains remembering the torments of Hell, said to her tormentors, How should we Christians eat our own Children (as you report of us) when we eat not the Blood of any Beast? and so confessing her self to be a Christian, she was martyred with the rest.

Biblis.

Yet here did not the rage of the enemies cease: For when the Christians were cast into Prison, they were shut up in dark and ugly dungeons, and drawn by the feet in a rack, even unto the fifth hole: some of them were strangled and killed in the Prisons; others remaining in Prison, destitute of all humane help, were so strengthened by the Lord, both in Body and mind, that they were a great comfort to the rest: The younger sort, whose Bodies had not yet felt the lash of the whip, were not able to endure the sharpness of their imprisonment, but died under the same.

Photinus, Deacon to the Bishop of Lyons, about eighty nine years old, weak and feeble, by reason of age and sickness, yet of a lively spirit and courage, by reason reason of the great desire which he had of Martyrdom, being brought to the Judgment Seat, and being there demanded of the chief Ruler, What was the Christian mans God? He answered, If thou beest worthy to know, thou shalt know: The Ruler being enraged herewith, caused him to be extreemly beaten: also such as stood next him, did him all the despiht they could, beating and kicking him without any regard to his reverend gray hairs; others that were further off, threw at him whatsoever came next hand; and thus whilst he was gasping after life, they threw him into Prison, where after two days he died.

Apostacy.

They also which in the first Persecution had denied Christ, were apprehended, cast into Prison, and made partakers of the others afflictions; yea, they had twice so much punishment as the other had: and whereas they which had been constant, were refreshed with the joy of Martyrdom, with the hope of Gods promises, and with the love of Christ, and his Holy Spirit; The other Apostates being full of guilt, went out to death, with dejected and ill-favoured countenances, and were filled with shame, so that the very Gentiles reviled them as degenerate Persons, and worthy to suffer as evil doers: whereas in the mean time, they which had remained constant, went to their Martyrdom with chearful countenances, adorned with glory and grace: yea, their very bonds wherewith they were tied, set them out as Brides when they are decked in gorgeous array: and withal, they had such a redolent smell, as if they had been anointed with some sweet Balm: by which sight the rest were confirmed, and being apprehended, confessed Christ without any staggering.

The Martyrdom of the Saints was of divers kinds, as the offering to God, a Garland decked with sundry kinds of colours and flowers.

Maturus, Attalus, and Blandina, were again brought forth to the publick Scaffold, where Maturus and Sanctus suffered again all manner of torments, as if they had suffered nothing before: They were scourged, torn of wild Beasts, set in red hot iron Chairs; in which their Bodies were dried as on a Grid-iron, and their tormentors raged more and more against them, labouring to overcome the patience of the Saints: yet could they get nothing out of Sanctus's mouth, but that he was a Christian: These holy men having been thus made a spectacle all the day to the People, were at last slain. Then Blandina being fastened to a stake, was cast to the wild Beasts, but they, as being more merciful than men, would not come near her: Then they cast her again into Prison, where she, though a weak Woman, yet armed with invincible courage by Christ, mightily encouraged her Brethren.

Alexander.

Then was Attalus brought forth with this Inscription, This is Attalus the Christian, against whom the People were much enraged, but the Governour understanding that he was a Roman, remanded him to Prison till he understood the Emperours pleasure: Many that had before denied Christ, through Gods Grace, recovered themselves again, and tasted the sweetness of him that desired not the death of a sinner, &c. and of their own accord came to the Judgment Seat to be examined; Then did the Judge, when a great concourse of People was met together, send for all the Christian Prisoners, and as many as were Free-men of Rome he beheaded, the Residue he gave to be devoured of wild Beasts, amongst whom also they which had before denied Christ, joyfully suffered Martyrdom. Whilst the Christians were examining at the Bar, one Alexander, a Physician, by signs, and becks, perswaded those which were examined, boldly to confess Christ, which the People taking notice of, accused him to the Judge: who asking him what Religion he was of, he answered, I am a Christian: whereupon he was immediately adjudged to be devoured of the Beasts.

The next day was Attalus and this Alexander brought forth to the Scaffold, where they had all manner of torments inflicted upon them, and having endured the greatest Agony that possibly they could be put to, they were at last slain: Alexander never so much as sighed, but prayed to, and praised God all the the while he was tormented: Attalus, when he was set in the Iron Chair, and the frying favour of his burning Body began to smell, said to the People, Behold! this which you do is to eat mans flesh: for we neither eat men, nor commit any other wickedness: And being demanded what was the name of their God, he said, Our God hath no such name as men have; Then said they, Let us see whether your God can help you, and take you out of our hands. Then was Blandina again brought forth, and with her one Ponticus, a Youth of fifteen years old, who defying their Idols, and constantly cleaving to Christ, were put to all the torments their enraged enemies could devise: The Youth having suffered all kinds of torments, at last gave up the Ghost: Blandina was first pitifully whipped, then thrown to the wild Beasts; Then tormented upon the Grid-iron; Then put into a Net, and thrown to the wild Bull, and when she was tossed, gored, and wounded with his Horns, she was at last slain, but was so filled with the ravishing joyes of the Holy Ghost, that she felt no pain during all her torments. Such as were strangled in Prisons, were afterwards thrown to Dogs, and had Keepers both day and night set to watch them, lest their bones and members should be buried. In the mean time the Gentiles extolled their Idols, mocking and flouting the Christians, saying, where is your God that you so much boast of? and what helpeth this your Religion for which you give your lives? The Bodies of the Martyrs were thus made a gazing-stock for six days in the open streets, and then were burned, and their Ashes thrown into the River.

Also in this Persecution Iustin Martyr, through the malice of Crescens the Philosopher, suffered Martyrdom. Also one Alcibiades a man of a strict life, eating only Bread and Water, was cast into the Prison where Attalus, and other Christians lay; and Alcibiades continued the same strict diet in Prison: But it was from God revealed to Attalus, that he did not well in refusing the other good Creatures of God; and that it was scandalous to his Brethren: whereupon he reformed, and eat of all things boldly with thanksgiving.

About this time Claudius Apolinarius, Bishop of Hieropolis, and Melito Bishop of Sardis, eloquent and learned men, delivered to the Emperor excellent Apologies written by them in defence of the Christian Religion, whereby they prevailed with him somewhat to stay the rage of this Persecution: which also was furthered upon this occasion: Marcus Aurelius, and Marcus Antoninus the Emperors, going to War against the Quades, Vandals, Sarmates and Germans; their Army, by the multitude of their enemies, was coopt up in some strait, dry and hot places, where the Soldiers having been destitute of Water for five days together, were all like to perish. Hereupon a Legion of Christian Soldiers being in the Army, with-drew apart from the rest, and falling prostrate upon the earth, by ardent Prayer, obtained of God a double relief: For the Lord sent the Romans such showers, as satisfied their necessities, and flamed such lightnings against their enemies, that thereby they were discomfited and put to flight. This Miracle so pleased the Emperor, that ever after he used the Christians gentler, writing also to divers Rulers, commanding them to give thanks to the Christians, as for their Victory, so for the preservation of himself, and his Army. His Letters was to this purpose, That whereas himself and Army, were environed with nine hundred seventy five thousand fighting men, and were like to perish for want of Water, the Christians praying to a God, that he knew not, obtained relief for him, and by hail and lightning, Destruction to his enemies; whereby he perceived their God to be a mighty God. Hereupon he decreed that none should be punished for the Christian Profession, being guilty of no other crime, and that the Accusers of the Christians should be burned alive: Which decree he commanded to be recorded in the Senate-house, proclaimed publickly in the Court of Trajan, and sent diligently into all his Provinces, that all might take notice of the same.

Yet not long after, Apollonius, a noble Senator of Rome, was accused by his own Servant before the Judge, for being a Christian. The Accuser, according to the Decree, had his Legs broken, and was put to death. But Apollonius having rendred an account of his Faith before the Senate, was condemned to be Beheaded, notwithstanding the Decree, because there was an old Law, that any that was arraigned for professing Christ, without a recantation, could not be released.

Vincentius, Eusebius, Peregrinus and Potentianus.
Zeal.

Commodus the Emperor upon his Birth-day, calling the People of Rome together, in a great royalty, clothed in his Lions skin, sacrificed to Hercules, causing it to be proclaimed, that Hercules was the Patron of the City: whereupon Vincentius, Eusebius, Peregrinus and Potentianus, learned men, and Pastors of the Congregations, being stirred up with zeal, went about from place to place, converting the Gentiles to the Faith of Christ, and hearing of the madness of the Emperor and People, they reproved that Idolatrous blindness, exhorting them to believe in the true and living God, and that, forsaking the worshipping of Devils, they should honour God alone. The Emperor hearing thereof, caused them to be apprehended, and required them to sacrifice to Hercules, which they refusing to do, he caused them to be grievously tormented, and at last to be pressed to death with weights of Lead.

Zeal.

Julius a Roman Senator, having been converted by the preaching of these men, afterwards sent for Ruffinus a Minister, by whom himself and all his Family were Baptized, and burning with Holy Zeal, he made an open profession of the Faith of Christ, praying that he might not only believe, but that he might have the honor to suffer for his Name. The Emperor hearing that he was become a Christian, sent for him, to whom he said, O Julius, what madness possessest thee thus to forsake the Religion of thy Forefathers, to embrace a new and fond kind of Religion of the Christians? Hereupon Julius made before him a free and open profession of his Faith, affirming that the Roman gods were false gods, and that they that worshipped them, should be punished with everlasting damnation. The Emperor hearing that he despised his gods, was much enraged, and committed him to Vitellius, a cruel and fierce man, to compel him, either to sacrifice to Hercules, or to slay him: But Julius nothing discouraged, and perswading Vitellius to acknowledg, and serve the true God, was at his command with Cudgels beaten to death.

CHAP. XI.

The Fifth Primitive Persecution which began Anno Christi 205.

Commodus being dead, Pertinax succeeded in the Empire, under whom the Church enjoyed peace, and flourished exceedingly, so that many of the Nobles of Rome embraced the true Faith, together with their whole Households.

Severus Emperor.

Pertinax being dead, Severus succeeded, and in the first ten years of his reign he was very mild and gentle to the Christians: But afterwards, through sinister suggestions, and malicious accusations; he was so incensed, that by his proclamations he commanded that no Christians should any more be suffered to live. Hereby a great persecution was stirred up on every side, and an infinite number of Martyrs were slain. The crimes objected against the Christians were sedition, rebellion against the Emperor, Sacriledg, Murtherring of Infants, incestuous pollutions, eating raw flesh, worshipping the Head of an Ass, &c. but especially, that they would not worship their Idols. The Places where this Persecution most raged, were Africa, Cappadocia, Alexandria and Carthage. The number of them that suffered, was innumerable, amongst whom was Leonides the Father of Origen; with whom Origen his Son, being but seventeen years old, would have suffered, (such a fervent desire he had of Martyrdom) had not his Mother privily in the Night conveyed away his shirt and cloths,

Origen was afterwards a Professor of Divinity at Alexandria, and out of his School, one Plutarch suffered Martyrdom, as also Serenus his Brother, who was burned, and another Serenus who was Beheaded. Potamiens also, who was tormented with boiling Pitch poured upon her, and afterwards with her Mother Marcella, and Rhaia was burned in the fire. This Potamiens being a beautiful Virgin, was committed to Captain Basilides to see execution done upon her, and as he led her to the place of Execution, he repressed the rage of the multitude, who followed her with many railings and revilings, whereupon, to requite his kindness, she prayed to the Lord for his Conversion to the true Faith, and so with admirable patience she suffered Martyrdom.

Shortly after Basilides being required to give an Oath in the behalf of his Fellow-Soldiers, he denied the same, plainly affirming that he was a Christian, and therefore he could not swear by the Idols, &c. They which heard him, thought that he jested at first, but when he had constantly affirmed it, they had him before the Judge, who committed him to ward: The Christians wondring at it, went to him, and enquiring the cause of his Conversion, he told them that Potamiens had prayed for him, and so he saw a Crown put upon his head, adding that it should not be long before he received it, and accordingly the next day he was Beheaded.

As many suffered death in this Persecution, so others there were, who through Gods providence, suffered great torments, and yet escaped with life, of whom there was one Alexander, who for his constant confession, and torments suffered, was afterwards made Bishop of Jerusalem. Also Narcissus, against whom three wicked Persons conspired to accuse him, binding their accusations with Oaths and Curses, one wishing to be destroyed with Fire, if it were not true; another to be consumed with a grievous disease; The other to lose both his eyes; Narcissus being unable to withstand so wicked an accusation, retired himself into a desert: In the mean time Gods vengeance followed these perjured Wretches: for the first, by a small spark of Fire, was himself with all his Family, and goods burned: The second was taken with a grievous sickness which tormented him from the top to the toe, whereof he died: The third, being warned by these Judgments, confessed his fault, but by reason of his abundant sorrow and weeping, he lost both his eyes: Narcissus being hereby cleared from their false accusation, returned home, and was received into his Congregation again. Also one Andoclus was sent by Polycarp into France, who because he spread there the Doctrine of Christ, was apprehended by the command of Servus, and first beaten with staves and bats, and afterwards Beheaded. Asclepiades also, afterwards Bishop of Antioch, suffered much in this Persecution. Then did Irenaeus, and many others with him suffer Martyrdom; and shortly after Tertullian also. Perpetua and Felicitas, two godly Women, with Ravennatus their Brother, and Satyrus, were thrown to the wild Beasts, and devoured by them. Saturninus was Beheaded: Secundulus cast into Prison, where he died: All these suffered Martyrdom at Carthage.

Also Zepherinus, and after him Urbanus, both Bishops of Rome, were Martyred in this Persecution: This Urbanus by preaching and holiness of life, converted many Heathens unto Christ; amongst whom were Tiberius and Valerianus, two noble men of Rome, who both suffered Martyrdom: Also Cecilia a Virgin, who was espoused to Valerian, was apprehended and carried to the Idols to offer sacrifice, which she refusing to do, should have been carried to the Judge to receive the sentence of condemnation; But the Serjeants and Officers beholding her excellent Beauty and prudent behaviour, began with many persuasions to solicit her to favour her self, &c. but she so replied with wisdom and godly exhortations, that by the Grace of Almighty God, their hearts began to relent, and at length to yield to that Religion which before they Persecuted;

Afterwards this blessed Martyr was brought before the Judge, by whom she was condemned; Then she was enclosed in an hot Bath for twenty four hours, yet remaining alive, she was there Beheaded.

Calepodius, a Minister of Christ in Rome, was first dragged thorow the streets, and after cast into Tyber.

Pamachius, a Senator of Rome, with his Wife and Children, and other Men and Women to the number of forty two, were all Beheaded in one day, together with another noble man, all whose Heads were hung up over the Gates of the City, to deter others from the profession of Christianity. Also Martina, a Christian Virgin, having suffered many other bitter torments, was at last slain with the Sword.

THe Emperor Maximinus raised the Sixth Persecution against the Christians, especially against the Teachers and Leaders of the Church, thinking that if these Captains were removed out of the way, he should the easier prevail against the rest. In the time of this Persecution, Origen wrote his Book De Martyrio, which being lost, the names of most that suffered Martyrdom in those times, are buried in oblivion, yet were they very many: Amongst whom Urbanus Bishop of Rome, and Philippus, one of his Ministers were banished into Sardinia, where they both died.

About this time one Natalius that had formerly suffered great Persecution for the cause of Christ, was seduced by Aſclepiodotus and Theodorus, two Seſtaries, to be the Bishop of their Sect, promising to pay him a hundred and fifty Crowns of silver every Month, and so he joyned himself to them; But the Lord in mercy not intending to lose him that had suffered so much for his sake, admonished him by a vision to adjoin himself to the true Church again, which the good man for the present, blinded with lucre and honor, did not regard as he ought to have done: The Night after he was scourged by Angels, whereupon in the Morning, putting on Sack-cloth, with much weeping and lamentation, he went to the Christian Congregation, praying them for the tender mercies of Christ, that he might be received into their Communion again, which request was accordingly granted unto him.

Hippolitus was drawn thorow the Fields with wild Horses till he died, Many others were Martyred and Buried by sixty in a Pit.

C H A P. XIII.

The seventh Primitive Persecution, which began Anno Christi 250.

Decius the Emperor raised this Seventh terrible Persecution against the Christians, which was first occasioned by reason of the treasures of the Emperor, which were committed to Fabian the Bishop of Rome, who thereupon, by the command of Decius, was put to death, and moreover his Proclamations were sent in all quarters, that all which professed the Name of Christ, should be slain. In the time of this Persecution Origen suffered many and great torments for the cause of Christ, by Rackings, Dungeons, &c.

Nicephorus, who writeth of this Persecution under Decius, declareth the horribleness of it to be so great, and that so many Martyrs suffered, That, saith he, it is as easie to number the Sands of the Sea, as to set down the Names of all those whom this Persecution did devour.

Alexander, Bishop of Jerusalem, who was very aged, having governed the Church forty years, was from thence carried to Cesarea, where after a bold and constant confession of his Faith, made before the Judge, he was cast into Prison, and there died. Babilas Bishop of Antioch also died in Prison, and forty Virgins were Martyred there about that time. And one Peter in the Country of Phrygia, being apprehended by the Proconsul, suffered most bitter torments for the name of Christ, the like did divers others in Troada. From Babylon divers Christians were led away by Decius into Spain, and there executed; The like sufferings had many in Cesarea.

Dionysius Alexandrinus, writing of the Martyrs that suffered in Alexandria, saith thus, This Persecution began about a year before the Emperors Proclamation came forth, by reason of a wicked South-sayer, who coming to the City, stirred up the multitude of Heathens against the Christians, perswading them to uphold their Idolatrous services; wherewith the People being inflamed, obtained full power to persecute their wicked purposes, conceiving all religion to consist in the destruction of the Christians. And first of all they fell upon a Minister, called Aletra, whom they would have enforced to Blaspheme Christ, which when he refused, they laid upon him with Staves and Clubs, and with sharp Reeds they pricked his Face and Eyes; and then, bringing him to the Suburbs, they stoned him to death. Then they took an holy Woman, called Quinta, and bringing her to the Idol-Temple, would compel her to worship there; which she constantly refusing, they bound her Feet, and drew her thorow all the Streets upon the hard-stones, whipt her with Whips, dashed her against Mil-stones, and lastly stoned her to death. Then the enraged multitude breaking into the Christians Houses, plundered them of all they had; The rest of the lumber they carried into the Market-place, and burned it: The Saints in the mean time taking patiently and joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing that they had a more enduring substance in Heaven.

Then they took an ancient Virgin, called Apollinia, whom they brought forth, and dashing all the Teeth out of her Head, they made a great fire, threatening to cast her into it, unless she would Blaspheme and deny Christ, whereupon she, after a little pause, leaped into the Fire, and so was burned. Then they took Serapion out of his House, whom they assailed with all kind of torments, broke almost all the joynts of his Body: and lastly throwing him down from an high loft, killed him. The poor Christians could no where shelter themselves, nor rest day nor night, the multitude crying out, that unless they would Blaspheme Christ, they should all be burned. But, through Gods Mercy, the miserable Wretches at last fell out amongst themselves, turning their cruelty, formerly exercised against the Christians, upon their own Heads, whereby the Church had a little breathing time.

Flight in Per-

Shortly after came forth the cruel Edict of the Emperor, which so terrified the Christians, that some, especially the rich, partly through fear, and partly by the perswasion of their Neighbors, came to those impure and idolatrous Sacrifices. Others came boldly to the Altars, declaring publicly, That they were not of that Religion: Of the rest, some ran away, others were taken, induring bands and torments constantly. Others again, after long imprisonment, and sundry torments, renounced their Faith, whilst others more strong in the Faith, valiantly endured Martyrdom; amongst whom was Julianus, a Man diseased with the Gout, and not able to go, and Cronion, who were laid upon Camels, and there scourged, and at last thrown into the fire, where, with much constancy, they were consumed. As Julianus went to Martyrdom, a certain Soldier took his part against those which railed upon him: Whereupon the People crying out against him, he was apprehended, and being constant in his Profession, was presently Beheaded.

Also Macar, a Christian Lybian, was burned alive. Epimachus and Alexander, having been long imprisoned, after innumerable pains and torments, with Razors and Scourges; were with four Women, consumed with fire. Ammonarion, a Virgin; Mercuria, an aged Matron; and Dionysia, a Mother of many Children, whom yet she loved not above the Lord; these, when they could not be overcome by any torments inflicted on them by the cruel Judge, but rather were unsensible of them all, were at last slain with the Sword.

Also three Egyptians, and a youth of fifteen years old, were brought before the Judge, who first began with the child, by fair words, seeking to intice him, then by torments to constrain him, which not prevailing, when he had tormented the other also, he condemned them all to the fire. But the Judge wondering at the wise answers, and grave constancy of the child, dismissed him.

Nemesion also an Egyptian, was first accused to be a Companion of Thieves, but being purged from that, he was accused of Christianity, tormented and scourged extreamly, and then amongst other Thieves, burnt to death.

A certain Christian being examined before the Judge, and through fear being ready to shrink back, there were by certain Soldiers of the degree of Knights, and an aged Man, named Theophilus, who were ready to burst for grief, making signs to him, by their hands and gestures, to be constant; which being observed by the by-standers, they were ready to lay hold of them; but they of their own accord, pressing up to the Judge, professed themselves to be Christians, which much imboldened the weak Christian that was before the Tribunal, and terrified the Judge. This being done, they departed away, rejoycing for the testimony that they had given of their Faith.

In other Cities many Christians were torn in pieces by the Heathen.

Ischirion, a Servant to a Nobleman, was commanded by his Master to sacrifice to the Idols; which when he refused, and would by no means be perswaded to, his Master took a Pike, and ran him thorough. Multitudes of Christians wandring in Desarts and Mountains, were devoured by hunger, thirst, cold, sickness, thieves, and wild Beasts; amongst whom was Cheremon, Bishop of the City of Nilus, and his Wife, who flying into the Mountains of Arabia, were never heard of more. Dionysius also saith of himself, I speak the truth before God, and lie not, I having no regard of my own life, and not without the motions of Gods Spirit, did flee, and avoid the danger of this Persecution. Yea, and before that, when one was sent from the Governor to seek me; I remained three days at home to tary for him: The Messenger, in the mean time, narrowly sought for me, by all ways, Fields, Floods, and Corners, where he thought I might hide my self, God striking him with blindness, that he could not find my House. After these three days, the Lord God willing and commanding me to flee, and marvellously opening to me the way, I with my Children, and many other Brethren, went out together, and so escaped.

Also Agatha, a godly Virgin of Sicily, suffered divers and bitter torments of imprisonment, with beatings, famine, racking, as also rolling naked upon sharp sharp Shells, and hot Coals, and had her Breasts cut off her Body. Also forty other Virgins, by sundry kinds of torments, were put to death about the same time.

Decius erecting a Temple at Ephesus, compelled all in the City to offer sacrifices to Idols; but there were seven Christian Soldiers of his own Retinue, who refused, neither could the Emperor, by perswasion or threats, induce them to it; yet he gave them respite till his return from the Wars; in the mean time they hid themselves in a Cave in the Mountain Celins. At the Emperors return he made great inquisition for them, and at last hearing where they were, he caused the mouth of the Cave so to be closed up, that they could not get out, and so they were famished there.

There was also one Nicetas, a Christian Soldier, whom when the Prator could not by any torments remove from his stedfastness, he took another course with him: For he brought him into a most fragrant Garden, flowing with all manner of pleasures and delights, where he laid him upon a Bed of Down, softly inwrapped in a Net of Silk, among the Lillies and Roses, the delicious murmur of the Streams, and the sweet whistling of the Leaves moved with a gentle Wind, and so departed: Presently in comes a beautiful Strumpet, and useth all the abominable tricks of her impure art, and whorish villanies, to draw him to commit wickedness with her. Whereupon, the young Man fearing that he should now be conquered by Folly, who was conqueror over Fury, bites off a piece of his Tongue with his own Teeth, and spits it into the face of the Whore, and so prevented the hurt of sin, by the smart of his wound.

At Antioch, Theodora, a godly Virgin, refusing to sacrifice to the Idols, was condemned by the Judge to the Stews, which sentence being executed; there were many wanton young Men ready at the door, to press into the house where she was; but one of the Brethren, called Didymus, putting on a Soldiers habit, would have the first admittance, and coming in, he perswaded her to change Garments with him; and so she, in the Soldiers habit, escaped away, and Didymus was left to the rage, and wondering of the People, when he was found a Man. Hereupon he was presented to the President, to whom he presently confessed the whole Matter, professing himself to be a Christian, and so was condemned; which Theodora hearing of, thinking to excuse him, she came, and presented her self to the Judge, as the guilty party, desiring, That she might be condemned, and the other excused. But the cruel Judge, neither considering the virtue of the Persons, nor the innocency of the Cause, most inhumanely condemned them both, first to be Beheaded, and then burnt, which was accordingly executed.

Agathon, a Man at Arms in Alexandria, rebuking some leud persons who scornfully used the dead Bodies of the Christians, was accused to the Judge, and lost his head.

In Troada, two Christians being delivered by the Proconsul to the People, were first scourged, then drawn out of the City, and there trodden to death. Two Ministers, with a Deacon, were Martyred in Rome; and two Noblemen were brought and accused to Decius, for burying the dead Bodies of the Christians, and being by him commanded to sacrifice to the Idols; and they refusing, he caused them to be cast to the Wild Beasts. But when they would not touch them, they were Beheaded with the Sword.

Also Secundianus was accused to be a Christian, which he affirming, was commanded to Prison. By the way, two Christians cryed to the Soldiers, asking them, Whither they carried the innocent Man; whereupon being apprehended and examined, they confessed themselves to be Christians, and were condemned. First, they were beaten with Cudgels, then hung up, and tormented with the Gibbet, having fire set to their sides, and lastly, were Beheaded. But some of their tormentors were taken with evil spirits; others of them, fell down suddenly, and died.

But the number of Martyrs of all Ranks that suffered in this Persecution, was so great, that it is impossible to set them down all: Bishops, Ministers, Deacons, &c. Young, Old, Men, Women, &c.

Serapions Apo-stacy, and Recovery.

Yet amongst this great number, some there were that fell away, as Serapion, an old Man, that for a long time had lived a sincere and godly life, who afterwards repenting of his Apostacy, desired to be readmitted into the Church, but that was not granted: Shortly after he fell sick, and in it, having remained dumb, and bereaved of his senses for twenty four hours; the day after, he began a little to recover, and calling his Nephew to him, he said, How long, how long do you detain me here? Make haste, that I may be absolved. Call me hither some of the Ministers, &c. And so being absolved, he presently after died.

Danger of A-postacy.

In Troada, Nichomachus being grievously tormented, cried out, I am no Christian; and so being let down from the Engine, he had no sooner sacrificed to the Idols, but being possessed by the Devil, he was thrown on the ground, where he bit off his own tongue, and immediately after died. Many others which shewed the like cowardise, were taken and tormented with wicked spirits: One was struck dumb; a Maid taken with a wicked spirit, tore out her own tongue, and died with grievous torments in her Belly, and inward parts. But though some did thus fall away, yet others there were, whom neither fear, nor pain could remove from their steadfastness, but they continued glorious Martyrs to the end.

Constancy.

Cyprian relates a story of one of his Fellow Ministers, who in the midst of his torments began to faint, being greatly afraid of death, and desired to be released: At which time there appeared to him a young Man of admirable Beauty, and so bright, that Mans mortal Eye could scarce endure to behold him, who angerly said to him, Pati timetis, exire non vultis, quid faciam vobis? To suffer you dare not, to go out you will not: What would you have me do unto you?

A Vision.

The beginning of the Nova-rian Schism.

In this Persecution there sprung up the Novatian Schism, which made a great disturbance in the Church. This Novatus being a Minister under Cyprian in Carthage, by stirring up Discord and Factions, bred much trouble to the Church, seeking to withdraw certain of the Brethren from the Bishop. And afterwards Novatus going to Rome, set up himself as a Bishop, against Cornelius, the then Bishop of Rome; and to further his design, he by subtilty allured to him three or four holy Men that had been Confessors: Then he inticed three weak Bishops that lived in Italy, to come to Rome, and there perswaded them by imposing hands upon him, to make him Bishop; for which fact, two of them afterwards were suspended, and the third upon his Repentance was readmitted. Novatus being thus made a Bishop, grew proud, and sought by all means to withdraw the People from Cornelius to himself; yea, he made many of them to swear, that they would not leave him to go to Cornelius. But the holy Confessors before-mentioned, when they perceived the crafty subtilty of Novatus, left him, and much grieving for their sin, were reconciled to Cornelius again. Novatus held this opinion, that they which once renounced the Faith, and for fear of torments, had offered Incense to the Idols, although they repented, yet could never be readmitted into the Church of Christ again. To suppress this Error, there was a Synod called at Rome, of Sixty Bishops, Anno 255, who condemned it.

Aurelius.

Mappalieu.

Cyprian also relates of Aurelius, a godly and valiant young Man, who for his constancy in the cause of Christ, suffered great and many torments, and afterwards was banished. And of Mappalicus, who the day before he suffered, in the midst of his torments, told the Proconsul Videbis eum Agonem, to morrow you shall see the running for a Wager; and accordingly, the next day being brought forth to his Martyrdom, he with no less constancy then patience, endured faithful unto the death.

But

But Decius, the Author of this Persecution, escaped not the revenging hand of God, for warring against the Goths, and being overcome by them, left he should fall into their hands, he leaped with his Horse into a Whirlpit, where he was drowned, and his Body was never found after: Yea, God avenged the Blood of his Saints upon the whole Roman Empire, by sending a General Plague of Pestilence upon it, which continued ten years together; and Dionysius saith, That in Alexandria, where he was Bishop, there was scarce any House clear: And though some Christians died in this Plague, yet it fell most heavy upon the Gentiles. The Christians also in this Plague shewed much Brotherly love each to other, by visiting, comforting, and relieving one another. Whereas the Idolaters, being stricken with extream fear of the Plague, none considered his Neighbor, but every Man shifted for himself; and of those that were infected, some they cast out of doors half dead, to be devoured of Dogs and Wild Beasts; some they let die in their Houses without all succor; others they suffered to lie unburied, and durst not come near them, notwithstanding which, the Pestilence followed them whithersoever they went, and miserably consumed them: So that the most part of the Inhabitants were consumed by it in every Countrey, especially in those Provinces, where had been the greatest Persecutions raised against the Christians.

Gods judgment on Persecutors.

A terrible Plague.

The Brotherly love of Christians.

A special Providence.

After the death of Decius, there succeeded Gallus and Volusianus in the Empire, Anno Christi 255. who continued this Persecution against the Christians; which fell most heavy upon the Pastors and Ministers of the Congregations. For about this time Cyprian, and many other Ministers were banished; others were put into the Metall Mines, to whom Cyprian wrote an Epistle Consolatory, wherein he writes thus, wounds and Scars are an Ornament to a Christians Breast, such as bring not shame, but honoreth them before the Lord; and though in the Mines there be no Beds for their Bodies to rest on, yet they have rest in Christ; and though their weary Bones lie on the cold ground, yet it is no pain to lie with Christ. Their Feet are fettered with Chains, but he is bound of Man, whom the Lord Christ doth loose: He lies tied in the Stocks, whose Feet thereby are made swifter to run to Heaven; neither can any Man tie a Christian so fast, but he runs so much the faster for his Garland of Life: They have no Garments to save them from cold, but he that puts on Christ, is sufficiently clothed. Doth Bread fail to their hungry Bodies? Man lives not by Bread alone, but by every Word that proceeds out of the Mouth of God. Your Deformity shall be turned to Honor, your Mourning to Joy, your Pain to Pleasure, and Felicity infinite. And if this grieves you, that you cannot serve God in your places as formerly, yet your daily sacrifice ceaseth not, which is a contrite and humble Heart; and though your travel be great, yet shall your reward be greater: For God beholding them which confess his Name, approveth their willing minds, in their strivings helpeth them, in their victory crowneth them, rewarding that in us which he hath performed, and crowning that which he hath in us perfected. Again, he tells them that they are now in a joyful journey, halting apace to the Mansions of the Martyrs, there to enjoy, after darkness, durable light, and comfort above all their sufferings, &c. About the same time also, Lucius, Bishop of Rome, was banished.

Cyprian Consolatory Letter.

After the death of Gallus and Volusianus, there succeeded Valerianus, who ceased the Persecution, and carried himself exceeding friendly to the Christians; so that his whole Court was replenished with holy Saints and Servants of Christ, whereby his House seemed a Church of God. But the Devil envying the Peace of the Church, by the means of an Egyptian Inchanter, (who was hindered from doing his feats, by the presence of the Christians) stirred up the Emperor against them, who grew to such impiety himself, that he sacrificed young Infants to his Idols, quartered their Bodies, divided the Intrails of young Children new born, &c. As hereafter follows.

Sin the forerunner of Persecution.

Valerianus being seduced by the Egyptian Inchanter, as is before related, stirred up the Eighth Persecution against the Church of Christ; concerning which, Cyprian writeth thus. we must confess, that this great calamity which hath wasted, for the most part, all our Churches, and still daily consumes us, ariseth chiefly from our own wickedness, while we walk not in the way of the Lord, nor observe his Precepts as we ought, whilst we are full of lucre, pride, emulation, dissention, void of simplicity and faithful dealing, renouncing the world in word, but not in deed, every Man pleasing himself, and displeasing others; and therefore we are thus worthily scourged. For what stripes do we not deserve, when the Confessors themselves do keep no Discipline, &c. Concluding, Non venissent fratribus hæc mala, si in unum fraternitas fuisset animata. These evils had not hapned to the Brethren, if they had joyned together in Brotherly unanimity. A little before this Persecution began, God by a Vision revealed it to Cyprian, saying to him, Be quiet and of good comfort, for Peace will come; albeit, a little stay there is for a while, for that some remain yet to be proved and tried, &c.

The Crimes and Accusations that were laid to the charge of the Christians, by the Persecutors, were, that they refused to worship Idols, and the Emperors; and that they professed the Name of Christ: Yet besides all the Calamities and Evils that hapned in the World, as Wars, Famine, Pestilence, &c. were imputed only to the Christians. But Cyprian and Tertullian confuting these slanders, proved, That the special cause of all those miseries which beset the Empire, proceeded from the cruel shedding of the Innocent Blood of the Christians. In this Persecution, Cyprian was at last condemned to have his Head cut off, who patiently and willingly submitted his Neck to the stroke of the Sword.

Also about this time, Sixtus, Bishop of Rome, with his six Deacons, were accused for being Christians; whereupon being brought to the place of Execution, they were all Beheaded.

Laurence also, another of his Deacons, following Sixtus as he went to his Execution, complained that he might not suffer with him, but that he was secluded, as the Son from the Father. To whom the Bishop answered, That within three days he should follow him, bidding him, in the mean time, to go home, and if he had any Treasures, to distribute them amongst the Poor. The Judge hearing mention of Treasures, supposing that Laurence had great store in his custody, commanded him to bring the same to him: Laurence craved three days respite, promising then to declare where the Treasure might be had. In the mean time, he caused a good number of Poor Christians to be gathered together, and when the day of his answer was come, the Persecutor strictly charged him to make good his promise. But valiant Laurence, stretching out his Arms over the Poor, said, These are the Precious Treasures of the Church; these are the Treasures indeed, in whom Christ hath his Mansion, &c. But O! What tongue is able to express the fury and madness of the Tyrants heart! How he stamped, stared, ramped, and fared like one out of his Wits. His eyes glowed like fire, his mouth foamed like a Boar, like a Hell-hound he grindeth his teeth; then he cried, *Kindle the fire, make no spare of wood; hath this Villain deluded the Emperor? away with him, whip him with scourges, jerk him with rods, buffet him with fists, brain him with clubs: Fesleth the Traytor with the Emperor? pinch him with fiery tongs, gird him with burning plates, bring out the strongest chains and fire-forks, and the grate of iron, set it on the fire, bind the Re'el hand and foot, and when the grate is red hot, on with him, roast him, broyl him, toss him, turn him: Upon pain of our high displeasure, do every Man his office, O ye Tormentors! was obeyed, and after many cruel handlings, this meek Lamb was laid, I will not say upon a Bed of Fiery-iron, but on a soft Doun-Bed; so mightily God wrought for his Servant, so miraculously did he temper this Element of Fire, that it was not a Bed of consuming Pain, but of nourishing Rest unto Lawrence. Not Lawrence, but the Emperor seemed to be tormented, the one broiling in the Flesh, the other burning in his Heart. When this Triumphant Martyr had been pressed down with Fire-forks for a great space, in the Mighty Spirit of God, he spake to the Tyrant thus:

In all these things we are more than conquerors.

This side is now roasted enough, turn up, O Tyrant great;

Assay, whether roasted or raw, thou think'st the better meat?

By the constant Confession of this worthy and valiant Deacon, a Roman Soldier was converted to the same Faith, and desired to be Baptised; whereupon he was called before the Judge, scourged, and afterwards Beheaded.

About the same time, Dionysius, Bishop of Alexandria, with his three Deacons, were brought before Emilianus, who told them of the clemency of the Emperor, and therefore required them to sacrifice to his gods, &c. To whom Dionysius answered, Divers Men worship divers gods, but we only that one God who is the Creator of all things, making our Prayers to him incessantly for the health of the Emperor. &c. Then said the President, why can you not worship your own God, and ours also? Dionysius replied, we worship only one God, as we have said. The President said, I see you are ingrateful persons, and regard not the Emperors clemency, therefore I banish you to Cephro in Lybia, and charge you, that you convert no more your Assemblies, nor be found out of that place at your peril. And though Dionysius was sick, yet would he not grant him one days respite, before his departure.

In Cephro he had a great Congregation, as well of those that followed him in his banishment, as of others that resorted to him out of Egypt; yea, though at first he was persecuted there, and stoned, yet afterwards a great number of the Inhabitants forsook their Idols, and were converted unto God by his Ministry: And having accomplished his Ministry there, the Lord removed him to another place. For (saith Dionysius) Emilianus translated us from thence to a sharper place of Lybia, commanding us to meet all together at the City Mareota, intending to separate us into several Villages, or rather to take us by the way. When we came thither, I was commanded to Colluthion, a place which I had never heard of; yet was it some solace to me, that the Brethren told me it was near to the City Paretonium: For as my being at Cephro gat me the acquaintance of many Brethren of Egypt, so I hoped, that the vicinity of that place to the City, might procure me the concurrence of certain loving Brethren from it, as it came also to pass, &c.

The power of the Word of God,

Gods Providence.

He writeth moreover, that the number of those which suffered Martyrdom about that time, was great, Men, Women, young Men, Maidens, old Wives, Soldiers, and Men of all sorts and ages; of whom, some with scourgings, and fire, and some with the sword, obtained the Victory, and gat the Crown. Neither (saith he) to this day doth the President cease cruelly murdering such as be brought before him, tearing some with torments, imprisoning others, and commanding, that no Man should come to them: Yet God with the daily resort of the Brethren, doth comfort the afflicted.

The cruel punishments of the Christians.

In Palestine, Priscus, Malchus, and Alexander, three godly Men, seeing the valiant courage of the Christians so boldly to venture, constantly to stand, and patiently to suffer in this persecution, as being grieved with themselves, began to accuse their own sluggishness and cowardise, to see others so zealous and valiant, and themselves so cold and faint-hearted, in laboring for the Crown of Martyrdom: Whereupon, agreeing amongst themselves, they came to Cæsarea, and stepping to the Judge, they declared themselves to be Christians, and so they were sentenced, and given to the Wild Beasts.

Priscus, Malchus, Alexander.

Zeal.

A certain Woman also in the same place, formerly a Marcionist, being brought before the President, obtained the same Martyrdom.

Three hundred Christians put into a Limekiln.

In Carthage three hundred Christians being brought before the President, were put to their choice, either to offer sacrifice, or to go into a Lime-kiln: Whereupon by mutual consent, they all chose the Lime-kiln, in which, with the smoke of the Lime, they were smothered.

Three Virgins
mented.

In another part of Africk, three godly Virgins had first Vinegar and Gall given them to drink; then were they scourged, tormented upon the Gibbet, and rubbed with Lime; then were they scorched upon the Fiery Gridiron, then cast to the Wild Beasts, which would not touch them; therefore, lastly, they were Beheaded.

In Italy, a godly Man was first tormented with the Rack, then cast to the Wild Beasts, which not hurting him, he was burned in the fire. Fructuosus, a Bishop in Spain, with his two Deacons, having witnessed a good Confession, were all of them burned in the fire. But this cruel Emperor Valerian, who thus persecuted the Saints of God, shortly after felt the revenging Hand of God: For in an expedition that he made against the Persians, he was taken prisoner by Sipores the King, who made a Foot-stool of him, every time that he gat upon his Horse; and at last, by the command of the King, he was flayed alive, powdered with Salt, and so ended his wretched life. Also Claudius, a President and Minister of his Persecutions, was possessed by the Devil, and biting off his Tongue in small pieces, he ended his wretched life. Also there were great and terrible Earth-quakes, and many Commotions and Rebellions in sundry parts of the Empire, inasmuch, as Galiennus, the Son of Valerian, and his Fellow-Emperor, began to relent towards the Christians, and set forth some Edicts in their favor. Notwithstanding which, some there were that suffered in sundry places, amongst whom was one Marinus, a Nobleman, and valiant Captain in Casarea, who stood for an honorable Office, which of right fell to him; but his Competitor to prevent him, accused him to the Judge to be a Christian. Hereupon the Judge examined him of his Faith, and finding that indeed he was a Christian, he gave him three hours to advise and deliberate with himself. Then the Bishop of the place, finding that he stood doubtful in himself what to do, took him by the hand, and led him into the Church, and laid before him a Sword and a New Testament, bidding him take his free choice, which of them he would have. Marinus immediately ran to the New Testament, and chose that; and so being animated by the Bishop, he presented himself boldly before the Judge, by whose Sentence he was Beheaded.

About the same time there was in Casarea, Asyrius, a Noble Senator of Rome, and a Christian; and whereas the Gentiles, in that place, used to offer sacrifice by a Fountain side; which sacrifice, by the working of the Devil, used suddenly to vanish out of their sight, to the great admiration of the deluded multitude. Asyrius pitying their miserable ignorance, came amongst them, and lifting up his eyes to Heaven, prayed to God in the Name of Christ, That the People might no longer be thus seduced by the Devil; whereupon the sacrifice was seen to swim upon the Fountain, and ever after, that false Miracle ceased.

Church.

After the death of Galiennus, there succeeded Claudius, a quiet Emperor; and after him, Quintilianus his Brother; both which, reigning Nineteen years, the Church enjoyed Peace in their time.

CHAP. XV.

The Ninth Primitive Persecution, which began Anno Christi 278.

After the death of Quintilian, succeeded Aurelian in the Empire, who was by nature severe and rigorous, and a strict punisher of dissolute manners, so that it grew into a Proverb, That he was a good Physitian, saving that he gave too bitter Medicines. In the beginning of his reign, he was a moderate and discreet Prince, and no great disturber of the Christians, whom he neither molested in their Religion, nor in their Councils. But afterwards, through sinister suggestions of those which were about him, his nature being before inclinable to levity, he was altered to plain Tyranny, which he first shewed in the death of his own Sisters Son, and afterwards he raised the Ninth Persecution against the Church of Christ; but when he was about to sign a Proclamation or Edict for that Persecution, it pleased God that a Thunderbolt fell so near him, that all men thought he had been slain, and the Emperor was so terrified thereby, that he gave over his Tyrannical purpose, so that he rather intended, than moved Persecution. Having reigned about six years, he was slain.

A special Providence.

Peace continued the Church in Councils.

The Emperor's death was a great relief to the Church.

Since the Emperor's death, the Church was in a state of peace.

The Emperor's death was a great relief to the Church.

After whose death divers other Emperors succeeded, in whose time the Church had peace for about the space of forty four years. During which time it did mightily increase and flourish: Yea, the more the Christians had suffered, the more they were honored; Inasmuch as some of the Emperors did singularly favour them, preferred and made them Governors of Provinces.

Dorotheus, with his Wife, Children, and whole Family, were accepted, and highly advanced in the Emperors Court. Yea, Gorgonius, and divers others, for their Doctrine and Learning, were with their Princes in great estimation. The Bishops were also in great favour with the Rulers and Presidents where they lived; so that innumerable multitudes and Congregations assembled together in every City, and there were great concourses of such as daily flocked to the publick places of Prayer.

But through this great prosperity, the Christians, by reason of the corruption of their natures, and the temptations of Satan, began to degenerate, and to grow idle and delicate, striving and contending amongst themselves, upon every occasion, with railing words bespattering one another in a despightful manner, Bishops against Bishops, and People against People, moving hatred and sedition each against other: Besides, cursed hypocrisie and dissimulation increased more and more; by reason whereof Gods Judgments brake forth against them, which began first to fall upon those Christians which were Soldiers; but that touched the other very little, neither did they seek to appease Gods wrath, nor to call for Mercy, but thinking that they should escape well enough, they heaped iniquities daily more and more, one upon another. The Pastors being inflamed with mutual contention each against other, Then did the Lord raise up adversaries against his People, that raled their Churches to the ground, burnt the sacred

Scriptures

Scriptures in the open Market places, made the Pastors of the Church to hide themselves, and some with great shame were taken Prisoners, and were mocked of their enemies; and put to open reproach.

C H A P. XVI.

The Tenth Primitive Persecution, which began Anno Christi 308.

Dioctlesian and Maximian having many wars, associated to themselves two Casars, Galerius, who was sent into the East against the Persians; and Constantius, who was sent into Britain, where he married Helena, the Daughter of King Coel; a Maiden excelling in Beauty, and no less famous for her Studies and Learning, by whom he had Constantine the Great.

Pride. These two Emperors having obtained many Victories, were so puffed up with pride, that they ordained a solemn Triumph at Rome. After which, Dioctlesian would needs be worshipped as God, saying, that he was Brother to the Sun and Moon, and adorning his shoes with gold and precious stones, he commanded the People to kiss his Feet. Then did he raise a great and grievous Persecution against the Church of God: and the Feast of Easter drawing nigh, he commanded all the Churches of the Christians to be spoiled, and cast down, and the Books of the holy Scriptures to be burnt, which was executed with all rigour and contempt that might be.

Bibles burnt.

Cruel Edicts.

Then he sent forth his Edicts for the displacing of all Christian Magistrates, and put all others out of their Offices, imprisoning such of the common people as would not abjure Christianity, and subscribe to the Heathen Idolatries.

Then were cruel Edicts sent abroad for the imprisoning of the Elders and Bishops, and constraining them by sundry kinds of torments to sacrifice to the Idols; whereupon ensued a great Persecution against the Governors of the Church, amongst whom many of them manfully passed through exceeding bitter torments: some were scourged all over their Bodies with Whips: some with racks and tearings of their flesh, were exceedingly cruciated: some one way, others another way were put to death.

Horrible torments.

False Accusations of Christians.

Some were violently drawn to the impure sacrifices, and as though they had sacrificed, (when indeed they did not,) were let go. Others neither coming to their Altars, nor touching any piece of their sacrifice, yet were born in hand by those which stood by, that they had sacrificed; and so being defamed by their adversaries, were let go. Others as dead men were carried out, and cast away, being but half dead.

Some were cast down on the pavement, and trailed a great space by the Legs, and the People made to believe that they had sacrificed; Others withstood them, stoutly affirming with a loud voice, that they had not sacrificed; withal saying, that they were Christians, and gloried in the profession of that Name.

Courage.

Humane infirmity.

Zeal.

Some cried that they neither had, nor ever would be partakers of that Idolatry, who were buffeted on the Face and Mouth by the Soldiers, that they might hold their peace. But if the Saints seemed never so little to do what their enemies would have them, they were made much of; yet none of these devices prevailed against the constant Servants of Jesus Christ; but of the weaker sort, through frailty, many fell at the first brunt.

When these Edicts were first set up at Nicomedia, a Christian, a Noble man born, moved with an holy zeal, ran, and took them down, and tare them in pieces, though the Emperors were present in the City; for which he was put to a most bitter death, which with great constancy and patience, he endured to the last.

These

These furious Tyrants, Dioclesian in the West, and Maximian in the East, raged exceedingly against the poor Saints of Christ. But Dioclesian proceeded more subtilly, first beginning with the Soldiers in his Camp; to whom the Marshal of the Field proposed, that they should either offer sacrifice, or leave their places and offices, and lay down their arms; whereunto the Christians resolutely answered, That they were not only ready to lay down their weapons, but to suffer death, if it was imposed upon them, rather than so to sin against God.

Stachey

Confancy

In the beginning of this Persecution, few were tormented, but afterwards the Emperor grew to greater cruelty. It cannot be expressed what number of Martyrs suffered; what blood was shed through all Cities and Regions for the Name of Christ.

In Tyre certain Christians were given to the most cruel wild Beasts, which yet would not hurt them; and the Lions, Bears and Leopards, which were kept hungry for the purpose, would not touch them: Yet did they vehemently rage against those that brought the Christians into the Stage, who though they stood, as they thought, without their reach, yet were they caught, and devoured by them. Afterwards these Martyrs were slain with the Sword, and cast into the Sea.

A Miracle of Mercy.

In notes I have examined the story

Sylvanus, Bishop of Gazenses, with thirty nine more, were slain in the Mettal Mines. Pamphilus of Casarea, died a glorious Martyr.

In Syria, all the chief Pastors were first cast into Prison, together with the Bishops, Elders and Deacons: Tiranion was thrown into the Sea. Zenobius a Physician, was slain with Brickbats.

At Antioch two young Maidens were thrown into the Sea. Also an aged Matron, and her two beautiful Daughters, being sought after, and at last found, rather than they would be drawn to do sacrifice, threw themselves headlong into a River. Sylvanus Bishop of Emissa, with some others were thrown to the wild Beasts.

The Christians in Mesopotamia were tormented divers ways: some of them were hanged up by the Feet, and with the smoak of a small fire strangled. So out-ragious was the Emperor in the beginning of this Persecution, that in Nicomedia he slew the chiefest Princes of his Court, whom a little before he prized as his own Children.

Also one Peter was hoisted up naked, and so beaten, and torn with Whips, that his bones might be seen; Then they poured upon him Salt and Vinegar, and lastly roasted him with a soft Fire. Dorotheus and Gorgonius, men of great Authority under the Emperor, after divers torments were strangled with an Halter. Anthimus, Bishop of Nicomedia, with divers others, having made a good confession were Beheaded. Yea, Serena, the Wife of Dioclesian the Emperor, was Martyred for her Religion. Some others were bound Hand and Foot to a Post, and so burnt.

Also many Christians of all ages and sorts, being met together in a Church, to celebrate the memorial of Christ's Nativity, Maximian the Emperor sent some to fire the Church, and burn them all; But first they commanded a Crier to proclaim, that whosoever would have life, should come out, and sacrifice to Jupiter, otherwise they should be all burnt; Then one stepping up boldly, in the name of all the rest, said, we are all Christians, and believe that Christ is our only God and King; and we will sacrifice to none but him; Hereupon the Fire was kindled, and some thousands of Men, Women and Children were burnt in that place.

Christians burnt in a Church

In Arabia many Martyrs were slain with Axes. In Phrygia, the Emperor sent his Edicts to a City, commanding them to sacrifice to the Idols: But the Major, and all the Citizens professed themselves to be Christians, whereupon the Emperor made his Army environ the City, and set it on Fire, whereby all the Inhabitants were burnt together in it.

Eustatius, a Persecutor converted and Martyred.

Eustatius, an Armenian, and skilful in the Greek Tongue, highly honored and advanced by the Emperor, who also had executed many Christians, beholding the marvellous constancy of the Martyrs, privately learned the Christian Religion, burned exceedingly with a desire of Martyrdom, and not staying for Accusers, professed himself to be a Christian, openly execrating the vanity and madness of the Heathens; Being therefore apprehended, he was tied up, and bitterly beaten; afterwards he was parched with fire put to his Bowels, then basted with Salt and Vinegar, then scraped and bemangled with sharp cutting Shels, that his whole body seemed to be but one wound, yet afterwards, through Gods goodness, it was restored again whole. And lastly was he burned.

Peter.

In Alexandria, Peter the Bishop, and his Deacons constantly suffered Martyrdom: As also many other Bishops in Egypt, together with many famous and excellent men, suffered about the same time.

A Legion of Christians
Martyred.

A whole Legion of Christian Soldiers, that lay at Thebes in Egypt, under their Christian Collonel Mauritius, because they refused to sacrifice to Idols, were first tithed over by the Emperors command, once, and again and afterwards, by the exhortation of Mauritius, they died all together constant Martyrs.

Inhumane
cruelty.

The Persecution raged not only in Asia and Africa, but also in Italy, France, Spain, &c. in all which Countries an innumerable company of Christians were Martyred by sundry kinds of death. In Trevers were so many Christians slain, that their Blood ran like small Brooks, and discoloured great Rivers; yet this sufficed not the Tyrant, but he sent abroad his Horsemen, to command all those which had apprehended any Christians, immediately to put them to death.

ments.

At Colleen also, and in Rhetia many were Martyred: yea, this Persecution extended into our Britain, where all the Christians were put to death.

Besides the kinds of death, the punishments were so great and horrible as no Tongue is able to express: as whippings, scourgings, rackings, horrible scrapings, Sword, Fire, Shipboats, whereinto many were put and sunk into the Sea: As also hanging upon Crosses, binding some to the bodies of Trees with their Heads hanging downward, hanging others by the middle upon Gallowses till they died of hunger: throwing others alive to Lions, Bears, Leopards, wild Bulls, &c. Pricking others with Bodkins and Talons of Beasts, till they were almost dead.

In Thebeside, they hanged up Women naked by one of their Feet, the rest of their Body hanging downwards, with many other sorts of punishments most cruel to be thought of: Some were bound to the Boughs of Trees, and had their Members torn asunder; others were mangled with Axes, some choaked with smoak over a slow Fire, some had their Hands, Ears, and Feet cut off, others were scorched and broiled upon Coals, yet not to death, but had the torment renewed every day.

In Pontus the Martyrs had other horrible torments inflicted on them, Some had their Fingers-ends under their Nails thrust in with Bodkins: Some were sprinkled all over with boiling Lead, having their necessary Members cut from them, others suffered most filthy and intolerable torments in their Bowels, and privy Members: what the outrage of this Persecution was in Alexandria, Phileas a Bishop thus writeth, elty.

Because (saith he) every man might torment the Holy Martyrs as he listed, some beat them with Cudgels; some with Rods, some with Whips, some with Thongs, some with Cords, some having their Hands bound behind them were lifted upon Timber-logs, and with certain Instruments had their Members and joynts stretched out, where their Bodies hanging, were subjected to the will of the Tormentors, who were commanded to afflict them with all manner of torments: on their Sides, Bellies, Thighs, Legs, they scratched them with the claws of wild Beasts: some were hanged but by one Hand on the Engine, that they might might feel the more grievous pulling out of the rest of their Members: Some were bound to Pillars, having no stay under their Feet, that with the weight of their Bodies being drawn out, they might feel the greater torment: and these torments endured all day long. The Judge commanding that they should not be let down, till either by the extremity of torment, or by the cold, they were near death; and then they were let down, and haled upon the ground.

They devised also another greater torment; For when the Christians were lamentably beaten, they had a new kind of rack, wherewith they, lying upright, were stretched by both the Feet above the fourth hole, with sharp shells strowed under them. Others were cast down upon the pavement, where they had so many torments inflicted upon them, that their sufferings cannot be imagined what they were: In the midst of which torments some died, their enemies being confounded with their singular patience.

patience.

Some half dead were thrust into Prisons, where, with their wounds and pain they ended their lives: Others being cured of their wounds, were again put to their choice; whether they would sacrifice to the Idols, and have their liberty, or have the sentence of death pass upon them, who did willingly chuse death for Christs sake, rather than to sin against him.

In Nicomedia, a Christian pulling down, and tearing the Emperors Edict, was stript and beaten till the bones appeared, and then washed in Salt and Vinegar, under which torments he died. Yet notwithstanding the horribleness of these tortures, the Christian Martyrs were so far from being dismayed, that they were confirmed and strengthened thereby, merrily and joyfully undergoing whatsoever was inflicted upon them.

Courage and
constancy.

Eusebius saith, that himself saw the cruel Persecution in Thebaide, where the Swords of the Persecutors were blunted with the great slaughter of the Christians, and they sat down with weariness to rest them, whilst others took their places. Yet still the Christians shewed their willingness, and with courage, joy and smiling, received their sentence of death from the Judge, and to the last gasp, sang Psalms and Hymns of praise to God.

weaned.

In Alexandria the Holy Martyrs, led with the love of better rewards, did not only bear the menaces of the cruel Soldiers, wherewith they threatened them, but also whatsoever torments they could devise for their destruction: Ye said Suspi- tius; Then the Christians with more greedy desire pressed and fought for Martyrdom, then now they do for Bishopricks. Yet some through infirmity in this Persecution fell back, for which they were excommunicated by the Church.

Humane infirmity.

Damasus and others witness, that there were slain in thirty days, seventeen thousand Persons, besides a great number that were condemned to the Mines and quarries, with the like cruelty.

In Alexandria were slain with Axes three hundred: At Colen three hundred. Mauritius with his Christian Legion, being six thousand, six hundred, sixty six, whose Story, deserving perpetually to be remembered, is this:

Maximian sent for this Mauritius with his Legion of Theban Soldiers, under a pretence of employing them against his enemies: When they came to Rome, Marcellus, the blessed Bishop laboured to confirm them in the truth, to whom they promised perseverance in the Faith unto the death. Then they followed the Imperial Army into France, and when they were come thither, Maximian offered sacrifice to the Devils, and called all his Soldiers to the same, strictly charging them to fight against their enemies, and against the Christians which were enemies to his Gods. These Christian Thebans resolved rather to die, than to sacrifice, or to bear Arms against the Christians, wherewith the Tyrant being enraged, commanded every tenth Man of the Legion to be put to the Sword; Hereupon they strove who should submit their Necks to the stroke. Mauritius encourageth them greatly hereunto, and being called before the Emperor, he said, we, O Emperor, your Sol- diers, and yet the Servants of God, owe thee service of war, but to him innocency; of thee we receive wages, but of him life; therefore we cannot obey thee to deny God our Lord,

The Story of his Legion.

A most Chris-

and yours also, will ye nil ye: we are ready to obey you, if you enforce us not to disobey him: Otherwise we will rather obey him than you: we offer here our hands against any other enemies, but to defile our hands with the blood of innocents, we may not: These hands of ours have skill to fight against wicked enemies, but not to murder godly friends, &c. we have engaged our Faith to God, we cannot be true to you, if we break covenant with him, &c. we see our Brethren and Fellows in Arms, cruelly put to the sword, which we rejoyce in, that they have been counted worthy to suffer for Christs sake, &c. Behold here we cast down our weapons, and had rather be killed, than to kill, and to die guiltless than to live guilty: we are ready to suffer what more you shall appoint, yea both Fire, sword, or any other torments. we confess our selves to be Christians, we cannot Persecute Christians, nor sacrifice to your devillish Idols. The Emperor being highly incensed with this answer, commanded the second time the Tenth Man to be slain, which being accomplished, when the Christian Soldiers would not yet condescend to his mind, he set upon them with his whole host, both of Foot and Horse, charging them to kill them all; The Christians made no resistance, but throwing down their Arms, offered their naked Necks to the Persecutors, and so were all slain.

Christian courage.

At that time, one Victor, an old Soldier, that for his age was dismissed, coming to the Army, as they were banquetting and making merry with the spoils of the Martyrs, was bidden to sit down with them; but he asked them what was the cause of their mirth, and understanding the truth, he detested them, and refused to eat with them; and being thereupon demanded whether he were a Christian? He answered that he was and ever would be. Then they rushed upon him; and made him partaker of the like Martyrdom and honour.

The mercies of the wicked are cruelty.

When Dioclesian and Maximian, notwithstanding all the slaughter which they made, saw the number of Christians rather increased than diminished, so that they were out of all hope of utter rooting them out, and having now even their fill of Blood, they ceased at last of their own accord from putting any more Christians to death: Yet of a great multitude; they thrust out their right Eyes, and maimed their right Legs at the Ham, with a searing Iron, condemning them to the Metal-mynes, not so much for their labour, as desirous to afflict them thereby: and so having reigned together about one and twenty years, Dioclesian divested himself of the imperial Dignity, and lived a private life, and the like did Maximian also, resigning the Empire to Galerius Maximinus, and Constantius.

Gods judgments on Persecutors.

Maximinus was of a cruel Nature, a great Enchanter, vicious in his life, and a great enemy to the Christians, and therefore continued the Persecution of them, yet at length was revoked from his cruelty by the just Judgment of God upon him; For he was suddenly taken with an horrible and filthy Disease, which first began outwardly in his Flesh: and then proceeded more inwardly: His privy members putrified with a botchy corrupt Boil, and a Fistula, consuming, and eating up his Entrails, whence swarmed forth an innumerable company of Lice, with such a pestiferous stink, that no man could abide him; He being also very gross, his fat putrified, and stank intolerably; and because his Physicians could not abide the stink, he commanded them to be slain: others of them, because they could not cure his incurable Disease, he put to cruel deaths.

Hypocrisy.

At last being told that his Disease came from God, he began to bethink himself of all the cruelty which he had shewed to the Saints, confessed his offences to God, and gave command that the Persecution against the Christians should cease; requiring his Officers likewise to reedifie their Temples, and requested them to pray to their God for him.

This Edict much comforted and refreshed the Christians, who thereupon gathered together in every City, called their Synods and Councils; yea, the Infidels themselves extolled and magnified the true God of the Christians.

But

But this Tyrant Maximinus scarce suffered this peace to continue six moneths together, but again he forbad the Christians to meet, and privately stirred up the Athenians to petition him, that none of them might be suffered to live in their City: Also a Conjuror in Athens made an Image of Jupiter, which uttered these words, Jupiter commandeth the Christians to be banished out of this City and Suburbs, because they are enemies to him. Also certain Harlots were suborned to say, that they formerly were Christians, and privy to the wicked and lascivious acts which they exercised amongst themselves, upon Sabbath days, &c. And thereupon the Emperor commanded, that they should put them to death by all means possible. Then did the Persecution grow as great as ever it was, and the Governors of every Province fell upon the Christians, banishing some, and putting others to death.

Silvanus Bishop of Emissa, a very old man, and three others with him, were condemned to death. So was Lucianus, an Elder at Antioch. At Alexandria, Peter the Bishop was Beheaded. Quirinus Bishop of Scefcannus had an Hand-mill tied about his Neck, and was thrown Head-long into a River: where yet he floated a great while, exhorting the lookers on not to be dismayed with his punishment, and so with much ado, was at last drowned.

At Rome, many Bishops, Ministers and Elders were put to death. In sundry other places very many others suffered Martyrdom with fire, wild Beasts, drowning in the Sea, &c. Some were Crucified, some were slain with the Sword; some endured the cutting and burning of their Members; some had their Eyes thrust out; some were starved in Prisons, and whatsoever other cruelty the Magistrates could devise; All which the People of God endured, rather than they would offer sacrifice to the Idols. The like miseries did the Women also endure, for being inticed to the filthy use of their Bodies, some rather chose banishment, and others to prevent it, killed themselves.

Neither could Christians live safely in the Wilderness, but even from thence they were drawn to torments and death.

And whereas the Tyrant in his Edict had boasted of the plenty and prosperity of all things in the time of his Persecuting of the Saints, God to confute him, presently sent great drought, famine and pestilence, besides the Wars with the Armenians; by which calamities, the People were miserably wasted; corn was sold at an unreasonable rate, so that exceeding great multitudes died of hunger in the Cities, but far more in the Villages; most part of the Husbandmen dying of Famine and the Pestilence. Divers brought out their best treasure, and gave it for any kind of sustenance, though never so little. Others having sold their possessions for food, fell into extrem misery: Some did eat grass, others fed upon unwholesome herbs, whereby they hurt and poisoned their Bodies: Many Women were driven to leave the Cities, and beg up and down the Country: some through faintness fell down in the Streets, and holding up their hands, cryed miserably for some scraps or fragments of Bread, being ready to give up the Ghost; and being able to say no more, they cryed, Hungry, Hungry.

Some of the richer sort being tired with serving such multitudes of Beggars, began to grow hard-hearted, fearing lest themselves should fall into the like misery: By reason whereof the Market-places, Streets, and Lanes, lay full of dead Corpses, and naked Bodies were cast out unburied, many of which were devoured by Dogs, whereupon they which lived, fell to killing of the Dogs, lest running mad, they should fall upon them, and kill them.

The Pestilence also scattering through all Houses, killed very many, especially those of the richer sort, which escaped the Famine, whereby innumerable Magistrates, Princes and Presidents were quickly dispatched, so that all places were filled with mourning, and nothing was seen or heard but weeping and wailing every where. Death so reigned in every Family, that two or three dead Bodies were carried out of one House together. But notwithstanding that that these miscreants had been so cruel to them, yet the Christians were very diligent and charitable to them in all their extremities, travelling every day, some in curing the sick; some in burying of their dead; others called the multitude together, which were ready to famish, and distributed Bread unto them, whereby they occasioned them to glorifie the God of the Christians, and confessed them to be true Worshippers of God, as appeared by their works: and hereby the Lord wrought wonderfully for the peace of his Church, for after he had corrected them, he again shewed them mercy.

Constantine succeeded his Father, overcame Maxentius the Tyrant in Rome, and he together with Licinius set forth Edicts in favour of the Christians: See Constantines life in my second part of Lives. Yet Maximinus continued his Persecution in the East, whereupon Constantine and Licinius wrote to him to favour the Christians, and he finding that he was too weak to encounter with them, sent forth his Edicts to stop the Persecution: yet afterwards he picked new quarrels with them, and began to persecute them again: whereupon Licinius went against him, and overthrew him in a Battel: Then did Maximinus kill many of his Enchanters and Conjurers that had encouraged him, and promised him Victory.

Gods Judgements on Persecutors.

Shortly after the Lord striking him with a grievous disease, he glorified the God of the Christians, and made a Law for the safety and preservation of them: yet not long after by the vehemency of his disease, he ended his life.

Hypocrisie.

Licinius, that for a long time had pretended to the Christian Religion, and lived in great familiarity with Constantine, who had given him his Sister Constantia to be his Wife, began afterwards to discover his Hypocrisie, and the wickedness of his nature, secretly conspiring the death of Constantine: but the Lord discovering and preventing his conspiracies, he then fell out with him, and manifested his hatred of the Christian Religion, being puffed up with the Victory that he had got against Maximinus.

Wicked Laws.

He quarrelled with the Christians, because as he said, they prayed not for him, but for Constantine: and thereupon he first banished them all from his Court: Then he deprived all the Knights of their honourable order, except they would sacrifice to devils: Then he commanded that the Bishops should have no meetings to consult about their Ecclesiastical affairs: nor that any Christians should come to the Churches, or hold any assemblies; Then that Men and Women should not meet together to pray, that Women should not hear the Bishops, but chuse our Women to instruct them: That none should help or succour those that were in Prison, nor should bestow any alms upon them, though they should die for hunger, and that they which shewed any compassion to those which were condemned to death, should suffer the like punishment themselves; Then he Persecuted the Bishops, and slew those which were the most eminent of them: The flattering Officers also which were about him, thinking to please him thereby, slew many Bishops without any cause: yea many of their Bodies they cut into gobbets, and thrown into the Sea to feed Fishes: Some were banished, others had their goods confiscated; many Noblemen and Gentlemen were privily made away: and Licinius gave their unmarried Daughters to wicked Varlots to be deflowered, himself also violated many Women, both Wives and Maidens.

Cruelty.

This cruelty made many godly Persons voluntarily to forsake their Houses, and to live in woods, mountains, and desarts: He caused Theodorus to be hanged upon a Cross, to have nails thrust into his Arm-pits, and afterwards to be Beheaded: Divers other Bishops had their Hands cut off with a searing Iron. In Sebastia forty Christian Soldiers in the vehement cold Winter were cast into an Horsepond, where they ended their lives: The Wives of these forty Men were carried to Heraclea, where, together with a Deacon of that place, after they had suffered innumerable torments, they were slain with the Sword.

Theodorus.

Constantine being informed of all this wickedness, raised an Army, went against him, overcame him twice, and at last caused him to be put to death, as you may may see in Constantines Life in my Second Part; whereby the Church obtained a General Peace.

Yet in this Tenth Persecution many other eminent Christians suffered Martyrdom, besides those before named.

Galerius in his time invaded Antioch, intending to force all Christians to renounce Christ, at what time they were assembled together: Whereupon one Romanus ran to them, declaring, That the Wolves were at hand, which would devour them; yet he exhorted them not to fear, by reason of the peril: And through Gods Grace, the Christians were greatly encouraged by him, so that old Men and Matrons, Fathers, Mothers, young Men and Maidens were all of one mind, being willing to shed their Blood in defence of their Profession. A Band of armed Men were sent against them, which were not able to wrest the staff of Faith out of their hands. Whereupon they sent word to their Captain, That they could not inforce the Christians to deny their Faith, by reason of Romanus, who did so mightily encourage them. The Captain commanded, that he should be brought before him, which was done accordingly. What (saith the Captain) art thou the Author of this Sedition? Art thou the cause that so many lose their lives? By the gods I swear, thou shalt answer for them all, and shalt suffer those torments that thou encouragest them to undergo. Romanus answered, Thy Sentence, O Emperor, I willingly imbrace; I refuse not to be sacrificed for my Brethren, and that by as cruel torments as thou canst invent, &c. The Captain being much enraged with this his stout Answer, commanded him to be trussed up, and his Bowels drawn out; whereupon the Executioners said, Not so, Sir, this Man is of Noble Parentage; and therefore he may not be put to so ignoble a death. Scourge him then (quoth the Captain) with whips, having knobs of Lead at the ends. But Romanus sung Psalms all the time of his whipping, requiring them not to favor him for Nobilities sake. Not the Blood of Progenitors (saith he) but the Christian Profession makes me Noble. Then did he earnestly inveigh against the Captain, and derided their Idol gods, &c. But this further enraged the Tyrant; so that he commanded his sides to be Lanced with Knives, till the Bones were laid open: Yet still did the holy Martyr Preach the Living God, and the Lord Jesus Christ to him. Upon which, the Tyrant commanded them to strike out his Teeth, that his Speech might be hindered: Also his Face was buffeted, his Eye-lids torn with their Nails, his Cheeks gashed with Knives, the Skin of his Beard pulled off by little and little, &c. Yet the meek Martyr said, I thank thee, O Captain, that thou hast opened to me so many mouths as wounds, whereby I may Preach my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ: Look how many wounds I have, so many mouths I have, lauding and praising God. The Captain astonished at his constancy, bad them give over tormenting him; yet he threatened to burn him, reviled him, and blasphemed God, saying, Thy Crucified Christ is but a yesterdays God, the gods of the Gentiles are of greatest antiquity. But Romanus taking occasion from hence, declared to him the Eternity of Christ, &c. withal saying, Give me a Christian Child of seven years old, and thou shalt hear what he will say. Hereupon a pretty Boy was called out of the multitude, to whom Romanus said, Tell me, my pretty Babe, whether thou think it reasons That we worship Christ, and in Christ one Father; or else, That we worship infinite gods? The Child answered, That certainly what we affirm to be God, must needs be one; which with one, is one and the same: And in as much as this one is Christ, of necessity Christ must be the true God. For that there be many gods, we Children cannot believe. The Captain amazed at this, said, Thou young villain and Traytor, where, and of whom learnedst thou this Lesson? O my Mother, said he, with whose Milk I sucked in this Lesson, That I must believe in Christ. The Mother was called, and she gladly appeared; the Tyrant commanded the Child to be horsed up, and scourged; the standers by beholding this merciless act, could not refrain from tears: The joyful and glad Mother alone, stood by with dry Cheeks, yea, she rebuked her sweet Babe, for desiring a cup of cold Water, charging him to thirst after the cup that the Babes of Bethlem once drunk of. She willed him to remember little Isaac, who willingly proffered his Neck to the dint of his Fathers Sword, &c. Then did the cruel tormentor pull off the skin, hair and all, from the crown of the Childs Head. The Mother crying, Suffer my Child, anon thou shalt pass to him that will adorn thy head with a Crown of Eternal glory. Thus the Mother counselleth and encourageth, the Child is encouraged, and receiveth the stripes with a smiling countenance. The Captain seeing the Child invincible, and himself vanquished, commands him to be cast into the stinking Prison, whilest the torments of Romanus were renewed and increased. Then was Romanus brought forth again, to receive new stripes upon his old sores, the flesh being torn, and the bare bones appearing; yet the cruel Tyrant, raging like a mad man, quarrelled with the Tormentors for dealing so mildly with him, commanding them to cut, prick, and pounce him; and then he passed sentence upon him, together with the Child, to be burned to death. To whom Romanus said, I appeal from this unjust sentence of thine, to the Righteous Throne of Christ, that upright Judge; not because I fear thy cruel torments, and merciless handling, but that thy judgments may be known to be cruel and bloody.

An Appeal to Christ.

When they came to the place of Execution, the Tormentors required the Child of his Mother; for she had carried it in her arms from the Prison. She kissing it, delivered it to them; and as the Executioner was striking off his head, she said, Farewel my sweet Child.

The Childs
Martyrdom.

*All laud and praise, with heart and voice,
O Lord, we yield to thee:
To whom the death of all thy Saints, we know most dear to be.*

The Childs Head being cut off, the Mother wrapt it in her Garment, laid it to her Breast, and so departed. Then was Romanus cast into a mighty fire, which being quenched with a great storm of Rain, the Tyrant commanded his Tongue to be cut out, and afterwards caused him to be strangled in the Prison.

Gordius.

Gordius, a Centurion in Cæsarea, in the heat of this Persecution, left his Charge, living a solitary life in a Wilderness for a long time; at last, when a solemn Feast was celebrated to Mars in that City, and multitudes of People were assembled in the Theatre, to see the games; he came, and gat up into a conspicuous place, and with a loud voice said, Behold, I am found of those which sought me not, &c. The multitude hereupon looked about to see who it was that spake this, and Gordius being known, he was immediately brought before the Sheriff, and being asked, who, and what he was, and why he came thither? He told him the whole truth, professing, That he believed in Christ, valued not their threatnings, and chose this as a fit time to manifest his Profession in. Then did the Sheriff call for Scourges, Gibbets, and all manner of torments. To whom Gordius answered, That it would be a loss and damage to him, if he did not suffer divers torments and punishments for Christ, and his Cause. The Sheriff more incensed hereby, commanded all those torments to be inflicted on him, With which Gordius could not be overcome, but sang, The Lord is my helper, I will not fear what Man can do unto me; and I will fear no evil, because thou Lord art with me, &c. Then did he blame the Tormentors for favoring him; provoking them to do their utmost. The Sheriff not prevailing that way, sought by flattery to seduce him, promising him preferment, riches, treasures, honor, &c. if he would deny Christ. But Gordius derided his foolish madness, saying, That he looked for greater preferment in Heaven, than he could give him here upon Earth. Then was he condemned, and had out of the City to be burnt; multitudes followed him, and some kissing him, with tears intreated him to pity himself; to whom he answered, weep not, I pray you for me, but for the Enemies of God, which fight against the Christians: weep, I say, for them which prepare a fire for us, purchasing Hell fire thereby for themselves in the day of vengeance: And cease, I pray you, thus to molest my quiet and settled mind. For truly, for the Name of Christ I am ready to suffer a thousand deaths, &c. Others perswaded him to deny Christ with his mouth, and to keep his Conscience to himself. My tongue (saith he) which by Gods goodness I have, cannot be brought to deny the Author and Giver of the same: For with the heart we believe unto Righteousness, and with the tongue we confess unto Salvation. And thus, perswading and encouraging the People to be willing to die in the like cause, with an unappalled countenance, he willingly gave himself to be burnt.

Also Menas an Egyptian, and a Soldier by Profession, in this Persecution, forsook all, and went into a Desert, where he gave himself to Fasting, Prayer, Meditation, and Reading of the Scriptures. At last returning into the City of Coris, when the People were at their pastimes, he with a loud voice proclaimed himself to be a Christian; and thereupon was carried before the President, and being demanded of his Faith, he said, Convenient it is that I confess God, in whom is light, and no darkness; for with the heart we believe to Righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made to Salvation. Then was he pinched and excruciated with sundry torments: But (said he) there is nothing in my mind, that can be compared to the Kingdom of Heaven; neither is all the world, if it were weighed in a balance, comparable to the price of one Soul. And further said, who can separate us from the love of Christ? Can tribulation, or anguish? &c. And again, I have learned of my Lord Christ, not to fear them that can kill the Body, and have no power to kill the Soul, &c. Having indured manifold torments, he received the sentence of death, and at the place of execution, he said, I give thee thanks, my Lord God, which hast accepted me to be a partaker of thy precious Death, and hast not suffered me to be devoured of my fierce Enemies, but hast made me constant in thy true Faith unto the end. And so he lost his head, but found a crown.

Basil relates a story, That the Emperors Officer brought the Edict against the Christians to a place to be published, and privily suborned some to detect and accuse the Christians: He also caused the Sword, Gibbet, Wheel, and Whips to be brought forth; at the sight thereof, the hearts of all the beholders did shake and tremble: Some for fear fled, others stood in doubt what to do; some again, for fear denied their Faith, others suffered cruel torments, but at last vanquished by the intolerable pain; they made shipwrack of their Consciences, and lost the glory of their Confession.

Amongst others, Forty young Gentlemen that were Soldiers, freely and boldly confessed themselves to be Christians, declaring to the Marshal their names, who amazed at this their boldness, stood in doubt what to do. He assayed with fair words and flatteries to win them, perswading them to consider their youth, and not to change a pleasant life, for a painful and untimely death, promising them honor, money, &c. But they boldly answered, That they neither desired, money, honor, nor life, but only the Celestial Kingdom of Christ; for the love of which they were ready to endure the wheel, Cross, Fire, &c. The Marshal being much offended herewith, devised a new torment: For spying a Pond in the Street that did lie open to the Northern wind, it being in the cold Winter time, he caused them to be put into it all night; but they being merry, comforted one another as they put off their cloaths, saying, we put not off now our cloaths, but our old Man, corrupt with the deceit of concupiscence, for which, we bless and praise God. For by means of the Serpent we once put on the old Man, but by the means of Jesus Christ we now put him off. And being brought naked to the place, where they felt the vehement cold, they were put into the Pond, so that all their Members were stark and stiff with it: And as soon as it was day, they having breath yet remaining in them, were brought to the fire, wherein they were consumed into Ashes, which Ashes were thrown into the flood.

It hapned that one of the company being more lively, and not so near death as the rest, the Executioners pitied him, and delivered him to his Mother, who stood by, to save his life; but she led him to the Piles of Wood, where the other starved Creatures lay ready to be burnt, admonishing him to accomplish the Blessed

Athanasia.

Cyrus, a Physitian of Alexandria, in this Persecution, fled into Syria, where he lived a private life, unto whom, one John, a Soldier, adjoyned himself: But not long after, one Athanasia with her three Daughters, being Virgins, were cast into Prison at Canope in Egypt, for the Profession of their Faith: Cyrus being of their acquaintance, fearing, lest through infirmity they should fall, he together with his partner John, went thither to the Prison to comfort and confirm them; for which he was accused to the President, who thereupon condemned them all, and so they were Beheaded.

Sebastian.

Sebastian also, born in France, and Captain of the Avant-guard of the Emperor, incouraged many Martyrs by his exhortations unto Constancy, and kept them in the Faith; for which, being accused to the Emperor, he caused him to be brought forth into the open Field, where by his own Soldiers he was thrust through with Arrows.

Barlaam.

Basil also maketh mention of one Barlaam, who having indured all sorts of tortures to the point of death, was then by the Tormentors laid upon the Altar, and they put Fire and Frankincense in his right hand, hoping, That the burning of fire would have forced him to scatter the Incense upon the Altar, and so to have Sacrificed. But his hand, induring the fire, remained steady; the Martyr, in the mean time, singing, Blessed be the Lord my God, which teacheth my hands to fight, &c.

Vitalis.

Ambrose mentioneth one Agricola, and Vitalis his Servant, who agreed betwixt themselves, to give their lives, with other Martyrs, for the Name of Christ. Vitalis first offering himself to Martyrdom, the Persecutors labored by all means to draw him to deny Christ; but not prevailing, they exercised upon him all sorts of torments, so that he had no whole skin left on all his Body. Vitalis in the midst of his sufferings, having by Prayer commended himself to God, gave up the ghost. Then was Agricola let upon by the Tormentors, whose virtuous life, and gentle conditions, had won him such respect, that they delayed tormenting of him; but he provoking them to make quicker speed, they fastned him to the Cross, where he finished his Martyrdom.

Vincentius.

cruelty.

Joy unspeak-able.

Augustine writes of one Vincentius, a Spaniard, who, by Dacianus the President, was first laid upon the Rack, till all the Joynts of his Body cracked; then were all his Members flased and indented with deadly wounds; then they miserably scratched all his Body with Iron-combs, filed very sharp: They laid his Body, being all out of joynt upon an Iron-grate, opened it with Iron-hooks; seared it with Fiery-plates, and then besprinkled it with hot burning Salt. Lastly, they drew him, and cast him into a vile Dungeon, the Floor whereof was thick spred with the sharpest Shells, his Feet were fast locked in the Stocks, and so left him without all worldly comfort. But the Lord his God was with him, the holy Spirit of God, whose office it is to comfort the afflicted, filled his heart with joy unspeakable: So that he there ended his life with much comfort.

Procopius.

Also Procopius in Palestine, after his Conversion, brake his Images of Gold and Silver, and distributed them amongst the Poor; whereupon he had all sorts of torments inflicted on him, racking, cording, tearing of his flesh, firing, goring, stabbing; and lastly, had his Head cut off.

Zeal.

George, a young Man of Cappadocia, stoutly inveighing against the impious Idolatry of the Emperor, was apprehended, torn with hooked Irons, burnt with hot Lime, stretched out with Cords, after had his Hands and Feet cut off, and lastly, was Beheaded.

Hermogenes.

Hermogenes, the President of Athens, being converted by beholding the Patience and Constancy of two Martyrs in their torments, suffered himself for the same Faith.

In Portugal, a noble Virgin named Eulalia, not much above twelve years old, had profers of great Marriages made unto her: But she seeing the furious rage of this Persecution, had a great mind to joyn her self to the number of the Martyrs; for which end, she poured out her heart in Prayer to God for strength and Faith to inable her thereunto: But her godly Parents fearing that her ready mind to die for Christs cause, might make her guilty of her own death, they kept her close at their Countrey-house, a great way from the City. There she lived quietly for a while; but at last, detesting to make such delay, she stole out of her Fathers house in the night, and travelled all alone through by-ways, with much difficulty and weariness towards the City; whither she came in the morning, and going before the Judge, she with a loud voice said, I pray you, what a shame is it for you thus wickedly to kill Mens Souls, and to break their Bodies in pieces, to compel them to deny the Omnipotent God? would you know who I am? I am a Christian, and an Enemy to your Devilish Sacrifices; I spurn your Idols under my Feet, I confesse God Omnipotent with my heart and mouth, &c. Go to therefore thou Hangman, burn, cut and mangle these my Earthly Members; thou maist easily break a brittle Substance, but thou canst not hurt my inward Mind by any thing thou canst do. The Judge inrageth herewith, said to the Hangman, Take her and pull her out by the hair of her head to torments, let her feel the power of our gods, and know what we can do. But yet, O sturdy Girl, I would fain have thee, before thou diest, to revoke thy wickedness: Remember the honorable House, of which thou art come, and thy Friends tears: wilt thou kill thy self in the flower of thy youth, so near honorable Marriages? Dost not the glistening pomp of the Brid-bed move thee, &c. Behold here the Engines prepared for thy death; either thou shalt be beheaded with the Sword, or torn with wild Beasts, or consumed with fire to ashes, &c. yet this thou mayest escape if thou wilt: what greater matter is it for thee, with thy fingers to put a little Incense into the Censers: yet thereby thou shalt be delivered.

To this Eulalia answered not, being in a great Passion, but spit in the Tyrants face, and spurned abroad the heap of Incense. Whereupon, without further delay, the Hangman, with both their strengths, pulled out her Joynts, scratched her with the Talons of Wild Beasts to the hard Bones, she singing and praising God, in the mean time, saying, Behold, O Lord, I will not forget thee, what a pleasure is it for them, O Christ, that remember thy Triumphant Victories, to attain to these high Dignities! &c. Yea, when, as out of a warm Fountain, her fair and white skin was discoloured with the Purple Blood that flowed from her torn Members, she wept not, but chearfully sang praises unto God; thereupon they gored her mangled Body with the Iron Grate, terribly harrowed her flesh, and burned her Breasts with flaming Torches; then, setting fire to her long hair, which covered her naked Body, when it came to her face, she opened her mouth, and sucked in the flame, and so peaceably slept in the Lord.

Also Agnes, a young Virgin, being accused for a Christian, was brought before the Judge, who first labored by flatteries, then, by threatening her with cruel torments, to draw her to the denial of her Faith: But she being strengthened by Christ, told him, That she feared not his torments, which she was willing to undergo, yea, and death it self for Christs sake. If (said the Judge) it be so easie with thee to undergo torments; yet I know that thou prizest thy Virginity: Therefore it is fully determined, that except thou sacrifice to the gods, thou shalt be put into the Common Stews. Hereupon many youths did flock together, craving, That Agnes might be exposed as a prey to there filthy lusts; to whom she said, Christ is not forgetful of those that are his, neither will he leave me destitute of his help, nor suffer my unspeckled chastity to be defiled by you, &c. You shall willingly bathe your Swords in my Blood, but you shall not defile my Body with filthy lust, for any thing that you can do. Then the Judge commanded, That she should be set naked at the corner of a Street; whereupon the multitude sorrowed, and were ashamed to see so shameless a sight, turning away their faces, and so departed; But one amongst the rest, looking upon her in a shameless manner, behold a flame of fire, like a flash of Lightning, struck out both his eyes, and he, falling down, wallowed in the Kennel-dirt; whereupon Agnes sang praises unto God. The cruel Tyrant enraged hereby, commanded the Executioner to draw out his Sword, and dispatch her. She seeing a sturdy Soldier coming towards her with a naked Sword, rejoiced, saying, This, O this is he that I love, I will make hast to meet him, and no longer protract my longing desires; I will willingly receive the length of his Sword into my Breast. O Eternal Father, vouchsafe to open the Gates of Heaven to my Soul that seeketh thee. And so kneeling down, and praying unto Christ, the Executioner with his bloody hand, finished her hope.

Barbara.

Basil, in one of his Orations, relates a story of one Julia, from whom, one of the Emperors Officers took all her Goods, Lands, and Servants, contrary to all Equity; whereupon she complained to the Judges, and a day of hearing was appointed, where the spoiled Woman lamentably declared her cause. But the wicked villain that had robbed her, said, That her Action was of no force, for she was an Outlaw, for not observing the Emperors gods; and that she was a Christian. His Allegation was allowed, Incense was prepared for her to offer to the gods; which if she refused, she should neither have protection, nor benefit of the Emperors Laws, nor continue her life. She hearing this, in the mighty strength of God, said, Farewel riches, welcome poverty, farewell life, welcome death; All that I have, were it a thousand times more, would I lo'e, rather then speak one wicked word against God my Creator. I yield thee most hearty thanks, O my God, for this gift of Grace; that I can condemn and despise this frail and transitory world, esteeming the Profession of Christ, above all Treasures. And thenceforth when any Question was proposed to her, her answer was, I am the servant of Jesus Christ. Her Kindred and Friends earnestly solicited her to change her mind; but she constantly refused, with detestation of their Idolatry. Then did the cruel Judge condemn her to be burnt, which Sentence she imbraced joyfully, as a thing most sweet and delectable; and so she addressed her self to the flames, in countenance, gesture, and words, declaring the joy of her heart, coupled with singular constancy; and so imbracing the fire, she sweetly slept in the Lord.

Barbara, a Noble Woman in Thuseia, after miserable imprisonment, sharp cords, and burning flames put to her sides, was at last Beheaded, together with many others.

The Persecution of the Christians in Persia, under Sapoꝛes, about the same time.

He Idolatrous Magicians in Persia, taking counsel together against the Christians, acculed them to Sapoꝛes for keeping correspondence with, and favoring the Roman Emperour, which was Constantine the Great.

The King being much moved herewith, took occasion to oppꝛess them with Taxes and Tributes, to their utter undoing, and killed there Ministers with the Sword. He also called before him Simeon their Bishop, who remaining constant and valiant, he commanded him to be led forth to torment; yet did he neither shrink for fear, nor make any humble suit for pardon, which the King being offended at, required him either to worship him after the Countrey manner, or else he would destroy him, and all other Christians in his Land. But Simeon, neither allured with promises, nor terrified with threatnings, could by neither be induced to the Idolatrous worship: For which cause, he was sent away to Prison, and as he was going, there was sitting at the Court Gate, an Eunuch, an old Tutor of the Kings, named Ustazares, once a Christian, but now fallen from his Profession; who seeing Simeon led by, rose up and did him reverence. Simeon, on the contrary, rebuked him, crying out against him, for revolting from his Profession. Whereupon, the Eunuch burst forth into tears, laid aside his costly apparel, and put on black mourning weeds; and sitting at the Court Gate weeping, he said to himself, wo is me, with what face hereafter shall I look upon God, seeing Simeon disdaineth with one gentle word to salute me? This being carried to the Kings ears, he was exceeding angry, and sending for him, he first with gentle words and large promises, spake him fair, and asked him, Why he mourned? Whether there was any thing in his House, that was denied him? &c. Whereunto Ustazares answered, That there was nothing in that Earthly house that was detained from him. Yea, said he, O King, would God any other grief or calamity in the world had hapned to me, rather then this, for which I justly sorrow. For that is my grief, That I am alive this day, who should have died long since, and that I see this Sun, which dissemblingly, to pleasure you, I have seemed to worship; for which I have deserved a double death. First, For dissembling with you: Secondly, For that thereby I have denied Christ. Withal vowing, That he would never hereafter forsake the Creator, to worship the Creature, &c.

Sapoꝛes was much astonished hereat, and doubted, Whether to use him gently, or with rigor; but at last in his mood, he commanded him to be beheaded. But as he was going to execution, he requested an Eunuch that attended on the King, to desire him for all the old and faithful service that he had done to his Father and him, that he would cause it to be proclaimed openly at his death, That he was Beheaded, not for any Treachery against the King or Realm, but for that he was a Christian, and would not deny his God. This the King yielded to, and so it was performed; and this he desired, because by his former Apostacy he had discouraged many Christians ; and therefore he sought by his Profession and Example, to encourage them to the like sufferings.

Simeon, in Prison, hearing of his death, much rejoiced and praised God for it ; and the very next day, he, with above an hundred more Christians were Beheaded likewise. There was present at their Martyrdom one Pusices, an Officer to the King, who beholding an aged Minister to tremble, when he saw the others Beheaded before him, said unto him, O Father ! shut thine eyes for a little moment, and be strong, and shortly thou shalt see God in glory. Hereupon Pusices was apprehended, and carried before the King, in whose presence he made a bold Confession of his Faith ; for which cause, they made a hole in his Neck, and pulled out his Tongue backward, and so he was put to death, together with one of his Daughters that was a Virgin.

The year after, when the Christians were met together to celebrate the memorial of Christs Passion, Sapoies sent forth a cruel Edict, That all they should be put to death that professed the Name of Christ ; and this he did at the instigation of the wicked Magicians. Whereupon an innumerable company of Christians, both in Cities and Towns were slain by the Sword ; some being sought for, others offering themselves willingly, least they should seem to deny Christ. In this Persecution, many of the Kings own Court, and Household-servants, suffered Martyrdom ; amongst whom was Azides, an Eunuch, whom the King intirely loved, inasmuch, as hearing that he was slain, he was so offended and grieved at it, that he commanded, that thenceforth no more Christians should be slain ; but only the Doctors and Teachers of the Church.

About this time the Queen fell very sick, upon which occasion, the wicked Jews and Magicians accused two of Simeons Sisters, which were godly Virgins, that by charms and enchantments they had procured her sickness to revenge the death of Simeon. This Accusation being believed, they were both condemned, and with a Saw cut in funder by the middle, whose quarters were hung upon Stakes, the Queen going betwixt them, thinking thereby to be freed of her sickness.

Then ensued a great Persecution against the Bishops and Ministers, who were daily dragged forth to the slaughter : But first they cruelly scourged them, and put them to other great torments, because they would not worship the Sun.

Miserable, and almost innumerable, were the slaughters under this Sapoies, of Bishops, Ministers, Deacons, and other Religious Men, and holy Virgins : so that the Persians themselves, reckon up above Sixteen thousand Men and Women that suffered Martyrdom.

The report of the miserable condition of the Christians, coming to the ears of Constantine the Great, put the good Emperor into great heaviness ; who studying how to relieve them, it so fell out, That about that time there came Ambassadors to him to Rome from Sapoies, whom he entertained courteously, and granted all their requests ; and then, by them, wrote his Letters to Sapoies, in the behalf of the Christians, whereby he did something mitigate the heat of the Persian Persecution ; yet afterwards it was renewed again. At which time suffered Andas the Bishop, and Hormisdas, a Nobleman's Son of great reputation amongst the Persians, whom, when the King understood to be a Christian, and resolute in his Profession, he condemned him to keep his Elephants naked. Afterwards the King looking out, and seeing him all swart, and tanned with the Sun ; he commanded that a Shirt should be put upon him, and that he should be brought before him : Then did the King ask him, If he would yet deny Christ ? Hormisdas hearing this, tare off his Shirt, and cast it from him, saying, If you think that I will deny my Faith for a Shirt, have here your gift again, &c. Whereupon he was banished the Countrey.

Also Suenes, a Nobleman that had under him one hundred servants, because he would not deny his Christian Profession, was so hated by the King, that he made the worst of his servants Lord over him, and over all that he had, and coupled his Wife to him, and made Suenes himself to serve him.

Also Benjamin, a Deacon, was thrust into Prison, where he was kept two years; but at the length, at the request of the Roman Ambassadors, he was released: Yet afterwards, when contrary to the Kings Commandment, he preached and taught every where the Gospel of Christ, he was again apprehended, and miserably tormented, having twenty sharp Reeds thrust under the Nails of his Fingers and Toes; but he laughing at it, had a sharper Reed thrust into his Yard, with horrible pain; and lastly, had a long ragged Thorny stalk thrust through his Fundament into his Bowels, whereof he died.

CHAP. XVIII.

Julian was Nephew to Constantius, the Son of Constantine, and was by him made Caesar, and sent against the Germans; where after some smaller Victories, having overcome his Enemies in a great and bloody Battle, he was by his Army made Augustus; and afterward Constantius his death, succeeded in the whole Empire, both of the East and West. He was brought up in the Christian Religion, and was indowed with excellent parts; but when he came to the Empire, he Apostatised from his former Profession, and turned Heathen, and became a deadly Enemy to the Church of Christ, and a great Persecutor of it.

The first thing that he did, was to open the Idol Temples, shut up his Predecessors, and to suffer the Gentiles to commit their Superstitious Idolatries, and publickly to adore their Idols. His next design was, to supplant the Christian Religion, being induced thereto by the Devil and his own wickedness: And the better to effect the same, he practised a means never before used by any, which was to shew himself pitiful, and not cruel; perceiving, that by means of the torments inflicted on the Martyrs, the holy Christian Faith was greatly increased; and therefore he took a contrary course, and sought by gifts, favors, flatteries, and bestowing offices and dignities, to draw them to renounce the Christian Faith, and to sacrifice to false gods; and by this means there were not a few, who being covetous and ambitious, desiring to be rich and honored, fell from their Christian Profession.

Then did he make Laws, and General Decrees, That no Christian should be Master of any Arts or Sciences; neither should study in any Schools, that so through the desire of Learning they might turn Idolaters, or else they should remain ignorant and illiterate; and so be insufficient to Preach the Christian Faith.

He also ordained, That no Christian should have any charge, or hold any Office of Justice, neither should be a Captain in the Wars, nor enjoy any other dignity.

Thus he used all the inventions that possibly he could devise, to make War against Jesus Christ, without shedding any Christian Blood, that so he might take the Crown from the holy Martyrs, which they formerly obtained by the Persecution of the Sword.* And indeed, this was the greatest and most dangerous Persecution that ever the Church endured.

Amongst other of his subtil devices to bring Christianity into contempt, this was one. He entertained about him many witty, but wicked persons, who made it their business, to scoff at and deride the Christians with all manner of base jeers; and those which excelled most in this wicked practise, he most loved and honored, advancing them to offices, both in his Court and Army.

Barbarous
cruelty.

During his short reign, though himself put none to death, as is before specified; yet the Heathen Idolaters, in sundry places, proceeded far otherwise; especially in Palestine, where they burnt many Christians alive, others they stripped naked, and tying cords to their Feet, dragged them up and down the paved Streets, till their flesh was torn from their Bones; Upon others they poured scalding water: Some they stoned, or beat out their Brains with clubs: and having thus murdered them, they burnt their Bodies, and then took their Bones, and mingled them with the Bones of Camels and Asses, that they might not be known for Mens Bones.

The Christians in Alexandria were most cruelly used by the Ethnicks, or Pagans: Some were slain with the Sword, some were fastned to the Crois, some brained, some stoned; and such was their rage against Christianity, that one Brother spared not another, nor Parents their Children, nor Children their Parents.

Emilianus.
Domitius.
Theodorus.

Emilianus was burned in Thracia. Domitius was slain in his Cave. Theodorus for singing a Psalm at the removing of the Body of Babylas, being apprehended, was examined with exquisite torments, and so cruelly excruciated from morning till almost noon, that hardly he escaped with life, and being afterwards asked by his Friends, how he could endure such extream torments, he said, that at first he felt some pain, but afterwards there stood by him a young man, who as he was sweating with the pain, wiped away his sweat, and oft-times refreshed him with cold water, wherewith he was so delighted, that when he was let down from the Engine, it grieved him more than before.

A Miracle of

Two Brethren
Martyrs.

Artemius also, a Captain of the Egyptian Souldiers, was Beheaded for his Religion, though other causes were pretended. Two Christian Brethren were dragged through the streets, and murdered by the Idolatrous people of Gaza.

cruelty.

But the cruelty of the wicked Arethusians exceeded against the Christian Ministers and Virgins, whom they set forth naked before the multitude to be scorned by them. Then did they cover them with Hogs-meat, and ripping up their Bellies, put Barly into them, and so caused their Bowels and flesh to be devoured by their hungry Swine.

Marcus Are-thusus.

Their cruelty most raged against Marcus Arethusus, the Christian Bishop of that City, who formerly, by the command of Constantine, had pulled down their Idol-Temple, and set up a Church for the Christians in the room thereof; The Arethusians knowing how Julian hated him, accused him as a Traitor and Enemy to the Emperor: Whereupon at first he prepared himself to fly, but when he perceived that some of his Friends were apprehended in his stead, he returned, and of his own accord offered himself to those that thirsted for his Blood: Whom when they had gotten, neither pitying his old age, nor reverencing his holy and blameless Conversation, they stript him naked, and pitifully beat him; Then they cast him into a foul, filthy sinking Prison: They also caused Boys to thrust him in with sharp sticks to augment his pain: Lastly, they put him into a Basket, anointed him with hony and broth, and so hung him abroad in the heat of the Sun, to be meat for Wasps and Flies to feed upon; and this they did to enforce him, either to build up their Idol-Temple again, or to give them money to pay for the doing of it, but he stoutly refused both; They profered to forgive one half, if he would pay the other; which he still refusing, and contemning all their torments, they at last demanded of him but a small sum of money, but he answered, It is as great wickedness to confer one half-penny in case of impiety, as if a man should give the whole. Whereupon, despairing to prevail, they left him, and went their ways.

Julian when he came to Constantinople, offered sacrifice in the Cathedral Church to the Goddess Fortune; about which time, Mark, Bishop of Chalcedon in Bythinia, being blind, caused himself to be led to the Emperor, whom he rebuked sharply, calling him an impious Person, an Apostate, and an Atheist; He on the contrary, called the Bishop, blind Fool, saying further, Thy God of Galilee will not restore thee thy sight again. Mark replied, I thank God which made me blind, lest that ever I should set mine Eyes upon so ungracious a Face as thine is. In the Market-places of the Cities, Julian set up his own Image, amongst the Images of the Heathen gods; to the end that whosoever should do civil reverence to his Image, might also seem to worship the gods of the Gentiles; and that they who would not bow to the Idols, might seem to refuse due reverence to the Emperor. When he distributed gold to his Captains and Soldiers, he erected an Altar near to his Throne, with coals burning upon it, and incense on a Table by, and none might receive the gold before he had cast incense on the coals upon the Altar, by which subtilty he circumvented many, who discerned not his purpose to intangle them with the rites of Idolatrous services.

All about Antioch he dedicated all the Fountains to the Goddesses of the Gentiles, and caused all the Victuals that were sold in the Market to be sprinkled with Heathenish Holy water: yet did the Christians without scruple drink of the Water, and eat of the Meat according to that rule, whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat, and ask no question for conscience sake, &c. Jovianus and Maxentius, two brave Captains, used much boldness and liberty in reproving him for his Heathenish superstitions, which so enraged him, that he caused them to be put to death.

In Casarea, the Inhabitants being most Christians, had formerly overthrown the Temples of Jupiter and Apollo; and now in Julian's time, they overthrew the Temple of Fortune, which so enraged him, that he disarmed them, exacted of them three hundred pounds weight of gold, and compelled their Clergy to serve in his Wars, threatening further to put to death all the Inhabitants thereof at his return, but it pleased God that his own death prevented it.

About this time, Julian going to enquire of the Oracle of Apollo at Delfos, there came down fire from heaven, and destroyed the Temple, and beat the Image of Apollo into pieces, like to the smallest powder or dust.

When he came to Antioch, there was a noble Woman, called Publia, who had the education and government of divers young Virgins; these she caused, as Julian passed by her house, to sing with a loud voice, The Idols of the Heathen are silver and gold, the works of mens hands, &c. This so angered the Emperor, that he sent them a command to sing no more as he went that way; but Publia was so far from fearing him, that the next time he came, she made them sing the same Verse, and to add to it, Let God arise, and his enemies shall be scattered, &c. This so incensed Julian, that he sent for her to him, crossed at her, and caused her to be clapt on the cheeks in a disgraceful manner; But she looked upon it as a great honour thus to suffer reproach for Christs sake; and coming home, she caused her Maids still to sing Psalms of the Emperors fury and madness.

Afterwards the Emperor intending to war against the Persians, let a great fine upon every ones head that would not sacrifice to the Idols, whereby he much enriched himself by the spoil of the Christians.

Then

Athanasius driven away.

Then were false Accusations forged against Athanasius, so that he was forced to flee; yet he thus comforted himself and friends, Nubecula est, cito pertransibit, This Persecution is but a little cloud, and will soon pass away.

Courage.

In his flight, he took a Ship upon the River Nilus to flee to Thebais, but Julian sent an Earl after him, to bring him back again, who pursuing him with sails and oars, had almost overtaken taken his Ship, whereupon the Marriners would have run her ashore, and fled into a Wilderness that was hard by, to whom Athanasius said, Quid turbamini filii? quin in occursum eamus persecutori nostro, ut intelligat, quia longe major est qui nos defendit, quam qui persequitur: My Sons, why are you thus affrighted? Let us rather turn and meet our pursuer, that he may know, that he is greater which defends us, then he that follows to apprehend us. Hereupon the Marriners turned back again, and the Earl supposing nothing less than that Athanasius was in the Ship that came towards him, he only called to them, and enquired whether they had not heard of Athanasius? They answered, that they had seen Athanasius a little before; whereupon he hastened forward to overtake him, and Athanasius in his Ship returned back privately into Alexandria, where he lay hid till that Persecution was over.

A special Providence.

Blasphemy.

Julians Officers in exacting the fines of the Christians, demanded more than they were assessed at, and sometimes tormented their Bodies also; of which wrongs when they complained to the Emperor, he scoffingly answered them, Its your part, when you are injured, to take it patiently, for so your God commandeth you.

Zeal.

Courage.

At Meris in Phrygia, the Governor Commanded the Idol-Temple to be set open and cleansed, and began himself to worship the Idols: Whereupon some Christians, inflamed with Zeal, in the night time, brake into the Temple, threw down the Idols, and stamped them to powder. The Governor being wonderfully incensed herewith, purposed to execute some Christian Citizens which were innocent and guiltless, whereupon the Authors of their own accord, presented themselves before him, chusing rather to die for the truth, than that others should suffer for their sakes: Thereupon the Governor commanded them to sacrifice to the Idols, or else he would severely punish them; But they, setting at nought his threats, prepared themselves to suffer what he could inflict; Then did he assay them with all kinds of torments, and at last laid them on the Grid-iron, and broiled them to death, to whom they said, If thou love, O Tyrant, for broiled meat, turn up the other side, lest in eating, the blood run about thy teeth.

When Julian went against the Persians, of very malice and hatred against the Christians, whom scornfully he called Galileans, he made a vow, that if he obtained the Victory, he would sacrifice to his gods the blood of those Christians which would not sacrifice to the Idols: But what the issue of that expedition was, See in my second part, in the Life of Jovianus.

CHAP. XIX.

The Persecution of the Church under the Arrian Hereticks, which began, Anno Christi 339.

Note.

Constantine the Great, dying, divided his Empire amongst his three Sons Constantius, Constans, and Constantine. Constantius that governed the East, was seduced by an Arrian Presbyter, who had been in his Fathers Court, with his Aunt Constantia; So pernicious a thing it is to have deceitful Hereticks lurking in Princes Courts, and Ladies Chambers.

This

This Presbyter complained to Constantius that the return of Athanasius from banishment was very dangerous to the peace of the Common-wealth: Yea, he so far incensed the Emperor against him, that he sent a Captain with five thousand armed men to slay him; But the Lord delivered him miraculously out of their hands; For the armed Soldiers being placed round about the Church where he was, he went safely through the midst of them undiscerned, though many Arrians were present on purpose to point him out to the Soldiers, as a Sheep ordained for the slaughter.

But neither in banishment could he enjoy peace and safety, for this Arrian Emperor sent to all the Officers in his Army to search him out, wheresoever he was, proposing a great Reward to those that could bring Athanasius to him, either alive or dead; whereupon he was forced to hide himself in a deep Pit, where he lay six years never so much as seeing the light of the Sun, till at last a Maid that used to carry him his Food, was corrupted by those which sought for him, to betray him to them: But it pleased God by his Spirit to reveal to him his danger, whereby he escaped a little before they came to apprehend him.

Afterwards Constans forced his Brother Constantius, though much against his will, to restore Athanasius to his Church at Alexandria: But after the death of that good Emperor Constans, Constantius drave him into banishment again; yet the Lord stirred up a godly Woman to hide him in her house, till the death of Constantius.

In Alexandria in the room of Athanasius, was George an Arrian Bishop placed, who also was furnished with armed Soldiers to assist him in his devillish devices. Thereupon he caused a great fire to be made, took many Christian Virgins; caused them to be stripped naked, requiring them to renounce their Faith, or else they should be burned: but when the sight of the fire could not terrifie them, he caused their Faces to be so dashed with strokes, that their countenances were disfigured; yet like patient Soldiers of Christ they endured all kind of rebuke for his Names sake.

Thirty Bishops of Egypt and Lybia, were slain in the fury of this Arrian Persecution. Fourteen Bishops were banished, whereof some of them died in the way, the rest in Exile. Forty Orthodox Christians in Alexandria were scourged with rods, because they would not communicate with the Arrian Bishop George, and so pitiously handled, that some pieces of the rods were so deeply fixed in their flesh, that they could not be drawn out, and many through excessive pain of their wounded Bodies, died.

The like cruelty did the Arrians exercise in Constantinople. Paul the good Bishop was banished to Cucusus, where he was strangled by the Arrians. Macedonius a notable Heretick was placed in his room, who used no less cruelty in forcing men to communicate with him, then was used formerly to force them to sacrifice to Idols.

These Hereticks used also great diligence in procuring Councils to establish their Errors. But not long after the Emperor died, following much that he had changed the form of the Nicene Faith.

After the death of Jovian, Valentinian succeeded in the Empire, who associated to himself his Brother Valens, and made him Emperor of the East. This Valens was an Arrian, and raised up a cruel Persecution against the Orthodox: Concerning which Gregory Nazianzen in his Oration of the praise of Basil, thus writeth, Insurrexit repente nebula grandine plena, & perulose stridens, quæ omnes Ecclesias in quas incidit, contrivit, & prostravit, Christi cultus, pariter & omnes, qui post persecutorem persecutor fuit, & post Apostatam, non quidem Apostata, sed nihilo tamen meliorem se Christianis præbens: Christi nomen pro se ferens Christum mentiebatur. Miletius Bishop of Antioch he banished to Armenia. Eusebius Bishop of Samosata, to Thrace. Pelagius Bishop of Emesa, to Arabia.

He was exceedingly filled with wrath against the Bishops, assembled in the Council of Lampacum, because they adhered to the Nicene Faith. In Constantinople he banished all the Orthodox. In Edissa, he commanded them all to be slain as they were assembled together in the Church. The Lieutenant that had received this charge from him, being more merciful than his Master, gave private notice to the Christians, that they should not assemble at that time; But they, neither regarding his advice, nor fearing his threats, flocked to the Church in great Companies: and whilst the Lieutenant with many armed Soldiers, hastened thitherward to fulfil the Emperors command, a Woman leading a Child in her hand, all in haste, brake the ranks, and thrust into the armed troops; The Lieutenant being moved therewith, called the Woman before him, saying, Thou fond and unfortunate woman, whither runnest thou so rashly? Thither, (said she) whither others hasten; Hast thou not heard (said he) that the Lieutenant will slay as many as he finds there? I heard it (said she) and therefore I make the more haste to the place. But whether (said he) ledest thou this Child? That he also (said she) may be accounted in the number of the Martyrs. Hereupon the Lieutenant returned back to the Emperor, and told him that all the Christians from the highest to the lowest prepared themselves to die in the defence of their Faith, and withal he shewed him what a rash thing it was to murder so great a multitude, &c. and so with his reasons perswaded the Emperor, that he appeased his wrath, and prevented the mischief at that time.

In Constantinople the Arrians, favored by the Emperor, crowed insolently over the Christians, they scourged, reviled, imprisoned, amerced, and laid upon them all the intolerable burthens they could devise. Hereupon eighty godly Ministers, in the name of all the rest, addressed themselves to the Emperor, complaining of the out-rages that were done to them, craving some relief: But this cruel Tyrant commanded Modestus the General of his Army, to embark them all in a Ship, as if he would have sent them into banishment, but secretly he gave direction to the Marriners, to set the Ship on fire, and to retire themselves into a Boat, and so these holy Martyrs glorified the Name of Christ, by patient suffering of a double death, burning and drowning.

In all the Eastern parts he tormented many with sundry sorts of grievous torments, put many to death, drowned many in the Sea, and in Rivers.

About this time he consulted with Necromancers, to know who should succeed him in the Empire: The Devil answered ambiguously, that his Name should began with Th. Whereupon he put to death as many as were called Theodorus, Theodotus, Theodosius or Theodulus.

Athanasius being dead at Alexandria, their succeeded him a godly and holy Man, named Peter, but the Emperor presently sent Soldiers, which elapt him in Prison, and the rest of the Ministers were banished, some to one place, some to another.

After this he sent forth an Edict for the persecuting of all the Orthodox in Egypt: Whereupon many were stript of their raiment, scourged, fettered in Prisons, crushed in pieces with stones, beheaded, driven into deserts, where they wandred in sheeps-skins and goats-skins, destitute of aid and succour, Many hid themselves in mountains, in dens, caves and hollow rocks.

Terentius and Trajan, two worthy Captains, used some liberty in admonishing the Emperor to abstain from persecuting of the innocent; But the Lord was minded to destroy him, and therefore he could receive no wholsom admonition; For many of the Goths, whom he entertained as Soldiers to assist him against his enemies, turned against himself, so that he fled, and was overtaken in a Village, which the Goths set on fire whereby he died miserably, leaving none to succeed him, and his Name a curse and execration to all ages.

The Persecution by the Donatists.

ABout the year of our Lord 410. there sprang up in Africk the Donatists and Circumcellions, who first made a great Schism in the Church, and afterwards raised up a great Persecution against the Orthodox: concerning which, S. Augustine complains in sundry places; And in his 50 Epistle to Earl Boniface, he thus writes of it, In hoc labore multi Catholici, & maxime Episcopi, & Clerici horrenda, & dura perpassi sunt, quae commemorare longum est, &c. In this disturbance, the Orthodox, especially the Bishops and Ministers, suffered hard and horrible things, the particulars whereof are long to recite, for some of them had their Eyes put out: Some Bishops had their Hands and Tongues cut off; and some were slain outright. To speak nothing of the cruel slaughter of others that were sound and sincere: Of the plundering of their Houses, of the outrageous burning, not only of their private habitations, but of their Churches also; yea, so vile and violent were they, that they stuck not to burn the sacred Scriptures.

Optatus in his second Book tells us, that when Julian the Apostate came to the Empire, the Donatists preferred a petition to him, wherein they desired leave to return to their places in Africk, from whence formerly they had been banished. Julian knowing what furious and turbulent spirits they were of, and how prejudicial their Return would be to the Catholic Church, easily assented to their petition, and so they returned full fraught with malice and revenge, and presently employed all their abilities, partly by subtilty to seduce the common People, partly by violence to oppress the Orthodox Bishops and Ministers, of whom, some they thrust out of their Churches, others they slew.

Some of their chief Bishops, taking armed Soldiers with them, went to the Castle of Lemella, where finding the Church shut against them, they commanded their attendance to get upon it, to uncover the roof, and so having broken in to it, they set upon some Deacons, whom they found there, wounded some, and slew two of them outright. In all places where they came, they profaned all holy things; The Sacramental Bread they threw to their Dogs; But behold the just judgment of God against these profane Schismatics; those very Dogs shortly after running mad, fell upon their own Masters, and tore them in pieces.

Virgins they deflowered, and Wives they defiled. So usual a thing it is for those which adulterate the holy truths of God, to be given over to corporal uncleanness.

These furious Persons dispersed themselves all over Africk, and would not suffer the Orthodox to preach the truth against their Errors: By their violent assaults, thieveries, rapines, burnings and murders, they destroyed many, and affrighted all, &c.

CHAP. XX.

The Persecution of the Church in Africk, by the Arrian Vandals, which began Anno Christi 427.

THe cruel Vandals passing out of Spain into Africk, under Genserick their Captain, finding the Province peaceable and quiet, set upon the flourishingest part of the land, wasting and destroying all before them with Fire and Sword, not sparing so much as the shrubs and bushes which bare fruit, lest they should minister relief to those poor Christians which hid themselves in dens, in mountains, and steep cliffs: But especially they raged against the Churches and Temples of the Saints, burning all them to the ground, and where they found any of them shut, they brake them open with their Maces. The Bishops and Ministers they destroyed especially, with many kinds of torments, seeking by tortures to force them to deliver up whatsoever gold and silver they had.

had of their own or belonging to the Church ; and where they gat any, they still tormented them afresh, to inforce them to confesse more.

Prodigious.

The mouths of some they wrested open with iron, thrusting into them stinking mire and dirt : Some they tormented by wresting their fore-heads and legs with bow-strings, till they crackt again ; Into the mouths of others they poured sea-water, vinegar, with the dregs of oyl and grease ; and neither weakness of sex, nor respect of nobility, nor reverence of their Ministry, mitigated their cruel minds ; yea, their fury most abounded where there appeared any dignity or worthiness.

Ministers laden with burthens.

Many of the Ministers and Nobles they loaded with mighty burthens, as if they had been Camels or Horses, and made them carry them after them ; and if they went slowly, they hasted them with iron pricks and goads, so that some of them under their burthens, gave up the Ghost. Reverend gray Hairs found no priviledg of Mercy ; guiltless Infants felt their barbarous rage, whom they dashed against the ground, violently pulling little ones from their Mothers Breasts to brain them ; of others, by wide stretching of their tender Legs, they tore them in pieces, from the fundament ; The stately buildings they burnt down, and levelled with the earth : The chief Churches in Carthage they imployed to their own Heretical worship. Where any strong Castles were held against them, they brought multitudes of Christians, slew them, and left their Bodies lying about the Castles, that by the stench thereof they might force them to surrender.

Pampinian.

Who can expresse the number of Ministers that were by them tortured ! Pampinian the Bishop of Mansuetus was tortured with burning plates of iron all over his Body. The Bishop of Urice was burnt to death.

Hippo besieged.

Then did they also besiege the City of Hippo, where St. Augustine was, who before that time had compiled two hundred thirty two Books, Epistles innumerable, besides his Expositions on the Psalms and Gospels, and his Homilies to the People. See more of this in my first part of Lives in the life of St. Austine.

A special Providence.

When they had taken the Regal City of Carthage, they enslaved the Citizens and Senators, publishing a decree that they should presently bring forth whatsoever gold, silver, precious stones, or rich apparel they possessed, and thereby dispoiled them of all in one day ; Then did they take the Bishop and all the Ministers of that City, and thrust them naked into weather broken-ships, and so banished them, whom yet the Lord of his great Mercy directed, and brought in safety to the City of Naples. The Senators and Nobles they first banished from the City, and then drave them beyond-sea. The dead Bodies of the Christians they would not suffer to be buried but in the Night, and without any solemnity.

Pride.

The Bishops and Ministers through all the Province, being dispoiled of all their substance, and turned out of their Churches, assembled together, and presented a petition to Genserick, that they might, at least in private, be suffered to instruct their people, to whom he proudly answered, I have decreed that none of your profession should remain in the Countrey, how then dare you prefer such a request ? and withal, he would at that instant have drowned them all in the Sea, but that the importunity of some about him, stopt him.

A noble Earl Martyred.

There was also a noble Earl, called Sebastian, a man of great wisdom and courage, whom Genserick much feared, and therefore sought occasion to put him to death : which that he might the better effect, he moved him to be re-baptized by one of his Priests, and to turn Arrian : The Earl therefore requested him to call for a fine manchet, which being done, he said, This loaf, that it might be fine and white, hath been boulded from the bran, and moistened with liquor, and baked : but if you now cause it to be broken in pieces, steeped in water, kneaded and baked again, if it come out better, I will do as you would have me. Genserick understanding his meaning, could not tell what to answer for the present, yet afterwards he caused him to be put to death.

If any Minister in his Sermon occasionally, did but mention Pharaoh, Nebuchadrezzar, Herod, &c. presently it was laid to his charge, that he meant it by the King; and thereupon he was banished.

An evil Conscience.

Yet notwithstanding all this Cruelty, the People of God stood fast in their holy Profession, and rather increased then otherwise.

Constancy.

Rome sacked.

Afterwards, at the request of Valentinian, the Empetor, Genferick suffered the Orthodox in Carthage to chuse them a Bishop, which they did; and not long after, Genferick, with his Vandals, took the famous City of Rome, carrying away with him, not only all the Treasure that of a long time had been stored up there; but many of the People also, who, when they were brought into Africk, were shared between the Vandals, and the Moors: So that Husbands were separated from their Wives, Parents from their Children. Which this godly Bishop hearing of, he caused all the Gold and Silver Vessels belonging to the Church, to be sold for their Redemption; that so married Persons, and Parents, and Children might enjoy the comfort of their Relations. Then also did he provide food and lodging for them, and night and day went amongst them himself, to see how they did, to minister to their wants, and comfort them. But this procured him such hatred amongst the Arrians, that they sought to slay him: But the Lord about this time took him to himself, whereby he escaped their malice.

Charity.

Gods Providence.

One of Genfericks Colonels, having some Christian slaves, and a beautiful and a godly Virgin amongst them, he took occasion to vex them with fetters and torments, thereby to force them to Rebaptization; which they constantly refusing, he caused them to be stripped, and beaten with ragged cudgels, till their flesh was torn in pieces, &c. At last they were banished to Capfur, an Heathen Kingdom of the Moors, where it pleased God so to bless their labors, that many of them were converted, and sending for an Orthodox Minister, were Baptized.

A Special Providence.
Moors converted.

This coming to Genfericks ears, he commanded these Servants of God to be drawn at a Chariots tail, thorow thickets of Thorns, till they were torn in pieces; and these newly converted Moors, he caused their naked Bodies to be haled backwards and forwards, thorow Bushes and Brambles, and others of them to be tied to Wild Beasts, and so to be rent in sunder. The Poor Christians lying thus, each to other, O Brother pray for me; God hath fulfilled our desire. O this is the way to the Kingdom of Heaven.

Cruelty of Heretics.

Genferick further raging against the Orthodox, sent one Proculus into the Zengian Province, to dispoil all the Churches of their Ornaments, and the Ministers of their Books, that thereby they might be disabled to holy Services; which command was executed with all rigor. And whereas the Bishop of Habensa refused to deliver them up, he was expelled the City, and all Men at great penalty were forbidden to harbor him; so that, being above eighty years old, he lay naked for a long time, under the open Skie.

The Bishop of Habensa.

About Easter, when the Christians were met together in a Church, to celebrate the Remembrance of Christs Resurrection, the Arrians with a great power of armed Men, set upon this innocent company, who with their naked Swords slew many. The Minister that was Preaching, they shot through the Throat with an Arrow: And such of them as escaped death, were by the command of the King, executed by sundry kinds of torments.

Christians murdered at a Sermon.

In other places, when the Christians were administering the Sacrament, the Hereticks rushed in amongst them, taking the Bread and Wine, and trampling them under their prophane feet.

Horrible prophaneity.

Then did Genferick command, that none but Arrians should bear any Office, either about himself or his children. And a Bishop called Armagast, they took, and first nipped his Forehead and Legs with Bow-strings; then did they hang him up by one Foot, with his Head downward, yet did he seem to all Men as if he slept in a Feather-bed; which so iraged Theoderick, the Kings Son, that he commanded him to be Beheaded: But some about him dissuaded him from it.

A Special Providence.

because said they, He will be accounted a Martyr. Then was he banished to dig in Mines; yet afterwards he was sent for again, and made a Cow-herd near to Carthage, that he might be a continual object of scorn.

There was also one Saturus a Nobleman, eminent for holiness, whom the Tyrant much labored to draw to the Arrian Profession; but he refusing, the King told him, That if he presently consented not, he should forfeit his House and Goods; that his Children and Slaves should be sold, and his wife should be given to the Camel-driver: Yet no menaces could shake his Faith. His Wife hearing of her doom, went to her Husband as he was praying; with her garments rent, her hair disheveled, her children at her heels, and a sucking infant in her hands, whom she cast at her Husbands feet, and took him about the knees, saying, Have compassion (O my sweetest) of me thy poor wife, and of these thy children; look upon them, let them not be made slaves; let not me be yoked to a base Marriage, &c. That which thou art required to do, thou dost it not willingly, but by constraint, and therefore it will not be laid to thy charge. He gave her an answer in the words of Job, Thou speakest like a foolish Woman; thou attest the Devils part; if thou lovest thy Husband, thou wouldst never seek to draw him to sin, which will procure the second death. I am resolved therefore, as my Lord commands me; to forsake Wife, Children, Lands, House, &c. that I may be his Disciple: And accordingly he was dispoiled of all, and turned out a begging, yet all were forbidden to harbor him.

Genferick having reigned Thirty seven years and three Moneths, died.

Genferick being dead, his Son Hunrick succeeded him, who at first was more moderate to the Christians, insomuch, as they began to hold their meetings as before time. The Manichean Hereticks he sought out, and though most of them were of his own Religion; yet he burnt some, and banished others.

At the request of the Emperor Zeno, and Placidia his Wife, he suffered the Church of Carthage to chuse their own Bishop, having been destitute of one for Twenty four years. Then they chose Eugenius, an humble, holy, and charitable Man, whose fame increasing, the Arrian Bishops much envied him, and put into the Kings Head to forbid him to Preach; and not to suffer any to enter into the Church that were attired after the manner of the Vandals. To which command Eugenius thus answered, The House of God is free for all; those which enter, no Man may drive forth. The King being incensed with this answer, placed torturers at the Church-door, who when they espied any Man or Woman in a *Vandal*s habit, about to go into the Church, clapping Fleh-hooks on their heads, and twisting them in their hair, with a strong twitch they pulled off hair, scalp and all, whereby some lost their eyes, and some their lives.

The Women, besides these torments, they carried thorow the Streets, to be made a publick laughing stock, yet could they not force them to alter their Religion.

Then did Hunrick ordain, That none of his Courtiers which dissented from his Religion, should receive their ordinary Pensions and Salaries. He also did send many of them who had been delicately brought up, to Utica, in the parching heat of the Sun, to dig the Land for Corn; yet they went chearfully; and comforted themselves in the Lord.

He commanded that no Man should be a Knight, or bear any publick Office, except he turned Arrian: Whereupon, very many with invincible courage, forsook their Honors and Offices, rather than their Faith.

Many Virgins he caused to be proved by the Midwives in a most shameful manner; hanging them up from the ground with mighty weights at their feet, and putting to their sides, breasts, back, and bellies, red hot plates of Iron, to compel them to confess that their Bishops and Ministers lay with them, that so he might from thence have an occasion to persecute them. Many of these died under the pain, and others remained lame and crooked all their lives after, yet would they not confess any such thing.

Then

Then did he banish into the Wilderness, of Bishops, Ministers, Deacons, and other Members of Christ, Four thousand nine hundred seventy and six; some of them being lame with the Gout, others blind with Age: Amongst whom also, was Felix, Bishop of Abiris, possessed with a dead Palsie, and therefore unable, either to go or ride; which the cruel King being informed of, and requested that he might be suffered to stay, he answered, If he be not able to ride, let wild Bulls be coupled to drag him to the place appointed. So that they were fain to carry him on a Mules back across, as if he had been a Sack.

Multitudes banished.

Felix.

So were all these holy Confessors brought to the City of Sicca, where the Moors were to receive them, and transport them thence to the Wilderness. Thither came two Arrian Earls, and with great subtilty sought to withdraw them from their steadfastness, saying, What mean you to be so obstinate, as not to obey the Kings Laws, whereas by complying with him, you may be preferred to honor? But they all cried out, We be Christians, we be Catholicks, we believe, and confess the Trinity in Unity. Hereupon were they shut up in a grievous Prison.

Tentation.

Many Mothers also voluntarily followed their little Children, much rejoicing that they had born Martyrs. Others sought to draw them to Rebaptization by the Hereticks; but, through Gods Grace, they could not prevail.

Constancy.

As they passed on the way, travelling more by night than by day, because of the excessive heat, a Woman hastened after them, leading in hand a little Child, encouraging him, saying, Run Sirra, seest thou all the Saints, how merrily they go forwards, and hasten to their Crown? One of the company rebuked her, and asked her whither she went? To whom she answered, Pray for me, I go with this little Boy, my Nephew, to the place of banishment, lest the Enemies finding him alone, should seduce him from the way of Truth, into the way of Error.

An excellent story.

The Enemies being more enraged, because of their constancy, when they came to their Lodgings, penned them up in narrow places: And there was denied to them all the comfort of access of their Friends, for permitting whereof formerly, their Keepers had been beaten with staves. These blessed Saints were tumbled one upon another, as Grains of Corn; neither could they have means of stepping aside to ease Nature, so that the stink of their Excrements exceeded their other pain.

Cruelty of Hereticks.

They were brought forth, their Garments, Heads, and Faces besmeared with dirt in a pitiful manner; and by the clamorous Moors they were hastned forward in their journey; yet they went singing with great joy unto the Lord, Lo, This honor have all his Saints. Then came to them the blessed Bishop Cyprian, who to their singular consolation, comforted every one of them with fatherly affections, and with streams of tears was ready to lay down his life for the Brethren, and would fain have accompanied them, if he might have been suffered. He bestowed all that he had amongst them, for which he afterwards suffered imprisonment, and much hardship, and at last had his hearts desire in being banished.

Cyprian's sympathy.

Charity.

There came great multitudes from sundry Countreys and Cities, to behold these Servants of God, and many casting their Children at their feet, crying thus, To whom will you leave us wretches, whilst you go forward to your Crown? Who shall Baptize our Infants? Instruct and Administer the Sacraments to us? Our hearts serve us well to go with you, if we might. But now none were suffered any more to go with them for their comfort; but they were pressed forwards, and made to run.

When any of the aged, or tender Children fainted, they were first punched forwards with staves; and the Moors were commanded to tie ropes to the feet of such as were unable to go, and to hale them thorow the rough places, so that, first their Garments were rent, then their flesh, and their heads were dashed against the sharp edges of Rocks, whereby very many of them died.

Barbarous cruelty.

The rest that were stronger, came at last to the Wilderness, where the Beasts, they had Barley given them for their Food: There were also abundance of venomous Serpents and Scorpions in that place, whose sting was deadly; yet, thorow Gods great Providence, none of these Servants of Christ gat any hurt thereby.

Subtily of Hereticks.

Hunrick in the seventh year of his reign, directed his Mandate to Eugenius, Bishop of Carthage, and told all other Bishops in Africk, that they should by such a day meet at Carthage, to defend by disputation their Faith against the Arrian Bishops; but withal, by the tenor of the Decree, they perceived, that he would not suffer any of them to live within his Dominions; which caused great heaviness amongst them. Eugenius returned answer, That since it was the common Cause of all the Christian Churches, it was but equal, that Bishops, out of other Countreys, should be requested to be there present also. And this he did, not because they suspected their own abilities to defend the Truth; but because he knew that strangers might use more liberty of Speech then they could; and that other Bishops might be witnesses of their Sufferings. But this request did but more enrage this unreasonable Tyrant.

The appointed day approaching, many Bishops resorted to Carthage, worn out with Afflictions and Sorrows; yet for many days after their coming, there was no mention of disputing, till, in the mean time, the King had singled out the learnedst and skilfullest of them, that by sundry calumnies he might make them away: Amongst whom was Latius, a stout and learned Man, whom he first imprisoned, and then burnt him in the fire, that so he might strike a fear into the rest.

Pride of Hereticks.

At last the Disputation began, and the Orthodox, to avoid tumult, chose out some to answer for all the rest. The Arrians placed themselves upon lofty Thrones, whilst the Orthodox stood below upon their Feet; whereupon they said, Conference is to be taken in hand, not where proud Superiority of Power bears sway, but where, by common consent, the Disputants upon equal terms debate the Controversies, that Truth may come to light, &c. Hereupon all the Catholics were commanded to have an hundred strokes apiece with a Cudgel, given them for this Speech.

Unjust cruelty.

Whereupon Eugenius said, The Lord from Heaven behold the violence which we suffer, and consider the tribulation which we sustain from our Persecutors. Then did the Orthodox Bishops desire the Arrians to propound what they intended: But the Arrian Bishops seeing them ready to dispute with them, sought out tergiversations, and declined the dispute. Hereupon the Orthodox drew forth a Declaration of their Faith, excellently well penned, and exhibited it with this Protestation, If you be desirous to know our Belief, the Faith which we hold is herein comprised. The Arrians stormed exceedingly at this, giving them outrageous language, and presently by false calumnies they accused them to the King, and so incensed him, That by an Edict, in one day, he caused all the Christian Churches, through Africk, to be shut up, giving to the Arrians all the Goods and Churches of the Orthodox.

A Confession of Faith.

A wicked Edict.

Cruelty of Hereticks.

Then did he command, that all those godly Bishops that were met together at Carthage, should be spoiled of all that they had in their Lodgings, and so driven out of the City Gates; having neither Servant, nor Beast, nor Garment to shift them in, left unto them: And all men were forbidden either to harbor them, or give them any sustenance, the King threatening to burn, him and all his family, that should relieve them.

The Bishops being thus turned out, lay in the open Fields, round about the Walls: And when the Tyrant went forth to the Fish-ponds, they met him, saying, why are we so afflicted? what evil have we done? If we be called to dispute, why are we spoiled of all we have? why are we slandered? why are we forced to remain here amongst the Dung-hills, afflicted with hunger and nakedness, far from our Churches and Houses? Herewith the Tyrant was so enraged, that he commanded his Horsemen to ride over them, whereby many of them were sore bruised and wounded, especially the aged and weak men. Then did he command them to meet him at the Temple of Memory; and when they came thither, they had this this writing delivered to them. Our Lord King Hunrick, lamenting your obstinacy in refusing to obey his Will, and to imbrace his Religion, yet intends to deal graciously with you; and if you will take this Oath, he will send you back to your Churches and Houses. They all said with one consent, we are all Christians, and Bishops, and hold the Apostolical, and only true Faith; and thereupon they made a brief Confession of their Faith. But the Kings Commissioners urged them, without any further delay, to take the Oath contained in that Paper. Whereupon they answered, Do you think us brut Beasts, that we should so easily swear to a writing, wherein we know not what is contained? Then was the Oath read unto them, which was this, You shall swear that after the death of the Lord our King, his Son Hilderick shall succeed him in the Kingdom; and that none of you shall send Letters beyond the Seas. If you take this Oath, he will restore you to your Churches.

ludley.

They that were plain-meaning Men amongst them, were willing to take it; but others that saw further into the subtilty of it, refused it. Then were those which would take it, commanded to separate themselves from the other, which being done, a Notary presently took their names, and of what Cities they were; he did the like also by the Refusers. And so both Parties were committed to ward, and shortly after the King sent them word; first, to those that would have taken the Oath. Because that you, contrary to the rule of the Gospel, which saith, Thou shalt not swear at all, would have sworn. The Kings will is, that you shall never see your Churches more, but shall be banished into the wilderness, and never perform any Ministerial Office again; and there you shall Till the Ground. But to the Refusers of the Oath, he said, Because you desire not the reign of our Lords Son, you shall therefore be immediately sent away to the Isle of Corfe, there to hew Timber for the Ships.

Sentence.

He also sent abroad through all Africk, his cruel tormentors: So that no place, no house remained free from lamentation, screeching, and out-cries. They spared neither Age nor Sex, but only such as yielded to their will: Some they cudgelled with Staves; some they hung up, others they burned. Women, and especially Gentlewomen, they openly tortured stark naked without all shame: Amongst whom was Dionysia, whom when they saw bolder, and more beautiful than the rest; they first commanded her to be stripped naked, and made ready for the cudgels, who spake boldly to them, saying, I am assured of the love of my God, vex me how you will, only my woman-hood, disclose you not. But they, with greater rage, set her naked upon an high place for a publick spectacle; then did they whip her till the streams of blood flowed all over her body: Whereupon she boldly said, Ye Ministers of Satan, that which you do for my reproach, is to me an honor. And beholding her only Son, that was young and tender, and seemed fearful of torments, checking him with a Motherly Authority, she so encouraged him, that he became much more constant than before. To whom in the midst of his terrible torments, she said, Remember, O my Child, that we were Baptized in the Name of the holy Trinity: Let us not lose the Garment of our Salvation, least it be said, Cast them into utter darkness, where is weeping and wailing and gnashing of Teeth: For that pain is to be dreaded, that never endeth; and that life to be desired, that always lasteth. The Youth was so encouraged hereby, that he persevered patient in all his sufferings, till, in the midst of his torments, he gave up the ghost. Many by her Exhortations and Examples were gained to God, and animated in their sufferings.

Not long after, Cyrillus, the Arrian Bishop at Carthage, stirred up the Tyrant against the Christians, telling him, That he could never expect to enjoy his Kingdom in peace, so long as he suffered any of them to live. Hereupon he sent for Seven eminent Christians from Capsa to Carthage, whom he first assaulted with flattery and large promises of honor, riches, &c. If so be they would imbrace his Faith. But these Servants of Christ rejected all those proffers, crying out, One Lord, one Faith, one Baptism; saying also, Do with our Bodies what you please, torment them at your will, it is better for us to suffer these momentary pains, than to indure everlasting torments.

Gods mercy

Hereupon they were sent to Prison, loaded with great Iron chains, and thrust into a stinking Dungeon: But God stirred up the hearts of many godly Persons (by great bribes to the Jayler) to procure daily access to them; and by their Exhortations, they were so corroborated in the Faith, that they much desired to suffer the like things for Christ with these Men, and would willingly have laid down their Necks to the Persecutors Swords.

Many burned in a Ship.

The Tyrant hearing of it, was exceedingly intraged, caused them to be kept closer, loaden with more Chains, and to be put to great torments. He causes also a Ship to be filled with combustible matter, commanding, That these holy Martyrs should be put into it, and fast bound in the same, and fire to be set to the Ship in the Sea, that they might be burned to death.

Admirable courage and comfort.

When they were brought out of the Prison, the multitude of Gods People accompanied them to the Ship, who as innocent Lambs were led to be sacrificed, looking upon their weighty Irons as rare Jewels and Ornaments. With cheerfulness and alacrity they went towards the place of Execution, as if they had gone to a Banquet, singing with one voice unto the Lord, as they went along the Street, saying, This is our desired day, more Festival than any Festivity: Behold, now is the accepted time, behold, now is the day of Salvation! When for the Faith of our Lord God, we indure death, that we may not loose the Garment of obtained Faith. The People also with one voice cried, Fear not, O Servants of God, neither dread the threats of your Enemies. Die for Christ, who died for us, that he might redeem us with the price of his saving Blood.

Constancy of a Boy.

Amongst these was a pretty Boy, to whom a subtil Seducer said, why hastest thou, my pretty Boy, unto death; let them go, they are mad. Take my counsel, and thou shalt not only have life, but great advancement in the Kings Court. To whom the Lad answered, Thou shalt not get me from the Fellowship of these holy Men who bred me up; with whom I lived in the fear of God, and with whom I desire to die; and with whom I trust, I shall obtain the glory to come. And so being all put into the Ship, they were burned together.

After the death of Hunrick, Gundabund succeeded in the Kingdom, who continuing in the steps of his cruel Predecessors, afflicted the Christians grievously by sundry kinds of Persecution, during the space of twelve years; at the end whereof he died, and Thrasamund succeeded him. A Man that excelled all his Predecessors in magnanimity and courage.

His manner was, by perswasions, flatteries, promises, and rewards, to seek to draw the Christians to his Arrian Heresie; but they which would not be prevailed with hereby, he no way punished or molested them.

An excellent example of an Heathen.

Profanels of Hereticks.

In his time there were great Wars between the Moors and Vandals; the Moors had one Cabaon for their General, who commanded all his Soldiers to use abstinence in their Diet, and to abstain from Women, and from all injury and wrong-doing. The Women he inclosed within Trenches by themselves, commanding, That under pain of Death, no Man should have access to them. Then did he send forth a certain company of Moors, commanding them privately to follow the Camp of the Vandals, and that wheresoever the Vandals profaned any Church of the Christians, presently after their departure, they should follow and purge the same. For (saith he) if the Christians God be a good God, then will he assist them that are devoted to him, and punish the Blasphemers. These Men in counterfeit base attire, followed the Vandals Camp; and whereas the Vandals where ever they came, took up the Christians Churches for their Horses, and Beasts of burthen, carrying themselves very insolently against God and his House, beating and abusing the Ministers and Church-Officers, making them to attend upon them as their slaves. After their departure, the Moors, on the contrary, cleansed the Churches, carried out the Dung, kneeled down to, and revered the Ministers, and distributed Money to the Poor; and thus they did continually.

The first Reformers.

When the Darknes of Popery had overspread the Christian World, so that Kings and Princes employed their Authority to establish the Romish Idolatry, appointing to slaughter such as denied Transubstantiation, Adoration of the Host, bowing the Knees before it, &c. This occasioned many Christians to detest this Superstition, as unknown to the Apostles and Primitive Church. And first of all, God raised up Berengarius, presently after the year One thousand, who boldly and faithfully Preached the Truth, and against the Romish Errors, continuing his Ministry till about the time that William the Conqueror came into England; whereupon the Gospellers were called Berengarians, till about the year One hundred and ten. At which time, common notice being taken of their Separation from the Church of Rome, and their disagreeing from so many of their Tenents, they were branded with the odious name of Hereticks. And twenty years after, when they were grown into a very great multitude, they had one Peter Bruis for their most famous Preacher, who taught long and publicly at Tholouse, under the protection and favor of a Noble Earl, called Hildephonsus: Whereupon in those parts they were called Petro-Bruisians. For Peter Bruis, Anno Christi 1120. published their Tenents in a Book called Antichrist, wherein he declared both the ground of their Doctrine, and the causes of their Separation from the Romish Church.

Twenty years after this, they were grown into a mighty multitude about Anno Christi 1140. whereupon the Popes of Rome now began to lay about them for their Extirpation: For which end, he stirred up his most learned followers to write against them; and warned Princes to take heed of them, and to banish them out of their Territories.

Anno

Anno Christi 1147. they had Henry of Tholouse for their most eminent Preacher, whereupon they began to be called Henericians; and because they were well red in the Scriptures, especially in the Epistles of S. Paul, whom by way of eminency, they called The Apostle, alleaging Texts out of him, and would admit of no Testimonies for the proof of Religion; but only out of Scripture, they were called Apostolicks. And shortly after, God raised up Peter Valdo, a Citizen of Lions in France, who shewed himself most couragious in opposing the Popish inventions; withal taxing divers other innovations which were crept into the Church of Rome; and he was the more eagerly hearkened unto, because he was in high esteem for his Learning and Piety, and his Liberality to the Poor: For besides the nourishing of their Bodies, he did also feed their Souls, by exhorting them to seek Jesus Christ, and Salvation by him. The Archbishop of Lions being informed that Valdo used thus to instruct the People, boldly taxing the Vices, Luxury, and Pride of the Pope and his Clergy, forbade him the same, upon pain of Excommunication, and proceeded against him as an Heretick. Valdo replied, That he could not be silent in a cause of so great importance, as the Salvation of Mens Souls; wherein he must obey God, rather than Man. Then did the Archbishop seek to have him apprehended, but could not effect it, Valdo having many great Friends, and being generally beloved, whereby he continued (though closely) in Lions three years.

Peter Valdo.

Charity.

Popish malice.

Christian courage.

Pope Alexander the Third, being informed, that divers Persons in Lions questioned his Sovereign Authority over the whole Church, cursed Valdo, and his Adherents; commanding the Archbishop to proceed against them by Ecclesiastical Censures, to their utter extirpation; whereupon they were wholly chased out of Lions. Valdo and his Followers, were called waldenses, which afterwards spread themselves into divers Countreys and Companies.

Pope Alexander ralleth Persecution.

The Opinions of these waldenses, for which they were so declaimed against, and cruelly persecuted by the Romanists, were these.

- I. That holy Oyl is not to be mingled in Baptism.
- II. That all such Prayers are superstitious and vain, which are made over the Oyl, Salt, wax, Incense, Boughs of Olives and Palms, Ecclesiastical Garments, Calices, Church-yards, and such like things.
- III. That time is spent in vain, in Ecclesiastical singings, and saying the Canonical hours.
- IV. That Flesh and Eggs may be eaten in Lent; and that there is no merit in abstinence at such times.
- V. That when necessity requires, all sorts of Persons may marry, Ministers as well as others.
- VI. That Auricular Confession is not necessary.
- VII. That Confirmation is not a Sacrament.
- VIII. That Obedience is not to be performed to the Pope.
- IX. That Ministers should live upon Tithes and Offerings.
- X. That there is no difference between a Bishop and a Minister.
- XI. That it is not the dignity, but deserts, of a Presbyter, that makes him a better Man.
- XII. That they administer the Sacrament, without the accustomed Form of the Roman Church.
- XIII. They say that Images are to be taken out of Churches, and that to adore them, was Idolatry.
- XIV. They contemned the Popes Indulgences, and say, That they were of no virtue.
- XV. They refused to take any Oath, whereby they should be infected to accuse themselves, or their friends.
- XVI. They maintained their Ministers out of their own Purses, thinking it unreasonable that such should be diverted from their Studies, whilst they were to get their livings with their own hands.
- XVII.

- XVII. They held, that the Miracles done in the Church of Rome, were false Miracles.
- XVIII. That the Religion of the Fryer Mendicants was invented by the Devil.
- XIX. That the Pope of Rome was not to be obeyed.
- XX. That Whoredom and Stews were not to be permitted, under pretence of avoiding Adultery and Rapes.
- XXI. That there is no Purgatory, wherein the Souls of the deceased are to be purged, before they be admitted into Heaven.
- XXII. That a Presbyter, falling into scandalous Sin, ought to be suspended from his Office, till he had sufficiently testified his Repentance.
- XXIII. That the Saints deceased, are not to be worshipped and prayed unto.
- XXIV. That it matters not for the place of their Burial, whether it were holy or no.
- XXV. They admitted no extreame Unction amongst the Sacraments of the Church.
- XXVI. They say, that Masses, Indulgences, and Prayers, do not profit the Dead.
- XXVII. They admitted no Prayers, but such as did correspond with the Lords Prayer; which they made the Rule of all their Prayers.
- XXVIII. Lastly, Though their Adversaries charged them with holding, That every Layman might freely Preach to the People, yet they had Bishops, and Orders amongst themselves; as the Order of Bulgary, the Order of Druguria: And they who were their Ministers, were ordained thereunto, though they were not of the Romish Institution; as Niculus Viguierius, and others report of them.

Gods Providence.
Persecution spreads the Gospel.
King of France persecutes them.

Valdo himself went into Dauphiney, conversing in the Mountains of the same Province, with certain rude persons, yet capable of receiving his Belief: His Disciples also spread into Picardy, whence they were called Picards. Against whom afterwards King Philip (inforced by the Ecclesiastical Persons) took Arms, and overthrew Three hundred Gentlemens Houses that followed their part, and destroyed some Walled Towns, pursuing them into Flanders, whether they fled, and causing many of them there to be burnt to death.

This Persecution caused many of them to flee into Germany, and Alsatia, where they spread their Doctrine; and shortly after, the Bishops of Mayence and Strasburgh, raised up a great Persecution against them, causing five and thirty Burghesses of Mayence, to be burnt in one fire, and eighteen in another, who with great constancy suffered death.

Many burnt.

At Strasburgh eighty were burnt, at the instance of the Bishop; yet multitudes of People received such Edification by the Exhortations, Constancy, and Patience of the Martyrs, that Anno 1315. in the County of Passau, and about Bohemia, there were above Eighty thousand Persons that made Profession of the same Faith.

The spreading of the Gospel.

Anno Christi 1160. some of them came into England, and at Oxford were punished in the most barbarous and cruel manner, as ever were any Christians for Religion sake, before that time; as you may see in my English Martyrology. And three years after in the Council of Turon, or Towers in France, viz. One thousand one hundred sixty three, Pope Alexander the Third, made a Decree, That these Gospellers, and all their Favorers, should be excommunicated; and that none should sell them any thing, or buy any thing of them, according as it was fore-prophefied, Revel. 13. 17.

Malicious
slanders.

But notwithstanding all these devices, they had goodly Churches in Bulgary, Croatia, Dalmatia, and Hungary. The Popish Monks to make them odious, and to have the better occasion to persecute them, raised up many foul slanders of them, as, That they were Sorcerers, Buggerers, &c. That they assembled themselves in the night time; and that the Pastors commanded the Lights to be put out, saying, Qui potest capere, capiat, Carch who catch can. Whereupon they committed abominable incest, the Son with the Mother, the Brother with the Sister, the Father with his Daughter, &c. They charged them also with many foul foul and false Opinions. From which Accusations, they by a Publick Apology and Vindication cleared themselves; which they published both in French, and their own Language.

Vindication.

Rainerus the Monk, saith of them, That amongst all those which have risen up against the Church of Rome, the Waldenses were the most dangerous, in regard of their long continuance: For some say, That it hath continued from the time of Pope Sylvester; and some say, From the Apostles time. And because this Sect (saith he) is more general, and there is scarce any Countrey, in which it hath not taken footing: And because it hath a great appearance of Piety; for they carry themselves uprightly before men, and believe rightly touching God in all things, holding all the Articles of the Creed; only they hate and revile the Church of Rome; and therein (saith he) they are easily believed of the People.

The great increase of the Waldenses.

Cesarinus saith, That this Heresie so increased, that in a short time it infected Usque ad mille Civitates, a thousand Cities, Parsons saith, That they had an Army of Seventy thousand men to fight for them; yea, they were so spread in Germany, that they could travel from Collen to Milan in Italy, and every night lodge with Hosts of their own Profession.

Hereupon the Pope hath always used all his art for their utter extirpation, by his Thunder-bolts, Curses, Canons, Constitutions, Decrees, and whatsoever else might make them odious to Kings, Princes, and People, giving them over to Satan, interdicting them all Communion and Society with others, making them incapable of any charges, honors, profits, to inherit Lands, to make Wills to be buried in Church-yards, yea, Confiscating their Goods, disinheriting their Heirs; and where they could apprehend any of them, they condemned them to be delivered to the Secular power, their Houses to be razed, their Lands and Goods to be confiscated; commanding Kings, Princes, Magistrates, Consuls, and People, to make an exact Inquisition, to shut the City Gates, to ring the Toll-bell; to arm themselves, to apprehend, kill, or use any other violence to them, giving to their Accusers a third part of their estates; condemning all Favorers of them to the same punishment.

Popes rage and malice.

Anno Christi 1163. came some of these godly Persons to Collen in Germany, out of the parts of Flanders, where they secretly remained; for a time, in a Barn near the City: But the diligence of the Popish Clergy found them out by their not coming to their Church, and so caused them to be apprehended, and brought before them; and after examination, because they constantly adhered to the Truth, and would by no means be brought to recant the same, they condemned them, and delivered them to the Secular power; who carrying them out of the City, (being four Men, and one young Woman) they first bound the four Men to a Stake, and set fire to them. The People much pitied the young Woman, and would fain have saved her; hoping, That the burning of her companions would have wrought her to a recantation: But she, perceiving their drift, struggled out of the hands of those that held her, and voluntarily leaped into the fire, whereby she was burned with them. Godfridus Monachus.

Five burned at Collen.

Anno Christi 1194. Aldephonsus, King of Arragon (probably by the instigation of Pope Celestine, and mis-information of his Clergy) published this evil Edict against them.

A bloody Edict against the Waldenses.

Aldophonius, By the Grace of God, King of Arragon, &c. To all Archbishops, Bishops, and the rest of the Prelates of the Church in his Kingdom; to Earls, Viscounts, Knights, and all the People of his Kingdom; and to all that are in Authority, health, &c. Because God would have us to be over his People, it is a worthy and just thing, That we take continual care, as far as in us lies, of the Salvation, and defence of them: Wherefore being imitators of our Predecessors, and in obedience to the Canons, we judge, That all Hereticks cast out of the sight of God, and of all Catholics, are to be condemned, and persecuted every where, namely, the Waldenses, or Poor Men of Lions, whereof there is no small number, who being cursed by his holy Church. we also command to depart; and flee from all our Kingdoms, and places within our power, as Enemies to the Cross of Christ, our selves, and this Kingdom. Therefore, whosoever from this day forward shall presume to receive the foresaid Waldenses into their Houses, or to hear their doleful Preaching, or to give them Meat, or any other relief; let him know, that he hath incurred the indignation of God, and of us, and that he shall be punished as a Traytor, and all his Goods shall be confiscated without remedy or Appeal. And this our Edict, we command to be published upon Sundays, by Bishops, and all Rectors of Churches, &c. through all our Dominions. And we command that the foresaid punishments be inflicted upon all Transgressors of it, by our Bailiffs, Justices, &c. And if any of the foresaid naughty people, whether noble or ignoble, shall presume to stay three days after the Publication hereof; and not hast their removal; we will, and command all Men to bring upon them all mischief, disgrace, and grievance (except Death, or cutting off their Members) which shall be grateful and acceptable to us; neither shall they fear any punishment for the same; &c.

Peop

But this same Aldephonsus that made this cruel Edict, by the just retribution of God, the very next year lost part of his Kingdom to the Moors, and his Son also Fifty thousand of his Men slain in one Battle. Hoveden.

They defend themselves by Arms.

The Popelings exercising such cruelty against the Gospellers, they began to defend themselves by Arms, repelling force with force: And when, being overpowered by multitude, they could defend themselves no longer, they left their places, and became Soldiers abroad; and many of them became very helpful to our King Henry the Second in his Wars, when he was molested about Archbishop Becket's death: Also our King Richard the First, at his return out of the Holy Land, (as they called it) made good use of them (who though they were cursed by the Pope; yet were they blessed by God) for the recovery of his Right, and for the defence of his People.

Valdo's Zeal and Courage.

Valdo, notwithstanding all the curses of the Pope, continued to publish, That the Pope was Antichrist, the Mass an abomination, the Host an Idol, and Purgatory a fable. Whereupon Pope Innocent the Third, Anno 1198. seeing that the other remedies were not sufficient to suppress these Hereticks, as he called them, authorised certain Monks Inquisitors, who by Process should apprehend and deliver them to the Secular power; by a far shorter, but much more cruel way than was used formerly. For by this means the People were delivered by thousands into the Magistrates hands, and by them to the Executioners; whereby, in a few years, all Christendom was moved with compassion, to see all those burnt and hanged, that did trust only in Christ for Salvation.

Sanguis Martyrum, semen Ecclesie.

The Pope seeing that this suppressed not, but rather increased the number of his Enemies, sent certain Bishops and Monks to Preach in those places of the waldenses; but their Preaching converted not any of them from their former opinions.

Dominicans instituted.

Amongst those Monks was Dominick, who was a zealous Persecutor of these Saints of God, both in word and deed; who seeing himself to be in Authority, instituted an Order of Begging Monks, called after his name Dominicans; which order was confirmed by the Pope, for their zealous assisting of him against the waldenses; and this Dominick labored in the Inquisition, with such contentment to the Popes; that from that time forward, the Monks of his Order have always been employed in the Inquisition.

Inquisitors began Anno Christi 1176.

The power of these Inquisitors was without limitation, they could assemble the People by the sound of a Bell, when they pleased, proceed against the Bishops themselves, they could imprison and release without controul; any accusation was sufficient with them; a Sorcerer, a Whore, was a sufficient witness in the case of pretended Heresie: It mattered not who accused, or whether by word of mouth, or ticket thrown in before the Inquisitor, for Process was thereby thereby framed without party, without Witnesses, or without other Law, then Injustice, the pleasure of the Inquisitors.

To be rich was a crime near to Heretic, and he that had any thing to lose, was in the way to be undone, either as an Heretic, or as a favorer of them: yea, bare suspicion stopped the mouths of Parents, Kinsfolk, and Friends, that they durst not intercede each for other. If any did but convey a Cup of cold water, or a pad of straw to the poor Saints that lay in stinking dungeons, he was condemned as a favorer of the Heretics, and brought to the same or worse extremities.

Prodigious cruelty.

No Advocate durst undertake the defence of his nearest kinsman, or friends; no Notary durst receive any Act in his favour; yea, death it self made not an end of their punishment, for sometimes they passed sentence against the Bones of the dead, to dis-inter and burn them, it may be thirty years after the death of the party accused.

Such as were Heirs had nothing certain, for if their Fathers or kindred were accused, they durst not undertake the defence of their own right, possess their own inheritance, without the crime or suspicion of Heretic. The greatest and richest amongst the people were constrained even to adore these Monks Inquisitors, and to give them great sums for the building of their Convents and Houses; for fear to be accused of Heretic.

And the better to keep the People in aw, these Inquisitors would sometimes lead in Triumph their Prisoners in their processions, enjoying some of them to whip themselves, others to go in their shirts bare-foot and bare-headed, having a Withe about their necks, and a Torch in their hands for the greater terror to the beholders, seeing Persons of all estates and sexes in so miserable a condition.

Some of these accused Persons were sent into the Holy Land, or enrolled for some other expedition against the Turks and Infidels, where they were to serve for a certain time at their own charge: in the mean time these Fathers Inquisitors took possession of their Houses and goods, and when they returned home, they must not so much as enquire whether these Monks had in their absence lain with their Wives, lest they would be condemned as back-sliders, and unworthy of favor.

Anno Christi, 1201. A gallant Knight that was one of these Waldenses, called Enraudus, whom Henry, Earl of Nivers had made Governor of his Land, was accused of Heretic, and brought before the Popes Legat, who called a Common Council at Paris against him, consisting of the Arch-Bishops, Bishops, and Ministers of Paris, who after examination of Witnesses, condemned him for an Heretic, and so delivered him to the secular power, by whom he was burned in the flames. Chron. Rol. Altsidorensis.

A Knight burned.

In O<sup>ro</sup>. Anno Christi 1207. in the Town of Mont-royal near Carasson in the Earldom of Tholouse, there was held a famous disputation between Didacus Bishop of Oxon, a Spaniard: Frier Dominick; Peter of the New Castle, the Popes Legat, and Raph his Colleague on the one party, and Arnold Hot, Pastor of the Albingenses, with some other of his Fellow-laborers on the other party: The Arbitrators were two noble Men, viz. Bernard de villa nova, and Pernall of Arras; and two Plebians, viz. Raimond Godins, and Arnold Riberia. The Questions disputed upon were these: First, that the Church of Rome is not the Spouse of Christ; nor an Holy Church, but an impure one, and instructed by the Doctrine of Satan. Secondly, That their Ecclesiastical Polity is not good, nor holy, nor established by Jesus Christ. Thirdly, That Mass, as it is celebrated therein, was not instituted by Christ, or his Apostles. The Bishop undertook to prove the contrary: But after three days disputation, he desired fifteen days to commit his Arguments to writing, and Arnold Hot required eight days to put in his Answer.

A Disputation between the Popelings and the Waldenses.

The Popelings
bathed.

At the day appointed the Bishop brought in a very long writing; and Hof desired to answer by word of mouth, intreating his Auditors that he might not seem troublesome to them, if he were long in answering so long a discourse; and it was granted that he should be heard with patience without interruption, and so he discoursed for divers hours four days together, to the great admiration of all that heard him, and so ready was he therein, that all the Bishops, Abbats, Monks, and Priests, wished themselves elsewhere; For he framed his answer to each point in order, as it was set down in the writing, and that with such plainness and perspicuity, that he gave all that were present to understand, that this Bishop, though he had written much, yet had he concluded nothing that might truly turn to the advantage of the Church of Rome against his Assertions: Then did Arnold request, that forasmuch as the Bishops, and himself in the beginning of the conference, were bound to prove whatsoever they affirmed by the Word of God only, it might now be imposed upon the Bishops, and Priests to make good their Mass as they sing it, part by part, to have been instituted by the Son of God, and so used by the Apostles, &c. But the Bishops were not able to prove that the Mass, or any part of it was so ordained or used, whereupon they were much discontented, and ashamed. Arnold proceeded to prove that it was not instituted by Christ or his Apostles. For (said he) if the Mass were the holy Supper instituted by our Saviour, there would remain after the consecration, that which was in the Supper of our Lord, viz. Bread: But in the Mass there is no Bread; For by Transubstantiation the Bread is vanished, therefore the Mass is not the holy Supper of the Lord, &c. The Bishops, Legats, Monks, and Priests having nothing to answer to these things, retired themselves, not being willing to hear any more: and fearing lest these Gospellers should work such an impression on the hearts of those that were present, as might shake their belief touching the Mass, they dissolved the Assembly. Nich. Vignierius.

Horrible cruelty.

Between the years 1176: which was the time when this Inquisition was first erected, to the year 1228. there was so great a havock made of poor Christians, that the Arch-Bishops of Aix, Arles, and Narbonne, being assembled at the request of the said Inquisitors, to confer with them about divers difficulties in the execution of their offices, had compassion of the great number that were accused and cast into Prison, saying, we hear that you have apprehended such a multitude of the Waldenses, that it is not only impossible to defray the charge of their food, but to provide lime and stone to build Prisons for them, we therefore advise you to forbear this rigor till the Pope be advertised, and direct what he will have done in this case, &c. Yet notwithstanding all this cruelty, there was in the year 1260. according to the report of George Morrel in his memorials, p. 54. above eight hundred thousand Persons that made profession of the Faith of the Waldenses.

The number of the Walden-
ses.

Besides the Churches that they had in Valentinois, where their Faith was propagated from the Father to the Son, their Religion spread also beyond the Alps into the Valley of Pragela, within the jurisdiction of the Arch-Bishop of Turin, from whence were peopled the Waldensian Valleys of Piedmont, La Perouse, St. Martain, Angrogne, &c. This Valley of Pragela was one of the safest retiring places that the Waldenses had, being environed on all sides with mountains almost inaccessible, into the Caves whereof they retired themselves in the times of Persecution: and though they were weakened on all sides, environed with enemies, and in danger of being apprehended if they looked but forth of their doors; yet was there never any worldly respect that had power to alter their holy resolution from the Father to the Son, to serve God, taking his Word for the rule of their Faith, and his Law for the rule of their obedience: yea, no sooner were the Infants weaned from their Mothers Breasts, but their Parents took a singular delight to instruct them in the Christian Faith.

lives.

Good Pastors.

There Pastors also did not only preach to them on the sabbath days, but went in the Week days to instruct them in the Villages and Hamlets, not sparing themselves for the roughness of the Rocks, the coldness of the air, and the cragginess cragginess of the Country, where they were fain to climb up high Mountains to visit their flocks.

There was also holy Discipline exercised among them: The People prayed with fervency at Night when they went to their rest, and in the Morning before they went about their labor, they had Schools wherein their Children were taught and nurtured.

But whilst they thus busily sought the advancement of Gods glory, and their own salvation, the Devil raised up a Persecution against them. Anno 1380. by a Monk Inquisitor, called Francis Boralli, who had a commission to enquire after the Waldenses in Aix, Arles, Ambrun, Vienne, Geneva, Amone, Savoy, the Venetian County, the Principality of Orange, the City of Avignon, &c. which commission he received from Pope Clement the seventh.

This Monk cited to appear before him at Ambrun, all the Inhabitants of Frassinere, Argentire, and of the Valley Pate upon pain of excommunication: But they appeared not, whereupon they were condemned of contumacy, and excommunicated: and for the space of thirteen years, as he caught any of them, he delivered them up to the secular power to be burnt at Grenoble, the number of whom was an hundred and fifty Men, divers Women, with many of their Sons and Daughters, besides about eighty Persons of Argentire.

The Inquisitors also adjudged to themselves two parts of all their goods, and the third part to the temporal powers: They forbade all their bordering Neighbors also to assist, receive, visit, or defend them or to converse with them in any sort upon pain of being attainted, and punished as favorers of Hereticks, &c.

The Waldenses of the Valley of Pragela, Anno 1400. were assaulted by their enemies on the side of Susa in Piedmont: But most of their assaults proved in vain, because these Waldenses retired into the high Mountains, hiding themselves in the Caves and hollow places thereof, from whence they much endamaged those that came to assail them. Their enemies seeing this, came upon them in the depth of Winter, when those poor People never suspected it, all the Mountains being covered over with Snow: and thereupon they retired into the highest Mountain of all the Alps, together with their Wives and Children, the Mothers carrying some in their Cradles, and leading others by the hand: yet the enemy followed them till Night, and slew many before they could recover the Mountain, and they which were so slain had the better bargain: For Night coming on, these poor People being in the Snow, without any means to make a Fire for their Infants, many of them were benumbed, and in the Morning above eighty of them were frozen to death in their Cradles, and most of their Mothers died also, and divers others were giving up the last gasp: The enemies lay all Night in these Peoples Houses, which they ransacked and pillaged, and so returned to Susa, but by the way, meeting with a poor Waldensian Woman, they hanged her upon a Tree, and so departed.

The Waldenses of the Valley of Frassinere, were greatly Persecuted by the Arch-Bishop of Ambrun, Anno 1460. who made a Monk called John Poyless his Commissioner against them, which Monk proceeded with such diligence and violence, that scarce any Person could escape his hands, but that he was either apprehended for an Heretick, or a favorer of them, whereby many Papists suffered amongst the rest, which caused them to petition King Lewis the eleventh of France, by his authority to stay the course of that Persecution: and thereupon the King wrote his Letter to the Governor of Dauphine, signifying, that whereas the Inquisitors had daily sent forth their process against many poor People in those parts without reasonable cause, putting some to the rack, and condemning them for matters whereof they were never guilty, and which they could not prove by any Witness: and of others they had exacted great sums of Money, and divers ways had unjustly vexed and molested them: He therefore decreed that for the time to come all such process should be void, and of none effect.

nor any wrong done to them in body, goods, or good name, except there were any that obstinately maintained and affirmed any thing against the holy Catholick Faith.

Yet the Arch-Bishop continues it.

Popish malice. Slanders.

But the Arch-Bishop was so far from ceasing the Persecution upon this Edict, that he grew more violent by reason of the last clause, pretending that he did not any thing contrary to the Kings precept, seeing they which were cited, appeared not to justify themselves, &c. He also suborned many Priests, which were his own Officers, to depose, that all they which had petitioned the King were Waldenses: He also hired one John Pelegrin to accuse them for assembling themselves in dark places to commit Whoredom, &c. and then he sent to the Court to justify himself from the complaint made to the King against him, that he had persecuted the Waldenses rather out of covetousness to get their goods, than out of zeal to the Catholick Faith: But this single witness prevailed but little, seeing there were many others who deposed, that they had never seen any such villany amongst the Waldenses, nor any the least appearance of the same.

James Paterni.

Yet did not the Arch-Bishop cease to prosecute them to the uttermost of his power, so that he caused most of them to flee away, only one James Paterni stood to it, averring before the Court that he was unjustly vexed, contrary to the Kings Letters, demanding a copy of the proceedings, that he might right himself by Law: Thereupon the Arch-Bishop left him, and fell upon those that wanted the like courage, citing the Consuls of Frassiniere to answer for themselves, and all the Inhabitants of their Valley: But they refused, saying, that they had nothing to say before the Arch-Bishop, seeing their cause was now depending before the King and his Council, protesting against the Arch-Bishops power, and demanding a Copy of the Kings Letter: But the Arch-Bishop, notwithstanding this protestation, sent them to the Fire, without any other indictment.

The Arch-Bishops cruelty.

Gods judgments on Persecutors.

Yet the Lord left not this cruelty long unrevenge, for shortly after the Arch-Bishop died by the stroke of Gods justice, and so ended his Persecution, Anno Christi 1487.

Popish Lies.

Gods Providence.

One villany of the Inquisitor Valesi may not be forgotten, which was this: When he examined any of the Waldenses, whether he believed that the Bread on the Sacrament, after the Consecration, was changed into the real and natural Body of Christ which hung upon the Cross? If the Waldenses answered, No; He set down his answer thus, That he believed not in God. When he asked, whether we ought not to pray to Saints? If they answered, No; He set down, That they ruled upon, and spake evil of the Saints: When he enquired, whether we ought not to pray to the Virgin Mary in our necessities? If they answered, No; He set down, That they spake blasphemy against the Virgin Mary, &c. And by Gods providence these Records were kept in the Arch-Bishop of Ambruns house, till the City and their Records fell into the hands of the Protestants an hundred years after, and so God brought all their Knavery to light.

Popish subtlety.

Barbarous cruelty.

Anno 1488. Pope Innocent the Eighth sent Albert de Capitaneis, Arch-Deacon of Cremona against these Waldenses, who craved aid of the Kings Lieutenant of Dauphine, against them. This Lieutenant for his service levied troops of men, and at the Arch-Deacons request, led them against the Waldenses in the Valley of Loyse, and to colour his proceedings with a pretence of justice, he took a Counsellor of the Court along with him. But when they came to the Valley, they found no Inhabitants, for they were all retired into their Caves in the high Mountains, having carried their little Children, and all their provision of Food with them. Then did this cruel Lieutenants cause much Wood to be laid to the mouths of the Caves, and set it on fire, so that some were choked with smok, others burnt with the fire, others cast themselves headlong from the Rocks, and were broken in pieces, and if any stirred out they were presently slain by the Soldiers.

The Persecution of the Waldenses.

In this Persecution, there were found within the Caves four hundred Infants stifled in their Cradles, or in the arms of their dead Mothers: and in all, there perished above three thousand Men and Women at that time, so that there were no Inhabitants left in all that Valley: And to prevent the coming of any more of them thither, the Lieutenant gave all their goods and possessions to whom he pleased.

Then did he march against the Waldenses of Pragela, and Frassaniere, but they, providing for their own safety, attended him at the passages and narrow straits of their Vallies, so that he was forced to retire.

After a while, Albert de Capitanen, being called to another place, he substituted a Franciscan named Francis Ploieri, who Anno 1489. began anew to inform against the Waldenses of Frassaniere, citing them to appear before him at Ambrun, and for non-appearing, he excommunicated them, and condemned them for Hereticks, to be delivered to the secular power, and their goods to be confiscated; and in this judgment their assisted one Ponce, a certain Counsellor of Dauphine. These Men afterwards caught two of their Pastors [Francis Gerondin, and Peter James] who being asked why the Waldenses increased so fast; and spread so far; They answered, Because the Popish Priests live so dissolutely, and because the Cardinals are so covetous, proud and luxurious, it being commonly known that there is neither Pope, Cardinal, nor Bishop, but keeps his whore, and few or none but had their youths for Sodomy besides; And therefore it is easie for the Waldensian Pastors to persuade the People, that their Religion could not be good, whose fruits were so bad, &c.

This Persecution grew exceeding hot, the Inquisitor and Counsellor sending as many as they could catch to the fire without admitting any appeal: and if any interceded for them, though the Father for the Child, or the Child for the Father, he was presently committed to Prison, and indicted as a favorer of Hereticks.

Anno 1594. Antoni Fakri, and Christopher de Salience had Commissions sent them from the Pope, to commence suit against the Waldenses in Dauphine; who apprehending the Widow of one Peter Berand, they imprisoned, and oft examined her, and thereby drew from her whatever she knew of the Assemblies of the Waldenses, of the Persons that frequented them, and of the places and times of their meeting, which afterwards brought great trouble to the said Churches of Christ, and of gain to the Inquisitors.

King Lewis the Twelfth succeeding King Francis, Anno 1598. the Inhabitants of Frassaniere petitioned him to take some order for the restitution of their goods, which by the Inquisitors were detained from them. The King referred it to his Chancellor, who procured a Commissary from the Pope, and Commissioner from the King, to be sent down to examine the business. These accordingly, having examined divers Witnesses against the Waldenses, and finding their innocency, did at last absolve them; The Kings Commissioner publicly professing, that he desired to be but as good a Christian as the worst of those of Frassaniere were: and returning to the King, they made report to him of that which they had done: The King thereupon ordered, that the goods of the Waldenses should be restored.

When the Kings order came to Ambrun, it was the opinion of most men, that seeing most of these goods were in the possession of the Arch-Bishop, that therefore he should give a good example in the beginning to restore them; but the Arch-Bishop answered, That the goods which he held were annexed to his Arch-Bishoprick, and incorporated to his Church, and therefore it was out of the Kings jurisdiction, and he did not believe that the King would meddle therein. Yet being willing to please the King, he proffered to restore them their Vineyards, provided that the Lords of Dauphine would restore the goods which they had. But there was not one that would restore what they had so unjustly gotten, so that the poor people were wholly frustrated of their expectations.

Then did they summon the Arch-Bishop and those refusers before the King, but these great Ones having more Friends and favor at Court, than the poor People had, their excuse was admitted, which was, that they could not restore the goods, before the Pope had absolved those of Fraffaniere from the sentence of excommunication.

A special Providence.

Anno 1560. The President of Provence made a Speech to the Assembly of Estates to root out these waldenses: Whereupon they raised an Army for the effecting of it; But as soon as the Men were in Arms, it pleased God, by the death of King Francis, to put an end to that design, whereby the waldensian Churches in Dauphine enjoyed peace, and were well furnished with godly Pastors, who held them in the exercise of Religion, though they were in continual danger of being Persecuted to the death for the same.

In Piedmont.

Love.

The waldenses in Dauphine, many years before this being multiplied, so that the Country could not feed them, dispersed themselves abroad into divers parts, whereof some went into Piedmont, who lived in great love with those of Dauphine, and though they were always oppressed with troubles, yet with hearty love and charity, they ever succored one another, not sparing their lives and goods for their mutual conversation.

Popish malice.

The first Persecution in Piedmont was occasioned by the Priests, who complained to the Arch-Bishop of Turin, That these People lived not according to the manner and belief of the Church of Rome; That they offered not for the dead, cared not for Masses, Absolutions, or to get any of theirs out of the pains of Purgatory, &c. Hereupon the Arch-Bishop Persecuted them, complaining of them to their Princes to make them odious: But the Prince enquiring of their Neighbors, heard that they were of a good conversation, fearing God, without deceit or malice, loving plain dealing, always ready to serve their Prince with alacrity, &c. He therefore purposed not to molest them: But the Priests and Monks gaining nothing by their Belief, charged them with an infinite number of calumnies, and ever and anon catching one or other of them, they delivered them to the Inquisitors, and the Inquisitors to the Executioners; so that there was scarce a Town or City in Piedmont, where some of them had not been put to death.

Slanders.

Persecution in Piedmont.

Cruelty.

At Turin one of them had his bowels torn out of his Belly, and put into a Basin before his Face, and then was he cruelly Martyred.

Catelin Girard.

At Revel in the Marquisat of Saluces, one Catelin Girard being on the block whereon he should be burnt, requested his Executioner to give him two stones, which he refused to do, fearing lest he would throw them at some Body, but he protesting the contrary, at last they gave him two stones, which he held in his hands, and said, when I shall have eaten these stones, then shall you see an end of our Religion, for which you now put me to death, and so he threw them on the ground, and died cheerfully.

Popish malice.

Thus they burnt many of them in the Fire, till Anno 1488. and then they resolved to assault them by open force, because they saw that otherwise they should never be able to extirpate them: Besides, their constant sufferings converted many to the Faith. Hereupon they levied an Army of Eighteen thousand Men, besides many Inhabitants of Piedmont, who ran to the pillage from all parts. These marched all at once to Angrogne, Lucerne, La Perouse, &c. They raised also forces in Dauphine, wherewith they over-ran the Valley of Pragela, so that they, being put to defend themselves, could not assist their Friends in Piedmont. But the Enemy by this division of his forces, being weakened, was every where beaten, especially in the Valley of Angrogne, where the waldensians having been informed of the levies of their enemies against them, prepared themselves to receive and resist them, keeping the strait passages, where few men might defend themselves against many.

They defended themselves with long Targets of Wood, whereby they covered themselves from the hurt of their Enemies Arrows. Whilst they were thus bickering bickering with Enemies, the Women and Children upon their knees cried out, O God help us. The Enemies made themselves merry with this sight, and amongst them, one Capt. Saguer, who as he was imitating the Women, was slain, and tumbled down in a very deep Valley.

Profaneness
A just Judgment.

Another Captain, crying out to the Women in derision, was killed with the shot of an Arrow in the Throat. Hereupon the Soldiers betook themselves all to their heels, and the greatest part slew themselves, by tumbling down from the Rocks.

A special Providence.

Another providence of God was this, That the Enemies approaching to the strongest entrance by nature, might there have fortified themselves, and so made themselves Masters of that Valley: But God sent so thick a Cloud, and dark a Fog, that they could scarce see one another, whereby they wanted opportunity to discover their advantage, and therefore departed: which the waldenses seeing, courageously pursued them, and by that means the Enemy being dispersed, and not seeing which ways they went, the greatest part fell head-long down the Mountains, quitting their arms and booty which they had gotten at their first entrance into the Valley, by which means the waldenses recovered it again.

Gods Judgment on Persecutors.

Then it pleased God to move the Princes heart (which was Philip the Seventh, Duke of Savoy; and Lord of Piedmont) with pity towards these poor People, saying, That he would not have that People which had been always true, faithful and obedient to him, to be unjustly destroyed by Arms; Being content that twelve of the Principal should come to him to Pignerol to crave pardon for all the rest, for taking arms in their own defence, without his authority: These he entertained lovingly, forgiving all that was past, during the War. And having been informed that all their Children were born with black Throats, with four rows of Teeth, and all hairy, he caused some of them to be brought to him, and seeing them fair and perfect Creatures, he was much displeased with himself for believing so easily the reports which were brought to him against them, giving command that none should hereafter molest them, but that they should enjoy all the privileges which the rest of his subjects in Piedmont did.

Gods mercy.

Slanders.

Notwithstanding which, the Monks Inquisitors daily sent out process against them, lay in wait for them, and as they could apprehend any of them, delivered them over to the secular power. This Persecution lasted to Anno 1532. at which time the waldenses ordered, that their exercises of Religion should be performed no more in covert, as formerly they had been, but in publick, that every one might know them, and that their Pastors should preach the Gospel openly, not fearing any Persecution that might happen unto them.

Zeal and Courage.

The Prince being advertised hereof, was highly offended with them, and thereupon caused one of his Commanders to hast with his Troops in the said Vallies, which was performed with such diligence, that he was entred with Five hundred Horse and Foot, before they were aware, ransacking, plundering and wasting all before them. Then did the waldenses leave their ploughs, putting themselves into passes, and with their slings charged their enemies with such multitudes of stones, that they were constrained to flee, and to abandon their prey, many remaining dead upon the ground.

Persecution renewed.

This news was presently carried to the Prince, and withal he was told, that these People were not to be subdued with Arms, they knowing better the straits of their Countrey, then the Assailants, and that the skin of one of the waldenses would cost him the lives of a dozen of his other Subjects: whereupon he used Arms no more against them, But as any of them was caught in Piedmont, he put them to death, if they changed not their Belief.

Notwithstanding which rigor, they persisted in their resolution, and that things might be carried on in the better order, they assembled out of all their Vallies Vallies to Angrogne, Anno 1535. viz: The Heads of all their Families, with their Pastors, where they heard that their Brethren of Provence, and Dauphine had sent two of their Pastors, George Morrell, and Peter Masson into Germany, to confer with Oecolampadius, Bucer, and others about their Belief, which they had held from Father to Son, time out of mind. Where also the German Divines acknowledged, that God had been very merciful and gracious to them, in preserving them undefiled, in the midst of so many superstitions which had defiled all Christendom under the tyranny of Antichrist; encouraging and exhorting them not to bury those Talents which God had given them: only they blamed them for delaying so long to make a publick profession of their adhering to the Gospel, and causing it to be preached publicly, leaving the success to God, &c. Then were the Letters of Oecolampadius and Bucer, which they sent to them, openly read, together with the Propositions and Articles of Religion which they had agreed upon, which were all approved, signed and sworn to by all the Assistants with one consent, to perform, observe, believe and retain amongst them inviolably, as being conformable to the Doctrine which they had been taught from their Fore-fathers for many hundred years, and all taken out of the Word of God.

When this Agreement came abroad to the ears of the Priests, they were much astonished, despairing to see these People reclaimed and brought back to the Church of Rome; whereupon they retired from amongst them without speaking a word.

The Waldenses, because they had only the New Testament and some Books of the Old, amongst them in the Waldensian Tongue, resolved speedily to send the whole Bible to the Press, all their Books hitherto being but Manuscripts, and those but a few. They sent therefore some to Newcastle in Suitzerland, where they gave Fifteen hundred Crowns in Gold to a Printer, who brought to light the first Impression of the French Bible that was seen in France. They sent also to Geneva to make a large supply of Books fit for the instruction of the People; But their Messenger, as he passed over the hill De Gap, was apprehended for a spy by the Lord of Champelion, and as soon as they knew him to be a Waldensian, they sent him to Grenoble, where he was first imprisoned, and then in the Night, drowned in the River, lest he should speak of his belief before the People.

Shortly after there hapned Wars between King Francis the First, and the Princes of Piedmont, which, through Gods grace, turned to the great peace and quiet of those poor People; which peace continued till Pope Paul the Third solicited the Parliament of Turin to Persecute them as pernicious Hereticks: Whereupon the Parliament caused a great number of them to be burnt at Turin. Then these Waldenses petitioned the King that they might not be Persecuted for their Religion, in which they and their Ancestors had lived for many Hundred years. But the King rejected their Petition, commanding them to live according to the Laws of the Roman Church, upon pain of being punished as Hereticks: adding, that he did not burn the Lutherans through his whole Kingdom of France, to let them amongst the Alps escape.

Hereupon the Parliament of Turin commanded them presently to send away all their Ministers, and receive the Priests to sing Mass, &c. To which they answered, that they could not receive any such commandment, it being contrary to Gods Word, whom they would rather obey than Men. But through Gods mercy, the King had other imployments elsewhere; whereby they wanted leisure to prosecute those Servants of Christ, and therefore they only proceeded by the Inquisition, receiving such as the Monks condemned to the Fire.

Anno 1555. They increased the Persecution, condemning to the Fire Bartholomew Heffor a Stationer, to be executed at Turin, who died with admirable constancy, and so edifying the Spectators, that they wept and compassionated him, justifying justifying him in their Speeches, and praying for him. Hereupon the Parliament resolved wholly to extirpate them, and for that end sent two Men with Authority, either to reform, or root them out.

These Persons went first to Perouse, whereby Proclamation in the Kings Name, they command all to go to Mass, upon pain of loosing their lives. Then they went to Pignerol, where they cited many to appear before them; and amongst others, a poor simple laboring Man appeared, whom the President commanded to have his Child rebaptized by a Priest. The Man requested respite to pray to God before he answered him, which, with great laughter, was granted. Then falling down on his knees, he prayed unto God; and when he had done, he said to the President, I will cause my Child to be rebaptized, upon condition, th<sup>t</sup> you will give me a Bill, signed with your own hand, that you will discharge me of the sin which I shall commit hereby; and bear one day before God the punishment and condemnation which should befall me for the same; taking this iniquity upon you and yours. The President hearing this, commanded him out of his presence, and pressed him no further.

Profane

Prudence

The President framed divers Indictments against sundry Persons in the Valleys, and collected whatsoever he thought might hurt them; and going to one of their Churches, he caused a Monk, that he brought along with him, to Preach in the presence of the People: And when he had ended, the People desired that some one of their Pastors there present, might answer his Discourse, but that was denied by the President, whereupon there was such a murmur amongst the People, that the President, without any more Speech, gat him away to Turin; where he reported all to the Parliament, and withal told them, That if they sought by violence to reclaim this People, they were resolved to defend themselves; and that the places of their abode, were of such strength, that it was a work for a King of France to root them out. Thereupon, this Report and the Indictments were sent to the King, who having other occasions, returned no answer that year; only the Inquisitors proceeded as they could catch any, to deliver them to the Secular power.

At the years end, the King commanded the Parliament to cause them to do that by force, which they would not by words be brought to. Then did the Parliament send the President again to Angrogne, where he commanded them in the Name of the King, to go to Mass, upon pain of forfeiting their Lives and Goods: But they answered, That they could not obey such Commands against the Command of God. Then he commanded, that twelve of the principal of them, together with all their Ministers and School-masters, should presently yield up their Bodies to the Prisons of Turin, &c. They answered, That they could not obey that command, or appear at Turin, because they should thereby endanger their lives. The Parliament was so incensed at this answer, that as many as they could apprehend, they burnt; amongst whom was Jeffery Varnicle, Minister of Angrogne, Anno 1557. By whose death, the People that were present, were much edified, seeing his constancy of invoking God to the last.

Popish malice

The Protestant Princes of Germany hearing of this great Persecution, interceded in their behalf to King Henry the Second of France, who promised to have regard to this request of theirs, and indeed they enjoyed Peace afterwards: till the Peace was concluded betwixt the Kings of France and Spain; and that the Duke of Savoy was restored to his estate, which was Anno 1559. The year after, the Popes Nuntio reproved the Duke, for that, with all his power, he had not persecuted the Waldenses, and that if he did not now endeavor to reduce them to the Romish Church, or to root them out, his Holiness should have cause to suspect that he was a favorer of them. Hereupon the Duke presently commanded them to go to Mass, upon the pain of their lives: But they not obeying him, he set upon them by open force, and yet at the same time, he caused them to be pursued by the Monks Inquisitors also; so that a great Persecution was raised against the Poor Christians: Some were taken and burnt, who shewed invincible constancy in all their torments and death.

Humane infirmity.

To recite all the outrages, cruelties and villanies practised against them, would be too tedious: Many fled, and their Houses and Goods were ransacked and spoiled. One of their Ministers was apprehended, and put to a shameful and cruel death, but he shewed such admirable patience therein, as astonished his very adversaries: Some also were taken and sent to be Gally-slaves; yet some, through weakness, yielded to the adversaries, and were more cruelly handled than those that remained constant in the Truth.

Popish malice.

Three of the most cruel Persecutors of these Faithful Servants of Jesus Christ, were, First Thomas Jacomet, a Monk, an Apostate, that had renounced the known Truth, and persecuted mortally and maliciously the Poor Christians against his own Conscience: He was a Whoremonger, and given over to all Villanies, and filthy living, a Sodomite, &c. His delight was to spoil, rob, and torment the Captives of these Waldenses. The second was a Collateral, called Corbis, who in the Examination of the Prisoners was very rigorous, and burnt many of them: But in the end, feeling a remorse in his Conscience, he protested, That he would meddle with them no more. The third was the Provost of Justice, who lay in wait in the High-ways to apprehend them, when they went abroad in the morning, or as they went to the Market.

A special Providence.

The Monks also of Pignerol vexed the Churches, near about them, grievously, some they took prisoners, and kept them in their Abbeys: Then they assembled a company of Ruffians, sending them to spoil the Churches, and to take Prisoners, Men, Women, and Children; of whom, some by torments they forced to abjure; others they sent to the Galleys, others they burnt.

The Gentlemen of the Valley of S. Martin vexed their Tenants grievously, spoiling some of their Goods, imprisoning others, and vexing them by all means. Two of those Gentlemen, getting some Ruffians to them in the night time, set upon a Village called Renclaret, which the Inhabitants perceiving, fled into the Mountains covered with Snow, naked, and without victuals. In the morning these villains took a Minister of that Valley, who was coming to visit these people of Renclaret, and burnt him: But three nights after, they of Pragela, pitying their friends of Renclaret, sent Four hundred Men against the Ruffians, who fought with them, and without the loss of one Man, put them to flight, and restored their Friends to their Houses.

Treachery.

A year after, one of these Gentlemen called Truchet, with a company of Ruffians, arrested the Minister of Renclaret, as he was at his Sermon; but the people were so moved at his outrageous dealing, especially the Women, that they had almost strangled Truchet, and so canvassed the rest of his company, that they had no mind to come any more.

Shortly after they took another Minister, as he was going to Preach in a Parish, a mile from his House; but the People hearing of it, speedily pursued them, and recovered their Minister again: But when the Villains saw that they were like to lose their prey, they so wounded him, that they left him for dead.

Prodigious Villany.

The Monks of Pignerol sent some Ruffians by night to the Ministers House of S. Germain, who were conducted by a Traytor that knew the House, and formerly had frequented it. This fellow knocking at the door, and the Minister knowing his voice, opened the door, but perceiving himself to be betrayed, he fled at a back door, yet was quickly taken, and sorely wounded; notwithstanding which, they pricked him with Halberds to hasten his pace, as they carried him away: They also slew and hurt many others. The Minister, after sore imprisonment, endured a cruel death with much constancy: At his death the Inquisitors caused two poor Women, that they kept in prison, to carry Faggots to burn him, and to say to him their Pastor, Take this, thou wicked Heretick, in recompence compence of that naughty Doctrine that thou hast taught us. To whom he replied, Ah good women, I have taught you well, but you have learned ill.

In brief, they so persecuted these poor people, that they forced them to forsake their Houses, and to flee into the Mountains, loosing all their estates; so that many that had lived well, and relieved others, were now fain to crave relief and succor of others.

The Monks with their Troops of Ruffians, continued thus to molest and persecute these poor people; whereupon they asked their Ministers, whether it were not lawful for them to defend themselves against such violence? The Ministers answered, That it was, only they advised them to avoid bloodshed as much as might be. This question being resolved, they of Luserne and Angrogne sent some to aid their Friends of S. Germain, against the Monks.

In June, divers of these Waldenses went out into the Countrey to reap their Harvest, and in sundry places were all taken prisoners, not knowing of each others calamity; but God so wrought, that miraculously they all escaped out of prison, to the great astonishment of their adversaries. At the same time also, others who had been long in Prison, and longed for nothing but death, through Gods providence, were delivered after a wonderful sort.

A miracle of Mercy.

In July, they of Angrogne, being at their Harvest on the Hill side of S. Germain, perceived a company of Soldiers that were spoiling the Inhabitants of S. Germain: Whereupon they made an out-cry, upon which, the people of Angrogne ran presently thither-ward; some by the Valley, others over the Mountain: They which went by the Valley, being above fifty men, met with the spoilers, who were a hundred and twenty men well appointed, with whom they fought, and gave them a great overthrow. Some were hurt others drowned, and but few hardly escaped; not one of Angrogne being hurt in the fight.

A special Providence.

The Monks were so affrighted with this defeat, that they ran away from their Abbey to Pignerol, to save their Relicks and Images, which they carried thither: And if the Ministers would have suffered their people to have attempted it, they might easily have freed their Brethren which were imprisoned in the Abbey.

Popish subtilty.

After this these Monks, being assisted by a Captain, took many of the Inhabitants of the Valley of Luserne prisoners, spoiling their Goods, driving away their Cattle; and in the end, ransomed them for great sums of Money.

About this time, a Gentleman of Campillon promised his Neighbors, that if they would give him thirty Crowns, he would secure them against trouble; but when he had got the Money, he caused some Soldiers to come to his House, and in the night, sending for the poor men, which suspected no danger, he trayterously endeavored to deliver them into the hands of their mortal enemies: But God, who succors his in their greatest necessity, discovered to one of them the danger they were in, whereby they all fled, and escaped.

Popish simulation and perfidiousness.

Then were strict commands sent through all the Countrey, to banish all the Waldenses, together with the Gospel, out of the Mountains and Vallies of Piedmont: But the people still desired, that they might have leave to serve God purely, according to the Rules of the Word.

In the end of October, a rumor was spread abroad, That an Army was raising wholly to destroy them; yea, and such malefactors as were in prisons, or banished, were pardoned, upon condition, that they should take Arms to destroy the Waldenses. Hereupon the Ministers met together to consult what was to be done in so great an extremity. And first they enjoined a General and Publick Fast to seek God for direction; and in the end concluded, that they should not defend themselves by Arms; but that forsaking their Houses, and taking their best movables with them, they should retire unto the high Mountains; but if their enemies pursued them thither, that then they should take such advice as God should please to give them.

Fasting and Prayer.

This counsel all the People submitted to, and for eight days space, were as busie as Ants in Summer, to remove their Goods and Provisions; which though they did in great danger, yet with great courage and alacrity, praising God and singing psalms, every one chearing up another. But other Ministers hearing of this resolution, wrote to them, that they thought it strange that in such an extreme necessity, they should not rather resolve to defend themselves against violence, proving, That it was lawful for them so to do, to defend the true Religion, and the lives of themselves, wives and children, knowing that it was not the Duke, but the Pope that thus stirred him up against them.

During this time, their Adversaries cried nothing, but, To the fire with them, to the fire with them; and presently by Proclamations set up every where, Angrogne was exposed to the fire and Sword. The Army also approached to their Borders, and the people retired into the Mountains. But when they saw some Horsemen not only spoiling their Goods, but taking some of their Brethren prisoners, they came back, and set upon them; in which bickering some of the Enemies were slain, and the rest retired to their Camp: Not one of the waldenses was slain or hurt. But two of these Horsemen that fled, galloping away before the rest, when they came near to the Army, cried out, They come, they come. Whereupon the whole Army was so astonished, that every Man fled away, none pursuing, and the Captain could not all that day get them into order again.

A special Providence.

Power of Prayer.

The next day the Army under the Lord of Trinity, was Mustered in a Meadow, near to Angrogne; they of the Town had sent some to stop the passages, that the Army should not enter; and in the mean time, they retired into the Meadow of Tour, not expecting the Army so soon; so that there were but few that kept the passages: But when those few perceived their Enemies preparing themselves to fight, they all fell down upon their knees, praying earnestly unto God to pity them, and not to look on their sins, but on the Cause that they maintained, to turn the hearts of their Enemies, and so to work that there might be no effusion of Blood; but if it were his will to take them, their Wives and Infants out of this World, that it would please him mercifully to receive them into his Kingdom. Their Prayers being ended, they perceived their Enemies to come through the Vines to win the top of the Mountain; whereupon the combat began in divers places, and continued until night: The Poor waldenses being but few, and only armed with Slings and Cross-bows, were much oppressed by the multitudes of their Enemies; so that at last they retired to the top of the Mountain, where they defended themselves till night. But having found a place where they might withstand their Enemies, they turned again and slew divers of them.

Profaneness.

A special Providence.

At Even the Enemies began to Incamp themselves, which the waldenses perceiving, they fell to Prayer, desiring God to assist and succor them; for which, the Enemies flouted and laughed them to scorn. The poor people devised to send a Drum into a Valley hard by, and as they were at Prayer, the Drum beat up in the Valley: Whereupon, the Lord of Trinity caused his Soldiers to retreat, which was a great advantage to the waldenses, who were weary, thirsty, and in great peril, if God, by this means, had not given them some rest. Of the waldenses there were but three slain, but many of their Enemies; and more hurt, of whom few recovered.

This combat much encouraged the waldenses, and as much terrified their Enemies, who in their retreat, burnt many houses, and destroyed the Vines that were in the Prefs.

A just reward.

Then did the Lord of Trinity Incamp in the Valley of Luserne, by a Village, the People whereof had always hated the waldenses, and much rejoiced at this hurt that was now done to them; but they were paid back in their own coin, being all destroyed by the Army.

Then

Then did the Lord of Trinity place four Garrisons in four several Fortresses, so that the poor Waldenses found themselves in a sea of troubles; whereupon they first betook themselves to Prayer, then sent to their Friends for aid, who sent them all that they could make. Then did the Lord of Trinity send his Army to Villars and Tailletet; the lesser part went towards Villars. The People seeing their Enemies approaching, called upon God with fervent Prayer, then set upon their Enemies, slew some, hurt others, and the rest fled. The other Company going towards Tailletet, they of that place were but few in number; yet making their Prayers to God, and commending their cause to him, they set valiantly upon their Enemies. During which bickering, they of Villars, encouraged by their late success, came to help their Friends, and set so lustily upon their Enemies, that they put them to flight: But in the pursuit of them, they fell into an ambush, and were invironed by their Enemies; yet, through God's mercy, they all escaped without the loss of one man: On the Enemies side there were so many slain, that they were laid together by whole Cart loads.

Prayer.

A special Providence.

Another party of the Enemies going to spoil a rich man's house, some of his Neighbors, not being above seventy, set upon them, put them to flight, took away their Drum, and recovered their booty from them.

Now did the Lord of Trinity send to them, telling them how much the Duke and his Dutcheſs favored them, and promised himself to mediate for them, that they might live in Peace: But whileſt by theſe pretences, he sought to make them ſecure, he ſent part of his Army to get the Hill of Tailletet; and another part had already gotten the way that led to the Meadow of Toure; whereby the Angrognians might have been eaſily incloſed: But they perceiving it, immediately ſent ſome to encounter with their Enemies, who gat the victory, purſued them to their Camp, and ſlew very many of them, without the loſs of one Man.

Popiſh ſubtilty.

The Lord of Trinity cunningly excuſed this attempt, and ſent to them to draw up a Supplication to the Duke, which was accordingly done, wherein they promiſed to render all honor and reverence unto God, according to his Word, and all due obedience to the Duke, &c. But in the mean time Trinity grievouſly vexed them of Tailletet, upon pretence, That they had not preſented themſelves to treat of this Agreement, taking their Arms from them, and cauſing them to aſk pardon on their knees.

Perfidiousneſs.

But preſently after news brought them, that the Enemies had gotten to the top of the Mountain, and had taken all the Paſſages; whereat they were ſore amazed, and ran with all ſpeed to defend their Wives and Children: Some they ſaved, but the moſt of their Goods were already in the Enemies hands, who, at this time, did them much miſchief.

Yet after this, the Lord of Trinity ſent word again to them that were fled, that if they would return, he would receive them to mercy. The poor people, moſt of them truſting to his promiſe, returned; but the next morning the Enemies came to apprehend them and their Miniſters, beſetting the place on every ſide; then they that were ſwift of Foot, eſcaped, all the reſt were taken; yet God miraculoſly delivered them. For an old Man that could not run ſo faſt as the other, was eſpied by a Soldier, who ran with a naked Sword to have ſlain him; the old Man ſeeing the imminent danger, caught him by the Legs, overthrew him, and drew him by the heels down the Hill: The Soldier cried, Help, help, this villain will kill me. Hereupon his Fellow ran to his reſcue; but in the mean time the old Man eſcaped; and the reſt ſeeing what the old Man had done, though they had loſt their Weapons, yet took heart of graſs, and with Stones and Slings, drave away their Enemies; and thereby they all eſcaped.

Papiſts treachery.

A notable ſtory.

A ſpecial Providence.

The next day the Soldiers went again to Tailletet, robbing, ſpoiling, and carrying away all that they could find, but moſt of the people were retired towards Villars: Then did the Soldiers range all about, and took divers priſoners, Barbarous cruelty.

whom whom they used cruelly; and one Soldier bit off one of their Ears, saying, I will carry the flesh of this wicked Heretick with me into my Countrey. They found also two Women, the Mother and the Daughter, in a Cave, whom they wounded to death: And in another Cave, an old Man of an hundred years old, with his Grand-Daughter of eighteen years old that fed him; the Man they slew, the Maid they would have ravished, who flying from them, tumbled down the Mountains, and died.

Gods judgment on Persecutors.

About the same time there was one John Martin that made his boasts every where, That if he could meet with the Minister of Angrogne, he would slit his Nose: But shortly after, a Wolf met him, and setting upon him, bit off his Nose; whereupon he ran mad, and died miserably.

A certain Soldier promised the Lord of Trinity, to bring to him the Minister of Tailleret, and accordingly never ceased till he found him: But as he was pursuing of him, some out of the Mountains rescued the Minister, and slew the Soldier with Stones.

Uncleanneſs,

These Soldiers were so extream abusive to Women, that many Papists that lived by, sent their Daughters into the Mountains to the Waldenses to preserve their chastity.

Popish Perfidiousness.

Then did the Lord of Trinity promise, That if they would pay him Eight thousand Crowns, he would withdraw his Army, and be gone. They being desirous of Peace, sold their Cattle to raise the Money; but when he had received it, he continued his Army there still.

Their Ministers sent away.

The Lord of Trinity required them to send away their Ministers till the matter were determined before the Duke, or else by his Army he would force them to it: Whereupon by mutual consent they agreed, That the Ministers should withdraw for the present, till the Army was retired, which was not done without great sighs, and lamentations and tears. At that time there fell an extraordinary Snow, so that the people with great difficulty, were fain to make way for their Ministers to pass: But the Army hearing that the Ministers were gathered together, they sent out a Company of Harquebushers to apprehend them, who came but one hour too late to have taken them: Then did they search every Cave, House, and Chest, to seek them; whereby they robbed the poor people of all their best things. They also beset the Ministers house of Angrogne, to whom the Lord of Trinity had promised safety, but it pleased God that he escaped; the Soldiers pursued him into the Mountains, but could not overtake him: Whereupon they plundered his House, burnt his Books and Writings, and so returned.

The next morning command was given to the Rulers of Angrogne, within twenty four hours, to deliver up their Minister, or else Angrogne should be put to fire and sword. They answered, That they knew not where he was, for the Soldiers had driven him over the Mountains. Then did the Soldiers burn Houses, break the Mills, spoil the People, and do all the mischief they could, and so departed.

Cruelty.

The Lord of Trinity left Garrisons in the Fortresses, and caused the poor Waldenses to maintain them, who, not content with their wages, pillaged and robbed all about them; and having taken fourteen Men, they bound them, and were leading them away prisoners; but their Wives and Children pursued them so fiercely with Stones, that they were glad to let their prisoners go, and had much ado to save themselves. To others that they caught, they hung up by the heels and hands, and having tormented them almost to death, at last released them for a great sum of Money. Another Garrison in the night went to Tailleret, brake in at the Windows and tops of Houses, spoiling all, and took also fourteen prisoners, whom they bound, two and two together, and were carrying them to the Fortress; but two of them getting loose, so valiantly assaulted the Soldiers, and beat them with Stones, that they forced them to let go their other Prisoners. Yet two others they took, and carried them to the Fort; one was but a Child,

The Persecution of the Waldenses.

Child, whom the Captain strangled with his own hands, the other was fifty years old, whom they bound; and took a Creature that lives in Horf-dung, and put into his Navel, covering them with a Dish, which in a short space did eat into his Belly, and killed him.

Barbarous
cruelty.

The waldenses were in great perplexity, by reason of these Garrisons, but especially for the want of their Ministers: Whereupon they resolved to call them back, yet to have Preaching only in private, because they would not embitter the Soldiers, till their Messengers returned from the Duke. These Messengers were cruelly handled at the Court, and at last sent back with a command, That they should entertain Priests to say Mass, &c. When this Report was made to their Brethren that sent them, there was wonderful lamentation, weeping and mourning. Then did they send two of their Ministers to the Church of Fragela, to shew them of the pitiful condition of the Churches in Piedmont, and to ask their advice, how to prevent danger: And in the next place they all fell to Prayer, and having long called upon God for Counsel and Direction in so great a strait, they resolved upon debate, That the People in Piedmont and Dauphine should joyn in a League together, wherein they promised, through Gods Grace and Assistance, to maintain the pure Preaching of the Gospel, and administering the holy Sacraments, to yield obedience to their Superior, so far as they were commanded by the Word of God, and one to be aiding and assisting to the other. That none should conclude any thing touching the estate of Religion, without the consent of the rest of the Valleys.

Prayer in danger.

A League

During this Treaty, all the Householders were required to be present at Mass, and such as would do it, should live in Peace; but such as refused should be condemned to be burnt, or sent to the Gallies: So that the People were constrained to flee, die, or renounce the Gospel. The first they would have chosen, but could not do it by reason of the great Snow; whereupon, they exhorted one another, saying, we shall be all called for to morrow, to renounce God, and to return to Idolatry: Let us therefore make a Solemn Protestation, That we will live and die, in the Confession of Gods holy Word: Let us in the Morning hear a Sermon, and then cast down to the Ground, all the Idols and Altars! And to this all agreed.

A good resolution.

In the Morning they put their Resolutions into execution, beating down the Images, and casting down the Altars. Then they went to Villars to do the like there; but by the way they incountred with a Band of Soldiers, who were going to spoil a Village, and to fetch away the Inhabitants prisoners. These Soldiers seeing them so ill provided, mocked them, and discharged their Guns at them; but they taking courage, with Stones beat the Soldiers, pursuing them to the Fortrefs. Then did they go to Villars, and having destroyed the Idols and Altars there, they returned to besiege the Fortrefs, demanding the prisoners that were therein.

Images demolished.

The Judge, with many Gentlemen, came that day to Inrol their Names that would go to Mass; but seeing the resolution of the People, they fled into the Castle, where they were besieged for ten days: Then did the Captain of Tour go with a Company of Soldiers, thinking to raise the siege, but by those which kept the Passages, some of them were slain, the rest were driven back again. Then came they back with three Bands, which caused a furious fight, wherein many of the Soldiers were slain and hurt, and not one of the Besiegers was hurt.

A special Providence.

The waldenses attempted often to have taken the Fortrefs; but without Ordnance it was impossible: Also the Lord of Trinity was come back with his Army, and the next day would have raised the siege. But it pleased God, that very night, that the Soldiers in the Castle desired leave to depart, with Bag and Baggage, which was easily granted to them; and the Soldiers which before had so cruelly persecuted the Ministers, were now fain to request them to protect their lives, and to conduct them to a place of safety: Which the Ministers did willingly, and and the Soldiers were very thankful for it. That night the Fort was razed to the Ground.

Popish subtil-
ty.

The next day the Lord of Trinity cunningly sent to them of Angrogne, that if they would not aid the other, they should be gently dealt with; but they knowing his fraud, agreed with the rest to defend their Religion with their lives, and that no one should make an Agreement without the consent of the rest. Then did the Lord of Trinity assay with his Army to enter into the Borders of Angrogne by certain freights, but the people having raised up some Breest-works, valiantly defended themselves, and offended their Enemies. Trinities Soldiers being weary, fresh ones were brought in their stead; so that the fight indured until night, wherein many of the Enemies were slain, more hurt, and but two of the Waldenses: And so the Battle ceased for the present.

A Special Providence.

The next day the Army marched towards Angrogne five several ways, and there were none to resist, but only a few that kept the Watch, who valiantly fought for a space; but seeing themselves in danger to be inclosed, they retreated to an high place, where the combat was renewed with greater fierceness then before. The Lord of Trinity seeing the loss of many of his Men, founded a Retreat, and went to Angrogne, but the people were fled into the Meadow of Tour; therefore he burned and spoiled all before him. He also oft set fire upon the two Churches, where the Word used to be Preached; but could not burn them; and so he did to the Ministers House, and yet it remained whole.

Amongst them of Angrogne, there were but two that were Enemies to the Word of God, and they were both slain that day.

Gods Providence.

Then did the Lord of Trinity send some to burn Rosa, but the Soldiers were driven back four days together, by them that kept the Passages; whereupon he sent his whole Army, yet they valiantly withstood them from morning till night: At last a Party gat behind them over a Mountain, so that the poor people seeing themselves invironed, saved themselves by running through the midst of their Enemies, and others of them gat into the Rocks. The Enemies being entred Rosa, destroyed all with Fire and Sword: The People fled by secret ways toward Luserne, wandring all night upon the Mountains full of Snow, laden with their Stuff, carrying their Infants in their Arms, and leading others by the hand with great pain and travel. They of Luserne seeing them, ran to them, praising God for their deliverance; and they all were very chearful, notwithstanding their extremities.

Joy in Tribulation.

Shortly after, the Lord of Trinity went to Luserne by three ways; they which kept the Passages, resisted their Enemies valiantly, but when they saw themselves assaulted on every side, they fled into the Mountains. Then did the Soldiers sack and burn the Houses, slaying all they could find: When they which were fled to the Mountains, saw their Houses on fire, they praised God, and gave him thanks, That thus accounted them worthy to suffer for his Name. Then did the Soldiers pursue them to the Mountains, but after they had called upon God, a few of them beat back their Enemies; whereupon the Army retired.

They in the Meadow of Tour, perceiving a Company of Soldiers burning the rest of the Houses in Angrogne, they sent six Harquebushiers against them, who from the higher ground, discharging all their Guns together; the Soldiers ran all away, when none pursued them.

Shortly after, as the Watch was hearing a Sermon, they spied a Company of Soldiers marching up the Hill; whereupon they ran to incounter them, and easily discomfited them. But whilest they pursued the chase, some cried to them, that another Company was entred into the Meadow; whereupon they left the chase, or else not one of their Enemies had escaped.

Presently

Presently other Companies came otherways, which the Ministers and People seeing, were much discouraged, and therefore they fell to Prayer, and ardently called upon God, with sighs and tears until Night. And whereas seven Spies were sent before the Soldiers, there went out five of the Waldenses against them, and took some, and chased the rest: Then went out eight more against the whole Company, and pursued them with an undaunted courage from Rock to Rock, and from Hill to Hill, and then went out twelve more, who joyning with the other, made a great slaughter of their Enemies.

Prayer in danger.

Another Company from Luferne, having a Minister with them, as they used always to have, after they had made their Prayers to God, set upon another Company of Soldiers, whose hearts were so taken from them, that they presently fled: One of the Waldenses, a very young Man, carried a great staff in his hand, with which he laid so lustily at his Enemies, that he brake his staff, and slew many of them; he also brake four of their own Swords, in pursuing of them: Also, a Boy of eighteen years old, slew the Lord of Monteil, Master of the Camp, which much dismayed the Enemies: Another threw down Charles Truchet, and then leaped upon him, and slew him with his own Sword; upon which all the rest fled, and were pursued till Night hindred.

Special Providence.

The Minister seeing the great effusion of blood, and the Enemies flying, cried to the People that it was enough, and so exhorted them to praise God: They that heard him obeyed, and fell to Prayer. In this Battel they gat much armor, which was a great advantage to them afterwards. Thanks were returned unto God in every place, every one saying, who sees not evidently that God fighteth for us.

Thanksgiving.

Presently after, the Lord of Trinity returned to burn the Villages, but especially to pursue the poor People in the Mountains. And one Company with many Horsemen ascended the Mountain of Comb by an unsuspected way, where were no Warders; but they which were next, seeing them, called upon God for aid, and though they were but thirty in number, yet they valiantly beat them back twice; many of the Enemies were slain, and not one of the Waldenses. Trinity seeing his men thus beaten back, sent out most of his Army to assist them, which were about One thousand five hundred Men: And there came about a Hundred to help the Warders: The combat was very cruel; at last the poor Men were fain to retreat with the loss of two of their Men; at this the Enemies exceedingly rejoiced, blowing their Trumpets and triumphing: But the People crying all together to the Lord, returned again, with greater violence, assaulting them with their slings; So that the Enemies being weary, rested themselves, and the while the Waldenses betook themselves to prayer, which more affrighted their Enemies than any thing else.

A special Providence.

Then did the Soldiers charge again furiously, but by the hands of a few they were driven back; yea little Children, fervently calling upon God, threw stones at their Enemies, as also did the Women: Such as were unfit for War kneeled on the ground with their Faces towards Heaven, crying, Lord help us. Then came one running that brought word, that the Angrognians were coming to help them, which the Enemies hearing, presently retreated.

The enemies every where beaten.

Another party of the Army of an Hundred and forty, went another way; but by seven men they were strongly resisted and driven back: A third party was met by the Angrognians and driven back.

The Lord of Trinity intending to be revenged upon them in the meadow of Tour, assembled all the Gentlemen of the Country, and an Army of about Seven thousand; and when the poor People saw them coming, glittering in their harness, and so many in number, they were at first astonished, but pouring out their Prayers unto God to succor them, and to have regard to the glory of his Name, &c. They marched to encounter with their Enemies, and seasonably by the way, they met with some aid that was coming to them from Luferne, so that uniting themselves, they soon discomfited their Enemies.

The Captain of the Enemies had in the morning promised to do great matters that day, but in the evening he was carried back, weak and wounded, and not like to live: Whereupon a Papiſt ſaid to him, Monsieur, their Religion is better than ours.

Another part of the Army ſet upon a houſe in a Paſs, wherein were but five men, yet they luſtily defended it, drave out their Enemies that had entred, and kept the place, till ſome of their Friends came to relieve them.

Another half of the Army, aſſaulted another Bulwork on the ſide of the Mountain; And they within ſuffered them to come very near, but then with Slings and Guns they ſlew many of them, others rouled down great Stones, which killed divers, ſo that when they had attempted all ways to take it, they were forced to retire: The Lord of Trinity weeping to ſee his men ſlain ſo faſt, and at laſt, having loſt very many of his men, he was forced to retreat; many of the Army crying out, God fighteth for them, and we do them wrong.

A ſpecial Providence.

In all that conflict there were but two of the waldenses ſlain, and two hurt; whereas they never ſhot at their Enemies, but they killed ſome, and ſometimes two at one ſhot: The Soldiers confeſſed that they were ſo aſtoniſhed that they could not fight: Others ſaid, that the Miniſters by their Prayers, conjured and bewitched them. It was a wonderful work of God, that Shepherds and Cowherds ſhould encounter with ſo mighty a power of ſtrong and brave Soldiers well furniſhed with ammunition, and themſelves having nothing but ſlings, ſtones, and a few harquebuſhes, and yet ſhould beat them, and in all thoſe fights, they loſt not above fourteen Men.

Scorners puniſhed.

Shortly after a Company of Soldiers went to Angrogne to deſtroy the Vines, &c. and mocking the waldenses, they ſaid, that they were valiant Men behind their Bulworks, but if they came into the plain, how they would beat them: Then came thirty of the waldenses, and ſet upon them in the plain, and fought with them a long time, hand to hand, ſlew many of them, and at laſt forced them to run away, and that with the loſs of one only Man of their own.

Subtily. Perfidiousneſs.

The Night after, ſome thought that it would have been an eaſie matter to take the Lord of Trinity, and to have ſpoiled his whole Army, but the waldenses would not do it, leaſt they ſhould offend God, and paſs the bounds of their vocation, intending only to defend themſelves.

The Spaniards repulſed.

Then did Trinity betake himſelf to his old ſhifts of entertaining a treaty for agreement; But in the Interim, he ſent a Company of Spaniards one way, and other Companys other ways, to ſurpriſe the meddow of Tour. The Spaniards were entred the meddow, before they were perceived: But when the People ſpied them, they betook themſelves to Prayer, then winded their horns, and ſo prepared for reſiſtance: The firſt that oppoſed themſelves were but twelve men, who yet ſtopped them in a Paſs, and others rolled down ſtones from the Mountains upon them, whereby many of the Spaniards were ſlain, the reſt were forced to retreat.

Shortly after the Miniſters and chief Rulers of the waldenses, requested the Lord of Raconis to deliver a Petition, which they had drawn up to the Dutcheſs of Savoy, wherein they declared the equity of their cauſe, proteſting all due obedience, &c. and at laſt, through Gods mercy, they came to a good agreement, and according to the promiſe of God, all things turned to the beſt to thoſe that feared him, that were called according to his purpoſe.

Peace obtained.

Bartholomew Copin.

After the death of the Duke and Dutcheſs of Savoy, Charles Emmanuel their Son ſucceeded, who maintained them in peace according to the treaty formerly made: Yet the Inquiſitors were always watchful to apprehend one or other of them: and amongſt others, one Bartholomew Copin of Luſerne, being at Aſt in Piedmont, with his Merchandize, and at evening ſupping with ſome other Company, Company, one began to speak much to the disgrace of the Waldenses for their Religion. Copin thought that he was bound to be silent when he heard such Blaphemies: Whereupon he began to argue in their defence. Are you then a Waldensian? said the other to him? He answered, Yes. And do you not believe that God is in the Host? No, said Copin. Fie upon you, said the other, what a false Religion is yours? My Religion, said Copin, is as true, as it's true that God is God, &c. The next morning Copin was called before the Bishop of Ast, who told him, that he must either recant the opinions he held over night, or be punished: Copin said, he had been provoked to that discourse, yet he said nothing but what he would maintain with his life. Adding that he had some goods, and a Wife and Children, yet he had lost the affections that he bare unto those things, neither were they dear to him, to the prejudice of his conscience. Yet he said, That behaving himself honestly, he ought not to be molested, when he came about his merchandize, the Turks and Jews being permitted to come to Fairs without molestation. Notwithstanding which the Bishop presently sent him to Prison. The next day the Bishops Secretary went to him, professing great love, and telling him, that except he acknowledged his fault, he was in great danger of his life: Copin answered, That his life was in the hands of God, and he desired not to preserve it to the prejudice of his glory; and having but a few paces to walk in his journey to Heaven, his hearty Prayer to God was, to give him grace not to turn back.

Some few days after he was examined by an Inquisitor in the presence of the Bishop, who exceedingly tormented him with sweet and gentle perswasions, by fair words seeking to draw him to an abjuration: But Copin always convinced him by the word of God; alleadging that if he should be ashamed of, or deny Christ before men, Christ would be ashamed of, and deny him before his heavenly Father. Then said the Monk, Go thy ways thou cursed Heretick to all the devils in Hell, and when thou shalt be their tormented by them, thou wilt remember this good and holy counsel that we have given thee, &c.

After many violent encounters, they caused his Wife and Son to come to him, promising if he would confess his fault, he should have liberty to depart with them; They suffered them also to sup together, which time he spent in exhorting them to patience, telling them that God would be more than a Husband and Father to them: That for his own part he was not bound to love Wife or Child more than Christ; and that they should esteem it their happiness, that God was pleased to do him the honour to be a witness to his truth, with the loss of his life, &c. He enjoined his Wife to bring up his Children in the fear of God: His Son he commanded to obey his Mother; He desired them to pray for him, that God would strengthen him against all temptations, and so taking leave of his Wife, and blessing his Son, he dismissed them, his Wife and Son shedding fountains of tears, and crying out in so lamentable a manner as would have moved the hardest heart to compassion.

The Bishop knew not well what to do with him: If he let him go, he feared a scandal, and that many would be encouraged by his impunity: If he punished him, he offended against the agreement betwixt the Duke and the Waldenses. And thereupon he sent his Indictment to the Pope, to know his pleasure. Shortly after Copin was found dead in Prison, it appearing manifestly that he was strangled: and after his death, he was condemned to be burnt, which was accordingly executed.

C H A P. XXII.

The Persecution of the Waldenses in Calabria.

Gods Providence.

Anno Christi* 1370. The Waldenses of Pragela and Dauphine grew so numerous, that they sent their younger People to seek some other Countrey to inhabit. In their travel, they found in Calabria, some wast and untilld lands: yet seeming very fertil, fit for Corn, Wine, Oyl and Chestnuts, and that the hills were fit for Cattel, and to furnish them with fuel and timber; They came therefore to the Lords of those places to treat with them touching there abode there.

The Lords received them lovingly, agreed to orders much for the advantage of these new Inhabitants; agreed about rents, tenths, tolls, penalties, &c. and so assigned to them certain parts of the Country. Then did they return to their Parents, shewing how it fared with them, and so received what they pleased to bestow upon them, and many of them marrying, they returned into Calabria, where they built some Towns and Cities, as St. Xist, la Garde, &c.

Their holy Lives.

The Lords of those Countrys thought themselves happy in that they had met with such good Subjects as peopled their wast Lands, and made them to abound with all manner of fruits; but principally because they were honest Men, and of good conscience, yielding all those dutys and honors which they could expect from good Subjects. Only the Priests complained of them, that they lived not after their Religion, made not their Children Priests and Nuns; loved not Tapers, Masses, &c. That they adorned not their Churches with Images, went not on Pilgrimage, &c.

Their godly conversation.

Hereupon the Lords feared, that if the Pope should take notice, that so near his Seat, there were People that contemned his Laws, they might chance to lose their Subjects: They therefore perswaded the Priests to be silent, since in other things they shewed themselves honest men, enriched the Country, yea and the Priests themselves, by their Tithes. These Lords also stopped the mouths of their Neighbors, who exceedingly murmured, because by no means they could draw them into alliance with them, and because all that they had, prospered exceedingly: They were wise and temperate, not given to drinking, dancing, swearing, &c. and living in a Country, where the Inhabitants were given to all manner of wickedness, they were as precious stones in a common sink.

The Pope Persecutes them.

Thus they were preserved in peace by their Lords, till Anno 1560. At which time these Waldenses resolving to make a publick profession of their Religion, sent for two Ministers from Geneva, who did much establish the exercise of Religion amongst them.

Pope Pius the Fourth hearing of this, presently concluded their utter ruin and extirpation, giving the same in charge to Cardinal Alexandrino, a violent Man, who chose two Monks Inquisitors of his own humor, and sent them, first to begin with the Inhabitants of St. Xist; There they assembled the People, gave them good words, promising that they should receive no violence, if they would accept of such Teachers as the Bishops should appoint, which if they refused, they would lose their lives, goods and honors, and would be condemned for Hereticks: And further to prove them, they appointed a Mass to be sung: But the People with their Wives and Children, presently quit their Houses, and fled into the Woods.

Popish lies.

From thence the Monks went to la Garde, where they caused the Town Gates to be locked, and the People to be assembled, telling them that they of St. Xist had adjoined their Religion, and went to Mass, &c. promising that if they would do the like, no Man should injure them. These poor People, believing what what was told them, were content to do what they would have them; But when they heard that their Friends of St. Xist refused to go to Maf, and were fled into the Woods, they were exceedingly grieved at their own revolt, and resolved with their Wives and Children to go to their Brethren.

Hamane said:

In the mean time the Monks lent two Companies of Soldiers after them of St. Xist, who ran after them as after wild Beasts, crying, Kill, Kill, and so slew divers: But such as could get to the top of the Mountain, called to the Soldiers, beseeched them to have pity on them, their Wives and Children, telling them that they had been inoffensive in their conversations, &c. yet if they would not suffer them to continue in their habitations, that at least they would license them to depart, either by Sea or Land, that they might retire themselves whether the Lord should be pleased to conduct them, beseeching them also, for Gods sake, not to force them to defend themselves.

Popish cruelty:

But this more enraged the Soldiers, who presently violently assaulted them: Then did they so defend themselves, that by Gods assistance, they slew the greatest part of the Soldiers, and put the rest to flight. Hereupon the Inquisitors wrote to the Viceroy of Naples, speedily to send some Companys of Soldiers to apprehend the Hereticks of St. Xist and la Garde, whereby he should do a work very pleasing to the Pope, and meritorious for himself.

A special Providence.

Then did the Viceroy come himself with his Troops, in the mean time the waldensian Women came home to seek for food for their Husbands and Children that were in the Woods.

The Viceroy proclaimed through all Naples, that all such banished Persons as would come to fight against the Hereticks of St. Xist, should be pardoned all their offences: Whereupon great numbers resorted to him, and were conducted to the Woods, where they chased these poor People, slaying some, wounding others, the rest fled into Caves, where most of them died of famine.

Barbarous cruelty:

Then were they of la Garde cited before the Inquisitor, and many fair Promises were made unto them if they would appear; but contrary thereunto, thirty of them were apprehended, and put to the rack.

One Charlin was racked with such violence, that his Bowels brake out of his Belly, and all to extort from him a confession, that in the Night, the Candles being put out, they committed Whoredom, and abominable incest, yet would he never confess any such wickedness.

Another, with extream pain upon the rack, promised to go to Maf, the Inquisitor seeing that he had shewed such weakness, urged him to confess the forementioned wickedness, which, because he refused, he left him eight hours together upon the rack, yet could he not get from his mouth so foul a slander.

Prodigious wickedness:

Another was stripped stark naked, whipt with rods of Iron, drawn through the Streets, and burnt with Fire-brands: One of his Sons was killed with Knives: Another thrown down from an high Tower, because he would not kiss a Crucifix: Another was condemned to be burnt alive, and as he went to the Fire, he threw to the ground a Crucifix, which the Executioner had fastened to his hands, whereupon they covered him all over with pitch, and so burnt him.

Zeal:

The Inquisitor Panta cut the throats of eighty, as Butchers do their Sheep; Then causing them to be divided into four quarters, he set up stakes for the space of thirty miles, and appointed a quarter to be fastned to every stake. Four of the principal men of la Garde he caused to be hanged. Another young man, because he would not confess himself to a Priest, was thrown from an high Tower.

Horrible cruelty.

The Vice-roy passing by him before he was dead, and hearing him implore Gods mercy, kickt him on the head, saying, Is this Dog yet living? Take him and cast him to the Hogs. Sixty Women were racked so violently, that the cords pieced into their arms and legs; and being then cast into Prison, they died there.

nine of the handsomest, being delivered to the Fathers of the Inquisition, were never heard of after.

Many others were delivered to the secular power to be burnt, and if any interceded for them, he was presently put on the rack as a favorer of Hereticks.

Their total extirpation.

Pope Pius the Fourth sent the Marquels of Butiane, promising that if he would wholly clear Calabria of these Waldenses, he would make his Son a Cardinal: But he was put to no great pains to do it, for the Inquisitors and the Vice-roy of Naples had by sundry deaths killed all the Men, Women and Children that they could light of.

One of their Ministers was famished in Prison: Another was carryed to Rome, where he was condemned to be burnt; The Pope and his Cardinals would needs see that pleasing spectacle: But the Minister spake so many things out of Gods Word, against the Pope, that the Pope gnashed his teeth for anger, wishing that he had been some where else. And thus were these godly People wholly rooted out of Calabria.

The Persecutions of the Waldenses in Provence.

These came from Piedmont, when their Vallies were over-peopled. The Country of Provence, at their first arrival, was a desert, but within few years, by Gods blessing upon their labors, it abounded with Corn, Wine, Oyl, Chestnuts, and other fruits.

Devilish slanders.

Their habitations being near to Avignon (many times the Popes Seat) they were exposed to sundry Persecutions, as Anno 1380. and at other times: But the greatest of all began about the year 1360. in the time of King Lewis the Twelfth; who being informed that in Provence was a certain kind of People that lived not according to the Laws of the Church of Rome, but were an accursed People, committing all kinds of wickedness and villanies; He gave Commission to his Parliament in Provence to take cognizance of it, and to punish them according to their demerits.

Note.

The Court prosecuting this order with rigor; and the King hearing that divers innocent Persons were put to death, he sent his Master of Requests, and Confessor into Provence, to find out what kind of Persons these were, who at their return, certified him, that all the former suggestions were untrue, that they were neither Sorcerers, nor Whoremongers, but lived honestly, did hurt to none; caused their Children to be Baptized, taught them their Belief, and the Ten Commandments, and that they carefully kept the Lords day, and had the Word of God purely expounded to them: Whereupon the King swore an Oath, That they were honester than himself, and his Catholick Subjects. Upon this information he sent and stayed the Persecution.

Peter Masson
Martyred.

Some time after the Waldenses did send two of their Ministers [George Morrell and Peter Masson] to Oecolampadius, Copito, Bucer and Haller, to confer with them about matters of Religion, and to have there advice in many things.

In their return, Masson was apprehended at Dijon; where he was condemned and put to death for a Lutheran. Morrell escaped with his Letters and Papers, and came safe to Provence, where he much comforted and confirmed the Churches. Yet all this while did the Parliament of Aix apprehend one or other of them, condemning some to the Fire, others to the Gibbet; They which escaped best, returned with marks in their Foreheads.

A cruel Degree.

Anno Christi 1540. The Inhabitants of Merindol were summoned, and some of the chief appearing for the rest, they were all condemned to be burned alive, their Children and Families to be out-lawed, and that the place of their habitation habitation should be laid waste, the Woods cut down two hundred paces round about, and so left desolate.

The King being informed of the rigor of this Edict, and of the innocency of the People, countermanded the execution of it: But his Letters were suppressed, and the Cardinal of Tournon obtained for a great sum of money, the revocation of them.

Anno 1545. The President of Opede proclaimed War against them both at Aix and Marseilles: Divers Companies of Soldiers were listed, and five bands of the old Soldiers of Piedmont were joyned with them, and presently they began to set fire on the Villages of Cabrieres, Pepin, &c. The poor People without any resistance were slain, Women and their Daughters ravished, some great with Child murdered: The Breasts of many Women were cut off, after whose death their poor Infants died of famine.

Opede also proclaimed, that on pain of death no man should give any relief or sustenance to them. All their habitations were pillaged, sacked and burnt, and none of their persons spared, but such as were reserved for the Gallies.

Opede coming to Merindol, found none there but one simple Lad, who had yielded himself Prisoner to a Soldier, and promised two Crowns for his ransom; But Opede paid the money to the Soldier, and caused the Lad to be shot to death: Then he utterly razed the Town, and laid it level with the ground.

Then did he march against Cabrieres, and with the Cannon battered the Walls: There was within only about sixty poor sick Peasants, who sent him word that he needed not to spend powder to batter the Walls, for they were ready to open the Gates, and quit the Country, if they might but have leave with their Wives and Children to go to Geneva, or Germany, and to leave all their goods behind them.

Opede entering the Town, caused all the Men to be brought into a Field, and to be cut in pieces, the Soldiers striving who should shew the best Manhood in cutting off Heads, Arms and Legs: The Women he caused to be locked in a Barn with much straw, and so put fire to it, where many Women great with Child were burnt: One Soldier moved with pity, opened a hole in the Wall, that some of them might come out; But Opede made them to be beaten back again into the fire with Pikes and Halberts. Some of them that came forth he slew with his own hands, ripping open their Bellies, so that their Children came forth, whom he trod under his Feet: Many were fled into Cellars and Caves, whom he caused to be dragged out, had into the Field, stripped stark naked, and then slain. Others were bound by two and two together, and slain by the Captains, who rejoiced in their bloody Butchery.

Then did this Tyrant (worse than Herod) command one of his Captains to go into Church, into which many Women, Children and Infants were fled; and to kill them all, which the Captain at first refused, saying, That it was a cruelty unbeseeming Men of war: Whereat Miniers being displeased, charged him upon pain of rebellion against the King to do it. The Captain feared what might be the issue, entred with his Soldiers and destroyed them all, sparing neither young nor old. Other Soldiers that ransacked the Houses, found many poor Persons who had hid themselves in secret places, whom they slew upon, crying, Kill, Kill, the Soldiers without the Town killed all they could meet with, so that above a Thousand Men, Women and Children were slain in this place.

Many Persons which were escaped in the Mountains, sent by some that had most interest in Miniers, to desire him to give them leave to go whither the Lord should please to lead them, with their Wives and Children; though they had nothing but the shirts on their backs: to whom he answered, That he knew what he had to do, he would send them to dwell in Hell amongst the Devils.

Then

King French the First.

Called this.

Barbarous cruelty.

Prodigious cruelty.

A bloody Speech.

Then did he send part of his Army unto Costa, which they overcame, and committed there great slaughters: Many of the Inhabitants fled into an Orchard, where the Soldiers ravished many Women and Maidens, and having kept them there a day and a night, they used them so Beastly, that the Women with Child, and younger Maidens died presently after.

Gods Judgment on Persecutors.

Many of these Merindolians hid themselves in Rocks and dark Caves, where some were famished, others were choaked with fire and smoak set to their Caves mouths. Many more were the outrages and cruelties which this wicked Opede committed: But the Lord found him out at last, striking him with a strange kind of bleeding at the lower parts, neither was he able to void any Urine, so that by degrees his Guts rotted within him: No remedy could be found for this terrible disease, Worms bred in his Bowels, which continually gnawed him. Then did he send to Arles for a famous Chyrurgion, who cured him of his difficulty to make Water, after which, desiring all to depart the Room, the Chyrurgion in private exhorted him to repent of his former cruelty and bloodshed, telling him that this his strange bleeding was Gods just hand upon him for shedding so much innocent blood: But these words pierced the impure conscience of this wicked Wretch, and more troubled him than the torments of his disease, so that he cryed out to lay hands on the Chyrurgeon as an Heretick: Whereupon he conveyed himself away, and returned to Arles.

Miniers his horrible death.

Yet not long after he was sent for again, and great promises were made for his security: But when he came back, he found Miniers past cure, raging and casting out most horrible and blasphemous words, feeling a fire within him, which burnt him from the Navel upwards, which was accompanied with extream stink of his lower parts, and so he ended his wretched life.

In the beginning of this Persecution, there was one John de Roma, a Monk, who gat a Commission to examine those whom he suspected to be Hereticks; whereupon he afflicted the faithful with all kinds of cruelty: Amongst other horrible torments that he used, this was one; He filled Boots with boiling grease, and put them upon their Legs, tying them backwards over a Form, and their Legs hanging down over a soft Fire: Thus he tormented very many, and in the end most cruelly put them to death.

Gods Judgment on Persecutors.

Francis the French King being informed of the hellish cruelty of this wicked Monk, sent to his Parliament at Provence that they should apprehend and condemn him: But he being informed of it, fled to Avignion, where he hoped to enjoy all that wealth which so mercilessly and unjustly he had extorted from the poor Christians: But shortly after, he was robbed of all that he had, by his own Servants; and then he fell sick of a most horrible and strange disease unknown to the Physicians: He was intolerably tormented with pains all over his Body, so that no means could give him ease for one minute of an hour; neither was there any Man that could tarry near him, no not of his nearest Friends; so great was the stink that came from him: Hereupon he was removed to an Hospital; but the stink and infection so encreased, that no Man durst come near him; no, nor he himself was able to abide the horrible stink of his own Body, full of ulcers and sores, and swarming with Vermine, and so rotten, that the flesh fell from the Bones by piece-meal. In these torments he often cryed out in a great rage. O who will deliver me? who will kill and rid me out of these intolerable pains, which I know I suffer for the oppressions which I did to the poor Men? Oft-times he himself endeavored to destroy himself; but he had not the power. In this horrible anguish, and fearful despair he miserably ended his accursed life.

When he was dead no Man would come near to bury him; till at last a young Novice caught hold of his stinking Carcase with an Iron hook, and so dragged him into a hole that was made for him.

Popish uncleanness.

In the time of this Persecution the Bishop of Aix, with some other Bishops and their courtizans, walking along the streets of Avignion, saw a Man selling bawdy Images and Pictures, with filthy rimes and ballades annexed to them:

All

All these goodly Pictures the Bishops bought up: When they had gone a little further, there was a Bookseller that had set to sale certain Bibles in French, which the Prelates were greatly moved at, saying to him, Darest thou be so bold as to sell such merchaundise in this Town? The Bookseller replied, Is not the holy Bible as good as these goodly Pictures that you have bought for these Gentlewomen? Then said the Bishop of Aix, I renounce my part in Paradise, if this fellow be not a Lutheran, take him away to prison. Then did his attendants cry out, A Lutheran, a Lutheran, To the fire with him, to the fire with him. And one gave him a blow with his Fist, another pulled him by the Hair, another by the Beard; so that the poor Man was all imbrued in Blood, before he came to prison. The next day he was brought before the Judge, where, by the instigation of the Bishops, he was condemned to be burned the same day; and so was carried to the fire with two Bibles about his Neck, one before, and another behind, where he made a most Christian end.

The Waldenses were dispersed also into several other Countreys, as, Bohemia, Austria, Germany, Flanders, England, Poland, Italy, Spain, Dalmatia, Croatia, Slavonia, Grecia, Philadelphia, Livonia, Sarmatia, Bulgaria, &c. In all which places, at one time or other, they suffered Persecutions: Concerning which, there is not much left upon Record, and something will be spoken again of it in other places of this Book; and therefore this may suffice for the present.

CHAP. XXIV.

The Persecution of the Albigenses.

These were the same with the Waldenses, differing only in name from their Habitation in the Countrey of Albi. Divers of Waldos Disciples going into this Countrey, and amongst them one Arnold (from whom they were called Arnoldists) labored with so good success, that in a short time there was scarce any found that would go to Mass.

Pope Alexander the Third was much moved to anger, when he saw many great Provinces to shake off his Antichristian yoke; and therefore he condemned them for Hereticks in the Council of Lateran: Yet did they so multiply, that Anno 1200, they possessed many and great Cities; yea, they had many great Lords that took part with them, as Earl Remund of Tholouse, Remund Earl of Foix, the Vicount of Beziers, &c. Pope Innocent the Third, pretended a great desire to reclaim them by Preaching and Conference; and thereupon there was a famous Disputation at Montreal, wherein the Popish Doctors were shamefully baffled by Arnold. But the Popes policy was thus to robk them asleep, whilst he raised Armies against them to destroy them: The pretended occasion whereof was this, There was one Fryer Peter that was slain in the Dominions of the Earl of Tholouse; whereupon the Pope sent Preachers abroad, through all Europe to assemble Men together, to take vengeance on the Hereticks, for the innocent Blood of Fryer Peter, slain amongst them, promising Paradise to all that would come to this War, and bear Arms for forty days. This he called The holy war, and gave the same Pardons and Indulgences to those that came to this War, as to those which went into the Holy Land against the Saracens.

Popish policy

Then did he thunder against Earl Remund, charging all Archbishops and Bishops through their Dioceses, to pronunee him Accursed and Excommunicated, and that with the sound of a Bell, and extinction of Candles every Sabbath and Festival day, for murdering of a good Servant of God. He also absolved all his Subjects from their Oaths of Allegiance to him, commanding every good Catholick to pursue his person, and to take and possess his Land, &c. He also wrote to all Christian Princes to stir them up to get this Pardon, rather by fighting against these Albigenses, then by going against the Turks. Earl Remund hearing of all these preparations against him, sent to the Pope, humbly beseeching him not to condemn him before he was heard, assuring him, That he was no way guilty of the death of Fryer Peter, but that he was slain by a Gentleman, who immediately fled out of his Countrey; otherwise he would have severely punished him for it. But all was in vain, for presently came Armies of crossed Soldiers to pour down their vengeance on him and his Lands.

Amongst these were many Noblemen, and Ecclesiastical Persons, Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, &c. To all which, the Pope promised Paradise, but gave them not a penny.

He goes to the Popes Legate.

The Earl of Tholouse perceived that he must either prepare for defence, or submit; the latter he thought the safer, and therefore he went presently to the Popes Legate at Valence, to whom he began to say, That he thought it strange, that so many armed Men should be brought against him, who used no other arms for his defence, but his own Innocency. And that concerning the death of the Fryer, they should first have inquired the truth of the fact, before they thus moved Heaven and Earth against him; yea, if he had been guilty, yet there was an ordinary course of Justice to be used against him, and not to wreak their anger on his innocent Subjects. And therefore Sir (said he) since I come voluntarily to you, armed only with the testimony of a good conscience; what further use is there of these Armed Pilgrims? Pray you therefore countermand these Soldiers before they go to make any further spoil in my Territories: For my own person may serve for a sufficient pledge, &c.

The Legate answered, That he had done well in coming to him; yet could he not send back the Soldiers, except he would put seven of his best Castles into his hands, which should serve for a hostage. Now did the Earl, when it was too late, see his own folly in putting himself into the Legates hands, and thereby making himself a prisoner: But there was no remedy, now he must take Laws from him that had him in his power; and therefore he told him, That both his person and possessions were at his disposal, beseeching him, that his Subjects might receive no more damage by the Soldiers.

The Legate presently sent to put Garrisons in those seven Castles, commanding all the Consuls of every City, presently to appear before him; and when they were come, he told them, That Earl Remund had delivered up his Castles to the Pope; and therefore they were to take notice of it; that so they might acknowledge themselves lawful Subjects to his Holiness, in case the Earl should falsifie his Oath to the Pope.

naked.

The Consuls were much astonished, thus to see their Lord devided of all his possessions: But that which most afflicted them, was, to see him led to S. Gilles to be reconciled to the Church, where the Legate commanded the Earl to strip himself stark naked, all but his Linnen Drawers: Then did he put a Cord about his Neck, whereby he led him nine times about the Grave of Fryer Peter, scourging him with Rods all this while. The Earl demanded satisfaction for so sharp a penance, seeing he was not guilty of the fact. The Legate answered, That he must submit, if he would be reconciled to the Pope; yea, he must be thus scourged before the Earls, Barons, Marquesses, Prelates, and all the People. He made him also to swear to be obedient all his life to the Pope and Church of Rome; and to make irreconcilable War against the Albigenses, &c.

Then did the Legate make him General of the Crossed Soldiers for the siege of Beziers. The Earl knew not what to do; for to conduct an Army to fight against the Albigenses, was to sin against his Conscience; and if he should flee away, it would furnish them with new matter of persecution, against him and his Subjects.

In this extremity he stayed in the Army a few days, and then went towards Rome, to reconcile himself to the Pope.

Then

Then did the Army come before the City of Beziers, and provided all manner of Engines for Batt'ry, reared up Ladders for a general Escalado. This the Earl of Beziers beholding, and judging it impossible to defend the City, he went out, and cast himself down at the Legates feet, beseeching him not to punish the innocent with the nocent, which must needs be, if the Town were taken by storm. He told him, That there were in the City great numbers of good Catholicks, which would be subject to the same ruine with the Albigenses. He desired him also to commiserate him now in his minority that was a most obedient Servant to the Pope, and had been brought up in the Romish Church, in which he would live and die. The Legate told him, That all his excuses prevailed nothing, and that he must do as he may. The Earl returned into the City, assembled the People, and told them, That he could obtain no mercy from the Legate, except all the Albigenses would come and abjure their Religion, and promise to live according to the Laws of the Church of Rome. The Popish party requested the Albigenses to yield to this, but the Albigenses answered, That they would not forsake their Religion for the base price of their frail life; that God was able, if he pleased, to defend them; but if he would be glorified by the Confession of their Faith, it should be a great honor to them to die for his sake: That they had rather displease the Pope, who could but kill their Bodies, then God, who could cast both Body and Soul into Hell, &c.

Beziers besieged.

Faith and Courage.

Then did the Popish party send their Bishop to the Legate, beseeching him not to include them in the chastisement of the Albigenses, and that the best way to win the others, was by gentle means, not by rigor: The Legate grew into great choler at this, swearing, That if all the City did not acknowledge their fault, they should all taste of one Cup, without distinction of Religion, Sex, or Age. And accordingly he summoned the City presently to yield to his discretion, which they refusing, He caused that his Engines should play, and that a general Assault should be given.

It was impossible for them within the City to resist so great violence, being assaulted by above an hundred thousand Pilgrims: So that the Enemies entred, and slew a great multitude, and set the City on fire, and burnt it to Ashes. When the City was first taken, the Priests and Monks came forth of the great Church, with Banners and Crosses, singing, Te Deum Laudamus; but the Soldiers, who were commanded by the Legate to kill all, ran upon them, made their Heads and Arms to flie about the Streets; so that they were all cut in pieces.

In this City of Beziers they slew Sixty thousand Persons, the Popes Legate saying to the Captains and Soldiers, Cadite eos omnes, novit enim Dominus qui sunt ejus. Kill them all [Catholicks and Hereticks] for the Lord knoweth who are his.

Then were these Pilgrims presently conducted to Carcasson Before the forty days of service, which they had vowed to the Church of Rome, were expired.

The Earl of Beziers when he saw that he could obtain no favor of the Legate, before the City was taken, left his charge to the Bishop, and went to Carcasson endeavoring to prepare and furnish it for a long siege: But the Legates Army followed him presently, unto which there came a new supply of Crossed-Soldiers out of sundry Countreys; so that his Army now consisted of Three hundred thousand fighting Men.

Near to the City of Carcasson, was a Town of the same name: The City was seated on an Hill, and fenced with a double Wall; yet the Pilgrims thought to take it at the first sight, and therefore ran with great violence upon the first Rampier, filling the Ditch with Faggots; but they were beaten back with such courage, that the Ground was covered with their dead Bodies. The young Earl of Beziers won much honor in this first encounter, encouraging his Men, and telling them, That it was better to die fighting, then to fall into the hands of such cruel and merciless Enemies, &c. The Albigenses much encouraged here, by, swore to him, That they would spend their lives for the preservation of the City.

Popish cruelty.

The next Morning the Legate commanded a general Assault to be made upon the Town of Carcasson, which was two miles from the City; and the People valiantly defended themselves, but being oppressed with multitudes, the Soldiers entred the Town, putting all to the sword and fire, as they had done at Beziers.

A brave Speech.

Then came the King of Arragon to the Camp, and told the Legate, That he understood that his Kinsman, the Earl of Beziers, was in the City; and that with his leave, he would go to him: Not doubting, but that he should prevail with him to do his duty to the Pope and Church. The Legate gave him leave, and the King approaching to the Rampier, called for the Earl, who came to him. To whom the King said, That he desired to know of him what moved him to shut up himself in that City, against so great an Army of Pilgrims? The Earl answered, That it was to defend his life, goods, and subjects: That he knew well, that the Pope under the pretence of Religion, resolved to destroy his Uncle Remund and himself: That he saw the cruelty which they had used at Beziers, even against the Priests themselves. Adding also what they had done to the Town of Carcasson, and that they must look for no mercy from the Legate or his Army; and that therefore he rather chose to die, defending himself with his Subjects, then to fall into the hands of so inexorable an Enemy as the Legate was. That though he had in his City some that were of another Religion, yet they were such as had wronged none, and were come to his succor in his greatest extremity; and for their good service he was resolved not to abandon them, and that his trust was in God, the Defender of the oppressed: That he would assist them, against that world of ill advised Men, who forsook their own houses, to burn, sack, and ransack, and kill in their houses other Men, without Reason, Judgment, or Mercy.

Popish cruelty, and uncleanness.

The King returning to the Legate, told him, That his Cousin was much discontented with his former dealings against his Subjects of Beziers and Carcasson; that he believed, seeing they spared not the Romish Priests, their war was not for Religion, but a kind of Thievery; that he would not yield himself to the discretion of such mercileß men, &c.

The Legate, after some debate, told the King, That for his sake he would receive the Earl of Beziers to Mercy; and that with him, Twelve more might come out with Bag and Baggage: But for the rest, he would have them wholly at his discretion; and, that they should all come forth stark naked, Men, women, Maids, and Children, without Shirts, Smocks, or other covering; and that then they might hope well of his mercy, he being the Popes Legate, &c.

The King much distasteth this Proposition, yet reported it to the Earl of Beziers, who returned answer, That he would not come forth upon such unreasonable and unjust Propositions, but would defend himself and his subjects, as God should enable him.

Carcasson stormed.

The Pilgrims repulsed with great loss.

Then did the Legate cause all his Engines to play, commanding, That they should take the City by Storm; but he was little pleased, when he saw the loss of a great number of his Pilgrims: For they in the City threw down Stones, Fire, Pitch, Brimstone, and boiling Water, wherewith they so galled the Assaultants, That the Earth was covered, and the Ditches filled with their Dead Bodies, which caused a wondrous noysome stink both in the City and Camp.

This overthrow caused divers of the Crossed Soldiers, having accomplished their forty days service, and thereby gained Paradise, to refuse to conquer more after so fair a purchase; and therefore they returned home.

The Legate being much troubled to see his Army so decreased, thought of this stratagem, He sent for a Gentleman, telling him, that he might do a piece of service, whereby he might not only merit Heaven, but gain a great reward here. Which was, by going to the Earl of Beziers, endeavoring to put him into great fears, and then to persuade him to have recourse to the Legates mercy, mercy ; and withal, that he should persuade him with great Oaths and Exhortations (whereof he could abolve him at his pleasure) to come with him to the Legate, with assurance, That he should be dismissed safe and sound.

Papists Persecute and Perfidious.

This Gentleman played his part so well, that he brought the young Earl with him. The Legate presently told him, That he was now his Prisoner till Carcasson was taken ; and till his Subjects had better learned their duty. The Earl astonished hereat, cryed out, That he was betrayed, and that Faith was violated with him, &c. But this nothing prevailed ; for he was presently committed to the Guard, and Custody of the Duke of Burgonne.

The Earl made a Prisoner.

The Inhabitants of Carcasson understanding this, brake forth into tears, and were so astonished, that they now thought of nothing, but how, by flight, to escape the danger ; but that seemed impossible, being invironed with such an Army. At last one told them, That he heard some old Men say, that there was a certain Vault under Ground, great and large, which went to the Castle of Cameret, three leagues off. Then were all the Citizens imployed to search for this Vault ; and having at last found it, they began their flight in the Evening, with their Wives and Children, carrying with them only some victuals for a few days. This departure was accompanied with much sorrow ; thus to leave all their worldly enjoyments. The next morning they came to the Castle, and from thence dispersed themselves, some to Arragon, others to Catalonia, and others to Tholouse, whether it pleased God to conduct them.

A special Providence.

In the Morning the Pilgrims were strangely astonished, hearing no noise, nor seeing any Man stirring in the City, yet they approached the Walls with much fear, lest it should be but a stratagem to indanger them ; but finding no opposition, they mounted the Walls, crying out, That the Albigenses were fled : And thus was the City with all the spoils taken, and the Earl of Beziers committed to Prison in one of the strongest Towers of Carcasson.

Carcasson taken.

Then did the Legate call all the Prelates, and great Lords of his Army together, telling them, That though it was requisite that there should be always a Legate in the Army, yet it was likewise necessary that there should be a Secular General, wise and valiant, to command in all their Affairs, &c. This charge was first proffered to the Duke of Burgonne, then to the Earl of Ennevers, and to the Earl of St. Paul ; but they all refused it. Lastly, it was proffered to Earl Simon of Montfort, who after some excuses, accepted of it.

Simon of Montfort made General.

The Earl being made General, settled himself at Carcasson with Four thousand Pilgrims, all the remainders of that huge Army.

After this Earl Remund of Tholouse, went to the French King for his Letters of Commendation to the Pope, to be by him fully cleared from the death of Fryer Peter ; and the Pope thereupon received him courteously, gave him full Remission and Absolution, and thereby declared him sufficiently justified.

Shortly after, the Earl of Beziers died in Prison, and Earl Simon was put into Possession of his Lands ; whereupon, all that bordered upon him, began to fear him ; for, that he gave it out, that the Spring following he would have a great Army of Pilgrims, wherewith he would chastise those that had not acknowledged his authority, given him by the Church. Upon this occasion, Carcasson sent unto him the Keys of their City ; the Castle of Pons yielded to him, and so did all round about Carcasson. But the King of Arragon secretly incouraged the Gentlemen of the Vicountie of Beziers, telling them, That his Pilgrims would be uncertain ; and would not stay long with him ; and that if, in the mean time, they would but keep themselves in their Garrisons, when he was weary by the departure of his Pilgrims, they might then set upon him, and reduce him to Reason.

These Messages gave such incouragement to the Gentry, that the Earl Simon being gone to Montpellier, they took Arms to shake off his yoke, besieging some of his Soldiers in a Tower near to Carcasson; the Earl hearing of it, presently returned to succor them, but the Tower was taken before he came: Which affront brought him into some contempt. Then Captain Boucard, belonging to Earl Simon, attempted to surprize the strong Castle of Cabaret, making his approach thereto as secretly as he could. Captain Roger commanding therein for Earl Remund, was come forth with Eighty Horse to Forrage. Boucard on the sudden charged him: But Roger doubled the charge in so furious a manner, that he overcame Boucard's party, and brought him prisoner into that Castle that he came to surprize.

Earl Simon's
pride abated.

Gerard of Pepios took part with the Albigenses, so that the War grew hot: And all the Men that Earl Simon took, he caused a great fire to be made, and cast them into it; neither did his Men escape scot-free, when they fell into their Enemies hands.

Prodigious
cruelty.

The City of Carcasson was hereupon stricken with great fear, having little hope to defend themselves, but by flight, being invironed on all sides by their Enemies. About this time Earl Simon wrote to all the Prelates through Europe, that if in the Spring following, they did not send him good store of Pilgrims, he could hold out no longer against his Enemies, having since the last departure of his Pilgrims, lost above Forty Towns and Castles: And whilst that he waited for these new Succors, he surprized the Castle of Beron, where he pulled out the eyes of above a hundred Albigenses, and cut off their Noses, leaving only one with one eye to guide the rest to Cabaret.

Menerbe taken.

Anno 1210. Earl Simon being shut up in Carcasson for want of Soldiers, heard that his Wife was coming from France with many Pilgrims; whereupon he went out to meet her. These Pilgrims he imployed against the Castle of Menerbe, which at last was yielded up to him for want of Water. This Castle was defended by Remund, Lord of Termes, and was situated in Narbonne: One Argument which Earl Simon used to stir up his Crossed Soldiers to fight manfully against it, was, For that (saith he) there hath been no Mass sung in it, since the year One thousand one hundred and eighty, which is now thirty years. Upon the surrender of the Castle, they labored to draw this Noble Lord to recant his Religion, and turn Papist; but finding him immovable, they shut him up in a straight prison, where shortly after he died: They also took his Wife, Sister, and Daughter, who was a Maid, and other Noble Women, with whom they labored to withdraw them from the truth, both by flattery and frowns, by fair speeches, and cruel threats; but when they saw that nothing would prevail, they made an huge fire, casting them into the same, and burning them. Godfridy Annales. Also after his taking of the said Castle, he caused a Fryer to Preach to the People, and to exhort them to acknowledge the Pope and Church of Rome: But they not staying till he had done, cryed out, we will not forsake our Faith, you labor but in vain, for neither life nor death shall make us abandon our Belief. Then did the Earl and Legate cause a great fire to be made, and cast into it a hundred and fourscore Men and Women, who went in with joy, giving God thanks, for that he was pleased so to honor them, as to die for his Names sake. They also told Earl Simon, That he would one day pay dear for his cruelties. All that saw their valor, and constancy were much amazed at it.

After this, the Earl besieged the Castle of Termes, which also at last was taken for want of Water; yet they within the Castle, when they perceived that they could hold out no longer, one night quit the place, and passed away undiscovered. The Castle of la Vaur, was also besieged, in which there were many godly People. Thither came many Pilgrims to the Legate, from all Countreys; and amongst others, Six thousand Germans, of whose coming the Earl of Foix hearing, he laid an ambush for them, overthrew and slew them all, not one escaping but an Earl that carried the news to Earl Simon. After six Moneths siege, the Castle of Vaur was taken by assault, where all the Soldiers were put to the Sword, save Eighty Gentlemen, whom Earl Simon caused to be be hanged, and the Lord Aimeri, on a Gibbet higher than all the rest: The Lady his Sister, called Giranda, was cast into a Ditch, and there covered with Stones.

And for the rest of the People, a very great fire was made, and they were put to their choice, Whether they would forsake their opinions, or perish by the flames: There were scarce any of them found that would do the first, but exhorting one another, they went into the kindled fire of their own accord, saith Alfredore, but more probably they were forced into the same, where joyfully they resigned up their Spirits unto God. Some say, that they were about Four hundred persons that thus perished by fire.

After the return of the Earl Remund from the Pope, the Legate still sought to intrap him, but the Earl would not come again within his reach. Then did the Legate send the Bishop of Tholouse to him, who pretended a great deal of love and friendship to the Earl, and by his subtilty, at last, prevailed with him, to proffer his strong Castle of Narbonnes to them to lodge in as they passed that way. But as soon as the Legate and his company were entred, they seized upon it, and put into it a Garrison; which was a continual vexation to all his Subjects.

The Legate resolves upon the utter extirpation of Earl Remund, and all his house, as the head of the Albigenses, but presently after this Legate dying, Earl Simon was frustrated of this hope.

About this time, the English who now possessed Guienne, which bordereth upon the Earldom of Tholouse, began to help the Albigenses, being stirred up thereto by Reynard Lollard, a godly, and learned Man; who by his powerful Preaching converted many to the Truth, and defended the Faith of the Albigenses: For which, they were so eagerly pursued, and constantly suffered Martyrdom. And this they did the rather, not only for their Neighbor-hoods sake, or for that Simon Earl of Leicester was a Rebel, and Traytor to their King, but because this Remund Earl of Tholouse, whom they so cruelly whipped, and otherwise abused, and had now also Excommunicated, was Brother in Law to King John: For his former Wife was Joane, sometimes Queen of Sicily, which Joane was King Johns Sister, and bare to the Earl of Tholouse, Remund, who succeeded his Father, both in the Earldom, and in his trouble. John le Mayer much commendeth this Lollard, saying, That he foretold many things by Divine Revelation, which (saith he) came to pass in my time; and therefore he putteth him into the rank of holy Prophets. And for his learning, it is evident by his Comment upon the Revelation, where he setteth forth many things that are spoken of the Roman Antichrist. This worthy Man was afterwards apprehended in Germany; and being delivered to the Secular Power, was burnt at Collen.

Anno 1211. A new Legate called Theodosius was appointed to succeed, who Excommunicated Earl Remund, and the Bishop of Tholouse, thereupon sent the Earl word that he must depart out of the City; for that he could not say Mass whilest an Excommunicated Person was in the City. The Earl returned this Answer, being nettled at his insolency, That he (the Bishop) should presently depart out of his Territories, and that upon pain of his Life. Accordingly the Bishop departed, and took with him the Canons of the Cathedral Church, with the Cross, Banner, and Host, and all of them bare-footed in Procession. Coming thus to the Legates Army, they were received as persecuted Martyrs, with the tears of the Pilgrims, and general applause of all.

Hereupon the Legate thought that he had sufficient cause to persecute Earl Remund, as a relapsed and impenitent Man: But first he sought by craft to get him into his power, and with his fair flattering Letters, he at last drew him once again to Arles: The Earl had requested the King of Arragon to meet him there. When they were both come, the Legate commanded them upon the pain of his high Indignation, that they should not depart, but with his leave. Whilest they were there, the Earl was privately shewed by a Friend, the Articles of the Legate, to which he would inforce him to subscribe; which were these.

- I. That the Earl of Tholouse should presently dismiss, and cashier all his Men at Arms, not restraining one.
- II. That he shall be obedient, and subject to the Church; and repair all the costs and damages which the Church hath been at.
- III. That in his Lands, no Man should eat of more then two sorts of Flesh.
- IV. That he shall expel out of his Territories, all the Hereticks and their Allies.
- V. That he shall deliver into the hands of the Legate, and of Earl Simon, all those persons that shall be named unto him.
- VI. That no Man in his Lands, whether noble or ignoble, shall wear any costly Apparel, but black course Cloaks.
- VII. That all his Castles of Defence shall be razed to the Ground.
- VIII. That no Gentlemen of his shall live in any City or Castle, but in Countrey Houses, or Villages only.
- IX. That he shall not levy in his Land any Taxes or Tolls, but such as in old time were accustomed.
- X. That every Master of a Family, shall pay yearly four Tholousian pence to the Legate.
- XI. That when Earl Simon shall pass through his Countreys, he shall bear their charges.
- XII. That after his performances of these things, he shall go into the Holy Land to fight against the Turk, and never return again into his own Countrey, but by the leave of the Pope, or his Legate.

Earl Remund
in danger.

Remund having read over these Articles, shewed them to the King, who advised him presently to mount on Horsback, least seizing upon him, they might the better become Masters of all his Estate, which accordingly he did. The Legate was much troubled that he had thus lost his prey, and despairing to do any more by subtilty, he resolved to set upon him by force; and thereupon he besieged the Castle of Montferrand, where Baldwin, the Brother of the Earl of Tholouse was Governor. Baldwin, at least, pretending inability to defend the place, yielded it up, and abjuring his opinions turned Papist.

His Brother
betrays him.

The Earl of Tholouse seeing himself thus betrayed by his Brother, lamented exceedingly; but a greater mischief soon after befel him: For the Legate, and Earl Simon won from him by their subtilty, the King of Arragon, his only prop under God: And that by this means, they agreed, That the King of Arragon's Daughter should be married to Earl Simons eldest Son, in consideration whereof, the King of Arragon invested Simon in the Earldom of Beziers; and now they intend jointly to besiege Tholouse. For which end, the Bishop of Tholouse was sent to levy Soldiers in France, and at his return hasted to Tholouse: Which Earl Remund hearing of, sallied out of the City with Five hundred Horse, and some Foot, marching to the Bridge which goeth over the River of Garonne, not far from Tholouse, hoping either to gain it, or to break it down: But being overpowered by multitude, he was forced to make a retreat, and the Enemy pursued him to the very Gates of Tholouse. But Earl Remund seeing their insolency, sallied out again with a greater strength, and charged them so gallantly, that he beat them back to the Bridge, which being but narrow, he slew almost all of them there; and took prisoner, amongst them, Aimery, the Son of Earl Simon. Earl Simon hearing of this loss, hasted with all his Army to the City, and gave a furious Assault to it; but the Ditches were soon filled with the dead Bodies of the Enemy, beaten from their Scaling Ladders; and the Earl himself himself was beaten from his Horse. In the midst of this assault, came the Earl of Campeigne soon enough to be well beaten for his welcome. Earl Simon finding such stout resistance from the Citizens, caused his Pilgrims to spoil the Orchards, Gardens, and Vineyards about the City, which being perceived, the President of Argeles issued out of the City suddenly, and slew a number of the Pilgrims, and on another part, the Earl of Foix slew as many as he could meet with.

The Siege ended.

The Earl of Bar seeing the disorder of the Popish Army, cryed out, a Bar, a Bar, but the Citizens of Tholouse charged him so bravely, that being discomfited, he was fain to fly amongst the rest. After this Victory, Earl Remund returning to Tholouse, caused publick, and solemn thanks to be returned unto God, for the same.

Earl Simon after this, led his Army into the Country of the Earl of Foix, who was now sick, where he took some Towns: Also the Legat with another part of the Army went to Roquemaure, and in his way, took the Tower of Cassas; and caused above an Hundred Men that were found therein most cruelly to be burned alive, and levelled the Tower to the Earth.

Popish perfidy, cruelty, and Earl Remund being much afflicted for the loss, and alienation of his ancient Friend the King of Aragon, studied how he might regain him, and for that end propounded a match between his only Son, and Heir, and the King of Aragon's Daughter, which motion the King readily imbraced, and so their amity was again revived.

Not long after the King of Aragon sent a Letter of defiance to Earl Simon, who sent the same all over Christendom to stir up Pilgrims to assist him for the destruction of the King, who (as he said) was now become the Captain of the Albigenses: And in the mean time the Popes Legate, raising an Army in France, went speedily into the Earldom of Foix, and took some Towns, putting all to the Sword without distinction of sex or age, and taking also St. Antonies, he caused Thirty of the principal Men to be hanged in cold Blood, after he had granted them their lives.

Anno Christi 1213. Peter King of Aragon with a great Army of Aragonians, and Tholousians besieged Muret, a strong Town situated upon the River Garonne near unto Tholouse: There was in his Army the Earls of Tholouse, Comminges, and of Foix; But the night following, the Popish Bishops sent two Friars to him, desiring him to take pity on the Church, and not to undertake the defence of the Hereticks, but they labored in vain, for the King would not desert them, whereupon they prepared the next day to give him Battle, and whilst Simon Monfort was encouraging his Soldiers, the Bishop of Tholouse carried a Crucifix in his hand, whereupon the Captains alighting, adored it with an humble kiss. Then the Bishop of Comminges, getting upon an high place, took the Crois in his hand, and blessed the Army with it, promising forgiveness of all sins to all that died in that quarrel: Hereupon Simon divided his Army into three Battalies in the Name of the Trinity, and so joyning Battle, they fought very gallantly on both sides, till at length the King of Aragon was slain, and so God (who doth not always prosper the best cause) gave the Victory to the Popelings, and there were slain in the fight and pursute, about Two millions of the Albigenses, as their Enemies reported. The Albigenses attributed this loss to Gods Judgment upon the humane confidence of the King, who trusted too much in his great numbers, and was Feasting whilst his Enemies were plotting.

After this Victory the Popes Agents sent abroad their Letters into divers Countries for a new supply of Pilgrims utterly to root out the Hereticks.

With this Victory Earl Simon was so puffed up, that he summoned the Earls of Tholouse, Foix and Comminges, and the Prince of Bearn, to deliver to him the Keys of those Cities and Castles which they possessed: They returned no answer, but each of them betook himself to his own Territories, to provide the best they could for their affairs.

Earl Remund retired to Montallon, wrote to them at Tholouse, that understanding that the Bishop of Arras was coming with a great Army of Pilgrims against them, and that he was altogether disabled to defend their City, he did therefore advise them that they should make the best terms they could for themselves with Earl Simon, yet desired them to reserve their Hearts for him, till God should give him means to free them from those miseries. In the interim, the Earls of Foix, Comminges, and the Prince of Bearn did what they could to infest the Enemies Armies.

Popish Persecutions.

Upon the former advice the Citizens of Tholouse sent some Deputies to Earl Simon, to proffer him the Keys of their City, whom he received honorably, and presently wrote to Lewis Son of King Philip, that the City of Tholouse was offered to him, but his desire was that he should come and have the honor of taking it: The Prince went thither immediately, and had Tholouse delivered to him: Yet the Legate resolved that the pillage of it should be given to his Pilgrims, and the City dismantled, which was presently executed, though contrary to the promise made to the Citizens, that no wrong should be done to the City.

Subtily.

Then came there a new Legate of the Popes called Bonaventure with those that had taken on them the Cross. viz. The Earl of St. Paul, the Earl of Savoy, the Earl of Alençon, the Vicount of Melun, Matthew de Montmorency, and other great Lords. The Legate seeing so many Pilgrims, feared lest Prince Lewis should take upon him to dispose of divers places held by the Albigenses, to the prejudice of the Church: Whereupon he presently sent to all those places Absolution and Protection, so that when the Prince came against them, they shewed that they were under the protection of the Church: Yea the Legate told the Prince, that since he had taken upon him the Cross, he was to be subject to his commands; because he represented the person of the Pope, whose pardons (saith he) you come to obtain by obeying the Church, and not by commanding as the Son of a King. The Prince dissembled his displeasure at this audaciousness; and the poor Albigenses were so oppressed by new Armies of Pilgrims, that they sunk under the burthen of it.

The Prince, when his forty days service were expired, retired himself, being much discontented to see so much tyranny exercised against the Albigenses.

Then did Earl Simon besiege the Castle of Foix, but having lain ten days before it, he found to his cost that the place was not to be won by him: For where as Earl Simons Brother quartered at Varilles, the Earl of Foix dislodged him, and slew him with his lance, putting to flight all his Men. News hereof being brought to Earl Simon, he swore that he would drive the Earl of Foix behind the Pyreanean Mountains: But presently he had intelligence that a great Army of the Arrogonois, and Catalunians were come into the Earldom of Beziers, threatening to be revenged on him for the death of their good King, whereupon he levied his siege in haste, and marched thitherwards: But the Earl of Foix, who knew the passages better than he, lay in ambush for him in a place fit for his turn, and suddenly setting upon his Pilgrims, slew a great number of them, only Earl Simon with a few others escaped, and went to Carcaçson; but before he camethither, the Arrogonois were gon, else might they easily have discomfited him; yet shortly after they returned again, and Earl Simon was soundly beaten by them, so that he was forced to shut himself up in Carcaçson, till he had a new supply of Pilgrims.

Earl Simon beaten.

Shortly after came Remund the Son of Earl Remund out of England, where he had been bred under his Uncle King John, with an Army, and quickly made himself Master of the City of Beaucaire, and almost famished them that held the Castle, so that they yielded it up to depart with their baggage. There Earl Simon lost a hundred Gentlemen that he had laid in ambush near unto the City, whom young Remund in a sally cut in pieces.

Young Remund's success.

The persecution of the Albigenses.

1210. The Legate called a Council at Montpelier, for renouncing of the Army of the Church, and to confirm the authority of Earl Simon, where they declared him to be Prince of all the Countries conquered from the Albigenses, which Title was confirmed to him by the Pope also. Who stiled him, The active and victorious Soldier of Jesus Christ, and the invincible defender of the Catholick Faith. But whilest Earl Simon was in the Council receiving this his new honor, a great rumor was heard in the City, and a Messenger brought word that the people, hearing that Earl Simon was there, betook themselves to their Arms, purposing to kill him, whereupon he stole away by the Walls of the City on foot, without any company, and so escaped, so that in one hour he saw himself honored as a God, and flying disguised, hiding himself like a base scoundrel, for fear of the rascal multitude.

Popish cruelty.

Anno Christi 1215. There was a Council held by the Pope at Lateran, where they gave the Inquisitors such power against the Gopellers, that poor people were every where horribly tortured that were but suspected for Heresie, and (as Tritemius saith) Frier Conradus of Adampurg, the Popes Inquisitor, if he but suspected any as guilty of Heresie, used to try them by the judgment of red hot Irons, and such as were burned by the Irons he delivered as Hereticks, to the secular power, to be burned in the flames, whereupon most of those that were accused, were by him condemned to be burnt, few escaping the hot Irons: In so much as Noble, Ignoble, Clerks, Monks, Nuns, Burghesses, Citizens, and Country-men were under the name of Heresie (by too head-long a sentence of the Inquisitor on the same day whereon they were accused) cast into the cruel flames, no refuge of appeal or defence doing them any good. By the same Lateran Council, Earl Simon had the forementioned lands of the Albigenses confirmed to him, and thereupon he hastened to the King of France to receive investiture, and as he went (saith the Monk of Serway) in every City and Town the Popish Clergy, and people met him, crying, Blessed is he that cometh to us in the name of the Lord, and every Man thought himself happy that could but touch the hem of his garment.

People met him, crying, Blessed is he that cometh to us in the name of the Lord.

When he had received his Investiture from the King of France, being attended with an hundred Bishops that had preached the Cross in their Dioceses, and with an exceeding great Army of Pilgrims he hastened to make himself Lord of all those Countries, which the Pope had given him. So that all men trembled at his approach, and with this great Army of Pilgrims he took in divers places, using great cruelty, putting Men, Women and Children to the Sword. Then was he marching to Tholouse, purposing to pillage and raze it to the ground: But by the way, his Wife sent him word that he must speedily come to her relief, being besieged in the Castle of Narbonnes, by the Earl of Tholouse. But by this time many of his Pilgrims were returned into France.

Cruelty.

Yet Earl Simon hastened to the relief of his Wife, and being come before Tholouse, the people by their frequent sallies made that place too hot for his abode. The Legate perceiving that he was much astonished at it, said to him, Fear nothing, we shall quickly recover the City, and then we will destroy all the inhabitants, and if any of our Pilgrims are slain in the fight, they shall be Martyrs, immediately pass to Paradise. Hereupon one of Earl Simon's great Captains said, Monsieur Cardinal, you talk with great assurance, but if the Earl believe you, it will be little for his profit, for you, and other Prelates have been the causes of all this evil, and will be of more, if he believe you. Then was it resolved that the City should be besieged on the side of Gaston, but the Citizens made such a blunt salley, that they put their Enemies to flight, and presently the Earl of Fair coming with some supplies, fell upon Earl Simon, chased him to the River Garonne, where many of his Pilgrims were drowned, and the Earl with his Horse fell into the River, and hardly escaped.

A Popish lie.

The Earl Remond caused publick Thanksgiving to God for this happy Victory.

Thanksgiving.

Earl Simon being in great perplexity, a Bishop bid him be of good comfort, for that the Cardinal had sent Messengers throughout the world to raise him succors, and so he was enforced to wait, with much impatience, the coming of these new supplies.

Many Pilgrims
slain.

Anno 1218. There came to him a Hundred thousand Pilgrims, and he was resolved that they should earn their pardons, knowing that at the end of forty days they would vanish: Whereupon the next morning they were ordered to give a general assault to Tholouse: But Earl Remund perceiving in the night that they were very secure, because of their great multitude, he sallied out upon them; and that with so good success, that ere morning all the Field was covered with their dead bodies, and the Earl with his Men being weary with killing, returned into the City to give thanks unto God for his assistance.

Then did Earl Simon enter into the Castle of Narbonnes to see if he could discern any way to enter into the City, but finding none, it much troubled him, whereupon two Lords gave him Counsel to come to some honorable agreement: yet the Cardinal Bertrand told him that there was no need for him so to do, To whom one of them answered, Monsieur Cardinal, pray you where find you that you should take from Earl Remund, and his Son that which belongs unto them: if I had known as much as I know now, I had never taken upon me this business.

Earl Simon slain by a Woman.

After nine months siege the Citizens of Tholouse made another sally, killing as many of the crossed Soldiers as they encountered with; and Earl Simon coming in to the relief of his Men, had his Horse shot in the head with an Arrow, which caused him to run away with him, which one of the Albigenses seeing, with his Cross-bow he shot him thorow the thigh; Simon perceiving that he lost much blood, was laboring to get out of the press, but just at that present, a Woman discharging an Engine from the Walls of Tholouse, a stone parted his head from his shoulders, and thus by Gods just judgment, he that had been the deflowerer and murtherer of many Women, was himself slain by a Woman.

Prince Lewis
his cruelty.

Upon his death, the Legate and all the Bishops fled, never staying till they came to Carcasson, the Pilgrims disbanded and returned to their homes, and Earl Remund caused a publick Thanksgiving to be returned to Almighty God for this so signal a deliverance.

Afterwards, at the instigation of the Pope, Prince Lewis of France went, and besieged Tholouse; But finding the business too hot for him, he returned without doing any thing of note: yet in this journey he took the Town of Arromand, wherein he cruelly put to the Sword Men, Women, and Children to the number of Five thousand.

Upon his return the Legate Bertrand being weary of these Wars, wrote to Pope Honorius the Third, desiring to be recalled because of his age: yet withall, he signified a necessity of continuing these Wars. Otherwise (saith he) not only the lands of the Albigenses will be lost, but the Church of Rome it self will be ruined, the Doctrine of the Albigenses shaking the authority of the Popes themselves: And (saith he) this War hath cost us very dear, for within less than fifteen years there hath died above Three hundred thousand Crossed Soldiers: and therefore all will be lost, except these Hereticks be utterly destroyed.

Earl Guido
slain.

This occasioned the Pope to send a new Legate [Conradus Bishop of Rome] Also he granted to all Crossed Soldiers that fought against the Albigenses the same indulgences as to those that went to fight against the Saracens in the Holy Land: Moreover he took King Philip of France into his Protection, and made peace betwixt him, and young King Henry the Third of England: so that Philip wholly bent himself to root out the Gospellers.

Anno Christi 1220. Earl Guido of Monfort, Son and Heir to Earl Simon went against the Albigenses, but was soon after slain by the Earl of Saint Giles as he besieged besieged a Castle in Tholouse: Then did his Brother Merick besiege the same Castle, and swore that he would never depart from it till he had taken it: But after a while, his hoped-for aides failed him, he was fain to leave the siege and depart. After whole departure the Albigenses recovered many places.

Anno Christi 1221. The young Emperor Frederick, by the instigation of the Pope, published a cruel, and bloody Edict against the Gospellers within his Dominions, wherein he damned them with perpetual ignominy, and declared them publick Enemies: Commanding their goods to be confiscated, without redemption, and their Sons to be disinherited. As also that all of them that were apprehended by the Inquisitors or others, should be kept in Prison, till they were killed with an abominable death: The like punishment he commanded to be inflicted on all such as should aid, or assist them. Also he took away all benefit of appeal from such as were receivers, or favorers of them. And further, he commanded that their Houses, and the Houses of such as should receive, defend, or favor them, either where they have taught, or where they have laid on hands, should be plucked down, and never more repaired.

The Emperor's cruel Edict
against them.

The Gospellers
less disposed.

Also the same year some of these Albigenses going into Bosnia and Dalmatia drew many of the People to imbrace their Faith, whereupon the Bishop of Collen was sent thither by Pope Honorius as his Legate, and required to force them to return to the Catholic Faith (as they called it) either by perswasion, or by the arms of the Crossed Soldiers, but when neither prevailed, he being a weary of the work, left it to the Frier predicants to see if by arguments they could convince and convert them, Columninus the King assisting them: and (saith mine Author) when they had got footing, they burnt with fires those that were obstinate in their Hereses, and purged the Churches which were defiled by them: Leander de veris illust. ordinis predicatorum.

Persecuted.

Anno Christi 1223. Bartholomew, the Bishop of the Albigenses of Tholouse, ordained a Bishop for Bulgary, Croatia, and Dalmatia, where their Faith spread so fast, that Bishops themselves were drawn to be of their opinion, whereupon Conradus Bishop of Portus, the Popes Legate wrote to the Arch-Bishop of Rouen, and his Suffragan Bishops, to meet, with other Bishops at a Council to be held at Sens against the said Bartholomew: who (saith the Legate) in his Letters, styles himself Servant of the Servants of God: and runs about, Creating Bishops, and endeavoring perfidiously to gather Churches. Mathew Paris.

less disposed.

Anno Christi 1226. (Saith the same Author,) The Cross was preached all over France by Romanus the Popes Legate, against the Albigenses, wherein he commanded all that were able to bear arms to sign themselves with the sign of the Cross against the Earl of Tholouse, and his people: And at his preaching, a great multitude of Prelates, and Lay-men took upon them the sign of the Cross, yet more for fear of the King of France, and for favor of the Legate, than induced by the justness of the cause. But the King of France being signed with the Cross, would not take upon him the expedition, unless the Pope would forbid the King of England under pain of excommunication to move War against him for any land that he possessed at that present, either justly or unjustly: which accordingly the Pope did, and our King Henry the Third upon receipt of the Popes Letters assembled his Nobles to consult with them what he should do upon this inhibition, at which time there was present one Mr. William Peregrin, skilful in Astronomy, who constantly affirmed before the King, That if the King of France took upon him this expedition, he should either never return alive, or else should meet with as great confusion as might be, both of his Person, Estate, and Followers.

The King of France signed
them.

The King of France having thus settled his affairs at home, he, together with the Legate, appointed a Peremptory day for the Crossed Soldiers to come to a rendezvous with their Horses, and Arms at Mont, from which at the time appointed he began his expedition with an huge Army which was accounted Invincible, whom the Legate followed with Arch-Bishops, Bishops, &c. In the Army there were reckoned to be Fifty thousand Knights, and Men at Arms on Horse-back, besides an innumerable Company of Footmen; and then did the Legate publicly excommunicate the Earl of Tholouse, putting all his favorers, and lands under Interdict.

The King thus marching with his glittering Arms, and terrible Arms on Whitsun-Eve came to Avignon, the first City in Tholouse, purposing to destroy the whole land of the Earl, from one end to the other, and utterly to root out the Inhabitants thereof: yet very cunningly the King and the Legate sent to the Citizens, only desiring passage through the City, that they might follow their journey the nearest way; The Citizens consulting together, returned answer, That they suspected fraud, neither would they admit them into the City, whereupon the King in a great rage, swore that he would not depart thence till he had taken the City.

The Citizens valiantly defended themselves so that the siege lasted long, and the Earl of Tholouse being a skilful Warrior, before the coming of the French Army, had withdrawn all kind of Victuals together with the Women, Children, and Cattel into places of safety: Hereupon the Kings Army fell into great wants, so that multitudes perished by Famine: Their Horses and Beasts also were starved; for the Earl had caused all the meddows to be plowed up in the whole Country, so that they had no fodder but what was brought out of France: And their wants daily increasing, many Legions went out of the Kings Camp to seek for food, and fodder; But the Earl of Tholouse with a flying Army, many times lay in ambush for them, and cut off multitudes of them. They also that lay in the siege before the City were miserably wasted by Darts, and Stones shot in Ingins from the Walls by the Citizens, valiantly defended themselves, and a general Famine overspread all, but it raged most amongst the poorer sort, who had neither food nor money: Also out of the dead Carcasses of Men and Beasts, there bred certain great and black flies, which coming into their Tents by swarms with an horrible humming, infected their meat, and drink; and when they were not able to drive them from their Cups, and Dishes, many of the Pilgrims perished suddenly by their means. But the King and Legate were especially troubled, and confounded to think what reproach it would be to them, and to the Church of Rome, that so gallant, and numerous an Army should undertake such an expedition, and be able to effect nothing. Then the chief Princes, and Captains being weary of the long siege amongst so many deaths, sollicite that a general storm might be given to the City, hoping by their multitudes to oppress the Citizens, which being resolved upon, such a great multitude of Armed Men thronged upon the Bridge that goes over the River of Rhodanus, that the Bridge breaking under them, Three thousand of them were drowned in that swift River,

Many of them drowned.

The French beaten.

The King removes further from the City.

A Plague in the French Camp.

Presently after as the French were one day at dinner, the Citizens discovering there carelessness, suddenly sallied forth, and violently setting upon them, suddenly slew Twenty thousand of them without any loss to themselves, and so retired: And the King of France commanded the dead bodies to be thrown into the River affording them no other burial: Then did he also remove his siege to a farther distance, and to prevent the like attempts, caused a great ditch to be cast up between the City and his Camp: and the Legate with his Prelates not knowing how otherwise to revenge themselves, Anathematized the Earl of Tholouse, and all the Subjects: But, whom they cursed, the Lord blessed: For shortly after he sent a very great Plague in the French Camp, so that King Lewis, to escape the same, retired himself into the Neighboring Abbey of Monpensier, where he resolved to remain till the City should be taken unto whom came Henry, Earl of Compaigne, desiring to be dismissed, having now served his forty days: but the the King denied his request. To whom the Earl said, That having performed what was enjoined, he neither might nor would be staid any longer: The King being very angry hereat, swore that if he departed, he would waite his whole land with fire, and sword; yet the Earl, according to his former resolution, went his ways; and shortly after the Lord struck the King with sickness whereof he died: The Legate, and great Captains concealed his death for a month together, and in the interim sent Messengers laboring to draw the Citizens to a composition, and Commissioners being sent to the Camp, the Legate perswaded them to resign up their City to him upon promise, that they should enjoy their lives, estates, and liberties in a better manner than they had formerly: But they answered, that they would not live under the power of the French-men, whose Pride, and insolency they had often tried.

The King of France died.

After a long Parlee, the Legate desired that himself and the Prelates might be admitted into the City, swearing with a great Oath that he had continued the siege so long only that he might seek the salvation of their souls: The Citizens giving credit to his promise, not suspecting his treachery, after mutual Oaths given on either side, admitted him with the Prelates, and their Followers into the City: But contrary to their Oaths the French-men followed, violently rushing into the City when the Gates were open, and seizing upon the Citizens they bound them, plundered their Houses, and slew many; and having thus by treachery made themselves Masters of the City, they brake down the Walls, and the strong Towers of that noble City.

Avignon was taken by treachery.

During this siege their perished more than Two and twenty thousand of the Pilgrims, by Famine, sword, Pestilence, and other ways; and so the rest returned to their own homes.

Anno Christi 1228. The Pope [now Gregory] being implacably bent to root out the Albigenses, stirred up the young King of France against them, who sent a great Army into Provence utterly to destroy them, which Army, hearing that the Earl of Tholouse was in the Castle called Saracen, they purposed to besiege him as being there shut up: But the Earl having notice of their intent, with strong troops he lay in ambush in a Wood through which they were to pass; and when they were come to the place, he gallantly assaulted them, and after a bloody fight, slew many, took Two hundred Knights, and about Two thousand Men at Arms: The Knights he imprisoned; but of the other he caused some of their Eyes to be pulled out, and to have their Noses cut off, and so dismissed them. That summer the King of France sent three Armies against them, all which were either put to flight, or taken and imprisoned by the said Earl. Matthew Paris

The young King of France persecuted them.

His Armies beaten.

Yet the same year, Imbert of Beauvin went against them with a great Army of Crossed Soldiers, amongst whom were three Arch-Bishops, every one with the Pilgrims of his Jurisdiction: And the Earl of Tholouse (being as it seems unprovided) was faine to shut up himself within the Walls of Tholouse, where he was strongly besieged by the Pilgrims, who also wasted, and spoiled his Country, and harvest, far and near on every side: And the siege continuing, the Citizens suffered great Famine, and when they were brought to this extremity, the Abbat of Grandylue went from the Popes Legate to offer peace to Earl Remund, and the Tholousians: Some of the Earls Captains dissuaded him from it, knowing the perfidiousness of the Papists, but the cries of the hungry starved multitude prevailed, so that a Truce was agreed upon for certain days, and Earl Remund upon the day appointed went to the place where the peace should be concluded. But when he came thither, the Abbat perswaded him that it was necessary that the agreement should be perfected in the presence of the Queen mother, who was Regent of France, and pawned his Faith to him, that if he would go to her, he should go, and return in safety. The Earl overcame by these promises, assented, and Meaux was the place chosen by the Queen for their meeting. But as soon as Earl Remund came thither, contrary to all Oaths, and engagements, he was made a Prisoner, and had had a guard set upon him that he might not start aside; and instead of a treaty, he must submit to whatsoever should be enjoined,

Unreasonable
terms put upon the Earl of Tholouse.

It was a lamentable thing (saith the Historiographer of Languedock) to see so brave a Man, that for so long a time was able to resist the whole power of France, to come in his shirt, and linnen breeches bare-foot, and bare-legged to the Altar in the presence of the Cardinals, and their to accept of such hard, and unreasonable conditions as they were pleased to impose upon him: Amongst which these were some; That he should abjure the Heresie which hitherto he had defended. That for the future he should be subject to the Church of Rome. That he should cast all the Hereticks out of his dominions. That he should give his only Daughter Joane in Marriage to one of the King of France his Brethren. That he should pay a yearly stipend to six Popish Professors of the liberal Arts, and to two Grammarians at Tholouse. That he should take upon him the Cross, and for five years wage war against the Saracens, and other Enemies of the Faith, and Church. And lastly, That he should level with the ground the walls of the City of Tholouse, and the walls of Thirty other Cities, and Castles at the appointment of the Legate, and fill up their ditches, and so remain a Prisoner in the Louver at Paris, till his Daughter Joane was delivered to the Kings Messengers at Carcasson.

Pope Gregory
rics Councils
against them,

Anno Christi 1229. Divers Councils were held against the Albigenses: One at Tholouse, the Acts whereof were proclaimed in that City by Romanus, the Popes Legate: Another at Narbonne, where more, and more cruel decrees were made against them: A third at Beziers exceeding in rigor both the former; and amongst the rest an Oath of abjuration, whereby all Persons, Males at fourteen years old, Females at twelve years old, were to abjure all Heresie as they called it, and to swear that they would keep the Faith, and defend the Catholick Church, and persecute all the opposers of the same; and that all that took not this Oath within fifteen days, should be held suspected of Heresie, and proceeded against accordingly: Also another Article was in these words, Item, we forbid the use of the Old and New Testament to the Lay-people; Forbidding expressly that they have not the said Books turned into the vulgar tongue: Also the same year on Maundy Thursday, Pope Gregory proclaimed Ecclesiastical censures against them, and sent the prime Inquisitors of Dominicks Order into France to put the same in execution: He wrote also to Lewis King of France to cast all those Hereticks out of France, and to cause the Earl of Tholouse to do the like in his Dominions, and to place new Counsellors about him that might instruct him in the Catholick Faith, and Manners, and to cast all such from about him as might corrupt him.

And whereas the Kingdom of Arragon was infected with Heresie, Pope Gregory gave the Arch-Bishop thereof, and his Suffragans power to erect an Inquisition against them.

continued.

Anno Christi 1232. Died Fulco Arch-Bishop of Tholouse, who had labored twenty six years in extinguishing the Gospellers, whom Remund of Fulgaerio succeeded, and so manfully behaved himself, that in his first year he caused Nineteen of the Albigenses to be apprehended and put to cruel deaths within his Diocese.

A cruel Edit
against them.

Anno Christi 1233. Queen Blanch, and the Popes Legate, so over-awed the Earl of Tholouse, that they caused him to make cruel Edicts against his own Subjects of the Albigensian Religion: That they should be persecuted, searched out, and taken. That whosoever could apprehend any one of them, should have a Mark for each of them so taken. That all that were suspected to be of their Religion should be excluded from Office bearing, that all Houses should be pulled down, wherein any of them should be found. That all their goods and Inheritances should be confiscated. That the like should be done to all that should aid or abet them, or that should hinder, or not assist the Inquisitors in the execution of their Office. That whosoever should be suspected of their Heresie, should have an Oath given him to keep the Peace, and the Catholick Faith. That the Houses of such such as should be detected of Heresie after their death, should be pulled down: That whoſoever should refuse to wear the Croſs, should have his Goods ſeiſed on, &c.

The ſame year the Inquiſitors were informed, That in the Territories of Brixia, there had lately lived one Guido de Lucha, who was much honored for his austeri- ty, and integrity of life; but that he died out of the Communion of the Church of Rome, having been infected with Heresie: Whereupon they ordered his Bones to be digged up and burned.

The Bones of one of them burnt.

The Earl of Foix and Comminges, and the Prince of Bearne, yet remained to be conquered; and the Popes Legate thought that the Earl of Tholouſe was the fitteſt perſon to deal with them, whereupon he cauſed him to write to them to perſwade them to imbrace the Catholick Faith, &c. But the Earl of Foix returned Answer; That he could not forſake his Faith in ſuch a time, wherein Men might think that he did it rather out of fear, then from any good grounds; and that it was fitter for them to convince him of the truth of their way, then to allure him by promiſes, or force him thereto by Arms: And, that if they brought that world of Pilgrims againſt him, which they threatened, he truſted in God that he ſhould make them know the juſtice of his Cauſe, and repent of the raſhneſs of their Vow. But the Earls Subjects, fearing that their Lord, being aged; and without Wife and Children, ſhould leave them to the mercy of the firſt Conqueror, intreated him to come to a Composition with the Legate; whereupon he began to treat, and at laſt yielded up divers Caſtles into the hands of the King of France, upon promiſe, That he would rule with Juſtice and Equity.

A brave Answer.

Anno Chriſti 1234. the Opinions of the Albigenses were much ſpred abroad in the Parts of Spain, and other adjacent Countreys; and they had Biſhops among them, who boldly preached againſt the Romiſh Errors, and eſpecially againſt Tranſubſtantiation: Whereupon a Croiſado was preached againſt them, and a very great Army of Pilgrims being aſſembled together, were by Pope Gregory ſent againſt them, who ſlew them all with their Biſhops, ſeiſed on their Cities, and plundered them; whereby (ſaith Matthew Paris) they returned rich and joyful into their own Countreys.

Alſo about the ſame time, another Army of theſe Pilgrims went againſt others of them on the Borders of Germany, who retiring in a Fenny place for their ſecurity, were their all ſlaitt.

Trancavel and others, deſcend them.

But the ſame year the Lord raiſed up Trancavel, the Natural Son of the Earl of Beziers deceaſed, who was encouraged and aſſiſted by a number of valiant Captains, as, Oliver de Fumes, Bertrand, Hugon de Serrelong, Bertrand de Villeneuve, and Jordaine de Satiat; who told him, That they would aſſiſt him to revenge the outrages done to his Father, who was deprived of his Land, betrayed, imprifoned, and poiſoned; whereupon he reſolved to recover by the Sword what was ſo unjuſtly taken from him; and before the Enemies had notice of his deſign, he took in divers ſtrong Caſtles: So that the Popes Legate, and Biſhop of Tholouſe, were much aſtoniſhed to ſee theſe Men ſtand up for the Albigenses, whom they ſuppoſed to have been utterly ſuppreſſed.

Then did the Popes Agents cauſe the Croſs to be Preached, and the Biſhop of Narbonne animated the People of his Dioceſs to go againſt them, and to make an end of the poor remainder of the Albigenses.

An Army being raiſed, the Popes Legate led it to Tholouſe, and when the Citizens appeared upon their Ramparts, he told them, That he was come thither for their preſervation: They thanked him, but withal told him, That if he did not inſtantly retire himſelf, they would give him the chaſe. And preſently came Trancavel, who ſo bravely, and valiantly ſet upon the Legates Troops, that he quickly overthrew them, and chaſed them to the very Gates of Carcaſſon, and the Legate had much ado to ſave himſelf; but that which moſt angered the Legate, was, That Trancavel found entertainment in ſome part of Carcaſſon: So that the Pilgrims durſt hardly peep out of the City Gates. And when he heard of any more Pilgrims coming to the Legate, he uſed to meet them, to lay

The Persecution of the Albigenses

Ambushes for them ; so that usually overthrowing them, their designs were marred.

This Man kept the Field till the year One thousand two hundred and forty two, and still prevailed against all the Crossed Soldiers that came against him ; whereupon, Ameline, the Popes Legate, wrote to the Pope, That if he caused not the Cross to be Preached in many parts of Europe, the Church was like to sustain much damage by this Enemy. For (saith he) he is more cruel and subtle, then any before him.

But a little before, the Bishop of Tholouse was informed of a certain Matron, who having her Children, Brethren, and Friends about her, was dying an Heretick ; whereupon he ran to her, and found it even so by the confession of the Woman her self : Who desired to die in the Faith of the Albigenses, and doubted not to be saved. Then did the Bishop condemn her, and delivered her to the Secular power, who presently carried her forth in the Bed, wherein she lay sick, and burned her.

A dying Woman burnt.

Earl Remund escapes.

Anno Christi 1235. Earl Remund getting from Paris, returned into his own Countrey, and forbad the Citizens of Tholouse to company with the Fryers Pre-dicant, and shortly after expelled them the City ; and the Monastery of Narbonne, belonging to the same Order of Fryers, was pulled down by the Albigenses. And in June following, Pope Gregory the Ninth made new Inquisitors against the Albigenses in Arragon and France.

He is forced to submit.

Anno Christi 1236. King Lewis of France wrote to the Pope, That Earl Remund had violated the Covenants which he had made with the Church, and had cast the Bishops Clergy and Fryers out of Tholouse, and brought Hereticks into their rooms ; whereupon he desired that he might be reduced into Order, &c. And indeed, by the Power of the Pope, and King, he was forced to recal the Popish Clergy, and to banish the Albigenses, and to take upon him the Sign of the Cross for the aid of the Holy Land, by way of Penance for his former Deeds.

Persecution in Italy.

The same year many imbracing the Faith of the Albigenses beyond the Alps, Inquisitors were sent against them, especially one Fryer Robert, who caused many of both Sexes to be apprehended ; and when they continued constant in the true Faith, and would not renounce the same, in the space of two or three Moneths, he caused fifty of them (saith Matthew Paris) either to be burnt or buried alive.

Earl Remund prospers.

Anno Christi 1239. the King of France having Garrisoned divers Castles within the Countrey of the Albigenses, who greatly oppressed them, they betook themselves to Arms, besieging those Garrisons ; whereupon they sent to the King of France, craving that present aid might be sent to them. Then did the King of France send the Lord John of Bellemont, with a great Army to aid them ; who, coming into that Countrey, besieged the strong Castle of Montreal, and at last took it, together with divers others belonging to the Albigenses ; whereby they were suppressed for that time. But the year after, the Earl of Tholouse took Arms again, and assaulted the Earl of Provence, who presently sent to the French King for aid ; and the French that were about Avignon, hastened to the relief of the Earl of Provence : Which the Earl of Tholouse hearing of, he lay in Ambush in their way ; and suddenly setting upon them, slew many, and dispersed the rest ; and the War so prospered in his hand, that in a short space he recovered to his former Dominion above twenty Castles from the French, and the Earl of Provence ; and sharply punished his Rebels.

Persecution in Milan.

Earl of Provence beaten.

About the same time the Citizens of Milan, being provoked thereunto by the Pope and Emperor, burnt many of the Albigenses, who were their fellow Citizens.

A great Per-cution,

Anno Christi 1241. The Earl of Tholouse continuing his Wars against the Earl of Provence, almost beat him out of his Countrey ; so that the Earl of Provence was feign to send to the Kings of England and France (who had married his second second Daughters) to mediate for him; and they writing to the Earl of Tholouse, obtained Peace for their Father in Law.

Anno Christi 1242. The Bishops of Narbonne and Albi, and the Seneschal of Carcassonne, apprehended Two hundred of the Albigenses in a certain Castle of Tholouse, who had Bernard Martin of Cathavel, and Raymund Aulbuerui, for their Pastors and Ministers. All these upon Examination, adhering constantly to the true Faith without wavering, were cruelly burnt in the flames. Vignier, Hist. Eccles. And the year following there were Two hundred twenty four more of them burnt likewise.

Pope Urban persecutes them.

Shortly after, it pleased God, that great Contentions arose between the Pope and Emperor, whereby the Gospellers enjoyed some breathing time from their former miseries; yet Anno Christi 1262. Pope Urban hearing that, through that Peace, their Doctrine was spread exceedingly, he made a Decree in this Tenor.

Albeit we be bound by our Office, always to endeavor the rooting out the deadly Poyson of Heretical pravity from all parts in the Christian world; yet now in a special manner this duty is incumbent upon us, when we perceive this Plague to be grown up in our Neighborhood, through the iniquity of the times, to the detriment of the Catholick Faith. That therefore the Office of the Inquisition may be the more effectually executed against the Hereticks in the Province of Lumbardy, and parts adjacent; We injoyne you, upon remission of your sins, That you do your uttermost endeavors for the extirpation of it; and that you see, That all Papal and Imperial Laws be executed against them: And for my own part, I will implore the aid of Christian Kings and Princes, that Heaven and Earth may be moved against them.

Anno Christi 1270. Petrus Cadarita and Gulielmus Calonicus, were sent as Inquisitors from the Pope, into the Kingdom of Arragon, severely to punish those that had imbraced the Faith of the Albigenses; and amongst others, they condemned Arnaldus Castlebonius; the Viscount, and his Daughter Ermesenda, Countess of Foix. They also decreed their memory to be detestable, commanding their Bones to be digged out of their Graves, and to be burned: They also called Roger, the Nephew of Ermesenda, into judgment for the same crime.

Another Persecution.

Anno Christi 1281. There was a great Persecution raised against the Gospellers in the County of Albi, by one William de Gourdon, Captain and President of Carcassonne, under Philip the French King; who by a Proclamation commanded all the Albigenses to be extirpated, and searched out of their Dens and lurking Holes; and all such as favored them to be utterly rooted out: As also, that the innumerable company of their Children, which would not be reduced to the Catholick Faith, and Unity of the Church of Rome, should not be admitted unto the City of Realmont, or the Territory thereof, nor to the place of any honor or office. That such likewise as favored or concealed any of them, should be banished for ever from the City of Realmont, and their Goods wholly confiscated, and their Children be excluded from all honors and dignities. Yet notwithstanding the severity of this Edict, God hid and preserved many of them even in Realmont it self, as Diamonds in Dunghils, though many of them fled into Arragon and Sicily, where they might enjoy more freedom of Conscience.

A cruel Edict.

Anno Christi 1285. Gareldus and Segarellus of Parma, and Dulcinus of Nordria, Preached and spread the Doctrine of the Albigenses in Parma, and in many Cities of Lumbardy: Whereupon Pope Honorius by a publick Edict condemned their Doctrine, and commanded them to be rooted out. Bzorius.

They increased and are persecuted.

Anno Christi 1300. Pope Boniface commanded Guido the Inquisitor, to dig up the Body of Hermanus (one of the Albigenses) and to condemn and burn it in Ferrara, twenty years after his death.

Anno Christi 1315. The Fryers Inquisitors raised a great persecution against the Gospellers in Passaw in Austria, and burned many of them; who continued very constant in the Faith, and took their death very chearfully. Amongst the rest, one of them that was burnt at Vienna, confessed, That there were Eighty thousand of them in Bohemia and Austria at that time: Their cheifest Ministers were Bartholomew Faustus, James Justus, Bononatus, William, and Gilbert, of whom, James was murdered between two Walls by the merciless Inquisitors: Bononatus was burned alive, and William, Gilbert, and Bartholomew, were condemned after their death. The House where they used to Preach, was pulled to the ground, and all that adhered to them were Anathematized.

Lollard.

Anno Christi 1322. Lollard walterus (from whom our English Professors were called Lollards) was taken at Collen, where he had privately Preached, and through Gods Blessing, drawn many from ignorance and errors, to imbrace the Truth, and persisting constantly in his Opinions: He was condemned and burned alive.

Yet notwithstanding all cruelties used against them, their Enemies could never prevail to a total extirpation of them, but they still lay hid like Sparkles under the Ashes, desiring and longing to see that, which now through Gods Grace, their Posterity do enjoy, viz. The Liberty to call upon God in Purity of Conscience, without being inforced to any Superstition and Idolatry: And so instructing their Children in the Service of God, the Lord was pleased to preserve a Church amongst them, in the midst of the Romish corruptions, as a Diamond in a dunghil, as Wheat amongst chaff, as Gold in the fire; till it pleased God to disperse the Gospel, in a more general and publick way, by the Ministry of Luther, and his Associates and Fellow-Laborers in the Lord: At which time these Albigenses received, with greediness, the Doctrine of the Gospel, and so became more eminent in their Profession of Piety, then they were formerly.

CHAP. XXV.

The Persecution of the Church of God in Bohemia, which began Anno Christi 894.

THe Bohemians were Heathens and Idolaters, till their Duke or Captain Borivoius going into Moravia, Anno Christi 894. by a strange providence of God was converted to the Knowledge and Faith of Christ; whereupon, he together with Thirty other Palatines, was Baptized: At his return into Bohemia, he took along with him Metbudius, Bishop of Moravia, by whose Ministry, Ludomilla, the Dukes Wife, was Converted and Baptized.

Christianity brought into Bohemia.

Borivoius busying himself in erecting divers Schools and Churches, it pleased God, that, in a short time, a great Harvest was gathered, many of the Nobility and Commons being daily Converted and Baptized; but Satan envying the progress of the Gospel, presently raised up Persecution against the Professors of it. For first of all, Borivoius was banished by the wicked Faction of the Idolaters, and then compelled to resign his Dominion to his eldest Son, who being dead, his younger Son Bolislavus succeeded, who was a very holy Man, yet was drawn to marry Drahomira, famous for Nobility and Beauty, but a Heathen; yet she promised, after instruction, to be Baptized: And during her Husbands life, she cunningly concealed her hatred against Christians, but he being dead, the Grand-mother (Ludomilla) educated the elder Son (Wenceslaus) and Drahomira took the younger (Bolislavus) and usurped the Government, commanding the Christian Churches to be shut up, the Exercises of their worship to cease, prohibiting Ministers from instructing the People, and School-masters from teaching Youth; Such as disobeyed were imprisoned, banished, and put to death.

Persecution began.

At Prague the Magistrates were changed, and cruel Idolaters substituted in the rooms of Christians, by whose incitements the poor Christians were secretly, openly, and unworthily murdered and abused, whilst the Murderers went away with impunity: But if any Christian killed a Heathen, though in his own defence, ten Christians were massacred for that one. Yet the insatiable cruelty of Drahomira was not satisfied herewith, but that she might destroy all the Christians, she dealt with one Baldass, a cruel Wretch, whom she had set over the City of Prague, earnestly intreating him by fraud or force to effect it, promising him a great reward if he did it. He thereupon Arms Six hundred Conspirators at his own House, with whom he hastens to those that were designed for slaughter: But the plot, through Gods mercy, being discovered to the Christians, Four hundred of them met, to defend their own lives. The issue of the fight was victory to the Christians, the Streets being polluted with the Blood of Six hundred that were slain. Then did Drahomira pretend that she was much distressed.

pleased with the tumult, commanding, That the Arms of both parties should be brought into the City Magazine, severely forbidding any Man to walk with Dart or Sword. The Christians, though suspecting her fraud, yet, that they might not seem disobedient, brought their Arms to the Magazine, the Enemies pretending also to do the like. This being done, Drahomira employs her Cut-throats, in the night, to set upon the unarmed Christians, whereby above Three hundred of them were slain in one night. This Drahomira much rejoiceth at, but yet not satisfied, she commands the Major of Prague to destroy all the Christians. Whereupon he besets all the Streets and Passages, and slays all that he meets withal; till the Christians gathering themselves together, encounter with him, put him to flight, and in the pursuit slew this wicked person. This so enraged Drahomira, that she commanded the two Churches to be burnt down, in one of which, her Husband was Interred. Whilest she thus raged against the Christians, Wenceslaus, now grown to years, by the advice of his Grand-mother, and the Christian Nobility, took upon him the Government, and the better to establish Peace, he assigned the City of Bolislavia, and adjacent Parts to his Mother, and younger Brother.

Drahomira yet laid not aside her hatred and bloody designs against the Christians, which she first shewed against holy Ludomilla, substituting two wicked Villains, in the night, to murder her: These fellows finding her at her Prayers in her Oratory, strangled her. Some there were that much provoked Wenceslaus to revenge that wicked act, which he refused, because he judged it contrary to that duty which he owed to a Mother; and to the modesty and patience of a Christian. But he was shortly after ill requited by this unnatural Monster, who affecting domination, began to defame Wenceslaus, as sluggish and unfit for Government; but when she perceived that his Subjects loved him exceedingly, she waited a fitter opportunity, which thus fell out.

Bolislav having a Son, she invited Wenceslaus to the Baptising of this his Nephew at Bolislavia; he going thither, she entertained him with much disguised love; but, in the night, as he was making his Prayers to God, his Brother Bolislav assaults him; and being assisted with some other Cut-throats, slew him Anno 929. Bolislav having by this Fratricide, obtained the Government, threatened imprisonment and death, to all Ministers and Christians, if they did not presently depart Bohemia: His Mother added, That their dead Bodies should not be buried. Hereupon many fled, others were seized on, and tormented to death divers ways; but God suffered not Drahomira to escape his revenging hand, for in that place, where the Ministers Bones lay unburied, the Earth opened of it self, and swallowed her up alive with her Chariot, and all that were in it; which place is to be seen before the Castle of Prague, to this day.

Others also, who were her instruments in massacring the Innocent Christians; some of them ran mad, and threw themselves down from high places; others slew themselves with their own Swords, wherewith they had murdered the Innocent Men; and the place where Wenceslaus Blood was shed, could never be washed off, but remained as a perpetual witness of that Villany.

These things so affrighted Bolislav, that he became more milde to the Christians.

Anno 970. Woytich, the second Bishop of Prague, laboring seriously in converting the Relicks of the Gentiles, and reforming their wicked lives, they raised so great a Sedition against him, as enforced Woytich to a voluntary banishment. Then did the Pagans rise up against his Brethren, and murdered five of them, and then conspired against their Prince, but were overcome in Battle, &c.

Not long after, the Pope having usurped domination over other Churches, sought to obtrude his Superstitions upon the Bohemians also: But especially he commanded, That all their sacred Service should be in the Latine Tongue, and that they should not have the Cup in the Sacrament. The Bohemians sent two Ministers,

The Persecution of the Church in Bohemia.

Ministers, and four others to Rome, Anno 977. to the Pope, desiring to be eased of these grievances, and at last obtained their request.

Yet afterwards they were again inhibited the use of their own Language in holy Services, whereupon Uratellus, Duke of Bohemia (who shortly after, for his valiant service to the Roman Empire, was Created King) sent Ambassadors to Rome, requesting a Confirmation of the Liberties formerly granted to them. But the Pope (Hildebrand) absolutely refused it.

Anno 1197. Pope Celestine sent a Cardinal into Bohemia, to inhibit Ministers Marriage, and to Divorce such as were married; but the Bishops and Ministers almost stoned him to death.

Also, when afterwards the Cup was taken away in the Sacrament, there were many that opposed that Sacrilege, and amongst the rest, John Melitius, of a Noble Family and fervent Spirit, much honored for his rare Learning and holiness of Life. In his Ministry he earnestly exhorted his Auditors to a frequent communicating in both kinds; at last he was much moved in spirit to go to Rome, and there to testify, That the great Antichrist was come, and did then reign.

He prayed unto God, with Fasting and Tears, desiring, That unless these thoughts came from Gods Spirit, he might be delivered from them: But when yet he could find no inward quiet, he went to Rome, and wrote upon the Cardinals doors, Antichrist is come, and sitteth in the Church. He also in his Conferences with many, asserted the same. For this, the Pope imprisoned him, and excommunicated both him, and his Auditors.

Mr. Matthias of Prague also, was a zealous Defender of the Communion in both kinds. Anno 1375. he with some other learned Men went to King Charles that then Reigned, requested him to call a Oecumenical Council, for the Reformation of the Church. Charles lending to the Pope about it, he was so incensed at the Message, that he commanded the King to punish those rash and Heretical Men. Whereupon Matthias was banished the Kingdom, and then was the use of the Sacrament in both kinds prohibited through all Bohemia: So that the godly could not administer, and receive it, but in private Houses, in Woods and Caves; and yet neither so, but with the hazard of their lives: For they were set upon in the Highways, plundered, beaten, and drowned in Rivers; so that at last they were necessitated to go together in Companies and Armed. And this continued to the days of John Hus. Concerning the Persecution of John Hus, and Jerome of Prague; see in my First Part their Lives. But when these holy Men of God were so unjustly burned at Constance, the adversaries were not satisfied with their Blood, but took further counsel for the destruction of the whole Nation: For when Fifty eight of the chief Nobles of Bohemia, in the name of all the Commons, Anno 1416. had sent Letters from Prague to the Council, complaining, That their Pastor, an innocent and holy Man, and faithful Teacher of the Truth, was unjustly condemned. The Council, instead of answering them, wrote their Letters to some violent Papists, who were in authority, to assist their Legate in oppressing the Hereticks.

Thus the Bohemians were incited more and more to mutual contentions; the Priests daily from the Pulpits divulged their Excommunications and Execrations against the Hussites, and to stir up the greater hatred against them, they used lying signs, for, putting dirt about the wicks of their Tapers, when the flame had burned the Wax to the dirt, the Taper went out. Then cried they out, That God by Miracles declared his hatred of those wicked Hereticks, who were unworthy to enjoy the Light: And thereupon they persecuted them all manner of ways, and they used such violence, as raised a tumult at Prague, An. 1419. where in the enraged multitude threw twelve Senators of Prague, with the Major, out of the Windows of the Senate House, who fell upon the points of Spears.

After this, the Pope publickly excommunicated the Bohemians at Florence, exciting the Emperor, Kings, Princes, Dukes, &c. to take up Arms against them, entreating them by the Wounds of Christ, and their own Salvation, unanimously to fall upon them, utterly to extirpate that cursed Generation, promising Universal Remission of sins to the most wicked person, if he did but kill one Bohemian. Hereupon great Wars were raised against them; but it pleased God still to give them the Victory under that brave Captain Zisca. Whereof see more in my Second Part in Zisca's Life.

Multitudes
Martyred.

Yet still as the Popish party prevailed at any time, they exercised all manner of cruelty upon the poor Servants of Christ, infomuch, That at Cutttenburgh, where were deep Mettal Mines, Anno 1420. they threw into one of them a thousand and seven hundred persons, and into another a thousand thirty eight, and into a third a thousand three hundred thirty four persons.

Incouragement.

Also a Merchant of Prague coming to Preslaw in Silesia, the Emperor and Popes Legate being there, was in his Inn drawn into discourse, where pleading for Hus, and the Sacrament in both kinds, he was cast into Prison, the next day a Student of Prague was cast into the same Prison. The Merchant exceedingly encouraged him, saying, O my Brother! what an honor is it, that we are called thus to bear witness to the Lord Jesus? Let us undergo the trouble with cheerfulness, the fight is but short, the reward is eternal. Let us remember the Lord, what a cruel death he underwent for us, and with what guiltless Blood we are redeemed, and what torments the Martyrs have patiently indured, &c. But when they were brought to Execution, and the Ropes by which the Horses were to drag them through the Streets, were fastned to their Feet: The Student affrighted with the Terrors of Death, and allured by the fair promises of the Legate, recanted. But the Merchant, like an unshaken Rock, told them, That their hopes of any recantation from him were but vain. I am ready to die (saith he) for the Gospel of the Lord Jesus. And so being drawn slowly through the Streets, he was brought to the place of Execution, and there burnt, Anno 1420.

Unnatural

Pichel, the chief Magistrate of the City of Litomeritia, having taken Twenty four of the chief Citizens, and amongst them his Son in Law, put them in an high Tower, and at last he brought them out half dead with hunger and cold, and adjudged them to be drowned. When they came to the River Albis, their Wives, Children, and Friends greatly mourning; the Majors own Daughter came ringing her hands, and falling at her Fathers feet, beseeched him to save her Husbonds life: But he, harder then a Rock, bad her give over, saying, what? Can you not have a worthier Husband then this? To whom she answered, seeing his inexorableness, You shall never more espouse me to any: And so beating her Brest, and tearing her Hair, she followed amongst the rest. When the Martyrs came to the River, whilst Ferries were preparing, they with loud voices call Heaven and Earth to witness their innocency; and so taking their leave of their Wives, Children and Friends, exhorting them to constancy and zeal for the Truth, they were carried and cast into the midst of the River, with their hands and feet bound together, and so drowned; and if any were driven to the Banks, they were stabbed with Iron-forks and Pikes. The Majors Daughter seeing her Husband thrown into the River, leaped in to him, caught him about the middle, but being unable to draw him forth, they were both drowned; the next day they were found imbracing one another, and were both buried in one Grave, Anno 1421.

About the same time, a Company of Soldiers going towards Prague, seized upon a godly Minister, four other Men, and four Boys, the eldest not being above eleven years old, for administering, and receiving the Sacrament in both kinds, and carried them to their Colonel, the Colonel sent them to the Bishop, who required them to abjure, or else he would burn them: The Minister stoutly answered, But the Gospel teacheth otherwise, so that you must either approve what we do, or blot it out of your Bible. Hereupon one of the Troopers smote him so violently on the Face with his Gantlet, that the Blood ran out of his Mouth and Nose. The Bishop made this Minister the subject of his mirth and scorn all that night, and the next day, being the Sabbath, he burned them all in one fire; and when the Bishop Bishop would have perswaded them to abjure the Cup in the Sacrament, the Minister answered, That he would rather suffer a thousand deaths, than deny a truth so clearly revealed in the Gospel.

Another Captain violently entering into a Church where many godly People were met together, he killed some, and took others Prisoners; and going to the Communion Table, he took the Cup, being full of Wine, and drunk to his Horse, who having pledged him, he said, His Horse was now one of the Communicants in both kinds.

Profaned and Blasphemy.

About the same time also a godly Taylor was burned at Prague.

Martin Luther.

Also one Martin Loquis should have suffered the like death, but his life was begged by the Thaborites. Afterwards, taking another associate with him, he was travelling towards Moravia, but by the way, they were taken by a Captain, who manacled them with Irons, examined them about the Sacrament; Martin answered, The Body of Christ is in Heaven, and he hath but one, not many Bodies: Hereupon the Captain gave him a box on the Ear, as not enduring such Blasphemy, and would have had him presently burned. Then did a Priest beg him, to see if he could convert him; but when that succeeded not, he thrust them into a dark stinking dungeon for two months: Then did he torment them with fire, till their bowels came forth, to extort from them who were their Companions: Afterwards they were both shut up in a Tub, and so burned. Anno 1421.

Prodigious
cruelty.

A godly and eloquent Preacher in Prague, was, together with twelve more apprehended by a Captain, carried into the Common Hall, and there privately Beheaded, but their Blood running out, caused a great tumult in the City, wherein some of the Senators were slain; and others saved themselves by flight.

Some Beheaded.

Not long after there sprung up a Schism amongst those that were called Hussites; for some of them began in other things to comply with the Pope, only they insisted upon the Cup in the Sacrament, whence they were called Calixtines: Others of them stuck close to Hus his doctrine, and cried down all superstition. And this contention was cunningly fomented and increased by some that sought thereby the advancement of the Pope and Emperor: And to make the Professors of the pure Doctrine odious, they branded them with the hateful name of Piccards, by which name the Waldenses in Piccardy were called. Yet both these parties, when they were assaulted by the Emperor, joyned together in opposing him, and obtained many great Victories against him: Yet Anno 1444. the Thaborites were utterly oppressed by fraud and force.

Anno 1459. There were divers godly People in Bohemia, Ministers, Nobles and Commons, who being much pressed in conscience about the superstitions in the Church of Rome, obtained of their King [George Pogiebrascius], a place in the hilly Country near to Silesia to inhabit, where throwing off all superstitious practices, they applied themselves to the form of the Primitive simplicity, calling themselves Brethren and Sisters.

Reformation began.

The beginning of this Church displeased the Devil, and therefore he raised a sudden and violent tempest to overthrow it: For the Fame of it being spread abroad, the Priests in every Pulpit started up the Hatred of the people against them, crying out, Blow out these sparks, Blow them out before they grow into a flame.

Popish malice.

Anno 1461. One of their Ministers with some others of them coming to Prague, to visit their Friends, were betrayed, and some Officers coming to apprehend them, said to them all, All that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer Persecution, therefore come forth, and follow us to Prison, which they did. The King believing the slanders that were raised against them, as that they were attempting some sedition, &c. he commanded the aged Minister to be tortured, but he falling into an extasy, felt no pain at all: The Tormentors supposing him to be dead, took him down from the rack, but after some hours, he came to himself, and by the intercession of a Friend, was dismissed.

A wicked
Edict.

Presently after there came forth from the King an Edict, forbidding all Pastors to administer holy services without Ceremonies; and withal, threatening death to those that should administer to the Brethren, called now by the hateful name of Piccards. The Brethren hereupon were brought into great extremity, being like Sheep destitute of Shepherds. Yet presently came forth a new Edict, that none of them should be suffered to live either in Bohemia, or Moravia. Hereupon they were dispersed amongst the Woods and Mountains, dwelling in Caves; where yet they were scarce safe, so that they were forced to make no fire, nor dress any meat, but in the night time, lest the smoak should betray them. In the cold Winter nights, sitting by the fire, they applied themselves to the reading of the Bible, and holy discourses. When in the Snow they went abroad to provide them necessities, they went close together, and lest their Foot-steps should betray them, the hindermost of them did draw after him a great Bough, to cover the prints which their Feet had made.

Popish cruelty.

Elders chosen.

A Synod.

These Brethren chose by suffrage, certain Elders, to whom they promised obedience; and by the advice of these Elders, the chiefest of the Brethren in Bohemia and Moravia, were called together in a Synod, in the Mountains to ordain Ecclesiastical Laws, whereby they should be governed: They appointed also sundry days of Fasting and Prayer for themselves, and their dispersed Friends, taking counsel from Gods Word, concerning those things which were required to the fuller Reformation, both of life and doctrine. That which most afflicted them was for want of Pastors, not knowing where they should have new ones, after those were dead, who then lived with them: But after debate, they resolved, that Christ had given this authority to his Church, that such as were ordained themselves, might ordain others: Yet some scruple arose, whether such as were but Presbyters, might ordain without a Bishop: For which cause they met together, and with fasting, prayers and tears, they sought unto God to reveal his will unto them in this difficulty; and afterwards making a scrutiny by lot, the Lord answered them, that it was lawful for Presbyters to ordain Prebyters, which occasioned great joy unto them.

Ordination of Ministers.

The Waldenses.

Then did these Brethren deliberate among themselves, whether they should joyn with the waldenses in Moravia and Austria; and so be one People with them, and one Church: The purity of their Doctrine and Christian Conversation did much please; but again, it much displeased them, that they concealed the truth, not openly professing it as they ought; but to avoid Persecution, they frequented the Churches of the Papiſts, and so communicated with Idolaters. Therefore they concluded to admonish them of this evil, and for this end they sent some able men to them, to acquaint them with it: The waldenses answered, that to be in unity with them was very grateful, and for the evils objected against them, they were not ignorant of them, nor would defend them, but rather would labor to amend them: Concluding that they desired to have a fixt day of meeting with the Brethren, in which they would take some further order about this business.

Admonition.

The Waldenses
Persecuted.

But before the time came, the Papiſts having some intelligence of it, raged so violently against the waldenses, that they burnt one of the chiefest of them at Vienna, and so persecuted the rest, that they were fain to provide for their own safety by flight.

Anno 1468. There came out a new Decree against these Brethren, requiring all the Nobles of Bohemia, within their several jurisdictions, to apprehend as many as they could, and to proceed against them.

The Church
encreaseth.

Many therefore were apprehended and put into Prison, where they were kept for a long time: But through the wonderful working of God, the more the Enemies labored to put out this spark, the more it brake forth into a great flame:

flame: For many of their Peers submitted to the Discipline of the Brethren, building Churches for them in their Towns and Villages, so that Anno 1500. they had in Bohemia and Moravia, about two hundred Churches.

After the death of Pogiebracius, Uladislavus, a Polonian succeeded in the Kingdom, to whom the Brethren wrote an Apology, by reason of many foul accusations that were carried to him against them: This so exasperated their Enemies, that they endeavored by a most impudent invention, to stir up the hatred of all men against them. The way they used was this: They suborned a wicked Villain, to say that he came from amongst them, and that he had been an Elder, but had therefore forsaken them, because in their meetings they used to Blaspheme God, the Virgin Mary, and the Saints, to traduce the Sacraments, to mingle themselves incestuously, after the manner of the Adamites, to commit Murther, and practice Witchcraft, &c. This Man they led through the Towns and Cities as a spectacle: They brought him to their Church, where he must abjure his errors, and beseech the people to pray for him, a most miserable sinner; and to take heed, by his example, of the wicked Piccards. They also published his confession in writing, being confirmed with the seals and subscriptions of some Deans and Priests, causing them to be read in the Churches to the people.

Popish school.

Slanders.

But the Devil was befooled herein, for the Brethren, by publick writings did confute these lies; and the Villain, trembling so often to forswear himself in the sight of the people, confessed at last that he was suborned to do what he did, and that he knew not any of the Piccards: Yet thus far it made for good, that some to make experience of so great Villanies, began privately and disguised, to frequent the Assemblies of the Brethren, and finding it to be far otherwise than it was reported, did associate themselves with them, as with true Christians.

Confession.

Anno 1488. Matthias King of Hungary, banished the Brethren from Moravia, which caused some hundreds of them, taking a Minister along with them, to go into Moldavia: Whereupon the Brethren in Bohemia sent one of their Elders to them, to exhort them unto patience under this Persecution, which was for the truth.

The Brethren banished.

Shortly after the restless Enemies of God and his Church, raised another Persecution against the Brethren in Bohemia: For some Bishops consulting together, suborned the Queen, great with Child, (so that they conceived that the King would deny her nothing in that state,) to request of him, that he would severely punish the Piccards: The King displeased at her request, only nodded his head, but gave no answer at all: Yet the Bishops, in his presence, began to draw up the Edict. The King going into his Chamber, fell down on his knees, and with tears besought God to forgive the guilt of those bloody counsels, and to grant no success to them; and God heard his Prayers, and shewed some examples of his severe judgments on the Authors of this conspiracy.

Persecution.

Popish malice.

Gods judgment on Persecutors.

The Queen who proposed to her fancy, what grateful spectacles she should have in seeing the Piccards brought to Prague, and there, some burnt, some beheaded, and others drowned in the water, presently fell in travel, and when she was not able to bring forth, the Physicians advised that the Child should be cut out of the Mothers womb, which was accordingly done, whereby the Child lived, but the Mother died.

Two years after, the Bishops by their importunity prevailed with the King that sharp remedies should be used against those growing evils, as they were pleased to call them; whereupon an Edict was sent forth that all the Piccards, without distinction of sex, age or quality, should be slain. This Mandate was brought to the Assembly of States at Prague, by two Bishops, but divers of the chiefest Nobles opposed it, so that eighteen moneths were spent in debate, before any thing was done, but at last, by the cunning artifice of the Chancellor, and his Bloody associates, was confirmed by the greatest part of the Nobility, in the presence of the King; and a mutual confederacy was entered into, that it should be prosecuted with an armed power: But God following some of the chief contrivers of it with sundry judgments, it almost came to nothing.

Anno 1545. A cruel

Temptation resisted.

Yet in these troubles most of the Ministers were turned out of their places, so that they durst not preach nor pray, but in private. And a certain Noble man, having apprehended six of the Brethren, cast them into Prison, and when they were brought forth to be burnt, they went chearfully to the fire; and when the chief Officer, taking affection to one of them, offered him his life, if he would recant his error, profering him withal to give him a years time to consider of it; he pawled a while, but by and by answered, It is too much by such a delay, to lose my Brethrens Company, and so going along with them, they were burned together.

Gods Judgment on Persecutors.

Shortly after the Chancellor that had procured the passing of the Edict against the Brethren, as he returned from the Parliament, visiting a certain Noble man by the way, he with great pleasure reported to him what was agreed upon against the Brethren: The Noble man having a Servant by, that was much addicted to the discipline of the Brethren, asked him how he liked it; The Servant answered, that all were not agreed: The Chancellor suspecting some new conspiracy, asked him who durst oppose the States of the Kingdom, &c. The Servant said, In heaven there is one, who if he were not present at your counsels, you have consulted in vain: The Chancellor replied, Thou Knave, thou shalt find that as well as the rest. And rising up in fury, immediately a Carbuncle rose upon his Foot, which turned to a disease, called Ignis sacer, whereof he died miserably.

Another of the great sticklers in this business, returning homewards, as he was alighting out of his Chariot to make water, he struck his Member on a sharp Nail that was in the Boot, whereby he drew out his entrails with him, and not long after he gave up the Ghost.

Allo Dr. Augustine, who by slanderous libels had endeavored to stir up the King against the Brethren, died suddenly as he was at supper.

Another Noble man of these Persecutors, as he was hunting, his Horse threw him, and his Arrow ran into his thigh, and came out at his loins, whereby he died a most painful death.

Many others of them felt the like judgments of God, so that it grew into a Proverb amongst them: If you be weary of your life, attempt something against the Piccards, and you shall not escape a year to an end.

Anno 1523. Luther.

Zahere an Apostate.

About this time God stirred up in Germany, undaunted Luther, the Thunderbolt against the Pope, which occasioned many of the Calixtines to resolve to embrace the purer Doctrine of the Gospel, and to seek for the Ordination of their Ministers from Wittenburg, rather than from Rome. But among these, there was one Zahere, an Apostate, who to ingratiate himself with the King and Pope, would enforce the Pastors and Citizens of Prague, to subscribe to sundry Articles, or else they must be proscribed. And first of all six Pastors were banished, then Sixty five of the chiefeft Citizens: Then to colour greater cruelty, a rumor was spread abroad of a conspiracy made by the Brethren against the Calixtines; and to extort a confession hereof, three Citizens were brought to the Rack, who rather chose to suffer all torments, than falsely to accuse the innocent: Yet divers were Persecuted; Amongst others, a Cutler that had found an Orthodox Book about the Sacraments, was whipped openly in the Market-place, and banished: Another was branded in the Forehead; A third was thrust into Prison, and there murdered.

Popish lies and slanders.

Persecution.

Then in the Assembly of Estates it was decreed, that the Mandate of the King should be put in execution against the Piccards: Whereupon a new Persecution was raised against the Brethren, their Churches being shut up, and their Exercises forbidden.

Anno

The Persecution of the Church in Bohemia.

Anno 1526. A godly and learned Man, together with his Hostels with whom he lodged, a Widow of sixty years old, were both burnt in the fire for Piccardism, together with the Books that were found about them. Two born.

Another godly Woman being brought before the Magistrate, made a bold profession of her Faith, and then being required to prepare her garments to be burnt in, She answered, They are ready, lead me away when you please. The Crier declaring openly that she had Blasphemed, She with a loud voice denied it, saying, This is false, I am condemned because I deny the Real presence of Christ in the Sacrament; give no credit to these Priests, they are dissembling Hypocrites, Adulterers, Sodomiters, Epicures, &c. Being commanded to pray to the Crucifix, she turned her back to it, and lifting up her eyes to Heaven, she said, There is our God, thither we must look, and so cheerfully mounting the Pile, she was burned. A godly Woman burnt.

Anno Christi 1527.

The year after two German Tradefinen were caught at Prague; accused by the Monks of Lutheranism, and condemned to be burnt: As they went to execution, such gracious words proceeded out of their mouths, as drew tears from the Spectators eyes: When they came to the Pile, they exceedingly encouraged one another; one of them saying, Since our Lord Christ hath suffered such grievous things for us, let us cheerfully suffer for him, and rejoyce that we have found so much favor with him, that we are counted worthy to die for the Law of God: The other said, I in the day of my Marriage found not so much inward joy as I do now. When fire was put to them, with a loud voice they said, Lord Jesus, thou in thy sufferings prayedst for thine enemies, therefore we also do the like. Forgive the King, the Men of Prague, and the Clergy, for they know not what they do, and their hands are full of Blood; and so they slept in the Lord. But one of their chief Persecutors, who wished that all the Piccards were hanged, beheaded or burnt by his own hands, had all these beset himself by Gods just judgment: For being much in debt, he hanged himself, and when his Friends had privately buried him, the common people hearing of it, digged up his carcass, and cast it away, which by the Magistrates command was ordered to be burnt; but when the Woodstack was consumed, and the carcass only scorched, his head was stricken off. Two godly Men burnt.

Zahere the Apostate, when under colour of an Inquisition against the Piccards, he raised up civil commotions, was by the King banished, where he died miserably: The like beset another of those cruel Persecutors. Comfort to death.

Anno 1535. Ferdinand the first succeeding in the Kingdom, the Popish party cunningly stirred up the Calixtines to persecute the Brethren: Whereupon, they suffering many grievous things, sent a petition, together with a confession of their Faith to Ferdinand at Vienna, subscribed by twelve Barons and thirty three Knights, complaining how unjustly they were accused by their Enemies, and that the Priests ordinarily cryed out that the Piccards might be slain without controul, and that a less sin was thereby committed, than if one killed a Dog; Ferdinand returned answer, that he had not leisure to consider of their Papers, yet promised that nothing should be done either against law or equity, till he had further knowledge of the cause. Gods judgment on Persecutors.

In the mean time the Brethren being much encouraged by Letters from Luther, Bucer and Capito, went on constantly; and through Gods mercy, a great number was added to the Church, till that fatal year 1547. At which time Charles the Fifth putting in execution the decrees of the Council of Trent, raised Wars against the Protestant Princes in Germany: At which time his Brother Ferdinand solicited the Bohemians for aid, but they refused it in regard of their ancient league with the House of Saxony. But the German Protestants being overcome in War, Ferdinand entred Bohemia with an Army, seised on Prague, imprisoneth the principal Nobles, Barons and Citizens, some he scourged, some he beheaded, and upon others he laid grievous Fines, and of others he sequestred all their Estates: Also he disarmed the City of Prague, took away their privileges, banishing some, whilst others went into voluntary exile. Then did the Devil raise up some to lay all the blame upon the Brethren, to which malicious suggestions the King giving heed, first by open Proclamation commanded all their Churches to be shut up, and then he took away their Peers, and banished them all out of his Realms. When this Thunderbolt came abroad, the Brethren agreed amongst themselves, that they would be more faithful to God and their consciences than they had been; and so by common consent, dividing themselves into three Companies, they went into Poland; and all of them had experience of an admirable divine protection in their journey, escaping some that might, and would have robbed them, but that they were restrained by God: As also in most places where they came, they found Christian commiseration and liberality of men towards them, and courteous entertainment in Poland, though most of them were Papists: Yet not long after the Bishop of that part where they were, got a Mandate from the King to drive them away: Then were they forced to go into the farthest parts of Prussia, where, by Duke Albert of Brandenburg, they had a place of habitation allotted to them; and one Paul Speratus, a Protestant Bishop, having conferred with them about their Faith, was very courteous and charitable to them.

The next Edict that Ferdinand set forth against the Brethren, was for the apprehending of all their Ministers, whereupon some of them retired into Moravia; others, that they might be near their flocks, hid themselves in private places, and in the night-time they visited the faithful, which continued for some years, but at last three of them fell into their Enemies hands; yet one of them, through the admirable Providence of God, escaped out of a deep dungeon in the Castle of Prague, and fled to his Brethren in Borussia, and he sometimes passing through Polonia, and preaching the Gospel, through Gods mercy, many of the Nobility, and others were converted by his Ministry; so that in a few years he erected twenty Churches in Poland.

The Enemies having imprisoned John Augusta, they much rejoiced at it, because he was a chief Minister amongst the Brethren, and as Luther in Germany against the Pope, so he, both by his Ministry and Writings had mightily confuted the Calixtines, and thereupon they laid to his charge his refusal to raise Forces for the assistance of Ferdinand, and intentions of bringing in John Frederick, Elector of Saxony to be King in Bohemia, and for the discovery of this pretended conspiracy, he was cruelly racked three times, but when they could draw nothing from him, they yet kept him in Prison seventeen years.

Anno 1549. Ferdinand published another Decree for the extirpating both of the Brethren, and Lutherans; and the Ministers that had received Ordination in Germany, or that were Married, were banished out of the Kingdom to the number of about two hundred.

Also the Baron of Schanow, a Man of much experience and learning, being apprehended under the pretence of some conspiracy against Ferdinand, was imprisoned, examined, and then laid on the rack: He with an Heroical indignation cut out his tongue, and cast it away, and being asked why he did it, he wrote on the Wall, I did it because I would not by any Torturers be brought to say any thing falsely against my self or others. He also in writing taxed the Tyrannical proceedings against himself and other innocents, citing the King and his Councillors to appear and answer it before the Tribunal of God, and so shortly after died.

About that time Ferdinand brought Jesuits into Prague, and built a stately Colledg for them, who sought by all means to overthrow the Church of Christ, and added fuel to the fire of Persecution.

After the death of Ferdinand, Maximilian succeeded, Anno 1562. who being of a peaceable disposition could by no means be induced that any should suffer for their Faith.

After

After him Rodolphus succeeded, Anno 1607. who treading in his Fathers steps, the Church of Christ enjoyed peace under him, yea, pure Religion so flourished through the whole Kingdom; that there was scarce one amongst an hundred that did not profess the Reformed Religion: But alas! with liberty of Religion, by little and little Men began to be licentious in their lives, and carnal security so encreased, that some began to preface that an horrible tempest should again overwhelm them.

Rodolphus Emperor.

Sin the forerunner of Persecution.

Mathias Emperor.

After the death of Rodolphus succeeded Mathias, who coming into Bohemia, Anno 1617. he called an Assembly of the States, but it being harvest time, few appeared: To them that did appear, Mathias complained, that since he had no issue he would adopt Ferdinand for his Son, commendeth his vertues, and desires that he may be crowned: The Orders assembled, affirmed, that a matter of that consequence could not be done in the absence of the United Provinces: Cesar urged, that what Bohemia should do would be confirmed by all the rest, that he grew faint, and that it could not be deferred till another time. In brief, the Orders protested, that the Term of Receiving him King, was new; that he ought first to be chosen, and then received: And some perceiving that there was no place for a free voice, departed; others, partly allured by promises, and partly deterred by threats, staid, and were present at the Coronation of Ferdinand, after which he presently went into Moravia, Silesia, and Lusatia, requesting to be received for their King.

Ferdinand nobly made King of Bohemia.

The Persecution of the Church in Bohemia, which began Anno Christi 1617.

Ferdinand* the Second, Emperor of Germany, being thus obtruded upon the Bohemians for their King, contrary to the ancient constitutions and customs of the Kingdom, and not lawfully elected thereunto, as he ought to have been, retired presently into Germany: And thereupon the Enemies of the truth began to crow, and openly to threaten the Protestants; and it appeared sufficiently that Ferdinand swore to the Orders with his mouth, but in his heart to the Pope; and presently after his departure, the Popish Bishops, Clergy, and Nobles, began to vex his Subjects for Religion, contrary to that assurance which the King had given to them: They attempted also the like in Prague, the Jesuites daily threatening that their Liberty in Religion should not last long. Then did they strictly prohibir the Protestants from Printing any thing unless licensed by the Chancellor of the Kingdom, themselves in the mean time divulging their own slanderous Pamphlets and dangerous writings against the Protestants.

Also instructions were given to the Captains and Judges that they should suffer no meetings in Churches except themselves were present, and except they had a Popish Priest to administer only in one kind.

The Burgavie also, who had the custody of the Crown, and priviledges of the Kingdom, was apprehended; because in the late Parliament he had stood for the free Election of a King, and delivered Prisoner to one of the bitterest Enemies of the Protestants.

The third Artifice.

In other places they destroyed the Churches of the Protestants.

The fourth Artifice.

In the beginning of the year 1618. The Governors of the University and Consistory met together, having formerly had power given them so to do, and choosing six persons, two Barons, two Knights, and two Citizens, to consult what was best to be done in this time of their Enemies insolency, there presently came an injuncton in Cesar's name to inhibit them to call any together, and that if any Man was called, he should not dare to appear upon the pain of High Treason.

Notwithstanding which, the major part of the States met, and when as new prohibitions and threats were spread abroad, and the States were informed that those Thunderbolts came not from the King, but from the Castle of Prague, their abused patience was turned into severity, and being guarded with a great Troop, they went to the Castle, and apprehended two of the chief Authors of these troubles, and threw them head-long out of the Castle Windows, together with their Secretary that was privy to all their designs: But God intending to preserve them to be the Bohemians scourges, they caught no hurt in the fall, falling upon the grafs, and great store of papers.

The Jesuites banished by the States.

Hereupon a great tumult was raised in Prague, but the States appeased it; and the first thing they did was to banish the Jesuites out of Bohemia, as the chief contrivers of these mischiefs: Then did they write to Cesar, that they had no intention against his Royal Majesty, but only to bring to punishment the disturbers of the publick peace, being authorized thereto by his Majesties Letter, and bound by their protestation; yet he resolved to revenge this Treason (as he called it) by force of Arms, and the Bohemians on the other side resolved to defend themselves, and for that end they chose thirty Directors, and the Moravians and Silesians resolved to joyn with them, when they perceived Religion to be the cause of the quarrel. And indeed this was that which the Enemies aimed at, and therefore they provoked the Bohemians by all ways, that so they might make a conquest of Bohemia, and for this end an Imperial Army presently entred the Kingdom under Dampier, and a Spanish Army under Bucquoy.

An Army raised against the Bohemians.

In the mean time the States resolved not to admit Ferdinand to be their King, who was so open an Enemy both to their Religion and Liberties, and who was obtruded upon them without a due Election: They sent also Embassadors to Francford, where the Electors were met together to choose a new Emperor, desiring that Ferdinand might not be admitted amongst them as King of Bohemia, notwithstanding which, he was admitted and chosen Emperor: The Bohemians in the mean time choosing Frederick Elector Palatine, for their King; This more enraged their Enemies, so that they sent another Army under Maximilian of Bavaria, which took two Protestant Towns by storm, and put all to the Sword, and every where made great slaughter of the Protestants: Then the Imperial Armies came to Prague, which being struck with a Pannick fear, the Protestant Army being overthrown in a set Battel under the Walls, and their new King fled, they delivered up the City to them, the Conqueror promising to keep Articles agreed upon, but performing nothing less. For they did more mischief to the Church of Christ by their subtle and slow proceedings, then lately by their outrageous fury; when the Sword, Fire, and Wheel were the Instruments of their rage against the faithful.

For a little before, when it was debated at Rome how they should deal with the Bohemians, and Germans after the Conquest; it was agreed, that seeing their former strong purges which they had used to expel Heretical humors, had not proved effectual; they therefore resolved not to put them to death, wherein they did glory as in Martyrdom, but rather to weary them and to change the hateful name of Inquisition, into the milder name of Reformation.

And whereas there was a debate amongst the Imperialists at Prague, whether all the Protestants should be presently banished, the negative was resolved on, because they would then carry much away with them, and so spoil the Province, and endure their banishment with greater ease, and therefore they concluded that they must first be squeezed, and deprived of their goods: and for this end the Soldiers at Prague were authorized to plunder the houses of Noblemen and Citizens; yet this was done at several seasons, and mostly in the Night; by which means, as the Enemies boasted, they took from the Protestants some millions of gold: For indeed hither were all their riches brought in the time of War, as to a place of the greatest greatest security. But as this fell to the Commanders shares, so the Neighbor-<sup>Plundering</sup> ring places were exposed to the fury of the rest, the Common Soldiers robbing and spoiling Villages, Towns, and Churches, burning and killing without any restraint: The Soldiers that were placed in Garrisons would not only have Free-quarter, but extorted Money from their Landlords every day.

Then were Commissions sent abroad, promising security to those Noblemen, Knights, Corporations, and Ministers, that would bring in a good sum of Money to pay the Army, which yet they would not receive as a free gift, but only desired to borrow it. Cæsars protection was also promised to those that were liberal, the rest were threatned to be plundered by the Soldiers.

They set down also what sums they expected from every one within such a time; they promised also, That when that was paid, the Soldiers should be removed, which made every one to bring in their Plate, Money, and Jewels, the more willingly.

Then were Commissioners sent to require certain Cities, that belonged to the Protestant Noblemen, to maintain the standing Forces of the Kingdom, and to contribute Corn for their publick Granaries. But whilst they were fed with a vain hope of lessening and removing the Soldiers, there were more listed, which raised the Taxes so high as was impossible for the People to pay; and whereas some were allured to deny the Truth, that they might be eased of Taxes, and Quarterings of Soldiers. This was not performed, whereupon they complained that promise was broken with them; but the Jesuites answered them, That they had no cause to complain, for they had provided for their Souls; and therefore they ought cheerfully to help the King by Contributions, and Quarterings of Soldiers; and that Hereticks must be dealt with, as mad Men and Children: From whom if you desire to get a Knife, you must shew them something else, though you never intend to give it them.

Thus the Kingdom being emptied of Gold and Silver, counterfeit and adulterate Money was Coyned in great abundance, that so the common People might rejoyce in their plenty. But in the mean time, the Soldiers would receive none but good Money.

Gold and Silver also was raised to ten times the price of it, and on a sudden the Emperor diminished the value, making every piece of Money to be worth but the tenth part; whereby the Bohemians were more impoverished suddenly, then if they had lain under the burden of an Army ten years.

Then was it ordered, that the Creditor should lose all the Money that he had lent in the time of the Rebellion, as they called it. And thus they were first impoverished, after which the Enemies insulted over them by infamous Books, insolent Pictures, and proud words.

Then did they send abroad their Commissioners of Reformation, who in every Town and Village endeavored to bring Protestantism into disgrace, and highly to magnifie and set abroad their own cause: The most eminent Men for Honor and Estates are invited to Apostacy, the inferior sort are either fooled by their examples, or compelled by threatnings.

Then was there an High Court of Reformers set up, from which there was no Appeal.

In the next place, the Soldiers exercised barbarous tyranny against the Ministers of Jesus Christ. One aged Minister lying sick in his Bed, they shot him to death as he lay, the next day they robbed and murdered another, another, as he was Preaching to his People, they came into the Church, and shot him to death. A Nobleman, and a Minister hearing of Soldiers that were coming that way, conveyed themselves away into a place of safety: The Soldiers when they came, caught a School-master, and binding him in Cords, examined him where the Lord of that place, and the Minister were, and where they had hid their Treasure; he confessed, that he knew neither the one nor the other: Whereupon they beat him, first with their fists, then with cudgels, then stripping him naked, naked, they so extreemly singed him with fire, that at last he promised to bring them where the Treasure was, shewing them a Ditch full of Stones; which for greediness of Gold, they emptied, but finding nothing, they beat him afresh: And when he professed that he knew of no Treasure, though through pain he had said so much, they cudgelled him, and with Clods beat him into the Ditch, and buried him under the Stones.

Presently after they lighted on another godly Minister, whom they so miserably tortured, that he died within five days, shamefully abusing his Daughters also; whom they led away with them.

Gods Providence.

Another godly Minister, for a moneth together, they excruciated with new invented mockeries: They spit in his Face, buffeted him with their Fists, exposed him to be beaten by every vile Rascal; they with a knotty Cord, twisten about his Forehead, with a stick so strained his Head, that his very Eys were ready to start out: Then they let loose a wild Horse upon him, which yet leaped quite over him, and did him no harm. At last, with much ado, he redeemed himself with five hundred Florences.

Another Pastor they lighted on, and because he had a better estate then the former, they tormented him more; sometimes covering him over with hot burning Coals, sometimes with Ice, till they had forced him to pay a thousand five hundred Florences for his Ransom, though shortly after, through extremity of the pain, he died.

A special Providence.

Another Minister they fetched from his House, and miserably tortured him by twisting a Cord about his Head; then tied they his Hands behind him, and his Legs with a small Cord, intending the next morning to torture him with fire; but in the night time, as he was earnest at his Prayers, repeating these words, In thee, O Lord, is my trust, he perceived his hands and feet miraculously to be loosed: Whereupon getting up, he went to the Gate, where were three Watchmen, one of them standing with his hand on his Sword, yet he passed by them undiscovered. When he came to the Town Gate, he was known by the Soldier that stood Sentinel, but he, being a Bohemian, was overcome by intreaty, and let him pass over the Bridge, whereby he escaped.

Cruelty to Ministers.

Another Minister, together with his Wife they cruelly burnt.

Another was hanged upon a Cross-beam, and making a fire under him, they broiled him to death.

Prodigious cruelty.

Another they cut into small pieces.

Another Minister they sought for, but he being escaped, they took a young Man in his house, laid him on his back, filled his Mouth with Gun-powder, which setting fire to, they miserably tore his Jaws in pieces, and then killed him.

Ingratitude.

When some Soldiers came to the house of another, he entertained them courteously, and made good provision for them; but when they knew he was a Minister, they first beat him cruelly, then killed him, stripped, and plundered his house; they also burnt his Library, and would not suffer his Body to be buried for seven weeks, during their abode there.

Another aged Minister and his Wife, were so sorely burned by a Soldier that demanded Money of them, that presently after they died.

Another was hung up by the Privy Members, being seventy years old, and his own Books burnt under him, and at last was shot through and slain.

Another was first assailed at seven hundred Florences, and then had his house plundered; and lastly, himself was murdered.

Another they caught and wounded, cutting his Neck half through; but being afterwards carried by some Friends to a Chirurgion, he lived about two years, but in much pain and torment.

Anno 1622.

Another being above seventy years old, they carried into the Market place, where laying him upon a fire, they burnt him to death.

Another was beaten so, that he died three days after.

The

The Jesuites laid wait for one Pesinus, a Man eminent for Learning and Piety, at last they suborned an Apostate to betray him; who discovering him as he rode in a Coach with a Nobleman, forty Horsemen came suddenly and took him away: But by the importunity of some Noblemen, he was ransomed for Four thousand Florences, and ended his life in banishment. Another being bound to a Tree, was made a mark for the Musquetiers to shoot at; and though they did not hit him, yet by reason of the affrightment, he died within three days.

Another being met by a notable Papist, was ran thorow with a Spear; but all this was done through Military licentiousness: Now we come to what was acted by Procel of Law.

1. That they should lend some thousands of pounds to Caesar, for the payment of his Army.

2. That they should publicly renounce the coming in of Frederick.

3. That they should bring into the Church the Popish Rites and Ceremonies.

4. That their Ministers should be ordained anew.

5. That the Ministers should leave their Wives, or get a Dispensation from the Archbishop.

6. That such as would renounce their Ecclesiastical Functions, should have publick promotions, and the favor of Caesar.

But they answered unanimously, That they would do nothing against their Consciences.

Then came forth an Edict, wherein the blame of all the former Rebellion (as they called it) was laid upon the Ministers of Prague, because they had stirred up, by their seditious and lying Sermons (as they pleased to stile them) and by their Writings; not only the common People, but the Nobles also against Caesar, and that they were Authors of the choice of Frederick, and that they still labored to stir up in the People an hatred against Caesar. Thereupon all the Ministers within Prague, were required within three days to depart out of Prague, and within eight days to depart out of all the Kingdom, and the Provinces belonging thereto, and never to return again: And if any, under what pretence soever, should stay or return again, or if any should presume to harbor or conceal any of them, that both the one and the other, should suffer death. This was Anno 1621.

Then were their Churches in Prague given to the Jesuites. It cannot be exprest what Lamentations and Mournings there were amongst the People, when thus they must leave their Pastors, and that for ever. Yet the German Ministers, whereof there were two, were suffered to continue in favor to the Duke of Saxony. Thendid as many as understood Dutch, flock to their Congregations, which so vexed the Jesuites, that they obtained not a banishment, but a gracious dismissal of them as they would have it called. Multitudes of People followed them, with great Lamentations and Tears, and in the Field they heard their farewell Sermon.

The next design was, to remove the Ministers out of other free Cities, and the Commissioners of Reformation were employed herein. One of them with a Troop of Horse coming to Slana, and going to Church, the Minister (a godly and learned Man) was reading the Gospel, the Commissioner lent a Soldier to him to bid him give over, but the Minister still going on, himself went to him with his Sword drawn, crying out, Thou foolish Preacher, leave off thy babling; and withal, he dashed the Bible out of his hand with his Sword. The Minister with eys, hands, and voice lift up to Heaven, repeated often, No, no unto you, you enter not into Heaven your selves, and forbid them that would. No, no, no unto you. But they mocking at these words, presently laid hands on him, justling him to and fro; whereupon he said, I for the Name of my Lord Jesus Christ am ready to suffer all this, and what else you shall impose. The People were much affrighted, but the Chief Magistrates, and many good Women interceding for him, he was at last dismissed, provided, That he should depart the City within three days. And thus was this faithful Shepherd, not without the great lamentations of his people, banished; where, about three years after, he died.

In a Neighboring City, the Minister for fear of these Barbarous proceedings, went away of himself, yet the Commissioners extorted a great sum of Money from his Church, and banished him in his absence. In another place, they commanded the Minister to depart from his Parish within three days, and from the City within eight days. He modestly asking the reason of his banishment, they told him, Caesar by conquest was Master of all the Churches, and that therefore he would put into them whom he pleased.

Illiterate persons put into the places of Christs Ministers.

But, into the rooms of these godly Preachers, were put in unclean men, wicked, blasphemers, and men illiterate, and of no worth, and yet they could not provide for all places: So that one of their hirelings supplied divers Churches, and instead of the wholesome Food of Gods Word, he fed them with poyson. Then brought they ignorant Monks out of Poland, unprofitable burthens to the Earth, yet fit enough to be scourges to unprofitable and common Gopellers.

Twenty one Ministers banished.

Also a Commissioner, with some Troops of Horse, entring into Cattenburgh, a place famous for maintaining the Orthodox Faith, calls before him the Ministers, casts them out of their places, and puts Jesuites into their Churches: And these Jesuites urging it, the Ministers were commanded to depart out of the City Gates before break of day, and out of the Kingdom within eight days: Hereby were twenty one Ministers driven away, many Citizens accompanying them; one of them at the parting, Preached upon that Text, They shall cast you out of the Synagogues, exhorting them to perseverance. All the multitude much bewailed their loss, and with great lamentations, wailing and kissing each other, they recommended themselves to the Blessing and Protection of the Almighty.

Ministers charged with Sedition.

In every place the Ministers were cast out of their Livings, some imprisoned, and after a while dismissed; and all commanded to depart the Kingdom, upon pain of death. Some were stifled with stink, whilst they lay in prison.

At last, Anno 1624. another Decree came forth from the King, whereby all the Ministers of the Gospel were commanded to depart the Kingdom by a peremptory day prefixed, because, as was alleaged, they were Seditious Men, and Seducers of the People: Yet herein they used this Artifice, that in most places this Edict was concealed, till the time was almost or altogether elapsed; so that by this means, the Ministers not having time to communicate their Counsels together, went into several Provinces; and some were fain to hide themselves in Caves and Dens, and those either returned privately, and visited their Auditors, or comforted such as came to them in the Mountains and Woods, Preaching and Administring the Sacraments to them.

Tentation.

Constancy.

But as soon as the Enemies understood it, they presently published a new Decree, wherein a punishment was proposed to those that should conceal the Ministers, and a reward to such as should betray them. Whereupon some of the Ministers were taken and cast into prison; then by the Jesuites were they by all ways solicited to Apostacy: And fear of death, hunger, cold, the stink of the prison, &c. prevailed with some to renounce their Ministry. But most bore up courageously against all storms; and at last, some by paying great fines, others by giving it under their hands, that they would never return into Bohemia, were dismissed.

A Minister Martyred.

One godly Minister was examined by tortures, when, where, and to whom he had administred the Sacraments of Baptism, or the Lords Supper, &c. He answered, swered, That he had neither laid down, nor shak'd his Ministry, which he received from Christ, and not from Caesar. Being proffered life if he would change his Religion, he answered, This body of mine is subject to corruption, and now it begins to decay already; why would you have me hinder it? Being brought forth to execution, the Cryer with a loud voice proclaimed, That he was guilty of Sedition: But he with a loud voice said, I suffer for the truth of Christ. None of the Citizens were suffered to accompany him, yea, they were threatned to be shot, if they did but look out at their Windows, and that his voice might not be heard, the Drums and Trumpets sounded continually. As he was passing on, he cheerfully said, This day shall my Soul be with Christ; the Captain said, With the Devil in Hell. The Martyr replied, But you wish your impious crew will run headlong thither, except ye repent. Then was his right hand cut off, wherewith he gave the Cup in the Sacrament; then was his head cut off, his bowels taken forth, and wrapped in his shirt, his quarters set upon four stakes, and his head upon the fifth.

The numerous Artifice, Summe Papacy, The chief Nobles imprisoned.

After this did the Commissioners go into Moravia, to a Noble Baron called Charles de Zerzina, a Man for Wisdom and Virtue, famous through all Europe, a constant Professor of Religion, and one who maintained twenty four Ministers of the Brethren within his Jurisdiction: They told him, That they had an Express command from Cardinal Ditrichsteine, to expel all these Ministers out of the Countrey. He answered, That in Matters of Religion he ought not to be subject to the Cardinal, and therefore from him he appeals to Caesar. They granted him fourteen days to prosecute his Appeal; but the Baron being not in health, could not go in that time to Caesar. Then they came again to him, and told him, That it should be in his choice, whether he would send them away himself, or suffer them to do it. The Baron answered, That he could not banish those whom he knew to be the Servants of Jesus Christ, nor could consent that they should do it. Yet that night they sent abroad their Citations, to require all the Inhabitants of that Village, to appear before them the next morning; at which time the Minister and People came. Then did they read to them Caesar's Edict, asking them if they would submit to it, they answered, That they wholly relied upon the Will of God, whom they served in the Gospel of his Son, and therefore they were resolved to undergo what punishment they should inflict, seeing they suffered only for the Name of Jesus Christ, and not for any ill deeds. Then they demanded of them, whether they would forsake their Heresie, and return to the Catholick Church? Which they unanimously denied. The Commissioners would have given them time to consider of it, but they all answered, That in so Religious a cause as this, they needed no deliberations. Hereupon in Caesar's name they banished them, commanding them to depart within eight days. These godly persons obeyed, and by the Baron, at his own charge, they were conveyed into Hungary. The like they did in other places. So that the Ministers of the Gospel, through all Bohemia and Moravia, were thrust out, and ignorant and illiterate persons set in their rooms.

The next design of the Enemies was against the Nobles. The Crime was, for taking up Arms for Frederick their lawful King, against an Usurper: For though hope of Pardon was granted, if laying down Arms they would submit to Caesar's Mercy, yet divers of them were apprehended. And first they seized upon some that were of the rank of Defenders of the Kingdoms Liberties, and then all those whom they knew to have done any thing for the common good of Religion and Liberty, or feared, that they might be able to do for the time to come; and all such as feared to break their Faith given to Frederick. These were about the number of fifty Men, famous for Learning, skill in Military Affairs, and Prudence in Government, who were the light, delight and safeguard of their Countrey.

All of these in one night, and at one hour, were apprehended in their Houses, when they suspected no danger, and by the Captains were commanded to to get up into Waggon; and so some of them were carried to the Castle of Prague, others to the Majors House. The next day Proclamations were issued out, requiring all those that had hid themselves, or departed the Kingdom, to appear within six weeks. But they not appearing, Sentence was pronounced, That all such as were guilty of Treason, should forfeit Goods, Honors, and Lives; and then their names were set upon the Gallows. The next day Sentence was pronounced against their Heirs, That all their Goods should be confiscate to the King.

Cause.

Then did they proceed to the tryal of the Noblemen whom they had taken. Two Apostate Civilians were appointed to examine them, with some of the Nobility, who tired them out with a thousand impertinent questions, laboring to extort that from them whereof they were never guilty: Which one of them not able to indure, renting his Garments, and opening his Breast, said, Tear into a thousand pieces this Body, and search into my Heart, and you shall find nothing there but what is expressed in my Apology. The love of Religion and Liberty made us unsheath our Swords; but seeing God would have Caesar prevail, and hath delivered us into your hand, his will be done. Others of them also stoutly maintained, that their cause was not the worse, because of the success.

After some time, when none of the Noblemen would yield, or acknowledge themselves in an Error, or sue unto them for Mercy, they proceeded to execution; their Judgments were committed to such as were sworn Enemies to the Gospel.

After Sentence was passed, it was sent to Caesar to consider of it; and he was so troubled, that he slept not that night, and the next morning calling his Confessor, he said to him, I adjure thee upon thy Conscience to tell me, whether I may with a safe Conscience pardon these that are condemned? Or whether I should suffer execution to pass on them? The Confessor answered, O Caesar, both are in thy power. Then did he with his Pen pardon some, and left others to execution, with a great addition of shame and ignominy.

Their condemnation.

Presently after they were brought out singly to hear their Sentence, wherein some were condemned to death, others to perpetual imprisonment, others to banishment, and some were reserved to Caesars further pleasure.

Profane Blasphemy.

Then were each sort of Prisoners carried to their several Prisons; the Noblemen into the inward Prison of the Castle, the Citizens to the Majors House; and as they went, some Villains were suborned to insult over them, saying, why do they not now sing, The Lord reigneth?

Then did the Wives, Children, and Kinsfolk, of the condemned Persons, humbly Petition for their lives: But answer was made, that all the favor which could now be granted to them, was, that they should have leave to bury the Corps of their Friends.

Temptation
resisted.

In the Evening, the condemned Men, which were Twenty seven in number, had notice given them of the day wherein they were to suffer; and therefore they were advised to send for Jesuites or Capuchins, or a Minister of the Augustine Confession, for the good of their Souls; but they must expect no Minister of the Brethren, for that would not be granted to them. The Jesuites and Capuchins, not staying till they were called for, flocked to them, using many persuasions, promising life, &c. if they would turn. But God so strengthened them, that all those endeavors of Satans imps were in vain. Then were some Ministers of the Augustine Confession sent for, who spent that time which remained in Religious Exercises, Conferences, Prayer, and singing of Psalms; and lastly, by administering the Sacrament to them.

Credo quod
habes & habes.

They which were of the Brethren, willingly admitted these Ministers, protesting, That they acknowledged them for Brethren, though they differed from them in some things; only two of them did not partake of the Sacrament, for fear of some false accusation, comforting themselves with that saying, Believe, and thou hast eaten.

They

They which were Prisoners in the Majors House, being called to Supper, the Night before they were to suffer, comforted themselves, saying, That this was their last Supper on Earth, but to morrow they should feast with Christ in his Kingdom. Whereupon a great Papist flouted, saying, Hath Christ Cooks for you in Heaven? Blasphemy.

When it was told them, that the Noblemen were coming to the Scaffold in the Market-place, where they were to suffer, they hasted to the Windows, and entertained their Fellow Martyrs, with singing the forty fourth Psalm. The Night after they spent in Psalms, Prayer, godly Discourse, and mutual Exhortations, That since it pleased God to call them before others, to this honor of Martyrdom, they hoped by their constancy to confound the world, to glorifie Christ, and to leave a good example to others. And singing the sixty eighth Psalm, wherein David prays to God, To shew some token of good upon him: One of them said, Shew therefore some token of good upon us, O God, whereby we thy Servants may be strengthened by thy goodness, and our Enemies confounded. And being full of Faith, he said further, Be of good cheer, for even in this God hath heard your voice, and to morrow he will shew some wonderful sign; whereby he will witness that we suffer for his Cause. Joy in Tribulation.

Early in the Morning they washed their Faces, and put on clean Clothes; as if they had been going to a Wedding; and cut off the Collars of their Doublets, that when they came to the Scaffold, there should need no new making ready. Then did they earnestly pray to God; That he would be pleased to confirm and strengthen both themselves and the people, concerning their innocency. Faith.

Presently after the Sun rising, a beautiful Bow appeared, and compassed the Heavens, the Ministers, Soldiers, and many others looking upon it. The Martyrs looked out at the Window, and saw a Rainbow of an unusual colour, the Heavens being clear, and no Rain of two days before: Whereupon, falling upon their knees, they lifted up their voices and hands, praising God for this sign that he shewed from Heaven. Then presently was a Gun discharged, which was a warning for their bringing forth to execution: Whereupon those Champions of Christ encouraged one another, praying, That each of them might be strengthened, &c. Then came Troops of Horse and Foot to fetch them; the Streets, Market-place, and Houses, being filled with multitudes of Spectators. Prayer.

The Martyrs being called forth one by one, went to their death with an undaunted courage, hasting as if they had been going to a Banquet: When one was called for, he thus took his leave of the rest, Farewel most loving Friends, God give you the comforts of his Spirit, patience and courage, that what formerly with your Mouths you have professed, you may confirm by your glorious death. Behold, I go before, that I may see the glory of my Lord Jesus Christ; you will follow me, that we may together see the face of our Heavenly Father. At this hour all sorrow departs from me, and joyfull Eternity shall succeed it. Then did the rest answer, God above to whom you are going, prosper your journey, and grant that you may pass happily from this vale of misery, unto that Heavenly Countrey. The Lord Jesus send his Angels to meet you. Go, dear Brother, into thine and our Fathers House, and we will follow after; presently we shall meet in the Heavenly Glory. And this we are confident of, through him in whom we have believed. Courage.

The first was the Lord Schlik, a Man of admirable parts, about fifty years old: When he was condemned to be quartered, and his parts to be scattered here and there, he said, The loss of a Sepulchre is easie. Being exhorted by a Minister to courage, he said, I have Gods favor so, that no fear of death doth trouble me. I have formerly dared to oppose Antichrist, and I dare now die for Christ. The felons troubling him when he came to the Scaffold, he shook them off, and seeing the Sun shining bright, he said, Christ, thou Son of Righteousness, grant that through the darkness of death, I may pass into eternal light; and so having ended his Prayers, he constantly received the stroke. His right hand and head were hung on the High Tower upon the Bridge. The Martyrs mutual farewells.

The Lord Wenceslaus was next, about seventy years old, famous for Learning, Religion, and his travels through divers Countreys; his House was formerly plundered, even to his wearing apparel, he only saying, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away. Being asked, why he would ingage himself in Fredericks Cause? He said, My Conscience pressed me to do what I did; I am here, my God, dispose of me thy servant as seems good in thine eyes. I am full of years, take me out of this life, that I may not see that evil that is coming on my Countrey. Afterwards holding forth his Bible, he said, Behold my Paradise, it never yielded me so much Nectar and Ambrosia, as now. When he was sentenced, he said to the Judges, You have a long time thirsted after my Blood, but know withal, you will find God a revenger of innocent Blood, for whose cause we suffer. A Fryer saying to him, You are deceived in your opinion; he answered, I rely not on opinion, but on the infallible Truth of God; for I have no other way, but him who said, I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life. On the Scaffold, stroaking his long Beard, he said, My gray Hairs, behold what honor remains for you, that you should be crowned with Martyrdom! And so praying for the Church, his Countrey, his Enemies, and commending his Soul to Christ, his Head was cut off, and set on the Tower.

The next was the Lord Harant, a Man that had gained much experience by his travels in Asia, Africa, and Europe; his crime was, That he had taken an Oath to be true to Frederick, and durst not violate it. As he was going to suffer, he called the Minister to him, and told him, That he much feared his wives inconstancy in Religion; and therefore desired him to exhort her to constancy, and not to suffer herself to be drawn from her Religion by any allurements, assuring her, That it is the infallible way to Salvation. Then to exhort her to use more clemency to his Subjects, rather easing them over charging them with Burthens. Lastly, To require her to have a care of his Children, and to bring them up in the pure Religion, &c. Being called to execution, he said, I have travelled through many Countreys, through many Barbarous Nations, escaped many perils by Sea and Land, and now suffer innocently in my own Countrey, and by them, for whose sake, I, and my Forefathers have spent our Estates and Lives: Father forgive them. Then he said, In thee, O Lord, have I hoped, let me not be confounded. On the Scaffold he said, Into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my Spirit: In thee, O Lord, have I trusted from my youth. I am confident, that I shall be accepted by that ignominious death of my Saviour. And falling upon his knees, he said, To thee, O Lord, I commend my Spirit; for thou, O God, just and true, hast redeemed me. And so he received the fatal stroke with the Sword.

The next was Casper Kaplitz, a Knight, of eighty six years old: When the Minister came to him after his condemnation, he said, See me, a miserable old Man, who have often intreated my God, that he would have mercy on me, and take me out of this miserable life, but have not obtained it; for God hath reserved me to be a spectacle to the world, and a sacrifice to himself; Gods will be done. My death indeed is disgraceful in the eyes of Men, but glorious in the sight of God: For God will account that death precious in his sight, which I suffer for his Glory and Truth. And when it was told him, That he might have his life, if he would ask pardon: He answered, That he would ask pardon of him, against whom he had committed many sins all his life, but he never offended the Prince; and therefore would not give occasion to suspect that he had committed some crime, for which he had deserved death, &c. God forbid therefore, said he, that I should be separated from this holy Company of Martyrs. As he was going to the Scaffold, being feeble with age, he said, O my God strengthen me, lest I fall down, and become matter of scorn to the Enemies. Being crooked with age, and hanging down his Head, the Executioner could not well come at his Neck; whereupon the Minister said to him, My noble Lord, as you have commended your Soul to Christ, so now offer up your heavy head cheerfully to God, and lift up your self towards Heaven. Then lifting up his Head as well as he could, he said, Lord Jesus into thy hand I commend my Spirit; and so his Head was cut off.

The

The next was Procopius Dorzecki, who after his condemnation said to the Minister, I have had a great contention all night with old Adam, so that it made me sweat again; But thanks be to my God, by whom my soul hath overcome all temptations: saying further, O Almighty God, strengthen thy Servant that I may not be made a derision to mine Enemies by any fear of death; and as thou wast wont to encourage thy holy Martyrs, so I strongly believe thou wilt comfort me. When he was called forth to Execution, he said, Thanks be to God, who doth now call me to himself, to him I have lived, and for him I will die; For my Saviour hath therefore died and risen again, that he might be Lord both of the living and the dead: I know that my soul shall live, and my Body shall be raised like to his glorious Body. Upon the Scaffold, he said to the Imperial Judges, Tell Cæsar that we are now under his Judgment, but he shall undergo a more grievous, yet just Judgment of God: And seeing a gold Medal hanging about his Neck, wherein was ingraven the Coronation of Frederick, he delivered it to one that stood by, saying, I require thee that when my dear King Frederick shall recover the Throne of this Kingdom, thou deliver him this, and tell him, that for his sake I wore it till my death, and that now I lay down my life willingly, for God and my King, and so presently after he lost his Head.

Procopius Dorzecki.

The next was the Lord Frederick de Bile, who suffered death likewise patiently and piously.

The next was the Lord Henry Otto, a Man of great judgment, who having received the sentence of condemnation, said, O Cæsar, do you indeed establish your Throne by our Blood? But what account will you make to God of it in the day of judgment? &c. Kill my Body, disperse my Members whether you please; yet do I believe that my Saviour will gather them together again, and clothe them with skin, so that with these Eyes I shall see him, with these Ears I shall hear him, with this Tongue I shall praise him, and rejoyce with this Heart for ever. Afterwards when the Minister came to him, amongst other things he said, I was troubled, but now I feel a wonderful refreshing in my heart; adding, with his hands lift up to Heaven; I give thee thanks, O most merciful Saviour; who hast been pleased to fill me with so much comfort; O now I fear death no longer, I will die with joy. As he was going to the Scaffold he said to the Minister, I am sure that Christ Jesus will meet my soul with his Angels, that he may bring it to an everlasting Marriage, where I shall drink of a new Cup, a Cup of joy for ever: This death I know shall not separate me from him: Upon the Scaffold lifting up his eyes to heaven, he said, Behold I see the Heavens open, pointing with his hand to the place, where others also observed a certain brightness which dazzled their eyes; after he had prayed silently, he said, Into thy hands O Lord God I commend my spirit, have pity on me through Jesus Christ, and receive me that I may see thy glory; and so he received the stroke of the Sword.

The next was Dionysius Zervius formerly a Papist, but being told of the promises made to the people of God concerning the pardon of sins, and assurance of salvation to those that believe in Christ, he struck his Breast, and with tears in his eyes, cried out, This is my Faith, and in this I die, I rest in the grace of Christ, and I trust in my God, that he will graciously accept my contrite spirit. When upon the Scaffold the Jesuites exhorted him, he listened not to them, but turned from the Crucifix, and falling down on his knees he prayed softly: Then looking up towards Heaven, he cried, They can take away the Body, but they cannot take away the Soul; O Lord Jesus, I commend that unto thee: and so he ended his life being fifty six years old.

Dionysius Zervius.

The next was an aged Man about seventy years old, that had been long lame: His crime was that he had assisted Frederick with his counsel and wealth. At the time of his death, he said, O Lord Jesus, who being innocent didst undergo death, grant that I may die the death of the righteous, and receive my soul into thy hands.

him then if the Emperor had given him life, and restored him to his estate with addition of more: Afterwards he said to the Minister, God is our witness, that we fought for nothing but the Liberty of Religion; and in that we are overcome and condemned to die, we acknowledge, and find that God will not have his truth defended by our Swords, but by our blood, &c. When he saw divers called out before him, he said, what is the matter my God? thou knowest that I resign my self wholly unto thee: Ah do not despise thy Servant, but make hast to take me away: And when the Sheriff came for him, he rejoiced, and said, Praised be my God, that I shall now be taken out of the world, that I may be with Christ; and so he went to meet him. On the Scaffold he comforted himself with that promise, Father, I will, that where I am, my Servants may also be, to behold that glory which thou gavest me: Therefore (said he) I make hast to die that I may be with Christ, and see his glory; and so he suffered Martyrdom courageously.

The next was Valentine Cockken of about sixty years old: During his imprisonment, he was full of heavenly discourse, and at the Scaffold he said, Grant me, O God, to pass through this valley of death, that I may presently see thee, for thou knowest, my God, that I have loved thy word, bring me O God, through the paths of life, that I may see fulness of joy in thy presence: and kneeling down, he said, Into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my spirit; and so holily ended his life.

Toby Steffick.

The next was Toby Steffick a Man of a composed temper, and sincere in Religion: He spent most of the time of his imprisonment in silent sighs and tears: Before his Execution he said, I have received many good things of the Lord all my life long; shall I not therefore receive this Cup of affliction? I embrace the will of God, who by this ignominious death makes me conformable to his Son, and by a narrow way brings me to his Heavenly Kingdom; I praise God who hath joyned me undeservedly to these excellent Men, that I might receive with them the Crown of Martyrdom: When he was called to die, he said, My Saviour being about to die, said, Father, not as I will, but as thou wilt: Thy will be done. Shall I therefore who am but a worm, yea, dust, and a shadow contradict his will? far be it from me; yea, I come willingly, my God, only have mercy on me, and cleanse me from my sins, that no spot or rinkle may appear in me, but that I may appear pure in thy sight; And so he lifted up himself full of sighs, yet full of hope, and as he was praying he rendred up his spirit unto God.

A Prophecy.

Then was Jessenius, a Doctor of Physick, called forth, a Man famous for Piety and Learning all over Europe: Having heard his Sentence, he said, You use us too cruelly and disgracefully; but know, that our Heads shall be buried, which you ignominiously expose for a spectacle; which afterwards came to pass, Anno 1631. when the King of Sweden with his Army took Prague, and caused the Martyrs Heads to be taken from the Tower, and solemnly and honorably buried. When the Hangman required his Tongue to cut it off, he willingly put it out, and falling upon his knees, as he was praying, his Head was cut off, his Body quartered and set upon four stakes.

Maximilian Hostialick

The next was Maximilian Hostialick, a Learned, and Pious Man: After his condemnation he was sadder than the rest, and being asked by the Minister the reason of it, he said, The sins of my youth do now come into my mind: For though I know that nothing remains to condemn them which are in Christ Jesus, yet I know that God exerciseth justice as well as mercy towards his own: Being called to death, he said, Look upon me, O Lord my God, and lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death, and lest mine enemies say, we have prevailed. Afterward repeating the words of Simeon, Now lettest thou thy Servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, he was Beheaded.

John Kutnaw
His Speech to the Jesuits.

The next was John Kutnaw, who when the Jesuites began to speak to them, said, Pray you trouble not our consciences, we are sufficiently furnished against the fear of death, we need none of your help: And when they would have proceeded, he said, why do you create unprofitable labor to your selves, and trouble to us? Then said they one to another, They are hard rocks, and will not suffer themselves to be removed: To whom he answered, You say true, Christ is an hard rock, and we are firmly fixed on him. Afterwards he said to his Fellow-Martyrs, I understand that I must be hanged, but whether by the neck, middle or feet, I know not, nor care not; this only is my grief, that my Blood may not be mingled with yours, that we might be made one sacrifice to God. When he was called forth to Execution, he was besprinkled with the tears of his Friends, to whom he said, Play the Men Brethren, and refrain from weeping, I go before, but it is but a short time and we shall meet in the Heavenly Glory. When he was upon the Ladder, he said, I have plotted no Treason, committed no Murder, I have done nothing worthy of death, but I die because I have been faithful to the Gospel, and my Country? O God pardon my Enemies, for they know not what they do: But thou, O Christ, have pity on me, for I commit my soul unto thee; and so he slept in the Lord.

Wenceslaus Gisbitzky

The next was Simeon Suffickey, who when he saw the Jesuites coming, he said to his Companions, These Birds of prey are flying hither, but they shall not feed on these Carcasses, but return hungry: For God hath promised to preserve his own as the apple of his Eye, and therefore he will not suffer us to be seduced. The last night he had a great conflict with the flesh, because the Scripture saith, Cursed is every one that hangeith on a Tree. But when the Minister told him, that that Curse was taken away by the death of Christ, he was well satisfied: He went to his death praying and singing, and being hanged next to Kutnaw, who was his Son in law; after he was dead, he turned towards him, and so near that their mouths touched each other; so that their Enemies said, These were such obstinate Rebels that they cease not to plot after death.

The next was Nathaniel Wodnianskey, who when the Jesuites solicited him to Apostacy, he said to them, You take away our lives under pretence of Rebellion, and not content with that, you seek to destroy our souls: Glut your selves with sight of our blood, and be satisfied with that, but we shall leave a sting in your consciences: Afterwards his own Son saying to him, My Father, if hope of life should be proffered you, upon condition of Apostacy; I pray you be mindful of keeping your faith to Christ: He answered, It is very acceptable to me; my Son, to be exhorted to constancy by you, but what makes you to suspect me? I rather advise and exhort you to follow your Father's steps, and to exhort your Brethren, Sisters, and Children, to that constancy whereof I shall leave you an example, and so he patiently ended his life upon the Gallows.

The next was Wenceslaus Gisbitzky, to whom were given great hopes of life: And the Minister fearing Satans stratagems, advised him to take heed of security, and to prepare himself for the encounter of death. Upon the Scaffold, seeing

His Prayer. his hopes frustrate, he fell on his knees, and said, we are prostrate before thee, O Eternal Father, do not forsake us, have pity on us through Jesus Christ: we would say more, but we are not able to express it: Into thy hands do we commend our souls, perfect that which thou hast begun to work in us. Render to us our inheritance that we may sing Holy, Holy, Holy, &c. and so in the midst of his Prayers he ended his life.

His Martyrdom. There was also one Martin Fruin, an eminent Citizen of Prague, who being taken in his own House, was scoffed at by the Soldiers, beaten with their fists, and afterward cruelly tortured, and so burnt in the privy parts, that for six moneths he was troubled with most grievous pain: He was shut up in Prison from all Company, and at last was found dead in the Castle ditch under the Tower.

He is murdered. Presently after the Execution of these holy Martyrs, all their goods were confiscated, as also of those that were driven into Banishment. Then was a Proclamation published, wherein a general pardon of all crimes was offered to all the Inhabitants of the Kingdom, only their goods were confiscated, either in whole or in part, which must be brought into his Majesties Treasury, to pay his debts which were contracted by this necessary War: Besides which, they were to make a confession of their faults in a form prescribed before Cardinal Lichtenstein, who was *Cæsar*s Viceroy, and if any did not appear, he should lose this favor.

Recantation prescribed. Hence it was that the Enemies publicly boasted that none were punished but such as were convicted by their own confession. Then by Edict all were forbidden to diminish, or wait their goods, by selling them, or conveying them over to others; and if any Man should send away his goods to another place, all should be lost; and whosoever received such goods, should pay so much of his own to the Emperor.

The twentieth Artifice. Yet the merry Judges turned all this to a jest, saying to divers that pleaded their innocency from having any hand in bringing in Frederick, That though they had not actual sins, yet they were infected with the original sin of Heresie and wealth, and therefore could not be exempted from punishment.

The Protestants begged. Then did they proceed to take from the Protestants all their Castles, Towns, and Villages, whereby they were deprived of their livelihoods, and driven into strange places: Some were forced to cast themselves upon their Popish Friends, others to become Servants to their own destroyers.

Their debts and money seized on. Afterwards all their personal Estates were sequestered, scarce leaving so much as a garment for them wherewith to cover their nakedness: And left any Man should have money at use, they commanded all to bring in all their Bonds, upon pain of losing all their debts, if they concealed the least: And when any considerable sum was brought in, the Kings Treasurers were at hand, who protesting that the Emperor had need of it to defray his charges of War, took it away, giving to the Party a note that so much was due to him from the Emperor, which yet was never repayed.

The Soldiers get most. And thus the Protestants being commanded to depart the Kingdom, the Popish party divided their confiscated goods and lands amongst themselves, and as it lay commodious for any of them, they added this or that Village, Town, Castle, or Lordship to their own, but the greatest part fell to strangers shares, Spaniards, Italians, or Germans which were Commanders in the Imperial Army, instead of their pay. If any Widows or Orphans had lands or goods not taken away, their Popish Neighbors would either circumvent them by craft, or weary them out by quartering Soldiers upon them, and so enforced them to sell their lands, at what prices themselves listed to make thereof, and yet afterwards not paying that neither.

The one and twentieth Artifice. Then did the Emperor call for the ancient Charters of the Kingdom, which he immediately rent, and threw into the fire.

Charles de Zerovine. The Ministers being all banished, the noble Lord Charles de Zerovine did yet not only retain his household Chaplain; but he sustained also many others privately, vately in their Caves with Bread and Water; and not fearing Man, he did not give liberty to his own Subjects, but to divers others in neighboring places to resort to the holy exercises which were performed in his Castle.

Hereupon the Enemies by a new Edict published, that all such Barons, Noblemen, and Citizens, as kept any Protestant Tutor for their Children, should presently dismiss him; otherwise he should be taken and punished.

Also by another Edict all the Protestants were cast out of Protection of the Laws, and were to have no benefit by them.

Accord

The Enemies being every day puffed up with their successes and victories, made a Decree that all the Protestant Noblemen should presently depart out of the Kingdom, and the Emperor published a Proclamation, that to prevent all divisions which were dangerous to the Kingdom and Magistrates, therefore he was resolved no longer to tolerate any of the inferior, much less of the superior Estates of either Sex, who was infected with Heretical errors: And withal, he granted to the superior States the term of six moneths, wherein to learn the holy Roman Catholick faith: And for that end he appointed Commissioners of Reformation to instruct them, requiring them to be obedient to his will, and to be diligently instructed by them, otherwise they should not be suffered to stay in the Kingdom, much less to possess their goods; and therefore he required all those which at the end of that term of six moneths did not turn Catholicks, immediately to depart the Kingdom, and never to return again.

Hereupon they which loved Religion at their hearts, did presently separate themselves by banishment: Others solicited Cesar by petitions, either to change the decree, or to grant them a longer time: Others there were that thinking to deceive the Emperor and Pope, did buy false testimonies of the Priests, that they had been at Confession, and communicated in one kind, and so made shew of a dissembled Apostacy, thereby to avoid banishment.

Then was the forenamed Act extended unto Widows, and the Protestants Children were commanded to be delivered to the care and instruction of Catholicks, or else to be shut up in Monasteries, and this caused extreme grief and groanes, when Noble-mens Sons, and Daughters, even Maids that were marriageable, were pulled from their Parents, and Friends, and thrust into Jesuits Colledges, or Monks Cels; their Goods being taken also from them, and committed to Papists.

The cunning craftiness of those seducing Reformers, deceived many unwary Persons, whilest they told them, that they might hold their former opinions; only for order sake they must acknowledg the Roman Bishops to be the visible head of the Church: Hereby the simpler sort, thinking that they were not constrained to any other Faith, but what they had formerly learned, thought that they might with a safe conscience promise that outward obedience. And if these seducers saw any one of more Nobility than ordinary, they presently suggested to them how much it grieved Cesar that those ancient Families which had formerly been the ornaments and props of the Kingdom, should cast themselves out into banishment through there unadvisedness, when they might remain and flourish under the favor both of God and Cesar; and this ruined many of the Protestant Nobility, who preferred their Earthly, before the Heavenly Country.

Yet about a hundred Families, leaving their inheritances, and all their possessions, went away: Amongst these was the Lord de Zerotine, who might have lived in his Country if he would have deprived himself of the worship of God, by the loss of his Minister, or if he would have used it covertly, yet he rather chose to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to continue the enjoyments of his earthly possessions.

And whereas many of these Protestants were gone into Cilicia, and Assyria, the Emperor sent forth a Proclamation, wherein he protested, that it was not his intention to remove them out of Bohemia and Moravia; and to suffer them to be incorpoincorporated Provinces; and therefore he commanded them to depart from thence also, or else they should be brought to punishment; requiring them also to send back their Children which they had carried with them, upon penalty of losing all the goods which any of them could demand in his Country.

Protestants
Wives banished from their Husbands,

Presently after he published another Edict, wherein he required all the Protestant Wives of the Catholicks, either to reform, or to go into banishment: But when many of the chief Officers of the Kingdom had Protestant Wives, and they would not indure that they should be thus divorced from them; he set forth another Edict, whereby they were tolerated till the death of their Husbands, and then they should be excluded from their Inheritances, and sent into banishment: And required that in the mean time they should absent themselves from all festival and nuptial solemnities, or else should take the lowest places after the Catholicks.

The exiles sought after,

And whereas some of the Protestants did privately return; or stay to make the best of that little that did remain unto them: Proclamation was sent out that all such should be apprehended and imprisoned; and to warn all such as had harbored any of them, upon their allegiance, to appear before the chief Officers in the Castle of Prague: requiring that if any knew where any of them lay hid, they should secretly and suddenly attach them, and bring them to Prison.

The three and twentieth Ar-
tifice.
Laws repealed.

Then did the Emperor repeal, and disannul divers of the ancient Statutes of the Kingdom, that made most for the Peoples Liberties, as concerning their free Election of a King, &c. that he might the better every where oppress them.

The four and twentieth Ar-
tifice.

Then in all the free Cities, Men of base and mean quality were appointed to determine all businesses, and to be the chief Officers, and to these were added some of the chief of the Soldiery, the better to procure subjection.

These Cities also they impoverished by Taxes and Contributions, which continued divers years, and were extorted by the Soldiers power.

Apostates promoted,

Then Mass-Priests were put into the places of godly Ministers, and People were compelled to frequent the Mass: Marriages were forbidden, except amongst the Catholicks: Such as turned Apostates were promoted to all places of Magistracy in the Cities, though men of no judgment, nor experience.

Then were these Articles given to the Captains of Distresses.

The five and twentieth Ar-
tifice.

I. That whosoever is not of the Kings Religion, all traffick and commerce shall be debarred him.

II. whosoever shall suffer private Preaching, Baptism, or Matrimony in his house, shall pay a great Fine, or suffer six moneths imprisonment; but if he harbor a Preacher, he shall lose Goods and Life.

III. If any man shall work upon Catholick Holy-days, he shall be imprisoned, and pay ten Florences.

IV. It shall not be lawful for any Non-Catholick to make a Will; if he do, it shall be null.

V. No Youth shall be bound Apprentice, or learn any Art or Trade, unless he learn the Catholick Religion.

VI. The poor People in Hospitals, except they be converted by such a day, shall be turned out, &c.

After the taking of the City of Prague, Papists were examined upon Oath to declare what they knew or heard that the Protestants had spoken or done against Cesar. Then was an Act published to the rest of the Citizens, that though they had forfeited their whole Estates, yet they should not be wholly sequestred, but every one should contribute part of his Estate to support the Army: All Men also were required upon Oath to discover what their Estates were, according to which they they were enjoined to pay a ransom to obtain a pardon; yea, all trading was inhibited to such as were not Catholicks.

In the City of Kuttenberg were abundance of silver Mines, and the Inhabitants generally were zealous Professors: Hereupon so soon as they began to be molested for Religion, the Kings Revenue began to diminish, most of the Workmen giving over the work: The King seeing this, he farms his Revenues to the Citizens for ten years, promising that in the Interim they should not be troubled with Soldiers, nor for their Religion; and hereto he set his hand and seal: But Satan envying their place and liberties, stirs up the Jesuites, to move the King to break his Covenant within four moneths after: And the Soldiers were sent thither again, and they began again to be questioned about their Religion. The Citizens astonished at this manifest breach of Covenant, humbly petition that no violence might be offered to them, which would overthrow the Mental-works: But instead of answer, the Major and chief Aldermen had twenty Musquetiers apiece put into their Houses upon free quarter, till they had driven themselves to a Priest. The Soldiers domineered exceedingly, wasting these Mens Estates by their profuseness, and abusing them divers other ways at their pleasure; yet the patience of the one, overcame the Tyrannical behavior of the other. These godly Men so long as they had it, provided for the Soldiers, but when all was gone, some of them withdrew themselves from danger by flight; others resigned their Houses and Goods to these domineering Villains, delivering the Keys to them, and so departing.

The Protestants in the silver Mines had a promise of favor. Popish perfidiousness.

When yet this prevailed not, the task of reforming that City was committed to Don Martin, who accompanied with a Troop of Curiaffiers, and himself brandishing a naked Sword, entred into the City, the Citizens trembling at his coming, hearing of the cruelty which he had exercised in other places, whereupon that very night multitudes of them betook themselves to flight, thinking to hide themselves in Neighboring Villages, this caused Don Martin to get an Edict that none should harbor Exiles upon a great penalty.

The year after a Senate at Kuttenberg was Elected out of the Apostates: The Major being a base and illiterate Person, so that all the Citizens being still oppressed with the Soldiers, either fled with their Wives and Children, leaving all behind them, or else were fain to submit their Necks to the Antichristian Yoke.

The next City whither these Reformers went, was Bolislawia, where the Orthodox Religion had continued for Two hundred years, and it was the Principal Seat of the Brethren. The Ministers being ejected, they placed in their rooms two crafty Friars, that by all means sought to pervert the people, but when this prevailed not, they brought in three Companies of Soldiers to quarter upon them. Then were some of the Citizens banished, others cast into Prison, and three of the principal were sequestered to strike a terror into the rest, The cause pretended was, because they said, as was alledged, That none had power to command their consciences, &c. But when yet the Citizens remained constant, they were all warned to appear in the Court, and being come, they were shut up in several Rooms, and called out and examined one by one. The first was the Town-Clerk, a weak and timorous Man, and therefore they had set a Russian in a corner, with a Sword in his hand, whom the fearful Man seeing, was so terrified, that he promised to turn Catholick; they so rejoiced at this beginning, that they dismissed all the rest, bad them consider of it, and do as the Town-Clerk had set them an example.

Amongst these there were two Burgo-masters, Learned Men, who exhorted their fellow Citizens not to be affrighted with these imaginary terrors. Afterwards one of them being called for, was partly with threats, and partly with flatteries so wearied out, that at last he took time to consider of it: The other being called for, and an old man proposing the others example to him, he Constancy. spit in his Face, saying, Traytor is this your constancy? And so both he, and the rest of the Citizens remained as unmoveable as a Rock. The first Burgo-master considering what he had done, and being ashamed of it, came and gave them such a positive answer, as that with the rest he was sent to Prison.

Recovery. One Bartholomew Lang told them to their Faces, that he had rather die by the Sword, than deny his Faith; whereupon, with divers others, he was thrust into a stinking Dungeon, where they kept them Prisoners for seventeen weeks; their Houses in the mean time being possessed by the barbarous Soldiers.

Bethlem Gabor.

Gods Providence.

One of these godly Persons died in Prison: And about that time Bethlem Gabor warring with the Emperor, and Count Mansfield entering Cilicia, with the King of Denmarks Army, these Tyrants were struck with such a terror, that presently Proclamations came forth, that it was not his Majesties pleasure that any Man should be forced to the Faith by violent means; by which Proclamation the Inhabitants of Bolislavia had some respite.

A new Persecution.

But the year after, when Gabor was retired, and the King of Denmark beaten out of Cilicia, their Tyranny again revived, and a new Proclamation came forth to inhibit the Protestants all Trade and Commerce, and to command them to abjure their Heresies under pain of the severest and inevitable punishment. Hereupon some were banished, others voluntarily went into exile, others were denied traffick, the Friers taking away such commodities as they set to sale, so that the Citizens which stayed, were forced to take the mark of the Beast, that they might buy and sell.

In Litomericia.

In the City of Litomericia, Anno 1517. there was an unanimous agreement amongst the Citizens, that none should be made free amongst them, but such as professed the reformed Religion; and that whosoever should move for the nulling of this act should be disfranchised. This continued inviolate for a hundred years, till two Jesuites sued to be made Free-men of the City, which being denied, they entred their complaint in the Chancery, whether some of the principal Aldermen were summoned, and kept for nine weeks space, till by threats they had obtained from them to make these two Men free. Five moneths after, one of them is made an Alderman, that so they might have their spies in every place: There were also cunning Seducers sent thither to withdraw the people from their Religion.

Popish subtilty.

But when this prevailed not, Anno 1525. they took the Names of every Citizen, commanding them constantly to come to the Mass, and every one to shew his Name to the Sexton, that they might know that all were there present, or else for every omission they should forfeit five pound.

Then bringing in more Soldiers, they commanded all the Inhabitants to be present at their idolatrous Proceffion, and because the Recorder came not, they sent a whole Company of Soldiers to plunder his House, who also abused and threatned his Wife.

Patience in Persecution.

The year after they brought in more Soldiers, quartering them in the principal Mens Houses, in some ten, in some twenty, and in others thirty, who abused them fearfully; but, through Gods assistance, they bore it with such admirable patience that the Enemies were weary with plaguing them, and began to be more moderate; yet they published an order, that whosoever would not turn Catholick, should, with their Wives and Children, depart the City and Kingdom by a certain day, whereupon many of them removed into Mishnia.

In Radecium.

Temptation resisted.

At the City of Radecium they drave away the Ministers, and placed there a merry Arch-Deacon, who protested that all violent means were displeasing to him, and therefore he entertained the Citizens with jests and merry speeches, and would draw them to Taverns and Gameing-houses: But when after four years trial, he found that he had not converted any one of them by these means, he brought in Soldiers for his help: Then did he assemble the people, requiring them to go in Proceffion with him, but when none would follow, the Soldiers rushed rushed in amongst them with their drawn Swords; whereupon the People ran; some one way, some another, others were forced to follow the Procession whether they would or no, and some for refusing were slain.

Popish cruelty.
17.

Then was a whole Regiment of Soldiers sent thither, with express charge not to depart, till the City was reformed. The Arch-Deacon taking some of these, went to a Physician that had been lame for some years, and asketh him whether he would become a Catholick? which he stoutly refused, saying, That he had rather his half rotten Carcass should be drawn through the Fields, and torn in pieces, than to deny any thing against his conscience. Then were all the Inhabitants called together, the City Gates shut, and the People grievously threatened if they would not turn; and such as refused, were thrust into Prisons, and Soldiers were sent to their Houses, who raged and domineered over their Wives and Children; whereupon they ran to their Husbands with tears and intreaties, and prevailed with many of them to desire time to be given them to learn the Romish Religion, only Twenty eight of them, together with their Wives and Children forsook their earthly Estate, and went into banishment to preserve their consciences clear.

Don and the
cruelty.

Don Martin went also to Bidford, ten Miles from Prague, attended with his Soldiers, and assembling the Citizens, he made an Oration to them to turn Catholicks, they answered, That they could not unlearn that in an hour, which they had been Learning all their life. This so enraged Martin, that he assaulted the Man that answered for all the rest, with a Club, beating him extremely, and then he commanded the chief Officer to carry him out of the City, not suffering him so much as to visit his House before his departure: This so terrified the rest, that they promised to be taught within a certain time; and whereas some of them thought to save themselves by flight, sending their Wives and some of their goods privately before, with whom went also some godly Widows; Martin having intelligence of it, sent some Soldiers after them, that stript them of their goods, and brought them back and cast them into Fetters, refusing to release them, till both they and their Husbands turned Catholicks.

At Zaticum, another City, famous for religion, the Minister being banished, Fryers were put into his place, who being assisted with Soldiers, used to Cane those that would not bow to the Host, and because the Major and some of the Aldermen were absent at a solemn Procession, they fined them. Then came thither Don Martin, and proclaimed, that whosoever had any Bibles, or other Evangelical Books; if they brought them not in presently, they should be fined at a hundred Florences, or suffer five weeks imprisonment. As also whosoever refused to come to Mass, should pay five Florences, and three pounds of Wax; All the Books that were so brought, he burnt them without the Walls; and for such as still stood out, he quartered Troopers upon them, which extorted money from them day by day: Hereupon many forsook their Houses and betook themselves to the hardship of a banished life. Then did he proclaim that without his leave none should go out of the Gates upon pain of death: The next day he arrested the Major, and would not release him, but upon the promise of Apostacy. Two of the Aldermen he bound with Iron Chains for refusing to adore the Host, and for fourteen days together tormented them grievously, till he had forced their consent to the like Apostacy.

Then assembling the whole Senate, he commands them presently to submit to Cæsars will, to go to Auricular Confession, and to communicate in one kind, promising that such as obeyed should be eased of Soldiers, that the others should have their burthens doubled, requiring every one in order to answer for himself, whither he would promise to perform this within three Weeks: One of them modestly pleading to be excused, in regard of his conscience, the furious Beast fell upon him, beat him about the Head, and abused him with cursed words, saying, Thou art an unworthy Knave to be in this place, I will have thee bound Hand and Foot, and cast into a deep Dungeons, and when thou hast vomited up thy wicked soul, I will deliver thee to the Hang-man to be buried, &c. Then he calls to his Soldiers for Chains and Fetters, with which they bound his Hands and Feet, and put an Iron Coller about his Neck, with a thick Chain, and so brought him to the Dungeon, where he was tormented for three weeks, neither Wife nor Children being suffered to come to him, and fed with Bread and Water; the Jesuites also were daily molesting him: Then was he sentenced to death, which he chose before Apostacy. Then said one of the Jesuites, he is possessed with the Devil, and therefore he commanded him to be bound more straitly, whereby at last he was forced to go to Auricular Confession, but by that means getting out of the Prison, he fled into Misnia to escape their Tyranny.

Exile denied to the Protestants.

All the best Citizens did desire banishment, but the City Gates were kept strictly, lest any should get out, or carry out their household-stuff; whereupon many escaped by the Mines of the Wall; and among these, a Lords Wife, leaving all her rich household-stuff behind her, crept out at the common sewer, to follow her Husband into banishment.

Many of the Exiles in Misnia, having spent all that little which they carried with them, were forced to seek alms in Bohemia, where being betrayed, they were cast into Prison, and so tormented, till some of them were almost distracted, and then they were sent away to other places; some of these were Persons of good quality.

At Tusta.

At Tusta a chief Officer of the Kingdom solicited the Citizens to turn Catholics, which they refusing to do, he complained of it to the Jesuites at Prague, whereupon Don Martin is sent thither, who entering the City, sends his Soldiers into the Senators Houses, licensing them to abuse them at their pleasure, so that in a short time many were forced to Apostacy. Then did that other Officer set a great fine upon the City, because they turned Catholics for another Mans sake, and would not do it for his: And thus the poor Protestants were abused on every hand to satisfy the lusts of these Tyrants.

Apostacy.

At Rokitzan.

Then did another Noble man with a band of Soldiers, go to the City of Rokizan, and Tyrannically abuse them for their Religion, forbearing no kind of insolency that they could think of: Amongst other projects this was one, He caused all the Citizens to write their Names in three Books: In the first such as were already Catholics, (which were but six, late Apostates:) In the second the Names of such as would become Apostates within a Fortnight, which were very few: In the third such as absolutely refused, and so were opposite to God and Cesar; and in this were almost all the Names, which so enraged him, that he resolved to use all manner of cruelties, saying, that they deserved the Cross, the Wheel, yea and Hell it self.

Popish subtil-
ty.

Constancy.

Then did he command all the Citizens to come to the Church the next day, to receive the Sacrament in one kind; but when, coming himself to Church, he found few or none there, he runs through the Streets, and into the Houses, driving all that he met with to the Church with his stick. When he came thither again, he espied one John Felix, a chief Citizen, but a Calvinist, he therefore fell upon him with a knotty Club, beating him about the Head, Shoulders and Hands, till he was all gore blood, and then he said to him, Get thee hence thou Beast, with thy cursed Calvin-blood. Then did he rage against the other Citizens, cursing them, beating some, and spitted in the Faces of others; and from one of the grave Citizens he pulled off his Beard, and strewed it on the floor.

John Felix.
Barbarous
cruelty.

Felix escapes.

After this he again sent word to Felix, that except he changed his mind by the morrow, he would act a new tragedy with him, but that night he escaped, leaving behind him his dear Wife and Children, and an aged Mother of eighty years old. Then did the Earl imprison his Wife, and sequestered his Estate, and enforced the rest of the Citizens to subscribe, that they did freely, and with all readines of mind, imbrace the Catholic Religion.

One Martinitz was appointed to reform the City of Slava, who substituted As Field one Hansburky, an Apostate, to see this work done. This Man that he might ingratiate himself with the Jesuites, appointed a solemn Procession, and either by fraud or force, brought to it most of the Citizens: Among others, he required one John Blyssa to accompany him, but he refused, saying, As oft as I have John Blyssa received the Lords Supper, so oft have I obliged myself to God, and against these al- minations: Then said the other, Thou shalt not resist the Emperers pleasure: But said he, In those things which belong to Cæsar, I will not, but here Gods business is in hand: Then said the other, Thou shalt be forced to it: God, replied he, seeks wil- ling, not forced worshippers; whereupon he was presently committed to Prison for nine weeks, and so was another godly Citizen, and fined, and then together with his Wife, driven out of the City.

Afterwards also was Blyssa and his Wife banished, for procuring his Child to be Baptized by a Protestant Minister privately, and his Estate was sequestred, having nothing left him to support him in his banishment. Banished.

Also by divers kinds of torments he compelled some to a forced obedience, as he did fifty Men whom he shut up in a narrow Room, where they could neither stand, sit, nor lie, nor have leave to go forth to ease nature: So that after three days enduring of this pain and stink, they were forced to promise to learn the Roman Religion.

The like dealing he used to divers Women in his own Chamber: But so soon as they could, most of them went into voluntary banishment.

The City of Prachatice they entered by force, and slew the Major, who was bringing to them the Keys, together with a thousand six hundred Men, Women and Children, sparing none but such as fled, or hid themselves in secret places: The Carcasses they left unburied for divers days, all dirty, and shamefully naked. Afterwards when the City began again to be inhabited, the Commissioners of Reformation came thither, promising them that if they would turn Catholicks, they should have their Liberties restored to them, but if they refused, they should be restrained from all trading; and when this prevailed not, they thrust Men and Women, young and old into Prisons, where they miserably afflicted them for four whole moneths. As Prachatice Prodigious crackles.

The like cruelty they used to all other Cities where they shewed and used all manner of impostures, deceits, tyrannies, and impudent practices, till they had rooted out the reformed Religion, and set up their idolatrous and superstitious worship in the stead of it.

The godly Ministers being generally removed, the next design of the Enemies was to take all Bibles, and other profitable Books out of the Peoples hands, that so the heat of Religion might in time grow cold: The Friers also which were placed in the Churches, did not presently thunder, but dealt fairly, beseeching and confirming the truth of their Religion with Oaths; and dreadful cursing of themselves, promising also the Emperors favor, and ease of their burthens; yea they sought by works of charity to oblige the poorer sort to them. The reformed faith Arch-

One Frier promised a bushel of Wheat to every one that would come to Confession; But when his Garners began to waste, he gave but half the measure, whereupon one flang away in anger, saying, What, is my soul viler than the rest? But when they perceived that they gained but few by their Fox-like subtilty, they returned to their Wolvish cruelty, compelling men to come to Mass, and taking the Names of all such as absented themselves, and if any went to private religious meetings, they were fined, imprisoned and whipt. Popish school 7.

Some godly Persons being met together with a Minister, in a private Chapel, two Colonels with some Troops came upon them, encompassed the Church, rushed in with their drawn Swords, took the Minister from the Communion Table, stript off his Cloaths, and sent him away to Prison; then they cast the Bread

Bread upon the Earth, poured out the Wine, and trampled upon it : Then they fell upon the People, stripping Men and Women naked, it being frost and snow, so that many of them died ; some were wounded, others so affrighted that they fell into diseases : Modesty forbids to tell how they used the Women, even in the Church.

*Then came out an Edict, that whosoever refused to turn Papist, whether Men or Women, young or old, bond or free, their Names should be returned to the Council of State, who would give instructions what should be done with their Persons and Estates.

The twenty seventh Artifice.

Marriage, Burial and Baptism were forbidden to the Protestants, and if any did it privately, they were imprisoned, and not dismissed without Apostacy, or a great fine. Then was all trading inhibited, or means of getting their living, and at last buying of food, so that the poor people being oppressed with hunger and want, were either forced to flie, or to Apostatize.

Prodigious
cruelties.

The Countrymen they fetched out of their Houses, yea out of their Beds, by troops of Soldiers, driving them like Beasts before them in the sharpest cold, and filled the common Prisons, Towers, Cellers, Stables, yea and Hogsties with them, where they were killed with hunger, cold and thirst.

A godly Chirurgeon, with others, was cast into a place full of Snakes. Another Company was thrust into a Stable, and all the windows stopt up, that they were almost stifled for want of breath. In some places they shut them up in Privies, that they might be poysoned with the stink. In some places they made holes, and knockt them full of Iron Spikes, wherein those that were shut, could neither sit nor stand, but bending and crooked : It was not possible that any Man could endure this posture above two or three hours, their sinews in the mean time trembling, and their members quivering, and their hearts ready to faint with anguish ; so that some were forced to promise to turn Catholicks, others that refused, were brought back to torture.

Then they devised a Prison upon the Water, very narrow, and not above a cubit and an half in length, wherein the Prisoner could by no means lay himself at length, and if he turned himself unawares, he must fall into the Water.

The twenty eighth Artifice.

Another design was, first to assault men of greatest authority, to make them an Example to the rest.

At Minion.

In the Town of Minion the Commissioner demanded of the People a positive answer, whether they would turn Catholicks : And one of them in the Name of the rest, saying, that conscience neither would nor could be forced, he was presently laid upon the ground and beaten, and still denying to turn Catholick, when he could hardly speak, he was torn in pieces : The rest affrighted at this terrible spectacle, promised obedience if time were given them.

Popish malice.

In another place the Senators refusing to turn Apostates, the chiefeft of them was made to ride the wooden Horse in the Market place, for six hours space, though he was very ancient, so that he was lame and half dead, when he was taken off.

Death denied
them.

When any desired to die, rather than to forsake their Religion ; it was answered, That the Emperor did not thirst after their Blood, but rather after the welfare of their Souls : To others they said, Oh, you affect the Glory of Martyrdom, but you are base Knaves, and are unworthy to have any thing to glory in.

Prodigious
wickedness.

There were many who would have died in the maintenance of their Christian Faith, but there were none that would inflict death upon them : For these cruel Tyrants, brought up in the Devils School, would not kill the Body but the Soul, and therefore they sought by lingring and continual punishments to bring them first to stagger, and then to deny the truth.

Blasphemy.

When any Man desired to be convinced by Scripture, they answered with scoffs and jeers, accusing the Scripture of imperfection, of obscurity, of ambiguity, saying, That it was the Fountain of Heresie, the Sanctuary of Hereticks, and that

Laymen

Laymen had nothing to do with it: They called the Bible Wiblia, which in the Bohemian Language, signifies Vomit. They took away all Orthodox Books from the People, that thereby they might be the more easily led into error.

In some places they shut up the People in the Church; and forced them to receive in one kind; and if they would not fall down to the Host, they used to beat their Legs with Clubs, till they fell down: Some they imprisoned and racked several times to force them to Auricular confession. Of others they set open their mouths with gags, and thrust the Host down their throats. In other places they forced the People, not only to abjure the Cup, but to throw it down, and to spit upon it, and to tread it under foot.

If any to avoid this Tyranny fled into the Woods and secret places, hunger drove them out again, whereby they became a prey to their Adversaries; if they went to neighboring places, some or other would betray them.

Edicts also were published, forbidding all to entertain such as fled, upon pain of forfeiting a hundred pieces of silver for every nights entertainment. Yet these miserable People could not go out of the Kingdom, not being acquainted with any other Language: Besides, they were told that ere long the like Tragedy should be acted every where.

Four Men of Koffenburg continuing constant after long imprisonment, they were first exposed to cold for five weeks together in the depth of Winter: Then for nine days they were pined with hunger, they having only a small portion of Bread that kept life and soul together, and drinking their own Urine, and when they were threatened with harder usage if they turned not, they answered, We willingly embrace all afflictions, of famine, hanging, burning, or any thing, rather than we would sin against God. Thereupon, only twice a week there was given them a mouthful of Bread, and a draught of Water. Then were they parted asunder, one thrust into the sink of the Prison, another into a Furnace, and none permitted to visit them; and when nothing would prevail, they set a fire upon them, and banished them.

Others were kept in Prisons and bonds till they died. One was kept in a filthy Prison till his Feet rotted off, and yet he passed away the time with singing of Psalms, as if he enjoyed all manner of delights.

Another Man being tired out with imprisonment, promised to turn Catholic, and was released; but presently (as himself wrote afterwards) God chastened him for this his fault, holding his conscience captive for an whole year together, so that he could have no hope in Gods mercy: Yet he recalled to mind former sinners, who upon their repentance obtained mercy of God: Thereupon he cried unto God a whole year together, night and day watering his Bed with his tears, because he thought himself damned; But at last God (saith he) sent his Angel to me, and I saw his glory brighter than the Sun, and I had Gods Spirit bestowed upon me, &c. After which he was apprehended, beheaded and quartered.

The Pictures of John Hus and Jerom of Prague they defaced; All the Bibles that they could meet with, they burned; The graves of the Ministers they opened, took out their Bones and burnt them.

The Statues of King Frederick they beat in pieces, and trampled them under their Feet. One Man they fined at five hundred Dollars, for giving his Son the Name of Frederick.

Before these calamities befell the Bohemians, God gave them warning by sundry Prodigious. In several places divers Suns were seen together. At Prague the Sun seemed to dart out balls of fire. Also a flying Dragon, flaming horribly, was seen throughout all Bohemia and Cilicia. Also a Spring flowed with Blood for an whole month together. In another place a Fish-pond was wholly turned into Blood for the space of three days.

A great flock of Crows and Daws, fought together for a whole days space, whereby multitudes of them were slain.

At Prague it rained Brimstone, and the Image of the Crucifix being set up, was struck down with a Thunderbolt. The Gates of some Cities opened of their own accord. Many Bibles being thrown into a great fire, were untouched, only the margin a little scorched.

Gods Judgment on Apostates.

Many Apostates tormented by the sting of conscience, cried out, They were damned. Some to avoid these terrors, hanged themselves; others drowned themselves. Some died in fearful despair, others died suddenly: One as he was about to abjure, was stricken dumb, and being carried home was possessed with a great trembling all over his Body, and gnawing his own Tongue, he died miserably.

Gods Judgment on Persecutors.

Dr. Knapper a great Persecutor was slain by the appointment of his Wife an adulteress, for which she was afterwards hanged. Another vomited out his ungodly soul with blood. Another ran mad, and cast himself down from the top of his House, and so roaring fearfully, he breathed his last. Another shot himself to death with his own Pistol. Another ran mad, fell into such a disease, that none could come near him for stink, and at last was choaked with vomiting up abundance of Blood. Another being taken with a sudden disease, waxed as black as a Cole, uttered his Speech like the barking of a Dog, and within three days died with terrible pains. Another by the breaking of a great Gun, was torn all to pieces. Another had a terrible disease in his Throat, his Tongue rotted, many holes were eaten in his Throat, whereout his food and medicines came, so that he died miserably.

Collected out of a Book called Historia Persecutionum Ecclesie Bohem.
Written by some Bohemian Exiles.

HAVING thus given you a brief Narrative of the Persecutions of the Church in Bohemia, from the first planting of the Gospel amongst them, to our present times: Before I proceed any further, let us a little look back to see how God fought for them, against their Popish Adversaries, and thereby after a wonderful manner plagued their Persecutors. Much may be read hereof in my second Part, in the Life of Zisca; But after his death, there was a great fear, and sorrow seized on his Army, and the Soldiers being divided amongst themselves, one part of them chose for their Captain Procopius Magnus, who still retained the name of Thaborites. The other part, thinking none worthy to succeed Zisca, named themselves the Orphanes, by reason of the loss of their Captain; yet whensoever their Popish Adversaries came against them, they both joyned together to defend themselves, and the liberty of the Gospel in Bohemia.

The Pope stirs up Persecution.

About this time Pope Martin perceiving the Gospel and the Professors of it to increase daily in Bohemia, he sent the Cardinal of Winchester, an English Man, into Germany, to stir up the Emperor and German Princes to make War against the Bohemians. Hereupon three Armies were levied, One under the Duke of Saxony; The Second under the Marquess of Brandenburg; The Third under Otho Arch-Bishop of Trevers: These three Armies entred Bohemia three ways, and at last joyning all in one, besieged the City of Misna, which but the night before was won from the Papists by one Prichicho, a learned and zealous Protestant, and therefore the Popish Armies resolved to take that place before they marched any further: But so soon as news came that the Protestants had raised an Army, and were hastening to the relief of Misna, they speedily fled before they ever saw an Enemy, leaving all their Engins of War, and a great Booty behind them.

Gods Judgments on Persecutors.
The Popish Army flies.

The Cardinal meeting them in their flight, used all the arguments that possibly he could to the Nobles and Captains, to turn them back again, magnifying their their number and prowess, and vilifying their Enemies, but when nothing would prevail, himself was fain to accompany them in the flight. Presently the Bohemians pursuing, fell upon their reere-ward, which made their flight much more fearful and disordered than it was before, neither did they leave flying till the Bohemians left pursuing of them.

The Emperor hearing of this shameful flight, went to Nuremberg and by the assistance of the Cardinal, a new Army was raised under the Command of Frederick Marquis of Brandenburg, which entered Bohemia one way, and another great Army under Albert Arch-Duke of Austria, which entered another way. In these two Armies were all the chiefest Nobles and Bishops in Germany, being above Forty thousand Horsemen, besides Foot.

A new Army raised.

The Bohemians as soon as they heard of their Enemies approach, gathered their Host with all speed to encounter them: But God marvellously fought for them; For before the Bohemians came near them, the Popish Army was struck with such a marvellous sudden fear, that they began most shamefully to run away; The Cardinal wondering at it, went up and down to the Captains, exhorting and encouraging of them, telling them that they were to fight for their Lives, Honor, Religion, and the salvation of Souls, &c. But notwithstanding all that he could say and do, the Ensigns were suddenly snatched up, and every Man ran headlong away, so that the Cardinal was forced to do the like: The Protestants encouraged hereby, speedily pursued them, and obtained a very great Booty. This so astonished both the Pope and Emperor, that afterwards they fought rather by subtilty to entrap them, than by force to compel them to forsake their Religion, as we have seen in the foregoing Story.

They fly when none pursue.

CHAP. XXVI.

The Persecution of the Church in Spain, which began Anno Christi 1540.

ANNO 1540. There was one Francis Romanes sent by the Spanish Merchants of Antwerp, to Breme to take up some money that was due to them; where, being at a Sermon (through the marvellous working of Gods Spirit) he was so effectually wrought upon, that after the Sermon he went to the Preacher, and repeated the contents of his whole Sermon to him, and then betaking himself to the searching of the Scriptures, and conferring with learned Men, in a short space he had attained to a great measure of knowledge in the Word of life; which the Minister observing, and withal finding him of a fervent spirit, he directed and exhorted him to circumspection in his carriage, more and more instructing him in the knowledge of the Gospel, which he so greedily received as one that could never be satisfied. This made him give over seeking after temporal treasure, and instead thereof he bought good Books, by reading of which, and conference with the Minister, he much improved his knowledge in all the chief Articles of Religion. Then did he write Letters to his Countrymen at Antwerp, wherein he first gave thanks to God for revealing his truth to him; And did bewail the gross ignorance of his Countrymen, beseeching God to open their Eyes to understand the Word of salvation, and so promised shortly to return to them to confer with them about the grace of God, which he had received; and lastly, he declared his purpose of going into Spain, to acquaint his Parents and Friends with that wholesome Doctrine which God had communicated to him.

Francis Romanes converted.

See

He wrote other Letters also to the Emperor Charles the Fifth, opening to him the miserable state of Christ's Church, desiring him to tender the good thereof; especially to reform the gross corruptions of the Church of Spain; He wrote also a Catechism, and some other Treatises in the Spanish Tongue.

The Merchants at Antwerp having received his Letters, sent for him, pretending much good will, but secretly practising his destruction: For against his coming, they Then was he sent Prisoner to a Tower six Miles from Antwerp, and cast into a deep Dungeon, where he endured much misery for eight moneths, at the end whereof, the Merchants supposing that he would be better advised for the time to come, released him. After this did he go to Lovian, where he had much conference with Driander, who advised him to continue in his calling of a Merchant, wherein he might have many opportunities of doing good; and for Religion, that he should do nothing for favor of Men, whereby the glory of God should be diminished. He advised him also to take heed of inconsiderate zeal, lest he should do as some, who going beyond the bounds of their vocation, thinking to do good, and to edifie, they destroy and do harm. For (said he,) it is God that takes care of his Church, and will raise up faithful Ministers for the same; neither doth he approve such as rashly intrude themselves into that function without any calling thereto.

Good counsel.

Note.

This advice Francis willingly hearkned unto, promising to follow the same. Not long after going to Ratisbone, where the Imperial Diet was held, having opportunity, he boldly stept to the Emperor, beseeching him to deliver his Countrey and Subjects of Spain from false Religion, and to restore them to the sincerity of Christs Doctrine, protesting that the Protestants of Germany were in the truth; and that the Religion of Spain was greatly dissonant to the Word of God, &c. The Emperor all this while heard him gently, promising him to consider of the matter, and so to do therein as he trusted should be for the best.

Francis being encouraged with this answer, went again to the Emperor a Second and Third time, and still received a quiet answer as before; yet not satisfied herewith, he went a Fourth time, but was repulled by some Spaniards about the Emperor, who were so incensed against him, that immediately they would have thrown him headlong into the River Danubius, if the Emperor had not restrained them, willing that he should be judged by the Laws of the Empire: Then was he cast into Prison, till the Emperors voyage into Africk, at which time he, with some other Captives, were carried into Spain, and there delivered unto the Inquisitors, who cast him into a dark Prison under ground: He was oft examined, loaden with many reproaches and contumelies, yet ever remained firm and unmovable, so that at last they condemned him to be burnt for an Heretick. As he was led to the place of Execution, they put upon him a Miter of Paper, painted all over with ugly Devils; As he passed by a Wooden Cross, they required him to Worship it, to which he answered, That the manner of Christians was not to worship wood: Being laid upon the Pile of Wood, when he first felt the fire, he lifted up his Head towards Heaven; whereupon the Inquisitors thinking that he would recant, caused him to be taken down, but when they found his constancy, they threw him on again, where he slept in the Lord. Then did the Inquisitors Proclaim that he was damned, and that none should pray for him, and that they were Hereticks whosoever doubted of his damnation.

There was also dwelling at Saint Lucar in Spain, one Rochus, a skilful graver of Images: But the Lord pleasing to enlighten him with the saving knowledg of his truth, he gave over making of idolatrous Images, and imployed himself in making of Seals; only he kept standing on his stall an Image of the Virgin Mary, artificially graven for a sign of his occupation.

An Inquisitor passing by, and liking the Image, asked the price of it: Rochus set him a price, but was not willing to sell it: The Inquisitor bad him half so much: The other answered, that he could not afford it so, and that he had rather break it than sell it; yea, said the Inquisitor, let me see that if thou darest: with that Rochus with a Chisel cut off the Nose of the Image, whereupon the Inquisitor presently commanded him to Prison, and within three days he was condemned to be be burnt. At the place of Execution he poured out his fervent Prayers to Almighty God, and so made a blessed end, Anno 1545.

Divers other godly persons being by the Inquisitors cast into loathsome Dungeons, ended their lives there.

An. 1550. at Validolid, the Inquisitors brought forth thirty prisoners together, of high and low estate, as also the Coffin of a certain noble Woman with her Picture lying upon it, she being dead long before, to receive Judgment and Sentence. For the Solemnities whereof, they had erected three great Stages; the first for the Kings Sister, the Lady Jane, and his eldest Son, Prince Philip, with other States; the second for the Fathers Inquisitors; and the third for the Prisoners. Multitudes of people being assembled together, these dear Servants of Jesus Christ, cloathed with Sambito's (a yellow Cloth hanging down before and behind, powdered with Red Crosses) and having burning Tapers in their hands, and Miters upon their Heads Painted with Devils, were placed in their Ranks; Then was a Sermon Preached, after which an Oath was administered to the Princes and Nobles, by the Inquisitors, That they should favor the holy Inquisition, and consent to the same; and that they should imploy their uttermost endeavor to see all them executed, which should swerve from the Church of Rome, and adhere to the Lutherans, without respect of Persons, of what degree, quality, or condition soever; and that they should compel their Subjects to submit to the Church of Rome, and to obey all its Laws, &c. Then was Doctor Cacalle called forth, a Man of excellent Learning, who had often Preached before the Emperor, whilst he was a Fryer: But being now accounted to be the Standard-Bearer to the Lutherans, he was called forth to hear his Sentence; which was, That he should be degraded, and presently burnt, and his goods confiscated.

The like Sentence of Condemnation was pronounced upon his Brother Francis, a Preacher also; who having spoken boldly against the Inquisition, they so stopt his Mouth that he could not speak a word. Then Blanch their Sister received the like Sentence, and so did most of the other, only some few of them were condemned to some years imprisonment; and to wear their Sambito's all their life time, &c.

Then was the Coffin of the dead Lady, with her Picture upon it, condemned likewise to be burnt. This good Woman, whilst she lived, was a worthy maintainer of the Gospel, of great integrity of life, and one that had divers Assemblies in her House, for the true Preaching of the Word of God; wherefore her House was also sentenced to be razed down, and a Pillar to be set up in the place thereof, with an Inscription shewing the cause.

sentenced.

Then were all these that were sentenced to death, together with the Coffin, delivered to the Secular Magistrate; and so every one of them being set upon an Als, with their Faces towards his Tail, they were guarded by many Soldiers to the place of Execution. At which place, there was for each of them a Stake set up, to which every of them were bound; and so they were first strangled, and then burnt to ashes; only one of them, who had been most vehement against them, was burnt alive, and his mouth stopped, that he should not speak to the People. All Men marvelled at their constancy and quiet end.

Malice!

together.

At the same time also, there were in Prison at Validolid thirty seven others, which were reserved for another Tragedy and Spectacle of the Bloody Inquisition. But seeing much mention is made of the Spanish Inquisition, and of the cruelty exercised thereby against the Poor Servants of Jesus Christ, I shall here set down the first original and progress thereof, as hereafter followeth.

CHAP.

C H A P. XXVII.

The Original, Progress, and Practice of the Spanish Inquisition.

The Spanish Inquisition.

Invented by Dominicans.

WHEN King Ferdinand and Isabel, had expelled the Turks out of the City and Territories of Granata, and other places of Spain, who had lived there Seven hundred seventy and eight years, they set upon the Reformation of Religion, and granted the conquered Moors liberty to stay, and to enjoy all their Goods, provided, that they would turn Christians: And whereas also, there were many Jews who had continued there since Titus conquered Jerusalem, they gave them leave to stay upon the same condition; but all such as refused, were commanded presently to depart out of Spain. Yet afterwards, finding that those Persons were only Christians in name, and had submitted only to save their Estates, instead of providing godly Ministers with meekness to instruct them, and to draw them from their Errors (by the advice of the Dominican Fryers) they erected the Inquisition; wherein the poor Wretches, instead of Instructions, were robbed of all their Estates; and either put to most cruel deaths, or else suffered most intolerable torments by whipping, &c. and leading the rest of their lives in ignominy and poverty: Neither was this only inflicted upon such as blasphemed Christ, but for the observation of the least Jewish or Moorish Ceremony, or the smallest Error in the Christian Religion. But this Inquisition, at first erected against Jews and Moors, was afterwards turned against the faithful Servants of Jesus Christ, and for the suppressing of the Gospel, and the Profession of it. And thus briefly you have the original of it; let us now see what their practice and exercise is.

As soon as Information is given in against any one, though but for a very small matter, they do not presently cite the person to appear before them, but they suborne one of their Officers, called a Familiar, to insinuate himself into his company, who taking occasion to meet the party accused, uses thus to greet him. Sir, I was yesterday by accident at my Lords Inquisitors, who said, That they had occasion to speak with you about certain of their affairs; and therefore they commanded me to summon you to appear before them to morrow at such an hour. The party not daring to refuse, goes to the place, sends in word, That he is come to attend them; and so when he is called in, they ask him, what suit he hath to them? And when he answers, that he comes upon Summons; they inquire his name: For, say they, we know not whether you be the same man, or not. But since you are come, if you have any thing to inform this Court of, either concerning your self or any other, you may let us hear it, for the discharge of your own Conscience. The parties safest way is constantly to deny, that he hath any thing to declare to them. But if, through simplicity, he doth accuse himself, or any other, they rejoyce, as having attained their desires, and so presently commit him to prison.

Subtily.

If nothing be confessed, they dismiss him, pretending, That for the present they know not whether he be the party, or no. After his departure, they let him alone for some space, and then send for him again, exhorting him, That if he know, or hath heard any thing that concerns their Holy Court, to disclose it to them. For (say they) we know that you have had dealing with some persons suspected in Religion; and therefore remember your self well. If you confess, you shall fare the better, and you shall but do therein as a good Christian ought to do. If still he refuse, they threaten, and so dismiss him.

Yet they have always one or other to keep him company, to creep into his bosome, and grope his Conscience; who under the colour of Friendship shall visit him daily, and have an eye to all his dealings, observe what company he keepeth, with whom he confers, &c. So that without Gods special assistance, it is not possible to escape their snares. The Inquisitors also, if they meet him, speak

Speak courteously to him; promise to befriend him, &c. and all to make him more careless of himself, that they may undo him before he be aware: But if the party be a stranger, or one that is like to make an escape, or that they hope to gain any thing by his Confession, they presently clap him up in prison; in which prison great numbers die, either starved with hunger, or by extremity of racking of them, &c.

Their death with Anguish

If any one that is accused, chance to make an escape, they have many devices to find and fetch him in again. They have store of searchers, to whom, besides the common signs, they give his lively Picture, whereby they may easily know him. An Italian at Rome, having wounded an Apparator, fled to Sevil; the Familiars were sent to seek him; and when they had found him, though they had his counterfeit; yet by reason that he had altered his habit, they were doubtful whether it was he or no, the rather, because he had changed his name; whereupon they followed him only upon suspicion. But one day as he was walking, and earnestly talking with some Gentlemen, two of these Familiars suddenly called him by his old name: The party earnest in talk, and not minding it, looking behind him, and made answer; whereupon they presently apprehended him, clapt him in Irons for a long time, then whipt him, and condemned him to the Gallies, during his life. So soon as any is arrested by the Familiars, they take from him all the Keys of his Locks or Chests whatsoever, and then they take an Inventory of all his Goods, leaving them with some man that will undertake to be accountable for them. But in the Sequestering and Raising the Houses, if they have any Gold, Silver, or Jewels, these Familiars, which usually are Bawds, Thieves, Shifters, and the vilest of People, will be sure to filch some of it. And the reason of this Sequestration is, That if the party be condemned, the holy Inquisition may enjoy his whole estate.

Their Family an Sequestration

As soon as the Prisoner is entred within the first Gate of the Prison, the Gaoler asketh him, If he have a Knife about him, or Money, or Rings, or Jewels; and if a Woman, whether she hath Knives, Rings, Chains, Bracelets, or other Ornaments; and all these the Gaoler strips them of as his fee. And this is done that the poor Prisoners may have nothing to relieve themselves with, during their imprisonment: They search them also, to see whether they have any Writing or Book about them, which likewise they take from them; then they shut them up in a Cabin, like to a Little-cave, where they have little room for cleanliness, and but little light.

Strip of all in Prison

Some are thus kept all alone for two or three Moneths, some as long as they live, others have company, as the Lords Inquisitors please. When the party hath been in Prison a week or two, the Gaoler perswades him to Perition for a day of hearing, telling him, The sooner the better, and that it will much further his cause, and bring it to some good effect, &c. Whereas it were far better for him to stay till he be called for, for then he hath nothing to do but to answer their objections. But the poor Prisoner, not knowing this mystery, is usually ruled by his Keeper, intreating him to stand his Friend to procure him a day of hearing, whose suit is easily heard, and the Prisoner is brought into the Confistory. Then do the Inquisitors ask him, What is his request? The Prisoner answereth, That he would gladly have his matter heard: Then they labor by threatening him with worse usage, if he conceal the truth, to cause him to confess the thing whereof he is accused; and if they can but draw him to this, they have their desires: For usually they draw more from him, than they could have proved against him. Then they advise him to let it come from himself, promising, That if he acknowledge his faults, he shall presently be released and sent home: If yet he stand mute, they then charge him to disburthen his Conscience, and in the mean time to return to his Prison, till he hath better be-thought himself, and then he may sue for a new day of hearing, and so they dismiss him.

Subsily

How Inquisitors deal with the Prisoners

After some days they call for him again, asking him, Whether he be yet determined to confess ought? But whether he plead his innocency, or confess some little, they still urge him to disburthen his Conscience, perswading him, That they advise him for the best, and in love and compassion to him; but if he now refuse the favor proffered, he shall find them afterwards sharp Justices, &c. and so send him back again to prison.

The third time he is called for, they use the like subtilty to draw him to Confession, telling him, That if he refuse, they must use extremity, and do what they can by Law; by which word they mean extream tormenting and mangling of him. Then if the party confess any thing; Nay, say they, we are not yet satisfied, we have not all you can say, you keep back something on purpose. And so they remand him to prison.

Having thus excruciated him day by day, if they can yet get nothing out of him, they then require an Oath of him, and hold a Crucifix or Cross before him, whereby the Poor Christian must at last needs shew himself: For knowing that he ought to swear by God alone, who hath reserved this honor to himself, he must refuse the Oath; which if he do, then they read a large Indictment against him, wherein they lay to his charge, things that never any Man accused him of, and, which it may be, himself never thought of: And this they do to amaze him, and so to try if he will confess any of these misdemeanors; or if they can trip him in his answers, and so catch him in their Net. Then they put him to answer to every Article particularly ex tempore, without any time of deliberation. Then they give him Pen, Ink, and Paper, requiring him to set down his answer in writing, to see if they can find any difference betwixt his former answer and this. And if the party chance to confess ought, then they inquire of whom he learned it, and whether he hath spoken of it before others, and who they are, and hereby many are brought into trouble. For, whether they liked it, or not, they are sure to be questioned, because they did not come and declare it to the Fathers Inquisitors. Then pretending to shew him favor, they appoint him an Advocate to blind the Peoples eyes, as if they proceeded according to the Rules of Justice: But this Advocate dares not tell his Client any Point of Law, that may do him good, for fear of angring the Inquisitors; neither may he speak privately with his Client, but either before an Inquisitor or a Notary.

Two or three days after the party hath had the Copy of his Accusation, he is called into the Court, where his Advocate is, as if he intended to defend his cause: But indeed, he dare say nothing to the purpose for fear of angring the Inquisitors; only he cheers up his Client, and bids him tell the truth in any Case, as the only way to prevail in that Court, and then is the Prisoner sent back again; who hopes that now his cause will be heard, and his business dispatched, whereas usually these good Fathers let him lie, two, or three, or four years in prison, without ever calling for him again: And if through loathsomeness and intolerableness of the Prison, any sue to come to hearing, it may be with much ado he obtains it, but usually that favor is denied him: Yet at length, when they please, they call for him to hear the Depositions of the Witnesses against him; which yet is not done till the poor Prisoner, by his grievous imprisonment, is brought so low, as that they think he will rather chuse death, than such a life; and therefore will be willing to tell all, that so he may be rid out of his misery. Then between rebuking and a gentle admonition, they tell him, that though he hath stood out so long, yet at length they would have him wiser to confess the truth: But if he yet refuse to be his own accuser, then the Fiscal produceth the Depositions, which are delivered to the Prisoner; but they are drawn up so intricately and ambiguously, that he knows not what to make of them. And this they do to conceal the Witnesses, lest he should except against them, and to set him on guessing, that so if he chance to reckon up any others, to whom he spake any thing about any of those matters, they may thereby get more Grist.

to their Mill : For they presently Out-law such Persons as favorers of Hereticks; for suffering an Heretick to sow such pestilent seeds amongst them, without complaining thereof to the Inquisitors.

The Keeper of the Prison also is examined, what he hath seen and observed of him in the Prison, and his testimony is as good as two witnesses, to take away the Prisoners life.

They have also Promoters to bring in Accusations, who are admitted, though frantick Bedlams, or the veriest Varlots that be; and in their Informations, if they chance to want words of weight, the Inquisitors will help them out, and prompt them word by word. Then after three or four days, the Prisoner is called again to put in his answer to the Depositions; but in the interim his Advocate never comes at him to assist or direct him, but he is left to himself without all help, save of God alone. His answer being viewed, he is remanded to Prison again with this Item, That if he confess not the truth, they will extort it out of him by extremity.

After two or three moneths more, he is called for once again, and required to speak what he hath for himself, or else they must draw to an end: And if he still shrinks not, but stands firm in his own Justification, they proceed to other dealings; in comparison of which, all their former proceedings are not only sufferable, but seem very reasonable and full of gentleness. For their future actions far exceed all barbarousness, the Devil himself being not able to go beyond them in their monstrous tyranny: For not long after, the Prisoner is called in before the Inquisitors, who tell him, That they have fully considered his whole case, and found out that he doth not declare the whole truth; and therefore they are resolved, that he shall be racked, that by force they may draw from him what by fair means he will not acknowledge: And therefore they advise him rather to do it voluntarily, and thereby to avoid the pain and peril that yet attends him: Yet whether he confess or not confess, all is one, for to the Rack he must go. Then is he led into the place where the Rack standeth, which is a deep and dark Dungeon under ground, with many a door to pass through, ere a Man come to it, because the shrieks and cries of the tormented should not be heard. Then the Inquisitors set themselves upon a Scaffold hard by the Rack, and the Torches being lighted, the Executioner comes in, all arrayed from top to toe in a Suit of black Canvas, his head is covered with a long black Hood that covereth all his face, having only two peep-holes for his eyes; which sight doth more affright the poor Soul, to see one in the likeness of the Devil to be his tormentor. The Lords being set in their places, they begin again to exhort him to speak the truth freely and voluntarily; then with sharp words, they command him to be stripped stark naked, yea, though the modest Maid, or chaste Matron in the City, whose grief, in regard of the Rack, is not half so great as to be seen naked in the presence of such manner of persons: For these wicked Villains, without any regard of honesty, will not by any Prayers of godly Matrons, or chaste Maidens, forbear one jot of that barbarous impudence. As if a Shirt or Smock could hinder the violence of the Rack from sufficiently tormenting them.

They proceed to the Rack.

Their Privy Parts are covered with Linen.

The party being thus stripped, the Inquisitors signify to the Tormentor, how they would have him or her ordered. The first kind of torment is the Gibbet or Pulley; but first one comes behind him, and binds his hands with a Cord eight or ten times about, the Inquisitors calling upon him to strain each harder than other; they cause also his thumbs to be bound extreme hard with a small Line, and so both hands and thumbs are fastned to a Pulley, which hangs on the Gibbet; then they put great and heavy Bolts on his heels, and hang upon those Bolts, between his feet, certain weights of Iron, and so hoist him or her up from the ground: And whilst the poor wretch hangs in the Pulley, they begin to exhort him again to accuse himself, and as many as are guilty of; then they command him to be hoisted up higher to the top of the Pulley, till his head touch the pulley. Having hung thus a good while, they command him to be let down, and twice twice so much weight to be fastned to his heels, and so hoisted up again, and one inch higher if it may be: Then they command the Hangman to let him up and down, that the weights of the Iron hanging at his heels may rent every Joynt in his Body asunder. With which intolerable pains, if the party shriek or cry out, they roar out as loud to him to confess the truth, or else he shall come down with a vengeance. Then they bid the Hangman suddenly to slip the Rope, that he may fall down with a sway, and in the midway to stop; thus give him the Strappado, which being as soon done, it rends all his Body out of Joynt, Arms, Shoulders, Back, Legs, &c. by reason of the sudden jerk; and the weights hanging at his Legs. If he yet remain constant, they add more weight to his heels the third time, and the poor wretch already half dead is hoisted up the third time, and to increase his misery, they rail upon him, calling him Dog and Heretick, telling him, That he is like there to make his end. And if the poor Creature in his pangs call upon Christ, intreating, That he would vouchsafe to aid and assist him, thus miserably tormented for his sake; then they fall to mocking and deriding him, saying, why calledst thou on Jesus Christ? Let Jesus Christ alone, and tell us the truth: what a crying out upon Christ makest thou? &c. But if the party desire to be let down, promising to tell somewhat, that is the ready way to make him to be worse used, for now they think that he begins only to broach the matter: For when he hath done they command him to be haled up again, and to be let down as before; so that usually these torments are exercised upon him for three hours together. Then they ask the Gaoler, if his other torments are ready, to affright the poor Soul: The Gaoler answereth, That they are ready, but he hath not brought them with him. Then the Inquisitors bid him to bring them against the morrow; for, say they, we will try other ways to get the truth out of this fellow: And so turning to him that lies in miserable pain, having all his Joynts out. How now, Sirrah, say they, how like you this gear? Have you enough of it yet? Well, see that you call your wits to you against to morrow, or look to die when: For what you have felt, is but a Fleabiting, in comparison, of what is behind. And so they depart.

Then the Gaoler plays the Bone-setter so well as he can, setting his Joynts, and so carries him back to Prison, or drags him by the Arms or Legs most pitifully: If they mean to rack him no more, after two or three days they send for him again, and cause him to be brought by the Rack, where the Hangman stands in the likeness of a Devil, as before, the more to affright him. When he comes before the Inquisitors, they fall a perswading him to confess the truth at last; and if he confess any thing, he may chance to go to the Rack again, whereby they hope to extort more: And when indeed they intend to rack the party again, then at three days end, when the ach in his Joynts is most grievous and painful to him, they send for him, requiring him to declare all his Heresies, and to peach all such as he hath had conference with, about them, and all such as he knows to be of that mind, or else he must prepare himself for the Rack; and if he continue constant, he is again stripped of his cloaths, and hoisted up with weights at his heels, as before; besides which, as he hangs at the Pully, they bind his Thighs together, and Legs about the Calf, with a small strong Cord, and with a short piece of Wood they twist the Cord till it be shrunk so deep in the flesh, that its past sight; which is an extream and terrible torment, worse than any that he hath yet indured, and in this plight they let the poor Soul lie two or three hours: The inquisitors in the mean time not ceasing to exhort, perswade, threaten, and scoff at him.

Yea, sometimes they proceed to another kind of torture called the Aselli, which is after this manner. There is a piece of Timber somewhat hollowed on the top like a Trough, about the middle whereof, there is a sharp Bar going a cross, whereon a Man's back resteth, that it cannot go to the bottom; it is also placed so, that his heels shall lie higher than his head: Then is the naked party laid thereon; his arms, thighs, and legs bound with strong small Cords, and wrested with short Truncheons, till the Cords pierce almost to the very Bone. Then they take a thick fine Lawn Cloth, laying it over the parties Mouth, as he lies upright on his Back, so that it may stop his Nostrils also; then taking a quantity of Water, they pour it in a long stream like a Thred, which falling from on high, drives the Cloth down into his Throat, which puts the poor wretch into as great an Agony, as any indure in the pains of death: For in this torture he hath not liberty to draw his Breath, the Water stopping his Mouth, and the Cloth his Nostrils; so that when the Cloth is drawn out of the bottom of his Throat, it draws forth Blood with it, and a Man would think that it tore out his very Bowels. This is iterated as oft as the Inquisitors please, and yet they threaten him with worse torments, if he confess not. And so he is returned to his Prison again.

Yet many times after he hath lain there a Moneth or two, he is brought again to the Rack, and used as before, yea, sometimes five or six times, even as oft as they please; for their Lust is a Law: And yet they have another torment with fire, which is no whit inferior to the former. They take a Pan of burning Charcoal, and set it just over against the Soles of the parties feet, just before he goes to the Rack; and that the fire may have the more force upon them, they bast them with Lard or Bacon. But if all extremity of torments will not force him to confess what they desire, nor to deny the truth, they use other means by subtil Interrogatories, and frequent Questionings, to draw him into some snare or other. Yea, if yet they cannot prevail, then some one of the Inquisitors comes to him in private, and shews himself much affected with his misery, weeps with him, comforts him, gives him advice, seems to impart such a secret to him, as he would scarce impart to his Father, or dearest friend alive. And this they use most with Women, whereas they are but fair Baits upon deadly Hooks, whereby they seek to destroy them: Whereof we have this example.

Torment with fire.

Subtilty.

At sevil there were apprehended, a godly Matron, two of her Daughters, and her Neece, who all of them underwent the forementioned torments, with Manly courage, and Christian constancy, because they would not betray each other, nor other godly Persons in that City. Then one of the Inquisitors sent for the youngest Maid oft to his Chamber, pretended much compassion towards her, spake much to comfort her, told her what a grief it was to him, to see her torments: And then he used familiar and pleasant communication to her; and told her, That he would advise her the best way to free her self, Mother, and Sister, from these troubles; that he would undertake the ordering of their business; and then perswaded her to disclose the whole truth to him; and he bound himself with an Oath, that he would stop all further proceedings against them, and procure their dismission. Having thus outwitted the poor Maid, who gave too much credit to him, she told him of some points of Religion which they had wont to confest amongst themselves: And so when he had gotten out of her what possibly he could, like a perfidious Villain, contrary to his vows, promises, and oath, he caused her to be racked again to get more out of her; yea, they put her also to the intolerable pain of the Trough, and through extremity of pangs and torments, they at last extorted from her a betraying of her own Mother, Sisters, and divers others, which were immediately apprehended, tortured, and at last burnt with fire. But when they were brought in great pomp upon the Scaffold, and had the sentence of death passed upon them, this Maid went to her Aunt, who had instructed her in the Principles of Religion; and boldly without change of countenance, gave her hearty thanks for that great benefit which she had received by her means, intreating her to pardon her for what she had offended her at any time, for that she was now to depart out of this life. Her Aunt comforted her stoutly, bid her be of good cheer, for that now ere long they should be with Christ. This Woman was openly whipt, and kept in prison during her life, the rest were all presently burned.

A woman and her two Daughters, and Neece, A Judas.

Perjury.

Another device that they have, is this. When they think that Prisoners, which are together, do talk together of Religion, exhorting and comforting one another, another, as they have occasion or opportunity; the Inquisitors commit to prison, under a colour, a crafty Knave whom they call a Fly; who after two or three days will cunningly insinuate himself into the bosoms of the other Prisoners, and then pretending a great deal of zeal to Religion, he will proffer discourse to them, and by degrees get out of their Mouths something whereof he may accuse them. Then doth he move for a day of hearing, and so getting to the Inquisitors, he peaches the Prisoners, who shall be sure afterwards to hear of it to their smart. Yea, these Flies, as soon as they are out of one Prison, for the hope of gain, will be content presently to be put into another, and then into a third; where they will lie in chains, as the other Prisoners do, enduring hunger, cold, stink, and the loathsomeness of Prison, and all to betray others: And this mans accusation is as strong and valid as the testimony of any other witness whatsoever. Other Flies also there be that serve the holy Inquisition abroad, slyly insinuating themselves into the companies of the common People, who are suspected to be Lutherans, and when they can pump any thing out of them, they presently betray them. They have yet this other device, when they can catch any Man that is noted for Religion, or a Minister that hath instructed others, after he hath been in Prison a while, they give it out, that upon the Rack he hath discovered all his disciples, and acquaintance, and they suborn others to aver that they heard it: And this they do to draw the simple People to come of their own accord, and to confess their faults to the Inquisitors, and to crave pardon, whereupon they promise them favor.

Their cruel Prisons.

The Inquisitors and their Officers use to call their Prisoners Dogs and Hereticks; and indeed, they use them much worse than most Men do their Dogs. For first, the place where usually each of them is laid, by reason of the straitness, ill air, and dampness of the Earth, is liker a Grave than a Prison; and if it be a Loft, in the hot weather, it is like a hot Oven or Furnace; and in each of these holes, usually two or three are thronged together: So that they have no more room than to lie down in. In one corner is a Stool of easment, and a Pitcher of Water to quench their thirsts. In these Cells they have no light, but what comes in at the Key-hole, or some small cranny; other some there are much worse, not being long enough for a Man to lie in: So that such as are put into them, never likely come out till they be half rotted away, or die of a Consumption.

Their Diet is answerable to their Lodging: The rich pay large Fees to the holy House, and every Prisoner is rated as the Inquisitors please: But such as are poor, the King allows them three pence a day, out of which, the Steward, Landress, and some other necessary charges are deducted; so that one half of it comes not to the Prisoners share: And if any be moved with compassion to relieve them, it is counted such an hainous offence, that it will cost him a scourging till Blood come at least.

It once hapned, that there was a Keeper appointed for their Prison, in the Castle of Triana in Spain, that was of a courteous disposition by nature, who used the Prisoners well, and closely, for fear of the Inquisitors, shewed them some favor: At which time, there was a godly Matron and her two Daughters committed to prison; which being put into several rooms, had a great desire to see each other for their mutual comfort in their distresses: Whereupon they besought the Keeper to suffer them to come together, if it were but for one quarter of an hour; the Keeper yielded, and so they were together about half an hour, and then returned to their former Prisons. Within a few days after, these Women being racked in a terrible manner, the Keeper fearing lest they would confess that little favor which he had shewed them, of his own accord went to the Inquisitors, confessed his fact, and craved pardon. But they deemed this so heinous an offence, that they presently commanded him to be haled to Prison, where by reason of the extremity shewed him, he fell mad. Yet this procured him no favor; for after he had been a whole year in a vile Prison, they brought him upon their triumphant Stage, with a Sambenito upon him, and a rope about his neck, and there they censured him him to be whipt about the City, and to have two hundred stripes, and then to serve in the Gallies for six years. The next day one of his mad fits coming upon him, as he was set on an Asses back to be scourged, he threw himself off, snatched a Sword out of the Officers hand, and had slain him, if the People had not immediately laid hold on him; whereupon he was bound faster on the Asses back, had his two hundred stripes, and was for this offence condemned four year longer to the Gallies.

Another Keeper at another time had a Maid, who seeing how miserably the Prisoners were used, pitying their distressed condition, who were hunger-starved, and almost pined, she would sometimes speak to them at the Grate, exhort and comfort them as well as she could, and sometimes would help them to some good and wholesome food; yea, by her means the Prisoners came to understand one anothers condition, which was a great comfort to them. But this at last coming to the Inquisitors ears, they enjoined her to wear the Sambenito, to be whipped about the Streets, to receive two hundred stripes, and to be banished the City for ten years, with this writing on her Head, A favourer and aider of Hereticks.

A Maid whipt for showing them favour.

And whereas all other sorts of Persons in Prison and bondage are allowed to recreate and refresh themselves with singing at their pleasure, these poor Souls are forbidden this small solace in their great misery: For if any of them sing a Psalm, or openly recite any portion of Scripture, the Inquisitors take it very hainously, and presently send to them, requiring them to be silent, upon the pain of Excommunication; and if the Prisoner make light of this warning, he shall have a bit set on his Tongue to teach him obedience: And this they do, both to deprive the poor Souls of all kind of solace, and to keep other Prisoners from knowing how their Friends do: So that it often falls out that a Man and his Friend, the Father and Son, yea the Husband and Wife shall be in one Prison-house two or three years together, and not know of each others being there, till they meet upon the Scaffold, upon the great day of Triumph.

The Prisoners denied leave to sing Psalms.

By reason of this cruel usage many of the Prisoners die, some of their torments, others of the stink of the Prison, and others of diseases contracted by hunger, cold, ill diet, &c. They have also an Hospital, unto which they remove such as fall sick in their Prisons, where yet they are not dealt more gently with in any thing, save that they have Physick allowed them for their healths sake: But none are suffered to come to them but the Physician, and the Servants of the Hospital: And as soon as the Patient is on the mending hand, he is carried back to the place whence he came.

Their Hospital.

If the Prisoner be half naked, or want something to lie on, and thereupon pray the Inquisitors that his necessity may be considered: The answer which he receives is this, well, now the weather is warm, you may live full well without either cloaths or couch: And if it be Winter time, his answer is, True, it hath been a great frost of late, but now the cold is come down again, and it will be more seasonable weather. Care you for the garments wherewithal you should cloath your Soul, which consisteth in uttering the truth, and discharging your conscience before this holy House: And if the Prisoner desire to have some good Book, or the holy Bible to enable him to pass that troublesome and careful time to some profit, The Inquisitors answers him, That the true Book is to speak the truth, and to discharge his conscience to that holy Court, and that he ought to be occupied in laying open his wounds to their Lordships, who are ready to give him a plaister. Whereby it appears that all their care and desire is, that the poor Prisoner may have nothing to look on or think on but his present miserable state, that the grief thereof grating upon him, may force him to satisfy their requests.

Cruel mercy.

The last act of the Tragedy remaineth, wherein both Parties are pleased and have their desire: The Inquisitors in obtaining their prey, The Prisoners in finding some end of their miserable usage: But two or three days before the solemnity, they use severally to call before them, all such whose estates are confiscated, examining them what Lands or Goods they have, where they lie, charging them upon great penalties not to conceal one jot, telling them, that if any thing be afterwards found, Felony shall be laid to their charge, and he with whom it is found, shall pay foundly for it, and when all is confessed, they are returned to Prison again.

Their condemnation.

Their habits.

The night before the Festival, they caused all the Prisoners to be brought into a large Room, where they are informed of the several kinds of penances that they are to do the next day: The next morning very early, the Familiars come and attire the Prisoners in their several habits, in which they are to appear before the People: Some in Sambenito's, which is a long garment painted all over with ugly Devils; on his Head he hath an high-crown'd Hat whereon a Man is painted burning in the fire, with many Devils about him, plying him with fire and fagots. Besides, their Tongues have a cleft piece of Wood put upon them, which nips and pincheth them that they cannot speak; they have also about their Necks, Cords, and their Hands fast bound behind them. On this sort come these constant Martyrs disguised, first to the Stage, and then to the Stake; and in the like sort do all the rest come forth, arrai'd as the other, and set forth with the like notes of infamy, either more or less, as the Inquisitors please to disgrace them in the sight of the People. On each hand of every Prisoner goeth a Familiar, all Armed, to guard him: As also two Friars with every one that is to die, who perswade him tooth and nail to deny that Doctrine that formerly he hath professed, now at their going out of this world; which wicked importunity is a great grief to the poor Servants of Jesus Christ.

The Inquisitors also pass in great pomp from the Castle of Triana to their Scaffold: And when all are set in their places, a Sermon begins, framing on purpose in commendations of the holy House, and in confutation of such Hereticks as are presently to suffer: But the greatest part is spent in slanderous reproaches, wherewith they vilifie and disgrace the truth, and the Professors of it. The Sermon being ended, the Sentences against the Prisoners are read; First, against such as have easiest punishments, and so in order to the greater; Which Sentences are commonly these, Death without mercy; Whipping in such extremity that the Persons seldom escape with their lives; Condemnation to the Gally; Forfeiture of all their Estates, &c.

Then doth the chief Inquisitor absolve all such as have forsaken Christ, and are come home to the Church of Rome, from all the errors for which they shewed themselves penitent; But though hereby they are absolved from the fault, yet not from the punishment; For notwithstanding their Recantation, they must abide the punishment without mercy.

A wicked Oath.

And whereas multitudes of People resort to this spectacle, some coming twenty Leagues to see it; The Inquisitors have this trick to uphold their Kingdom, They cause all the People present, to take an Oath to live and die in the service of the Church of Rome, hazarding both Life and Goods against any that shall oppose it; as also to their power, to uphold and maintain the holy Inquisition, and to defend all the Officers thereof, &c.

Degradation.

Then if there be any amongst the Prisoners to be degraded, they proceed after this manner. First, they apparel him in his Massing Robes, then they despoil him again of every part thereof; Then are his Hands, Lips, and the Crown of his Head scraped with a piece of Glass, or a sharp Knife till they bleed again, to scrape off the holy Oyl, wherewith he was anointed at his Ordination. In the end of their Sentence which is pronounced upon such as are to be burned, they use this abominable Hypocrisie: They bequeath him to the secular power, with this humble request to them, to shew the Prisoner as much favor as may be, and neither to break any Bone, nor pierce the skin of his Body: This shews their great impudence, that having already given Sentence on him to be burned, they yet should pretend such mercy and clemency towards him, whom all along themselves have used with such extream cruelty.

Hypocrisie!

They

They use also this trick further, that in reading the crimes for which he is condemned, they do not only misreport such things as he confessed upon his examination, but they devilishly father upon him such things as he never spake, or thought of in all his life; and this they do to disgrace him, and to make him and his opinions more abhorred of all Men. and to encrease their own estimation and credit, as being necessary Officers to rid the world of such pestilent Persons; and all this while the Prisoners Tongue hath a cleft piece of Wood upon it to his intolerable pain and grief, that he cannot answer for himself, nor gainsay that they charge him with.

All these things being finished, the Magistrate takes them into his hand, and conveys them presently to the place of execution, with divers instruments of Satan about them, calling and crying to them to forsake the truth; and when they cannot prevail, after the Prisoner is tied to the Stake, they break his Neck in a trice, and then they report amongst the common People that they recanted their Heresies at the last hour, and so came home to the Church of Rome, and therefore they felt no pain in the fire at all, which made them take it so patiently.

Abominable
lyce.

Such as are not condemned to die, are carried back to Prison, and the next day brought up to be whipt, after which some of them are sent to the Gallies, others kept in Prison all their life time: But all have this special charge given them, that they never speak of any thing that they have heard, seen, or felt, during their imprisonment in the Inquisition; For if the contrary be ever proved against them, and that they utter any of their secrets, they shall be taken for Persons relapsed, and be punished with greatest severity, their judgment being death without Redemption; and hereby they keep in all their Knavery and Tyranny close and secret to themselves: And if any of them be released because their faults were but small, they are yet so careful lest their cruelty should come to light, that they inhibit them the company or conference with any other, than such as they shall appoint and allow them; neither will they suffer them to write to any Friend, except they first have the perusing of their Letters.

concealed.

Sometimes also, after they have imprisoned Men in such a miserable state, for a year or two, and can extort nothing out of them by their torments, nor prove any thing against them by witness, so that they must necessarily dismiss them, they then call them into the Court, and begin to flatter them, and tell them what a good opinion they have of them, and that they are resolved to send them home, for the which fatherly favor extended towards them in saving their Lives and Goods, they are to account themselves much beholding to their Lordships, &c. And so at last they dismiss him with special charge of silence; and when he is gone, they have special Spies, abroad to see how he takes the matter; and if they find that he complains of his punishments, or discloses their secrets, they presently commence a new suit against him.

Flattery.

On a time the Inquisitors at Sevil apprehended a noble Lady; The cause was, for that a Sister of hers, a very vertuous Virgin, who was afterwards burned for Religion, had confessed in the extremity of her torments, that she had sometime had conference with this her Sister about matters of Religion: This Lady when she was first apprehended, was gone with Child about six moneths, in respect whereof they did not shut her up so close at first, nor deal so severely with her as they did with others: But within four days after she was brought to Bed, they took the Child from her; and the seventh day after, they shut her up in close Prison, and used her in all things as they did other Prisoners. The only wordly comfort that she had in her misery, was, that they lodged her with a vertuous Maiden that was her Fellow-Prisoner for a time, but afterwards burned at the Stake: This Maid whilst they were together, were carried to the Rack, and so sore strained and torn thereon, that she was almost pulled in pieces; Then was she brought back and thrown upon a Bed of flags, that served them both to lie on: The good Lady was not able to help her, yet shewed singular tokens of love and compassion towards her.

They torment her in the trough.

The Maid was scarce recovered when the Lady was carried out to be served with the same sauce, and was so terribly tormented in the trough, that by reason of the strait straining of the strings, piercing to the very Bones of her Arms, Thighs and Shins, she was brought back half dead to her Prison, the Blood gushing out of her mouth abundantly, which shewed that something was broken within her: But after eight days the Lord delivered her from these cruel Tygers by taking her mercifully to himself.

She died.
John Pontio.

Upon one of their days of triumph, there was brought out one John Pontio, of a noble Family, a zealous Professor of the truth, and one of an holy and blameless life, and well learned; he was eminent also in works of charity, in which he had spent a great part of his estate: Being apprehended for the Profession of the Gospel, he was cast into Prison, where he manfully maintained the truth in the midst of all their cruel dealings with him. At last they cast into Prison to him one of their Flies, who by his subtilty and craft, so wroght upon him that he drew from him a promise to yield obedience to the Romish Church. But though God suffered him to fall a while to shew him his frailty, yet afterwards in much mercy he raised him up again with double strength to that which he had before, and before his Execution he manfully defended the truth against a subtil Frier. The things which he was condemned for, were these; That he should say, that from his heart he abhorred the Idolatry which was committed in worshipping the Host. That he removed his household from place to place, that he might shun coming to the Mass. That the Justification of a Christian resteth only in the Merits of Jesus Christ apprehended by Faith, &c. That there was no Purgatory. That the Popes pardon were of no value, &c. And for my self, (saith he,) I am not only willing but desirous to die, and ready to suffer any punishment for the truth which I have professed: I esteem not of this world nor the treasures of it more than for my necessary uses, and the rest to bestow in the propagation and maintenance of the Gospel: And I beseech God daily upon my knees for my Wife and Children, that they may all continue in this quarrel even to the death. And when he came to his Execution, he patiently and comfortably slept in the Lord.

Humane frailty.

His Speech at death.

John Gonfalevo.

At the same time there was also brought forth one John Gonfalevo, formerly a Priest, but by his diligent study of the Scripture it pleased God to reveal his truth to him, so that he became a zealous Preacher of it, laboring in all his Sermons to beat into Mens minds the true way, and means of our Justification to consist in Christ alone, and in stedfast Faith in him; for which he was apprehended and cast into Prison, where he endured all their cruelty with a Christian courage: At last, with two of his Sisters, he was condemned. His Mother and one of his Brothers were also imprisoned with him for the truth, and executed shortly after. When he with his Sisters went out at the Castle Gate, having his Tongue at liberty, he began to sing the 106 Psalm before all the People, who had often heard him make many godly Sermons: He also condemned all Hypocrites as the worst sort of People; whereupon they stocked his Tongue. Upon the Stage he never changed countenance, nor was at all daunted. When they all came to the Stake, they had their Tongues loosed, and were commanded to say their Creed, which they did chearfully; when they came to those words, The holy Catholick Church, They were commanded to add; Of Rome, but that they all refused; whereupon their Necks were broken in a trice: And then 'twas noised abroad that they had added those words, and died, confessing the Church of Rome to be the true Catholick Church.

Tormented in Prison.

With a cleft stick.

A Church in still.

There was in Sivil a private Congregation of Gods People, most of which the Inquisitors consumed in the fire, as they could discover any of them: Amongst others that were apprehended, they took four Women, famous above the rest for for their holy and godly conversation, but especially the youngest of them, who was not above one and twenty years old, who by her diligent and frequent reading of the Scriptures, and by conference with godly and learned Men, had attained to a very great measure of knowledg; so that whilst she was in Prison, she non-plus'd and put to shame many of those Friars that came to seduce her.

Another of these Women was a grave Matron, whose House was a School of Vertue, and a place where the Saints used to meet, and serve God day and night: But the time being come wherein they were ripe for God, they, together with other of their Neighbors, were apprehended and cast into Prison, where they were kept in dark Dungeons, and forced to endure all the cruel and extream torments which are before mentioned: At last they were condemned, and brought forth to the Scaffold amongst other Prisoners. The young Maid especially came with a merry and chearful countenance, as it were triumphing over the Inquisitors, and having her Tongue at liberty, she began to sing Psalms to God; whereupon the Inquisitors caused her Tongue to be nipped by setting a Barnacle upon it. After Sentence read, they were carried to the place of Execution, where with much constancy and courage they ended their lives: Yet the Inquisitors not satisfied herewith, caused the House of the Matron where the Church used to meet, to be pulled down, and the ground to be laid waste, and a Pillar to be erected upon it with an inscription shewing the cause.

Malice.

There was also apprehended another worthy member of the same Congregation called Ferdinando; he was of a fervent spirit, and very zealous in doing good: A young Man, but for his integrity of life, very famous. He had spent eight years in educating of Youth, and had endeavored to sow the seeds of Piety in the hearts of his Scholars, as much as lay in him to do in a time of so great Persecution and Tyranny; Being at the last apprehended for a Lutheran, he was cast into Prison, and terribly tormented upon the Gibbet, and in the Trough, whereby he was so shaken in every joynit, that when he was taken down, he was not able to move any part of his Body; yet did those cruel Tormentors draw him by the heels into his Prison, as if he had been a dead Dog: But notwithstanding all his torments, he answered the Inquisitors very stoutly, and would not yield to them one jot. During his imprisonment God used him as an Instrument to regeal and confirm a Monk, who had been cast into Prison for confessing the Gospel openly. But by means of the Inquisitors flatteries and fair promises he had somewhat relented: Gods Providence so ordering it, that Ferdinando was cast into the same Prison, and finding the Monk wavering, he rebuked him sharply; and afterwards having drawn him to a sight of, and sorrow for his sin, he at last strengthened him in the promise of free grace and mercy. Hereupon the Monk desired a day of hearing, where before the Inquisitors, he solemnly renounced his Recantation, desiring that his former confession might stand, whereupon the Sentence of death passed against them both: After which the Inquisitors asked Ferdinando, Whether he would revolt his former Heresies; To which he answered, That he had professed nothing but what was agreeable to the pure and perfect word of God, and ought to be the profession of every Christian man, and therefore he would stick to it to the death: Then did they clap a Barnacle upon his Tongue, and so they were burned together.

Execution.

There was also one Juliano, called, The Little, because he was of a small and weak Body, who going into Germany, was there conversant with divers learned and godly Men, by which means he attained to the knowledg of the truth, and became a zealous professor of it, and earnestly longing after the salvation of his Countreymen, he undertook a very dangerous work, which was to convey two great dry Fats full of Bibles Printed in Spanish, into his own Countrey: In this attempt he had much cause of fear, the Inquisitors had so stopped every every Port, and kept such strict watch, to prevent the coming in of all such commodities: But through Gods mighty Protection; he brought his burden safely thither, and which was almost miraculous, he conveyed them safe into Sivil, notwithstanding the busie Searchers and Catch-poles that watched in every corner. These Bibles being dispersed, were most joyfully and thankfully received, and through Gods blessing, wrought wonderfully amongst Gods People to ripen them against the time of harvest. But at last the matter broke out by the means of a false Brother, who going to the Inquisitors; played the Judas, and betrayed the whole Church to them. So that there were taken at Sivil at one time, Eight hundred Christians, whereof Twenty of them were afterwards roasted at one fire.

Juliano's torments and constancy.

Amongst these, this Juliano was one of the first that was apprehended and sent to Prison, where he lay without any company, laden with Irons above three years; yet was his constancy so great and wonderful, that the Tormentors themselves were sooner wearied in inflicting, than he in suffering torments; and notwithstanding his weak and wearyish Body, yet he remained undaunted in mind in undergoing all their tyrannies, so that he never departed from the Rack more dejected than he came to it; neither threatnings, nor pains, nor torments made him shrink or yield one jot to them: But when he was drawn back to his Prison, he would tell his Fellows how he had conquered and confounded his Enemies, saying, They depart vanquished, they depart vanquished; The wolves flie with shame, they flie with shame.

His death.

In the day of their Triumph, when he was brought out to be apparelled (with his other Fellow-Prisoners) in all their shameful habits, he exhorted them with a chearful countenance, saying, My Brethren be of good chear, this is the Hour wherein we must be faithful witnesses unto God and his truth before Men, as become the true Servants and Soldiers of Christ, and ere long we shall have him to witness with us again; and within a few Hours we shall triumph with him in Heaven for ever: But hereupon they presently clapt a Barnacle upon his Tongue that he should speak no more, and so he was led to his Execution, But though he could not speak, yet by his countenance and gestures he shewed his chearful and quiet mind: Then kneeling down, he kissed the step whereon he stood, and being tyed to the stake, he endeavored by his looks and gestures to encourage his Fellow-Martyrs in their sufferings, and so they quietly and patiently resigned up their Spirits unto God.

John Leon.

There was also John Leon, a Tailor by Trade, who out of a blind devotion to serve God, resolved to enter into a Monastery, but by Gods Providence it so fell out that he entred into a Cloister at Sivil, wherein most of the Monks were well affected to the true Religion, amongst whom in two or three years space, he was so grounded in the principles of Religion, that he resolved to leave that kind of life, which accordingly he did, and went into the Country, yet after a time he had a great mind to confer with his former School-masters: but when he came back to the Cloister, he found that they were all fled into Germany: Hereupon he resolved to follow them, and through many dangers and perils, it pleased God at last after a long and tedious journey, to bring him safe to Franckfort, where he met with some of his old acquaintance, and with them he travelled to Geneva. About which time Queen Mary suddenly dying, and Queen Elizabeth of blessed Memory succeeding her, the English Exiles that lived in those parts were called home; whereupon divers Spaniards that sojourned at Geneva, thinking England a fitter place for their Congregation, resolved to accompany the Englishmen; and for this end they dispersed themselves into several companies that they might travel with the more safety; The Inquisitors took the departure of these Monks so ill, that not sparing any cost, they sent their Flies abroad to apprehend them; who way-laid them, especially at Collen, Franckfort, Antwerp, and in all the ways that led from Geneva. This John Leon had gotten him a companion, with whom he travelled towards England, who who being discovered at Argentine, were dogged into Zealand, and as they were ready to take Ship, they were apprehended. John Leon took his arrest very composedly, never changing countenance at it: They were presently carried back into the Town, where they were miserably racked to discover their Fellows, and not long after were shipped for Spain, having great Irons, wrought like a Net, that covered both Head and Face, within which also was another piece of Iron made like a tongue, which being thrust into their Mouths took away their Speech: They were also loaden with other Engins and Fetters of Iron; wherewith they were bound Hand and Foot, and in these continual pains and torments they lay a Ship-board till they came into Spain, and then John Leon was sent to Sivil, and his companion to Validolid, where afterwards in defence of the truth he suffered Martyrdom: But John remained long in Prison, where he tasted of the Inquisitors tyranny, suffering both hunger and cold, and enduring all their torments one after another, and at last was brought out in their solemn shew, arrayed after their usual manner. It was a sad sight to see such a Ghost as he was, his Hair so grown, his Body so lean, that he had nothing but skin and bones left on him, and his pain much increased by having a Barnacle upon his Tongue. After Sentence of death pronounced upon him, they set his Tongue at liberty hoping that he would have recanted; but he made a stout and godly Confession of his Faith, and so quietly ended his life in the flames.

There was also burned at the same time a godly Virgin, that had formerly been a Nun; but being, through Gods grace, converted, she left her Cloister, and joyned her self to the Church of Christ. Being apprehended by the Inquisitors, she was intreated as others had been before her; and last was brought out to the Scaffold, where with a manly courage she put the Inquisitors to a foul foil, not only constantly affirming the truth, but sharply rebuking those Fathers, calling them dumb Dogs, a generation of Vipers, &c. Being brought to the stake, with a chearful countenance she underwent the pains of death, and so quietly slept in the Lord.

There was also one Christopher Losada, a Physitian, a learned Man and very well studied in the Scriptures, as also of a very holy conversation, inasmuch as he was chosen Super-intendent of the Church of Christ in Sivil, which at this time was very great, though dispersed into corners. At last he was apprehended by the Inquisitors, before whom he made a good Confession of his Faith, for which he endured hard and sharp imprisonment, with most cruel torments, and the open infamy of their solemn shew, and lastly was adjudged to the fire. As he stood at the stake, the Barnacle being taken from his Tongue, he disputed notably with some Monks that came to seduce him; and when they spake Latine that the common People might not understand them, Losada also began to speak in Latin so copiously and eloquently, as was strange to hear that he should have his Wits so fresh when he was ready to be burned: After which he patiently resigned up his spirit unto God in the fire.

There was also in Sivil one Arias, a Man of a sharp wit and well studied in Divinity, but withal of a crafty Wit and inconstant Nature; which vices he yet covered with a cloke of Religion, whereby he deceived many. About this time there were also in that City two sorts of Preachers, and both had a great number of Auditors: The one taught School-Divinity, and were continually calling upon their Hearers to often fastings, mortification, self-denial, frequency of Prayer, humility, &c. But themselves practised nothing less than these things: And indeed all their Religion consisted in works and bodily exercises, as running to Masses, hallowed places, shrift, &c. The other sort dealt more sincerely with the holy Scriptures; out of which they declared what was true righteousness, and perfect holiness: By means whereof that City above all others in Spain, bore the name for just and true dealing; and it pleased God that the brightness of this light did discover all the counterfeit holiness, and Pharasaical devotion of the other party : The chief Laborers in this harvest were Constantino, Agidius, and Varquius, all Doctors, and sober, wise, and learned Men; who by this kind of Preaching procured to themselves many Enemies. But above all others, Arias was the most spiteful and malicious; yet he carried it so cunningly, that he still kept up his reputation with these Men : But it was not long before he discovered himself, and that upon this occasion; There was one Ruzius, a learned Man, questioned before the Inquisitors, for something that he had delivered in a Sermon about the Controversies in Religion : The Inquisitors appointed him a day of hearing; and two or three days before, Arias met him, saluted him courteously, and discoursed familiarly with him : Then did he pump out of him, all those Arguments wherewith he intended to defend himself before the Inquisitors. When the day came, and Ruzius appeared, Arias went on that side where his opponents were, which much amated Ruzius; and in the disputation, Arias being prepared, did so wittily entervate all his Arguments, that Ruzius had nothing to say for himself, and so was fain to yield the cause, and Arias went away with the honor of the Field, though he got it by treachery. Yet did this Arias, being of Saint Isidores Monastery, preach so practically, that a great light began to dawn in that dark place : For the whole scope of his Sermons was to overthrow all their Profession; He taught them that singing and saying of their Prayers day and night was no service of God, that the holy Scriptures were to be read and studied with diligence, whence alone the true service of God could be drawn, and which alone teach us the true obedience to his Will, to the obtaining whereof we must use Prayer as a means, proceeding as well from a sense and feeling of our own infirmities, as grounded upon a perfect trust and confidence in God.

By laying these foundations, through Gods blessing, he began to make them out of love with their Monkish Superstition, and much provoked them to the study of the holy Scriptures. Besides also his Sermons, he read daily a Lecture upon Solomons Proverbs very learnedly, and made application thereof with good judgment and discretion; also in his private conference he did much good. The Lord also so ordered it in his wisdom, that he met with Schollers that were very tractable, such as were not greatly wedded to their Superstitions. And such was the force and might of Gods Election, that these few good Seeds so fructified, that in the end they brought forth a great encrease of godliness. For divers of the Monks, that hereby had their consciences awakened and cleared, to see their former Hypocrisie and Idolatry, sought out for further instructions, and through Gods mercy, they light upon those Preachers which taught the truth with more sincerity, of whom they learned the Principles of pure and perfect Religion, so that by degrees they left that evil opinion which they had formerly conceived against the Lutherans; and were desirous to read their Books : And God miraculously provided for them, that they had all sorts of Books brought them that were extant at that time, either in Geneva or Germany; whereby it came to pass that there were very few in all that Cloister but they had some taste of true Religion and Godliness; so that instead of mumbling their Mattens, they brought in Divinity-lectures, &c. Vain fasting was turned into Christian sobriety, neither were any taught to be Monkish, but to be sincerely and truly Religious.

But considering that when this should be once known they could not live in any safety, they resolved among themselves to forsake their nest, and to flee into Germany, where they might enjoy more safety of their lives, and freedom of their consciences; But how to get thither was all the difficulty; If one or two should go first, the rest would be exposed to danger : If many should go together, a thousand to one but they would be taken again; being to travel from the furthest part of Spain into Germany; yet upon debate they concluded, concluded, That they must all either speedily depart, or shortly be apprehended by the Inquisitors, who now had got some inkling of the matter. And God seeing them in this distress, shewed them a means how, under an honest pretence, a dozen of them might depart together within a Moneth, and each betake himself a several way towards Geneva, where they appointed, by Gods assistance, all to meet within a Twelve Moneth: The rest, which were but young novices, were left behind; who yet not long after were so strengthened by God, that they indured the brunt of Persecution when it came: Three of them being burned, and divers others diversly punished.

The aforementioned Servants of Jesus Christ forsook that place where they lived in honor, ease, and plenty; and by undertaking for Christs sake, a voluntary exile, exposed themselves to shame, ignominy, wants, yea, and were in continual danger of their lives also. And under God, Arias was a great means of this, who, by his Ministry, had first inlightened them with the knowledge of the Truth: For which, he was often complained of to the Inquisitors, and was convented before them; where he so cunningly answered the matter, that he was still discharged: But his last apprehension, through the mercy of God, brought forth in him the fruits of true repentance; for he did so deeply and unfeignedly bewail, and repent of his former withholding of the truth in unrighteousness; that whereas he used to be exceeding fearful of the Rack, he being brought to it, and upon it, with a marvellous constancy withstood the Enemies of Gods truth, and took up the Inquisitors roundly; withal telling them, that he was heartily sorry, and did most earnestly repent him, for that he had wittingly and willingly in their presence impugned the Truth, against the godly Defenders of the same: Many other sharp rebukes he gave to the Inquisitors, so often as he came to his answer. But at last, he was brought forth arrayed in their accustomed manner upon their day of triumph, at which time, he also made a notable Profession of his Faith, and so was led from the Stage to the Stake with a merry and chearful countenance; where, by the notable example of his repentance at his death, he made satisfaction to the Church of Christ for all his former unfaithful and hypocritical dealing with them. And so quietly slept in the Lord.

The Life of Doctor Egidio.

DOCTOR Egidio, who is before-mentioned, was brought up in the University of Alcala; where he took all his degrees, and was a hard Student in School-Divinity. But the Study of the holy Scriptures was there so neglected and contemned, that if any one read it, he was in contempt and scorn called A good Bibler. Afterwards being Publick Reader of Divinity in that University; he grew famous all over Christendom, and was sent for to Sivil to be Divinity-Reader in the Cathedral Church, where he was so highly esteemed, that soon after he was chosen Subdean; yet did he not attempt to Preach openly, nor had once so much as opened the Bible to read and study the Scriptures: And therefore the first time that he came into the Pulpit, contrary to all Mens expectations, he was found so unfit for such a Function, that he grew out of conceit with himself, and was contemned by others; insomuch, as they fell to repent themselves, the one for admitting him so unadvisedly, the other for taking upon him that Office so arrogantly. But having passed over some time, it so fell out, that he met with a plain Man which gave him such instructions, That after a few hours conference, he learned by him what the Office and Duty of a Preacher was; and by what means he might attain thereto: And, through Gods Blessing, his advice was so effectual, that now Dr. Egidio was quite altered, and became a new Man, thinking all his former life and labor ill spent, and therefore he resolved to steer another course. He also fell into acquaintance with Dr. Constantine, a Man excellently well learned, by whose conference and advice he profited marvellously in his Studies, fell to the reading of good Authors, and grew to profound knowledge in the holy Scriptures : So that after a time, he began to Preach as learnedly, godly, and zealously, as he had before done coldly, foolishly, and unskilfully. Then did his hearers find the marvellous force of that doctrine which was taught them by these three worthy Men, Egidio, Constantine, and Varquio : So that the more they crept out of their former ignorance, and grew in knowledge, the more they esteemed and honored them.

Hereupon there were daily Complaints made against them to the Inquisitors, especially against Dr. Egidio, who did more openly than the rest inveigh against the Adversaries of the Truth. But it so fell out, by Gods Providence, that just at the same time, the Emperor Charles the Fifth, in respect of his singular Learning and Integrity of Life, elected him to the Bishoprick of Dortois. Then did those Hypocritical Inquisitors bestir themselves on all hands, citing him to come before them, where Articles were exhibited against him; and thereupon they cast him into Prison, and examined him. But the Emperor, who had elected him to the Bishoprick, and the whole Chapter of the Cathedral Church in Sivil, became very earnest Sutors to the Inquisitors in his behalf.

Gods judg-

It fell out also, that just at the same time, whilst Egidio was in Prison, three of his greatest Adversaries amongst the Inquisitors, and the prime Enemies against the Truth, sickned, and died shortly one after another, whereby he was released, and lived four or five years after. At the end whereof, he was sent upon an Ambassie, in which journey he visited the Brethren that professed the Truth in Validolid, and much comforted and confirmed them : But in his return home, his aged Body being sore shaken in that long journey, having not been used to travel of a long while before, he sickned, and within a few days departed out of this troublesome life, to everlasting rest.

But within three years after, the new Inquisitors thinking that the former had dealt too gently with him, digged him out of his Grave, and buried in his place a Puppet of Straw; then they brought his Corps upon the Scaffold, and used it in the same sort as they would have used himself if he had been alive.

The Life of Doctor Constantine.

His Character

Doctor Constantine, of whom mention hath been made before, was a most famous Divine, and indued by God with such rare abilities, as the like were hardly found in that age. He was a Man of a very pleasant wit, and wondrous facetious, which he especially used against the Hypocritical Monks and Fryers : And though he lived in a barbarous age, wherein all good Learning was almost lost, yet by his wit and industry he attained to a great deal of skill, both in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, and was also an excellent Orator, and studied the Scriptures so hard, that he grew very exquisite therein. He was also so eloquent in his own Language, that all his Auditors were brought into a great admiration of him : He was very discreet in all his doings. Which parts he attained to, both by his study, long practice and experience, but especially by profound knowledge in the holy Scriptures.

His excellent Virtues;

His Humiliation and Congregation.

Whensoever he Preached, there was so great resort to his Sermons, that three or four hours before he began, there was scarce a place in the Church to be gotten. He was far from Covetousness and Ambition, insomuch, as having a good Canonship in the Church of Toledo proffered him, he refused it, together with divers other Preferments. In his Ministry in Sivil he did so plainly set forth, and and so sharply rebuke those hucksters that sold Indulgences, Pardons, &c. That they were much incensed against him, fearing, that he would prove a plague to the whole generation of them: So that they hated him deadly, yet could find nothing whereof to accuse him, but what would redound to their own shame.

But for all this, he neglected not to Preach the Truth faithfully, though he knew that they lay at catch, waiting for an opportunity to insnare him: And it was the singular Providence of God, that that City should enjoy such Preaching, when there were so many powerful and malicious Enemies to oppose it. For at this time Varquio read upon the Gospel according to Matthew, and upon the Psalms. Agidio Preached daily, and Constantine, though not loofest, yet to as great fruit and edification: Thus continuing till God sent storms to try each Mans faith. In the midst of which tempest, Varquio died, and Constantine was sent for by the Emperor, to be his Household Chaplain; only Agidio was left alone, like a Lamb amongst Wolves, to be the object of their fury, of whose end we have heard before. After whose death, Constantine left the Emperors Court, and returned to Sivil, where he Preached the Gospel with as much zeal as ever he did before. Then was he chosen to Preach every other day in the Cathedral, which he refused, because of a great fit of sickness which had made him very weak; but he was forced to undertake it, though he was so weak a Creature, that sometimes he was fain to be carried to Church, and by reason of his faintness, was necessitated once or twice in a Sermon, to drink a draught of Wine to refresh himself. About this time there was one Scobario, a Man famous for Life and Learning, chosen by the Magistrates of the City to the Government of the Colledge of Children, who out of his zeal to promote the Gospel converted his stipend, to the erecting a Divinity Lecture in the Cathedral Church: And Constantine having recovered his health, was chosen to read it; who performed it excellently well, beginning with the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Canticles. Which having passed through very learnedly, he began upon the Book of Job, and proceeded to expound more than half of it: But some evil spirit envying the Progress of the Gospel in that City, under a pretence of fervent zeal, caused him to forsake this course, and incombred him so many ways, that he was never clear of those troubles to his dying day.

For not long after he was brought before the Inquisitors, and had many things laid to his charge; yet by his quick and ready answers, he easily avoided them, and they could not by any means bring him to make an open Protestation of his Faith, by which all their hope was to circumvent him; and so he might have escaped, had not God, by a special Providence, compelled him, as it were, briefly and plainly to confess his Faith; the occasion was this.

There was one Isabel Martin apprehended, in whose House Constantine had hid some special Books for fear of the Inquisitors. This Womans Goods being sequestred, her Son conveyed divers Chests of her best Goods away to another place. This coming to the Inquisitors ears, by means of an unfaithful servant, they sent their Officer immediately to demand those Chests; the Womans Son supposing, that the Officer came for Constantines Books, said unto him, I know what you come for, and therefore if you will promise me upon your honest word to depart quietly, I will bring you to them. The Officer supposing that he meant the Chests, promised him so to do. Then did he carry him into a secret place, and plucking forth a Stone or two in the Wall, shewed him Constantines Jewels, of Paper indeed; but far more precious than Gold or Pearl. The Officer astonished to find that which he looked not for, told him, That he came for no such thing, but for certain Chests of his Mothers Goods, which he had purloyned from the Sequestrators: And that notwithstanding his promise, he must carry both him and his Books to the Inquisitors. Thus came Constantines Writings into the Inquisitors hands; out of which, they quickly found matters enough against him. Then did they send for him before them, and demanded, if he knew his own hand: He shifted it off at the first, but afterwards perceiving that it was the

Will of God, that he should bear witness to the Truth, he confessed it to be his own Writing, protesting openly, That all things therein contained, were full of truth and sincerity: Therefore, said he, trouble your selves no further in seeking witnesses against me, seeing you have so plain and apert a Confession of my Judgment and Faith, but deal with me as you shall please. Then was he cast into Prison, and kept there two whole years, where partly by occasion of his corrupt diet, but chiefly of grief, to see such havock made of the poor Church of Christ, which himself and his Brethren had with so great pains and care planted and watered, he began first to be crazy; and then not being able to indure the extream heat of the Sun, which made his Prison like an Hot-house, he was forced to strip himself to his very shirt, wherein he lay day and night, by occasion whereof he fell into the Bloody Flux, and within fifteen days died in the stinking Prison, rendering up his Soul to Christ: For promoting of whose glory, he had oft-times manfully adventured it.

burned.

He never indeed felt those cruel torments which the Inquisitors used to inflict upon others; but it was not because they regarded such a Man of eminency as he was, but because they intended to delay his punishment by keeping him long in Prison, not expecting that he should so suddenly have been taken out of their hands. Yet did these Imps of Satan spread abroad a report, that before his death upon the Rack, he had confessed to them who were his disciples; and this they did to make men come in and accuse themselves, upon hope to find the more favor with the Inquisitors. They reported also, that he opened one of his Veins with a broken glass, whereof he died, that so he might avoid the shame and punishment of his Heresies. And against the day of their solemn triumph, his Corps was taken out of his Grave, and set in a Pulpit; with one hand resting on the Desk, and holding up the other, just as he used to do when he Preached. Then they passed Sentence upon him; and so afterwards caused him to be burned.

Thus we have seen in some few examples the rage of these Bloody Inquisitors, against the poor Saints and Servants of Jesus Christ, whereof a great number were cruelly murdered in a few years space in that one City of Sivil, whereby we may partly guess how great numbers have suffered in all other places, since the light of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ brake forth, until this day, under their cruel and bloody tyranny.

Presently after came a Serjeant who apprehended Burton, and carried him away to the Inquisitors, who, though they could charge him with nothing spoken or written against them since he came to Spain; yet they sent him to the filthy Common Prison, where he remained in Irons fourteen days amongst Thieves. In which time, he so instructed the poor Prisoners in the Word of God, that in short space he had well reclaimed many of those ignorant and superstitious Souls: Which being known to the Inquisitors, they presently removed him, laden with Irons, from thence to Sivil, and put him into the more cruel Prison in the Castle of Triana, where the Inquisitors proceeded

CHAP. XXVIII.

The Persecution of the Church of Christ in Italy, which began Anno Christi 1155.

Drian the Fourth, an Englishman, being Pope, there was one Arnald of Brixia, who coming to Rome, Preached boldly against the corruptions which were crept into the Church, and found great favor amongst the Senators, and People, insomuch, as when the Pope commanded this Arnald to be driven away as an Heretick, they resisted his command, and defended Arnald, till at last the Pope interdicting the whole City, at the importunity of the Clergy, the Senators and Citizens were forced to send him away: And shortly after, he was apprehended by the Popes Legate, Cardinal of S. Nicholas, out of whose hands he was rescued by the Vicounts of Campania, with whom he remained, and to whom he Preached the Gospel of Christ, and was had in such esteem, that he was accounted a Prophet.

Shortly after, Frederick Barbarossa, the Emperor, coming unto Italy to be crowned, the Pope sent some Cardinals to him, requesting, That he would deliver Arnald of Brixia into their hands, whom the Vicounts of Campania had taken from his Legate at Otricoli, whom they held for a Prophet in their Countrey, and greatly honored him. The Emperor receiving these commands from the Pope, presently sent forth his Apparitors, and took one of the Vicounts prisoner; wherewith the other were so terrified, that they delivered up Arnald to the Cardinals: And this the Emperor did, to gratifie the Pope that was to set the Imperial Crown upon his Head.

Not long after the Pope being in his Ruff, marching with a brave Army into Apulia, commanded his Prefect at Rome to do execution upon Arnald; who accordingly most cruelly, first hanged, and then burned him for an Archheretick, at the appointment of the Pope.

This Arnald was born in Italy, and was trained up under Peter Abailardus in France. His Heresies were, That he Preached against the Pride and Covetousness of the Clergy and Monks; that he inveighed against the Corruptions which were crept into the Sacraments, &c. He first Preached in Brixia, and Expounded to the People the sacred Scriptures, who earnestly imbraced his Doctrine; whereupon the Bishops and Monks of that City complained of him to the Council that was held at Rome by Pope Innocent, who (to prevent the spreading of his Doctrine) enjoined him silence, and banished him Italy. Then did he go beyond the Alps, into a Town of Germany called Turengin, where, for a time he Preached the Truth, and did much good, till he heard of the death of Pope Innocent his old Adversary: At which time, he returned into Italy, and went to Rome, where, what his success was, we heard before. After his Body was burnt, they gathered up his Ashes, and threw them into the River Tybur.
Otho Frising.

Anno

Anno Christi 1546. There was one Encenas or Driander, a Spaniard, born in Bruges, who in his youth was sent by his Superstitious Parents to be educated in Rome; where in process of time, through Gods Mercy, he came to the knowledge of the Truth: And thereupon manifesting his dislikes of the impure Doctrine of the Church of Rome, he was betrayed by some of his own Countrymen and Household-Friends, and by them carried before the Cardinals, who committed him strait to prison; and afterwards, being called forth to declare his judgment in matters of Religion, he gave a notable testimony to the Truth, before the Cardinals and the Popes whole retinue; whereupon they cryed out upon him, That he should be burned; yet the Cardinals proffered him life, if he would wear the Sambito: But he constantly refused to wear any other badge, save the badge of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was, to seal his Profession with his Blood. Hereupon he was condemned to the fire, and suffered Martyrdom with great patience and constancy. His Brother Francis Encenas, a very learned and godly Man as any was in Spain, being in the Emperors Court at Bruxels, offered to Charles the Fifth the New Testament, translated into Spanish; for which, he was cast into Prison, where he remained in great misery for the space of fifteen Moneths, looking for nothing but present death. But at last, through the marvellous Providence of God, at eight a clock at night he found the Prison doors standing wide open, and a secret motion in his mind to make an escape: Whereupon going out of Prison, with a leisurely pace, he went without interruption, and so from thence went strait into Germany.

A special Providence.

Anno 1550. There was at Ferrara, one Faninus, who by reading of good Books, was through Gods Grace, converted to the knowledge of the Truth; wherein he found such sweetness, that by constant Reading, Meditation, and Prayer, he grew so expert in the Scriptures, That he was able to instruct others: And though he durst not go out of the bounds of his calling to Preach openly, yet by Conference and private Exhortations he did good to many. This coming to the knowledge of the Popes Clients, they apprehended and committed him to Prison, where, by the earnest solicitations of his Wife and Children, and other Friends, he was so overcome, that he renounced the Truth, and so was dismissed out of Prison. But it was not long before the Lord met with him: So that falling into horrible torture of Conscience, he was near unto utter despair for his Apostacy, and for preferring the love of his Kinred and Friends, before the Service of Jesus Christ; neither could he possibly by any means be free from these terrors, before he had fully resolved to adventure his life more faithfully in the service of the Lord. Wherefore being thus inflamed with an holy zeal, he went about all the Countrey, doing much good wheresoever he came: Whereupon he was again apprehended, and cast into Prison, and condemned to be burnt. But he told his Judges, that his time was not yet come, and so it fell out; for shortly after, he was removed to Ferrara, where he continued in Prison two years. Then was he again condemned by the Popes Inquisitors, and yet his time being not come, he remained a good while after in Prison: In which time many godly People came to visit him, which caused the Pope to command him to be kept more strictly. Then was he kept close Prisoner for eighteen Moneths, wherein he indured many and great torments: After this, he was brought into another Prison, where were many Nobles, great Lords and Captains for stirring up Sedition, who when they first heard him speak, set him at naught, and derided him, and some of the gravest of them, supposing it to be but a melancholy humor, exhorted him to leave his opinion, &c. Faninus gave them thanks for their friendly good will, but withal, modestly and plainly he declared to them, That the Doctrine which he professed, was no humor nor opinion of Mans brain, but the pure Truth of God held forth in his Word, which Truth, he was fully resolved never to deny, &c. With which Instructions they were, through the Mercy of God, clean altered in their carriage and judgment, highly admiring and honoring him now, whom a little before they derided and contemned.

contemned. Then did he proceed still to impart the Word of Grace to them, declaring, That though he knew himself to be a miserable sinner, yet through Faith in Jesus Christ, and his Grace, he was fully persuaded that his sins were forgiven: Assuring them likewise, That if they did repent and believe on our Lord Jesus Christ, they also should have their sins remitted unto them.

There were in that prison also some that having formerly lived very delicately, could not now indure the hardship of a Prison, to whom he administered much comfort in this their distress, inasmuch, as they rejoiced in these their sufferings; by which they had learned a better kind of liberty, then ever they had before.

Tentation refused.

His Kinsfolk hearing of his imprisonment, his Wife and Sister came to him, pitifully weeping and intreating him to consider and remember his poor Family, &c. To whom he answered, That his Lord and Master had commanded him not to deny his truth for his Families sake; and that it was too much, that once for their sakes he had fallen into that cowardise which they knew of. Therefore he desired them to leave him, and not to sollicite him any further in that kind, for he knew that his end now drew near, and so he commended them to the Lord.

Presently after, the Pope sent a command, that Faninus should be executed, whereof, when an Officer brought him word, he much rejoiced at it, thanking the Messenger. Then did he begin to make a long Exhortation to his Fellow-prisoners about the felicity of the life to come.

Proffer of life refused.

Faith.

He had life proffered him, if he would recant, and he was put in mind what a sad condition he would leave his Wife and Children in: Whereupon he answered, That he had committed them to an Overseer that would sufficiently care for them. And being asked, Who that was? He answered, Even the Lord Jesus Christ, a faithful Keeper of all that are committed to him. The next day he was removed into the Common Prison, and delivered to the Secular Magistrate.

In all his words, gestures, and countenance, he shewed such modesty, constancy, and tranquillity of mind, that they which before extremely hated him, and thought that he had a Devil, began now favorably to hearken to him, and to commend him; yea, with such grace and sweetness he spake of the Word of God, that many of the Magistrates Wives which heard him, could not abstain from weeping; yea, the Executioner himself wept.

Comfort in Death.

Note.

As he was going to execution, one that saw him so merry and chearful, asked him, What was the reason of it, whereas Christ before his death, sweat Blood and Water? To whom he answered, That Christ sustained all the sorrows and conflicts with Hell and Death that were due to us, that by his sufferings we might be freed from the sorrow and fear of them all.

A special Providence.

At the place of Execution, after he had made his most earnest Prayers to the Lord, he meekly and patiently went to the Stake, where he was first strangled, and afterwards burned. And during the time of his burning, there came a most fragrant and odoriferous smell to the Spectators, the sweetness whereof did so delight and refresh their Senses, as his words would have done, if they had heard him speak.

Dominicus.

There was also one Dominicus, sometimes a Soldier under Charles the Fifth, in Germany, where he received the first taste of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; after which, by his Conference with Learned Men, he much increased in Knowledge, inasmuch, as he was able to instruct others; whereupon he returned into Italy, and in the City of Naples he taught the Word of God to many, Anno 1550. From thence he went to Placentia, where he instructed the People also in many of the Fundamentals of Religion, promising, That he would in the next place, speak to them of Antichrist, whom he would paint out in his colours. But when he came the next day, he was apprehended by the Magistrate, whom he readily obeyed, saying, That he wondered the Devil had let him alone so long. And being asked, whether he would renounce his Doctrine, he answered, That he maintained no doctrine of his own, but the Doctrine of Christ, which also he was ready to seal with his Blood; giving hearty thanks to God for accounting him worthy to suffer for his Name. Then was he committed to a filthy and stinking Prison, where he remained some Moneths, and was often solicited to revoke his opinions; or else he must suffer death: But, through Gods Mercy, nothing could remove him from his constancy. Being therefore condemned to death, he was brought into the Market-place, where he most heartily prayed for his Enemies, instructed the People, and then was hanged, resting in peace in the Lord.

Thanks for suffering.

In Saint Angelo, there was an House of Augustine Fryers, to whom there often resorted a Fryer from the City of Pavia, who was a Man very expert in the Scriptures, and of godly conversation; by whose labors, not only divers of the Fryers, but other Towns-men were brought to the knowledge and love of Gods Word; and amongst the rest, one Galeacius Trecius, a Gentleman of good quality, very wealthy, and bountiful to the Poor, was wrought upon to embrace the Truth, and was afterward much confirmed and strengthened by Calius Secundus, who being persecuted from Pavia, came to this place. After some time, Galeacius having much profited in knowledge, was inflamed with a godly zeal to promote and propagate the knowledge of the Truth unto others: But a Light shining in such darkness, could not be long hid; insomuch as Anno 1551; he was apprehended and carried before the Bishop, by whom he was kept in Bands, having only a pad of Straw to lie on; and though his Wife sent him a good Bed and Sheets, yet did the Bishops Officers keep them from him, dividing it as a booty amongst themselves.

Galeacius Trecius.

Cruelty.

Thrice he was brought before the Commissioners, where he boldly rendered a reason of his Faith, answering all their Interrogatories with such evidence of Scripture, and constancy of mind, as astonished all that heard him; yet afterwards at the importunity of his Friends and Kinred, he was by much perswasion brought to assent to certain Popish points. But, through the Mercy of God, he was after a while, brought to such repentance and bewailing of this fact, that afterwards he became more valiant in the defence of Christs quarrel; neither did he desire any thing more than to have occasion to recover again by confession that which he had lost by denial: Affirming, That as he never had felt more joy of heart, then when he constantly professed the Truth, so he never tasted more sorrow in all his life, then when he turned from the same by dissimulation, Professing to his Christian Friends, That Death was much more sweet to him with testimony to the Truth, then Life with the least denial of it, and violation of a good Conscience thereby. So that afterwards, through Gods Mercy, he was so full of comfort, that divers which talked with him, continued all day without meat or drink; and if they might, would have staid all night too, they were so delighted with him.

Humane firmity.

Recovery.

Not.

Galeacius thus waiting for some occasion to manifest his recovery, it so fell out, that the Inquisitors came into the Prison to him, supposing, that now he would have confirmed what before he had granted unto them, requiring him so to do: But Galeacius, on the contrary, retracted that, and boldly asserted the Truth with more courage than he did before: And hereby his mind was greatly refreshed, and his Adversaries went away ashamed; yet did they condemn and deliver him to the Secular Judge to be burned. Then was he brought forth in the Morning to the Market-place, and bound to a Stake, where he was left till Noon, to be a gazing stock to all the people. During which time, many came to see him, exhorting him to recant, and not so wilfully to cast away himself, and thereby to undo his loving Wife and young Children, &c. But nothing could alter the firm mind of this constant Martyr; and therefore at length fire was put to him, and so he quietly slept in the Lord.

Joy unspeakable.

A little before his Execution, he hearing that there was a controversie between the Bishop and Major of the City, which of them should be at cost to buy

A Special Providence.

There was at Rome, one John Mollius, who at twelve years old, was placed by his Parents in the House of the Gray-Fryers, where being of an excellent wit; in a short time, he so profited both in the knowledge of the Arts and Tongues, that at eighteen years old he was made a Priest: Then was he sent to study at Ferrara, where he so profited in six years time, that he was made Doctor and Reader of Divinity in that University, and by his Sophistry shewed himself an utter Enemy to the Gospel. From thence he went to Brixia, and the year following to Milan, where he read openly. Then by Francis Sforce he was brought to the University of Papia, to be the Philosophy Professor, where he remained four years; then was he called to the University of Bononia: About which time, it pleased God so to enlighten him with the knowledge of his Truth, that he began secretly to expound The Epistle of Paul to the Romans to a few. But presently his Auditors increased so fast, that he was compelled to read openly in the Church, where the number of his Auditors daily increased, and withal, they shewed such fervency of mind, That most of them came with Pen and Ink to write what they heard, taking great care to come so early, that they might have room to hear him: This was Anno 1538. Hereupon Cardinal Campeius set up one Cornelius, an arrogant babler, to expound the same Epistle, who cried up the Pope and his Traditions, as John, on the contrary, commended and extolled Christ and his Merits to the people: But Cornelius, his Auditors, quickly decreased, and the others increased exceedingly. This angered Cornelius, inasmuch, as by Cardinal Campeius his advice, they came to an open disputation; and when they could not agree, as John was returning home in a narrow place, where his friends could not come to his rescue, he was apprehended and clapt up in prison; but this caused such stir in the City, that Cornelius was fain to hide himself: Then did the Bishop send word to John in prison, that he must either recant or be burnt. To the first he answered, That he would by no means condescend, only it grieved him, that he should be condemned, and his Cause not heard: Yet by the mediation of a Friend, he was released out of Prison, upon condition, that within three Moneths he should appear at Rome. Some of his Friends dissuaded him from going to Rome, advising him rather to go into Germany, and they would give him Money to bear his charges; but he refused, saying, That he must Preach the Gospel at Rome also.

When he came thither, he requested of the Pope that he might have a public hearing, but that was denied him, and he was commanded to write his opinion; which accordingly he did, About Original Sin, Justification by Faith only, Freewill, Purgatory, &c. All which he confirmed by the Authority of the Scriptures and Fathers, and so exhibited it to the Pope, who referred it to some Cardinals; and they disputed with him three days upon those points, but could not confute them: Then was he answered, That it was truth which he said, yet not meet for the times; and therefore he was commanded to abstain from Preaching, and to return to Bononia to be the Philosophy Professor.

When he came back, all men longed to hear how he had sped, and in the Pulpit he openly declared the whole proceedings to them, giving God thanks for his safe return.

But this so offended the Cardinal, That by order from the Pope, he was removed from Bononia to Naples. There also his doctrine was so distastful by the Viceroy, that he laid wait to take away his life; yet, through Gods Mercy, he escaped, escaped, and wandred up and down Italy, Preaching the Gospel of Christ, whereloever he came. At last he was called back to Bononia, where privately he Expounded Pauls Epistles, which could not be long concealed; whereupon he was apprehended and carried to Faventia, where he was cast into a filthy stinking prison, and lay there four years, no Man being suffered to come to him; yet, at last, by the mediation of some Friends, he was again released, and went to Ravenna, where he Preached the Gospel of Christ with such affections, That he never spake of Jesus Christ, but tears dropped from his eyes.

He is again apprehended.

His Release.
Love to Christ.

After a short time he was again cast into Prison; but four persons of quality proffering to be his Bail, through Gods Mercy, he was released: After which, so many flocked to him, that his Adversaries consulted to kill him, lest his doctrine should spread further; and apprehending him, they sent him bound to Rome, where again he was cast into prison for eighteen Moneths; in which time he was often assaulted, sometimes with flatteries and fair promises, sometimes with terrible threats; but his constancy could not be shaken by either. Whereupon he, with some others, were brought forth to receive the Sentence of Condemnation; at which time, with great earnestness, he confirmed his former doctrine, affirmed the Pope to be Antichrist, &c. citing them to appear before the Tribunal of Christ.

Manifest Afflictions.

Constancy.

Being condemned and carried to the place of Execution, he exhorted the people to have no Saviours but Christ alone, the only Mediator betwixt God and Man; and so he was first hanged, and then burned. This was Anno Christi 1553.

His Martyrdom.

Francis Gamba.

The year after, Francis Gamba, born in Lombardy, having, through Gods Grace, received the knowledge of the Gospel, went to Geneva, where he was much confirmed in the Truth, and received the Sacrament with them; then returning into his own Countrey, he was apprehended and cast into Prison, whither many Nobles, Doctors, and Priests resorted to him, laboring by all means to dissuade him from his opinions. But he disputing with them, constantly affirmed, That what he held was consonant to the Word of God, and the evident doctrine of Jesus Christ, and necessary for all men to believe, if they would be saved; assuring them, that rather than he would be found false to Christ, and his Word, he was there ready to shed his Blood. He was long assailed by the intreaties of his Friends and Threatnings of his Enemies, but could by no means be discouraged; yea, he gave thanks to God for accounting him worthy to suffer rebukes and death for the testimony of Jesus Christ; and so, by order of the Senate of Milan, he was had forth to execution.

Constancy.

Temptations resisted.

He went with a great deal of cheerfulness; and when a Cross was brought him by a Fryer, he said, That his mind was so replenished with joy and comfort in Christ, that he needed neither his Cross nor him. Then, because he declared many comfortable things to the people, his Tongue was bored through, and he was first strangled, and then burnt, undergoing Death with admirable patience and constancy.

Comfort in Death.

Anno 1555. There was one Algerius, a Student in Pavia, a young Man, of excellent Learning, who having attained to the knowledge of the Truth, ceased not, by instruction and example, to inform others that he might bring them to the saving knowledge of Christ: For this, he was accused of Heresie to the Pope; by whose command he was apprehended and cast into Prison at Venice, where he lay long. During which time, he wrote an excellent Letter to the afflicted Saints, wherein, amongst many other excellent Expressions, he thus writeth.

Algerius.

I Cannot but impart unto you some portion of my delectations and joys, which I feel, and find: I have found Honey in the Intrails of a Lion, who will believe, that in the dark Dungeon, I should find a Paradise of pleasure? In a place of sorrow and death, dwells tranquillity and hope of life: In an infernal Cave, I have joy of Soul, where others weep, I rejoyce; where others shake and tremble, there is strength and boldness.

Joy in Affliction.

&c. All these things the sweet hand of the Lord doth minister to me. Behold, he that was once far from me, is now present with me; whom I could scarce feel before, now I see more apparently; whom once I saw afar off, I now behold near at hand; whom once I hungered for, he now approaches and reaches his hand to me. He doth comfort me, and fills me with gladness; he drives away my sorrow, strengthens, encourageth, heals, refresheth, and advanceth me. O how good is the Lord, who suffers not his Servants to be tempted above their strength! O how easie and sweet is his Toke, &c. Learn therefore how amiable and merciful the Lord is, who visiteth his Servants to temptations and disdains, not to keep them company in such vile and stinking Dungeons, &c.

And in conclusion he subscribes his Letter, From the delectable Orchard of the Leonine Prison, &c.

Note.
Temptation
resisted.

After this, the Pope sent for him to Rome, where, by manifold perswasions and allurements, he was tempted to desert and deny the truth; which not prevailing, he was adjudged to be burnt alive. Which death he most constantly incurred to the great admiration of all that beheld him.

John Aloysius.

Anno 1559. John Aloysius, being sent from Geneva to be a Pastor in Calabria, was thence sent for by the Pope to Rome, where he suffered Martyrdom.

James Bovellus.

Also James Bovellus, a godly Minister in the same place, and at the same time was sent for by the Pope, by whom he was sent to Messina, and there Martyred.

Persecution raised by the Pope.

Pope Pius the Fourth raised an hot Persecution against the People of God in all the Territories of the Church of Rome, whereby many constant Christians suffered Martyrdom. Yea, this Persecution was so hot in the Kingdom of Naples, that many Noblemen with their Wives, and divers others, were there slain, Anno 1560.

Horrible
cruelty,

A Papist writing to a Noble Lord, about the cruelty shewed to some Christians, hath these expressions. When I think upon it, I verily quake and tremble: For their manner of putting to death, may fitly be resembled to the slaughter of Calves and Sheep; for eighty eight of them being thrust up together in one House, as in a Sheepfold, the Executioner cometh in, taketh one and blindfoldeth him, and so leads him forth to a larger place adjoining, where commanding him to kneel down, he cuts his Throat; and leaving him half dead, he takes his Butchers Knife and Muffler, all gore blood, and goeth back to the rest; and so leading one after another, he dispatches them all. How sad this spectacle was, I leave to your Lordship to judge; for my own part, I cannot but weep to think of it; neither was there any of the spectators, which seeing one to die, could indure to behold another: But truly, so humbly and patiently they went to their death, as is almost incredible to believe; all the aged persons went to death more chearfully, the younger were something more timorous. I tremble and shake to remember how the Executioner held his bloody Knife between his teeth, with the bloody muffler in his hand, and his arms all gore blood up to the elbows, going to the fold, and taking every one of them one after another by the hand, and so dispatching them all, no otherwise than as a Butcher doth kill his Calves and Sheep.

Patience of the Saints.

This was in Calabria, Anno Christi 1560.

Persecution raised by the Pope in Venice.

The City of Venice was a long while free from the cruel Inquisition, whereby the face of a Church was discerned there, from the Year 1530. to the year 1542. yea, and multitudes of good Christians flocked thither from other parts; which so provoked the Devil to envy, that he stirred up the Pope to send Inquisitors, which erected an Inquisition in that City; and for divers years the Pope sent them Money to distribute amongst their Flies, and such persons as would betray the faithful to them. By this means many of the worthy Servants of of Jesus Christ were apprehended, imprisoned, and after a while sent to Rome to be there butchered.

Then was a new found manner of death inflicted upon divers others, never till then heard of, whereby they were drowned in the bottom of the Sea; the manner of it was thus. After any of them had received the sentence of death by the Inquisitors, an Iron Chain was fastned about their middle, with a very heavy stone tied thereto; then were they laid upon a Plank between two Boats; and so rowed to an appointed place in the Sea, where the Boats parting asunder, the Martyrs presently sunk into the bottom of the Sea, and were drowned. Yet notwithstanding this cruelty, many godly persons ceased not to assemble together in a place appointed for that purpose, where they talked and discoursed of Heavenly matters for their spiritual edification, and made collections for the relief of the poor amongst them. And Anno 1566. they called to them a Minister of the Gospel, and constituted a Church, where they enjoyed all the Ordinances with much comfort. But some false Brethren creeping in amongst them; after a while betrayed them; then were many apprehended, cast into the Sea and drowned: Others were sent to Rome, where they were cast into prison till they rotted and died there.

Amongst others that were condemned to be drowned at Venice, was one Mr. Anthony Ricetto: To whom, after his condemnation, his Son, a youth about twelve years old, came, beseeching him with tears to yield, that his life might be saved, and himself not left Fatherless. To whom he answered, A good Christian is bound to forgo children; goods, yea, and life it self for the maintenance of Gods honor and glory. For which cause (said he) I am now resolved to lay down my life, the Lord assisting me.

Anthony Ricetto.
Temptation resisted.

The Lords of Venice offered to restore to him his Patrimony, which was partly Mortgaged, and partly sold, if he would submit to the Church of Rome; but he resolutely refused that condition. Not long after came a Captain to him; and told him of one Francis Sega, his Prison-fellow, that was resolved to recant. To whom he answered, what tell you me of Sega? I am resolved to perform my Vows to the Lord my God. Then was he carried forth bound to the Boats, and by the way a Priest presented him with a Wooden Cross, exhorting him to recant, &c. But he on the contrary, perswaded him and others to come out of the snares of the Devil, and to cleave to Jesus Christ; and to live, Not according to the flesh, but according to the Spirit. For, said he, otherwise your unbelief will bring you into the lake of fire, that never shall be quenched. When he came to the place where he was to suffer, the Captain fastned the Chain and Stone to him; whereupon, lifting his eyes to Heaven, he said, Father forgive them, they know not what they do: Lord Jesus, into thy hands do I commend my spirit. And so in the Sea he ended his life.

Confession.

A few days after, one Mr. Francis Spinola was apprehended and committed to prison, and when he was brought forth before the Inquisitors, they shewed him a Treatise about the Lords Supper, demanding whether he was the Author of it; which he acknowledged, avouching, That the doctrine that was contained therein, was agreeable to the holy Scriptures. Then was he returned to his prison, where the aforementioned Sega was, who waiting for his coming, as he passed by; saluted him by his name; after which they conferred together about the doctrine of the Gospel: And Sega having heard that Spinola had stood stoutly in the Confession of the Truth, he was much comforted, saying, That God had reserved him for such a time as this, to make him partaker of so great consolation. Shortly after the Gaoler told Sega, that he was to die one hour within night; at the hearing whereof, he intreated Spinola to pray with him, and after Prayer he said, That his soul was heavy unto death. Spinola answered, Fear not, for it will not be long before your soul shall partake of those joys which shall endure for ever. At the appointed time he was fetched out of the Dungeon, where he took his leave of Spinola, and the other prisoners. As he went into the Boats, a Fryer perswaded him him to return to the Church of Rome. Sega answered, That he was already in the way to our Lord Jesus Christ; and so passing on, he called upon the name of God. He seemed to be a little amazed at the fastning of the Chain and Stone to his Body, yet presently recollecting his spirits, he took it patiently, and so commending his Soul into the hands of God, he quietly slept in the Lord.

Spinola being again called before the Inquisitors, he boldly reproved the Popes Legate, and the other Judges; for that, contrary to their Consciences, they persecuted the Truth of God, calling them the off-spring of the Pharisees, &c.

Humane infirmity.

Recovery.

The third time that he was called before them, they asked him, If he would not recant his errors? He answered, That the doctrine which he maintained was not erroneous, but the same Truth which Christ and his holy Apostles taught; and for which, all the Martyrs, both in former and later times, did willingly lay down their lives, and endured the pains of death. Yet after all this, Spinola by the crafty persuasions of some seeming Friends, began to strike sail and to faint: But, through Gods goodness, he soon recovered again, and being called before the Judges, he openly confirmed the Truth, and so had sentence passed upon him, That he should be drowned as an Heretick. To which he answered, I am no Heretick, but the Servant of Jesus Christ. At which words the Popes Legate commanded him silence, and told him, That he lied. The night after he was conveyed into the Sea, and there drowned, praising and blessing God with invincible constancy.

Spinola's Martyrdom.
An Englishman at Rome.

Anno 1595. There was at Rome a young Englishman, who going into a Church, and seeing their gross idolatry, was so inflamed with zeal, that he could not indure the sight of those horrible impieties; and therefore he went out into the Church Porch, and as the Procession passed by him, he waited till the Bishop came that did bear the Host, and then stepping forwards, he plucked it out of his hands, threw it to the ground, saying aloud, Ye wretched Idolaters, do ye fall down to a morsel of Bread? This so provoked the people, that they had almost torn him in pieces, and yet they spared him and sent him to prison.

An heroic act.

His cruel torments.

Complaint being made to Pope Clement the Eighth, he was so incensed, that he appointed him to be burnt the same day: But some of the Cardinals advised, That he should rather be kept in prison, and examined by exquisite torments to find out his abettors and setters on. This accordingly was put in practice, yet could they draw nothing from him but these words, Such was the Will of God. Then was he adjudged to be led from the Capitol, naked to his middle, and to wear on his head the form of a Devil, his Breeches to be painted over with flames of fire, and so to be carried all about the City, and then to be burnt alive.

Patience.

His Martyrdom.

When he heard this sentence, he lift up his eyes to Heaven, and implored the help of Almighty God. As he passed through the Streets, he was mocked and derided of all the people, but he continued his fervent Prayers to God; at last he spake something against the filthy lives of the Cardinals, which so enraged them, that they caused him to be Gagged; which cruelty he patiently endured. When he came before the Church where he cast down the Idol, the Hangman cut off his right hand and set it on a pole in the Cart, to which he was tied. Then did two Tormentors, with flaming Torches, scorch and burn his flesh all the way as he went through the City of Rome; all which, he bore with admirable patience. By that he came to the place where he was to be executed, his Body was all over scorched, blistered, and bloody, having no part free but his Head: Then was he taken from the Cart, and seeing the Post to which he should be tied, he went of himself to it, and kneeling down, kissed the Chains which should bind him to it. The Fryers urged him to worship an Idol which they presented to him, but he, turning away his Face, shewed his detestation of it, holding on his Christian course unto the end: And when the flames of fire seized on him, he bowed his Head, and quietly yielded up his Soul to God.

The

The same year there was an old godly Man that had long lain in the Inquisitors Dungeons, who was at last brought forth and condemned; after which, the Fryers brought to him a Crucifix, importuning him to kiss and adore it. He seeing their impudence, said unto them, If you take not this idol out of my sight, ye will constrain me to spit upon it. The Fryers hearing this, sent him away immediately to the fire, where with great courage and constancy he resigned up his Spirit unto God.

CHAP. XXIX.

The Life and Martyrdom of William Gardiner in Portugal, Anno Christi 1552.

William Gardiner was born at Bristol, and well educated, and when he was grown up, was placed with one Master Paget, a Merchant; by whom, when he was twenty six years old, he was sent into Portugal to Lisbonne, the Regal City of that Kingdom, to be a Factor; there he learned the Countrey Language, and became a profitable Servant, both to his Master, and others. He was careful to keep close to God, and to avoid the Superstitions of that Countrey, and there being divers good Men in that City, he associated himself with them, used good conference, and often bewailed to them his own weakness, as being neither sufficiently humbled for his sins, nor yet inflamed with a love of godliness as he ought: He had also good Books which privately he made much use of. Now whilest he was here abiding, it so fell out that a great marriage was to be solemnised betwixt the King of Portugals Son, and the King of Spains Daughter. Great preparations were made for it, and a great concourse there was of Persons of all ranks that came to it; and upon the Wedding day they went to Church in great pomp, and amongst multitudes of Spectators, William Gardiner made one, rather for the novelty of the business, than for any desire that he had to see their Ceremonies; and going to Church early in the Morning, he got a convenient place to hear and see in.

His going to Lisbon.

Humility.

When all were come to Church, a Cardinal began to say Mass; the people standing with great silence and devotion: The sight of these Superstitions, did wonderfully grieve the mind of William Gardiner, not so much to see the folly of the common people, as to see that the King himself, and so many sage Nobles should be led away with such abominable Idolatry; wherewith he was so exceedingly moved in his spirit, that he had much ado to refrain himself from doing something, whereby he might manifest his dislike: But the great throng that he was in, hindred him, that he could not come near to the Altar.

Zeal.

When all was ended, he returned home very sad, seeking out solitary places, where falling down prostrate before God, with many tears he bewailed the neglect of his duty, and studied how he might revoke that people from their impiety and superstition. At length his mind was fully settled, not to defer the matter any longer, whereupon he renounced the World, exactly made up all his accounts, both what he owed, and what was owing to him to a farthing. Then did he continue night and day in Prayer unto God, and in continual Meditation of the holy Scriptures, so that he would scarce take any meat by day, or sleep by night; as one Pendigrace his Bed-fellow testified.

Prayer.

The Sabbath following, Mass was to be celebrated with the like solemnity. Whereupon William Gardiner went early in the morning, handsomly apparelled to Church, setting himself near to the Altar; after a while the King and States came. Gardiner with a New Testament in his hand, stood near the Altar, privately reading it all the while. A Cardinal began the Mass, consecrated the Host, lifted it up on high, shewed his God to the people, they adored it:

An heroical
act.

it: Yet Gardiner contained himself all this while. Then the Cardinal took the Host, tossed it to and fro about the Chalice, made divers circles, &c. With that Gardiner stept to him, took the Host out of his hand, and trampled it under his feet, and with his other hand overthrew the Chalice.

His danger.

His Speech to the King.

At first, all that were present stood amazed; then arose a great tumult, and one drawing his Dagger, wounded Gardiner in the Shoulder, and as he was about to have slain him, the King commanded him to forbear, whereby his life was saved for the present. The tumult being ceased, the King demanded of him what Countryman he was? He answered, Most Noble King, I am not ashamed of my Countrey, I am an Englishman by Birth and Religion, and came hither as a Merchant; and seeing so great Idolatry committed in this famous Assembly, I neither ought, nor could any longer suffer it; neither could I forbear doing what you have seen. Which thing, most Noble Prince, was not done in contempt of your Presence, God is my witness, but to seek the Salvation of this People.

Courage.

The King hearing that he was an Englishman, and considering what alteration of Religion King Edward had made, presently conceived that he was suborned, by some Body, to do this in scorn to their Religion: Wherefore he asked him who was the author and procurer of this act? Gardiner answered, That he was not moved thereunto by any Man, but only by his own Conscience. For, saith he, there is no Man under Heaven, for whose sake I would put my self into such manifest danger, but that I owed this service, first to God, and then to your Salvation. And if I have done any thing which is displeasing to you, you ought to impute it to no Man, but to your self, who so irreverently use the holy Sacrament of the Lords Supper to so great Idolatry, &c. Whilest he thus stoutly spake to the King, by reason of the loss of much Blood by his wound, he was ready to faint. Whereupon Chirurgeons were sent for to cure him, that he might be reserved for further torments.

Then were all other Englishmen in the City clapped up in Prison, especially his Bed-fellow, who was grievously tormented and examined more then all the rest, and scarcely delivered after two years imprisonment; the rest got off sooner.

He is tortured.

They searched also all his Writings and Letters, to see if they could find out any confederates: Then they went to him, seeking by torments to extort the author of this fact. They also invented a new kind of torment, exceeding Phalaris his Brazen Bull, which was this, They made a Ball of Linnen-cloth, which with violence they thrust down his Throat, to the bottom of his Stomack, and with a string fastned to it, they pulled it up again; and this they did divers times, which caused as bitter pains, as the pains of death. But when by this means they could get no confession from him, they asked him, If he did not repent of his wicked act? Whereto he answered, That he was so far from repenting, that if it were to do again, he should do it: Yet was he somewhat sorry that it was done in the Kings presence, to his disturbance; but they were not to blame him for it, but the King was rather to be blamed, who having power, would not prohibit so great Idolatry.

His cruel
Martyrdom.

Constancy.

When they had used all kinds of torments, and that he was so weakened thereby, that he was not like to live long, they first cut off his right hand, then carried him into the Market-place, where they cut off his other hand also; then fastning a Rope about his middle, with a Pulley they hoisted him up on high, and making a great fire under him, they let him down, so that his feet only felt the fire, and so often pulling him up and down, they burned him by degrees; and yet in all these great torments he remained constant, and the more terribly that he burnt, the more earnestly he prayed. When his feet were consumed, they asked him, Whether he yet did not repent him of his deed? exhorting him to call upon our Lady and the Saints. He answered, That what torments soever they used, the Truth was the same; that which he had confessed in his life, he would not deny at his death; and that when Christ ceased to be our Advocate he would pray to our Lady, &c. And when they labored to stop his praying to, and praising of God, he with a loud voice rehearsed the 34th Psalm; which being almost ended, the Rope was burned in sunder, so that his Body fell down into the fire, where he changed his momentary pains for eternal rest.

But the Lord suffered not this cruelty to go altogether unpunished in this life; for a spark of the fire wherewith he was burned, was driven by the Wind into the Haven, where it set on fire one of the Kings great Ships, and consumed it: The new-married Prince also died within half a year, and the King himself not long after.

God's Judgment on Persecutors.

The Martyrdom of a Christian Jew in Constantinople, Anno Christi 1528.

THis Jew dwelling at Constantinople, through Gods grace, was there converted, Baptized, and became a good Christian; which the Turks understanding, were vehemently exasperated against him for it, fearing lest his conversion should prove very prejudicial to their Mahometan Religion, and therefore they apprehended and cruelly murdered him, and for his greater infamy they cast out his dead Body into the open streets, forbidding all strictly to bury it. Thus his dead Body lay in the streets nine days; yet, through the power of God, it corrupted not all, yea there proceeded from it a certain delectable scent or odor, which much astonished the Turks, so that at last they took it up, and carried it out of the City, and buried it.

A special Providence.

C H A P. XXX.

The Persecution of the Church in Germany, which began Anno Christi 1523.

THe Gospel being spread abroad in Germany, by the means and ministry of Luther, and his Fellow-laborers, the Pope having tried all other means for the suppressing of it, and finding them ineffectual, he at last provokes the Emperor Charles the fifth by War to destroy the Protestants; and for that end gives him Two hundred thousand Crowns in money for the maintenance of these Wars, and ties himself at his own cost to maintain Twelve thousand Foot, and Five hundred Horse for six moneths; yea out of his zeal for the cause, he allows the Emperor the one half of the Revenues of the Clergy, and gives him leave to sell of Abby-Lands to the value of Five hundred thousand Crowns; whereupon great preparation was made for this War, both in Germany, Spain, and Italy, the consideration whereof caused the confederate Protestant Princes to raise a great Army also for their own defence; upon which occasion they were proclaimed guilty of high Treason by the Emperor.

The Pope stirred up the Emperor to persecute the Protestants.

Abby-Lands sold.

The two Armies lay near together, and the Protestants offered Battel to the Emperor, but he refused, assuring himself that they could not long continue together: The Army of the Protestants was commanded by the Duke of Saxony, and the Lantgrave of Hessen, who did not concur very well in their counsels: Besides, they wanted both victuals and money, so as they were forced to dislodge and retire further off: The Emperor following, forced the Elector to fight with disadvantage; and God, who doth not always prosper the better cause, gave the victory to the Emperor, the Duke of Saxony and the Lantgrave being taken Prisoners. Presently after ensued a great Persecution in many places: Authority armed with laws and rigor, striving against simple verity. It was lamentable to hear how many poor Men were troubled, both Ministers and Christians; some tossed from place to place, others exiled out of their own Countries; some driven into Woods, and forced to dwell in Caves; some tormented upon the Rack, and some burned with fire and faggot: Amongst others, two young Men were burnt at Bruxels, viz. Henry Voes and John Esch, formerly Augustine-Friers; When they came before the Inquisitors, they were examined what they did believe? They answered, The Books of the Old and New Testament, wherein were contained the Articles of the Creed. Then were they asked whether they did not believe the decrees of the Councils and Fathers: They answered, such as were agreeing to the Scriptures, they believed, &c. When they were condemned, they gave thanks to God their heavenly Father, which of his great goodness had delivered them from that false and abominable Religion, making them Priests to himself, and receiving them to himself as a sacrifice of a sweet odor: They went joyfully to the place of Execution, protesting that they died for the glory of God, and the Doctrine of the Gospel as true Christians, and that it was the day which they had long desired; They joyfully embraced the stake, and endured patiently the torments of the fire, singing Psalms, and rehearsing the Creed in testimony of their Faith; whereupon one said to them, that they should take heed of glorifying themselves so foolishly, but one of them answered, God forbid that we should glory in anything but in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; When the fire was kindled at their Feet, one of them said, Methinks you do strow Roses under my Feet; presently after they quietly slept in the Lord. Henry being before demanded if Luther had seduced him: He answered, Even so as Christ seduced his Apostles.

The year after there was one Henry Sutphen, who having been with Luther, came to Antwerp, from which he was driven for his Religion; From thence did he go to Breme, where he was requested by some godly Citizens to Preach to them, and the Citizens hearing him preach the Gospel so sincerely, they were so in love with his Doctrine, that they requested him to tarry amongst them to be their Minister: But the Popish Clergy presently complained of him to the Magistrates, accusing him of Heresie, and desiring that he might be banished the Town: But not prevailing there, they complained to the Arch-Bishop, and sent their Chaplains daily to his Sermons to entrap him in his words: But it pleased God so to work upon them by his Ministry, that most of them were converted, and did openly witness that he taught nothing but the truth of God.

Not long after he was sent to Meldorp, to preach the Gospel to them also; wherefore he thought good to try what God would work by him there: But the Citizens of Breme were very unwilling to part with them, because the Gospel had not as yet took much deep root amongst them, and because the Persecution was very great, &c. Yet Sutphen alledged, that in Diethmarch there was more need of his labors, the People being as Sheep amongst Wolves, and that with a safe conscience he could not deny their request, and that he did not intend utterly to forsake Breme, but only for a moneth or two, after which he would return to them again. So having made all things ready, he went into Diethmarch to Meldorp, where he was joyfully received. But before he began to preach, the Devil and his instruments began to fret and fume, and consulting together, they resolved to hinder him from Preaching, fearing that if the People once heard his Doctrine, it would be too late to stop it. Hereupon they grievously complained to the Magistrates, telling them that if they suffered this Heretick to Preach, he would infect all the Country as he had done at Breme, and that it would be a most grateful service if they would put him to death: This so far prevailed with these ignorant Men, that they resolved that he should be put to death unseen and unheard: They wrote also to forbid him to Preach, whereunto, he answered, That since he was come at the request of the whole Parish to Preach, he resolved to answer that call, and rather to obey God

God than Man, and that if God had determined that there he should lose his life, that there was as near a way to Heaven from thence as from any other place; assuring himself that sooner or later he must die for the Gospels sake: And accordingly the next day he preached, and the people so liked him, that they resolved to have him for their Preacher, and to defend him to their power: In the afternoon he preached again, afterwards also he preached a third time with such a spirit and grace, that all Men admired him, praying God earnestly that they might long enjoy such a Preacher: But his Enemies were not all this while idle; For going to the Rulers of the Country, they procured some of them to joyn with them, and privately raised Five hundred Men, with whom they went in the night time to Meldorp, brake into the House where Surphen lay, pulled him out of his Bed naked, and in their rage had almost pulled him to pieces: They then bound him, and asked him for what cause he came into Diethmarch? He gently declared it to them; yet they led him away bare-foot; so that his Feet being pitifully cut with the ice, he desired a Horse to ride on, for which they jeered him, saying, Must we provide an Horse for an Heretic? Thou shalt go on foot whither thou wilt or no: Afterwards they bound him with chains, and set him in the stocks: Then was he removed to another place, and shut up in a Cupboard; The next day binding him, Hands, Feet and Neck, they carried him forth to be burned. Then a certain Woman came to them, and proffered her self to suffer Two thousand stripes, and to give them a great sum of money if they would but respite his life till he had a publick hearing, but they threw her underfoot and trod upon her. They also fell upon Surphen, cutting and mangling him in several parts: The fire was often kindled, yet would not burn; Then they fell upon him again, cutting and flashing him, and at last bound him to a Ladder, and threw him into the fire, and when he began to pray, one of them struck him, saying, Thou shalt first be burnt, and then pray and praise thy self: Another trode upon his Brest, and another endeavored to strangle him: Another ran him through with an Halberd: Another struck him on the Brest with a Mace till he died: And lastly, they rosted him upon the coals, and so he finished his Martyrdom. About the same time many other godly persons were thrown into the River of Rhine and drowned; and in the Town of Diethmarch, another faithful Servant of God suffered Martyrdom.

In Hala a godly Preacher was slain by a company of Cut-throats, set out by the Friars. And not long after the Town of Miltensburg was taken, sacked, many slain, and others imprisoned for maintaining Carlostadt; to be their Preacher. Two other godly persons were burnt at Vienna.

Also a godly Minister for reproving sin in his Prince sharply, was condemned to be hanged, and a cruel Gentleman with a Troop were sent to apprehend and hang him: The Gentleman when he came to his House saluted him friendly; pretending that he came to make good cheer with him, for he was a good House-keeper, and the Gentlemen of the Country used oft to resort to him: The Minister in a short time prepared a sumptuous Banquet for them, whereof they did eat freely. Dinner being ended, the Gentleman said to his Men, Take this Priest our Host and hang him without delay: His Servants astonished hereat, abhorred to do the deed, saying, God forbid that we should commit such a crime, as to hang a Man that hath used us so courteously; its a wicked act thus to render evil for good, &c. But the Gentleman still provoked them to accomplish his command: Then did the Minister say, I beseech you shew not such cruelty upon me, rather lead me to purge my self to my Prince, before whom I doubt not to purge my self from any thing wherewith I shall be charged, neither so violate ye the Laws of Hospitality which I have shewed to you and other Noble men, which used to resort to my House. Besides, consider what a sting this act will leave in your consciences: For I have faithfully and truly taught the Doctrine of the Gospel, and that's the principal cause that my Prince bears me this ill will, &c. But whatsoever this good Man could say in his own behalf, the wicked Gentleman continued resolute, provoking his Servants to accomplish that which he commanded them, withal saying to the Minister; You shall gain nothing by your Preaching in this sort, for I am fully determined that the Princes will shall be fulfilled. At last the Servants took the Minister, and with great lamentation and mourning, hanged him upon a beam in his own House, the Gentleman standing by and looking on.

Also about the same time there was a godly learned Minister, called Master Peter Spengler. Peter Spengler in a Town called Schlat, who faithfully discharged the duty of his place, and was much beloved for his affable and courteous carriage: He was also a great peace-maker, and very prudent in composing differences, well studied in the Scriptures, whereby he saw that Persecution was at hand, the Enemies of the truth beginning now to rage, and proudly to lift up their Heads; yea, shortly after he saw many Bodies of the Saints cruelly tormented, beaten, exiled, drowned and burned; and to the end that he might not defile himself with fornication, he married his Maid, who was one that feared God, and by whom afterwards he had many Children. About this time there was a great commotion of the Boors, who went to Abbies and Monasteries, robbing, plundering, and spoiling what they could not carry away; one company of them came to his House, whom he entertained kindly, yet they ransacked and robbed him of all, even to his very apparel, not leaving him so much as a pair of stockings, though he labored to convince them of their wickedness: As they were going out of his House he fell a weeping, and said to them, I tell you that this your wickedness will in the end bring much mischief upon your selves; you pretend the Gospel, but walk contrary to the rules of it, &c. But for his good counsel they requited him with scoffs and jeers.

A miracle.

It pleased God not long after, that this faithful Pastor in the night-time was taken by a company of Popish Soldiers, who bound him Hands and Feet with a great Rope, and so carried him away to Friburg: It would have grieved any heart to hear the barbarous and despiteful taunts and scoffs that they gave him: From thence they carried him to another place, where they cast him into Prison, cruelly tormented him in his privy members, and other parts of his Body, and at last adjudged him to death. As he was going to Execution, he said, I shall be an acceptable sacrifice to my Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath given me a quiet conscience, as knowing my self innocent from the crimes objected against me: For my death, it is all one whether I die thus or no; For if you had let me alone, I must shortly have forsaken this skin, which already scarcely hangs to my bones. I know that I am a mortal and corruptible worm, I have long desired my last day, and have oft prayed that I might be delivered out of this mortal body, to be joyned with my Saviour Jesus Christ, &c. Then was he cast headlong into the River; which afterwards for a certain space was as red as Blood.

Popish cruelty.

False witnesses.

Another godly Man there was, who (after the commotion raised by the Anabaptists was quieted) was apprehended under pretence that he was one of them, and cast into Prison, in which he was long detained, and at last they hoisted him up with a Cord, with a great Stone fastned to his Feet, where they kept him six hours, so that the sweat that dropped from his Body, through pain and anguish, was almost Blood. At last his strength failing, they let him down with great violence; where he lay as a stock almost dead, only they perceived him to breath: Then did they use means to recover him, and gave him some food, after which they let him down into a deep Dungeon: There he continued eighteen days, in the end whereof they took him forth, and examined him of divers things, which he denied. Then did they devise sundry kinds of torments to force him to accuse himself falsely, yet he constantly denied it. Afterwards they hired an Hangman who left no kind of cruelty unpractised upon him; yet at length he was constrained to give over his cruelty, and pronounce the Man innocent, in that he had constantly endured so many and grievous torments: Then did they again cast him into the Dungeon, and in the mean time suborned two false witnesses against him, whereupon they condemned him unheard, and and having let down a Cord, they drew him up out of the Dungeon to his Execution: As he was going to it, a Frier perswaded him to confess his sins in his ear, and he would absolve him, and so he should go to Heaven: To whom he answered, Thou wicked Frier, get thee from me, I have long since bewailed my sins to God, and obtained absolution at the hands of my Saviour Jesus Christ, and therefore I have no need of thy absolution, &c. At the place of Execution, after he had made his Prayer to God, and vindicated his own innocency, his Head was cut off. These were written by Oecolampadius.

His constant death.

Wolfgang Scuch coming to Hippolitus in Lorrain, was chosen to be their Pastor, where through Gods blessing upon his Ministry, he mightily prevailed with the people to bring them from darkness to light, so that they forsook their former Idolatry, and abolished the Mass, and other superstitious practices from amongst them, which much enraged their Popish neighbors about them, so that they complained to the Duke that they had not only fallen from the Pope, but went about to cast off their obedience to him, and to shake off his authority: This so provoked the indignation of the Duke, that he threatened utterly to destroy the Town with fire and sword; Wolfgang being informed hereof, wrote to the Duke in humble wise, defending his Ministry and the Doctrine which he taught, and the whole cause of the Gospel: He also excused the people as innocent and guiltless, confuted the slanders of their malicious Adversaries, and professed their ready and willing subjection to that authority which God had placed over them. But this Epistle prevailed nothing, by reason of the virulent accusations of their Enemies: Whereupon, to save the Town from ruin, he went of his own accord to the Duke to render an account of his Doctrine, thereby deriving all the Odium and danger upon himself.

As soon as he came thither he was apprehended and cast into a straight and stinking Prison, where he was most cruelly handled by the churlish Jaylor: In this plight he remained a whole year, and yet would not shrink from his constancy, though besides his hard usage, he had a Wife and five or six small Children to care for. Then was he called to justify his Faith, which he did wittily and learnedly, confuting all that did oppose him; and though they called him Heretick, Judas, Devil, &c. yet he regarded it not, but went on confirming his Doctrine by the Scriptures: But when his Adversaries could not make their part good against him, they took his Bible and burned it, and proceeded to condemn him to be burned; which sentence when he heard pronounced against him, he sang the 122 Psalm. When he came to the place of his Martyrdom, they asked him if he would have his pain shortned, he answered, No; for saith he, God that hath been with me hitherto, I trust will not now leave me when I have most need of him. When faggots were heaped about him, he sang the 51 Psalm, and so continued singing till the flame and smoak took away his voice and life.

he said, I will confess Christ this day before the whole world, for he is my Saviour, and in him do I believe. When he was bound to the Ladder, some Christian Brethren desired him, that as soon as he was cast into the fire, he would give them some sign of the truth of his Faith; To whom he said, This shall be my sign, that so long as my Tongue can wag I will not cease to call upon the name of Jesus. He never changed his countenance, but chearfully went to the fire, and crying continually, Jesus, Jesus, he joyfully yielded up his spirit unto God.

Also one Leonard Keyser, a Bavarian, being a Student at Wittenburg, was sent for to come home, his Father lying upon his death-bed: But so soon as he was come, he was apprehended at the command of the Bishop; and though the Duke of Saxony, and his own Friends solicited very earnestly to the Bishop for his life, yet he proceeded to condemn him, and delivered him over to the secular Magistrate. As he was led to the place of Execution, he said, O Lord Jesus, remain with me, sustain and help me, and give me strength: When the fire was ready to be kindled, he cried out with a loud voice, O Jesus, I am thine, have mercy upon me, and save me, and so he quietly slept in the Lord.

IN Holland there was a grave Widow called wendelmuta, to whom it pleased God to reveal his truth, and she became a zealous Professor of it, for which cause she was apprehended and cast into Prison, and afterwards brought forth at the Sessions, where many Monks perswaded her to recant, but could not prevail. Many also of her kindred and other Women were suffered to perswade with her, amongst which was a noble Matron, who coming to her, said, My Wendelmuta, why dost thou not keep those things which thou believest secret in thy heart, that thou mayest prolong thy life? To whom she answered, Truly you know not what you say, for with the heart Man believes to righteousness, but with the tongue confession is made to salvation. Then was she condemned to be burnt to ashes, and her goods to be confiscated, which sentence she took patiently and quietly.

At the place of her execution a Monk brought her a Cross, and bad her to kiss and worship her God, to whom she said, I worship no wooden God, but only that God which is in Heaven; and so with a merry and joyful countenance she went to the stake, desiring the Executioner to knock it in fast that it might not fall: Being bound to it, she ardently commended her soul into the hands of God; when she was to be strangled she modestly closed her Eyes, and bowed down her Head as one that went to sleep; after which she was burned to ashes.

There were two godly and learned Men apprehended in Colen, and cast into Prison, where they were kept a year and an half, and the sweating sickness raging exceedingly at that time in Germany, the Popish Clergy preached that the way to pacifie Gods wrath, and to remove the plague, was to cut off Hereticks, whereupon these two godly Men were brought out, and condemned, and presently after burned.

Thither the Doctors of Levain came, thinking either to convert them or confound them: But the Spirit of God assisting his Saints, the Doctors went away confounded themselves. Then did they cruelly torment every one of them by themselves: Amongst these an aged Minister of about sixty years old was condemned to perpetual imprisonment in a dark and stinking Dungeon, where he could neither read nor write, nor might any Man come to him, and he was fed only with Bread and Water.

The year after in the same University of Levain, was one Master Perfival, a very learned and godly Man, cast into Prison, and because he could by no means be brought to recant, he was adjudged to perpetual imprisonment, and there to be fed only with Bread and Water; neither would they suffer the Citizens to send any relief to him: shortly after he was made away in Prison.

His danger.

the King.

At first, all that were present stood amazed; then arose a great tumult, and one drawing his Dagger, wounded Gardiner in the Shoulder, and as he was about to have slain him, the King commanded him to forbear, whereby his life was saved for the present. The tumult being ceased, the King demanded of him what Countryman he was? He answered, Most Noble King, I am not ashamed of my Countrey, I am an Englishman by Birth and Religion, and came hither as a Merchant; and seeing so great Idolatry committed in this famous Assembly, I neither ought, nor could any longer suffer it; neither could I forbear doing what you have seen. Which thing, most Noble Prince, was not done in contempt of your Presence, God is my witness, but to seek the Salvation of this People.

Courage.

The King hearing that he was an Englishman, and considering what alteration of Religion King Edward had made, presently conceived that he was suborned, by some Body, to do this in scorn to their Religion: Wherefore he asked him who was the author and procurer of this act? Gardiner answered, That he was not moved thereunto by any Man, but only by his own Conscience. For, saith he, there is no Man under Heaven, for whose sake I would put my self into such manifest danger, but that I owed this service, first to God, and then to your Salvation. And if I have done any thing which is displeasing to you, you ought to impute it to no Man, but to your self, who so irreverently use the holy Sacrament of the Lords Supper to so great Idolatry, &c. Whilest he thus stoutly spake to the King, by reason of the loss of much Blood by his wound, he was ready to faint. Whereupon Chirurgeons were sent for to cure him, that he might be reserved for further torments.

Then were all other Englishmen in the City clapped up in Prison, especially his Bed-fellow, who was grievously tormented and examined more then all the rest, and scarcely delivered after two years imprisonment; the rest got off sooner.

He is tortured.

They searched also all his Writings and Letters, to see if they could find out any confederates: Then they went to him, seeking by torments to extort the author of this fact. They also invented a new kind of torment, exceeding Phalaris his Brazen Bull, which was this, They made a Ball of Linnen-cloth, which with violence they thrust down his Throat, to the bottom of his Stomack, and with a string fastned to it, they pulled it up again; and this they did divers times, which caused as bitter pains, as the pains of death. But when by this means they could get no confession from him, they asked him, If he did not repent of his wicked act? Whereto he answered, That he was so far from repenting, that if it were to do again, he should do it: Yet was he somewhat sorry that it was done in the Kings presence, to his disturbance; but they were not to blame him for it, but the King was rather to be blamed, who having power, would not prohibit so great Idolatry.

His cruel
Martyrdom.

Constancy.

When they had used all kinds of torments, and that he was so weakned thereby, that he was not like to live long, they first cut off his right hand, then carried him into the Market-place, where they cut off his other hand also; then fastning a Rope about his middle, with a Pulley they hoisted him up on high, and making a great fire under him, they let him down, so that his feet only felt the fire, and so often pulling him up and down, they burned him by degrees; and yet in all these great torments he remained constant, and the more terribly that he burnt, the more earnestly he prayed. When his feet were consumed, they asked him, Whether he yet did not repent him of his deed? exhorting him to call upon our Lady and the Saints. He answered, That what torments soever they used, the Truth was the same; that which he had confessed in his life, he would not deny

at his death; and that when Christ ceased to be our Advocate he would pray to our Lady, &c. And when they labored to stop his praying to, and praising of God, he with a loud voice rehearsed the 34th Psalm; which being almost ended, the Rope was burned in sunder, so that his Body fell down into the fire, where he changed his momentary pains for eternal rest.

But the Lord suffered not this cruelty to go altogether unpunished in this life; for a spark of the fire wherewith he was burned, was driven by the Wind into the Haven, where it set on fire one of the Kings great Ships, and consumed it: The new-married Prince also died within half a year, and the King himself not long after.

THis Jew dwelling at Constantinople, through Gods grace, was there converted, Baptized, and became a good Christian; which the Turks understanding, were vehemently exasperated against him for it, fearing lest his conversion should prove very prejudicial to their Mahometan Religion, and therefore they apprehended and cruelly murdered him, and for his greater infamy they cast out his dead Body into the open streets, forbidding all strictly to bury it. Thus his dead Body lay in the streets nine days; yet, through the power of God, it corrupted not all, yea there proceeded from it a certain delectable scent or odor, which much astonished the Turks, so that at last they took it up, and carried it out of the City, and buried it.

The Persecution of the Church in Germany, which began Anno Christi 1523.

THe Gospel being spread abroad in Germany, by the means and ministry of Luther, and his Fellow-laborers, the Pope having tried all other means for the suppressing of it, and finding them ineffectual, he at last provokes the Emperor Charles the fifth by War to destroy the Protestants; and for that end gives him Two hundred thousand Crowns in money for their maintenance of these Wars, and ties himself at his own cost to maintain Twelve thousand Foot, and Five hundred Horse for six moneths; yea out of his zeal for the cause, he allows the Emperor the one half of the Revenues of the Clergy, and gives him leave to sell of Abby-Lands to the value of Five hundred thousand Crowns; whereupon great preparation was made for this War, both in Germany, Spain, and Italy, the consideration whereof caused the confederate Protestant Princes to raise a great Army also for their own defence; upon which occasion they were proclaimed guilty of high Treason by the Emperor.

The Pope stirred up the Emperor to persecute the Protestants.

Abby-Lands sold.

The two Armies lay near together, and the Protestants offered Battel to the Emperor, but he refused, assuring himself that they could not long continue together: The Army of the Protestants was commanded by the Duke of Saxony, and the Lantgrave of Hessen, who did not concur very well in their counsels: Besides, they wanted both victuals and money; so as they were forced to dislodge and retire further off: The Emperor following, forced the Elector to fight with disadvantage; and God, who doth not always prosper the better cause, gave the victory to the Emperor, the Duke of Saxony and the Lantgrave being taken Prisoners. how many poor Men were troubled, both Ministers and Christians; some tossed from place to place, others exiled out of their own Countries; some driven into Woods, and forced to dwell in Caves; some tormented upon the Rack, and some burned with fire and faggot: Amongst others, two young Men were burnt at Bruxels, viz. Henry Voes and John Esch, formerly Augustine-Friers; When they came before the Inquisitors, they were examined what they did believe? They answered, The Books of the Old and New Testament, wherein were contained the Articles of the Creed. Then were they asked whether they did not believe the decrees of the Councils and Fathers: They answered, such as were agreeing to the Scriptures, they believed, &c. When they were condemned, they gave thanks to God their heavenly Father, which of his great goodness had delivered them from that false and abominable Religion, making them Priests to himself, and receiving them to himself as a sacrifice of a sweet odor: They went joyfully to the place of Execution, protesting that they died for the glory of God, and the Doctrine of the Gospel as true Christians, and that it was the day which they had long desired; They joyfully embraced the stake, and endured patiently the torments of the fire, singing Psalms, and rehearsing the Creed in testimony of their Faith; whereupon one said to them, that they should take heed of glorifying themselves so foolishly; but one of them answered, God forbid that we should glory in any thing but in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; When the fire was kindled at their Feet, one of them said, Methinks you do strow Roses under my Feet; presently after they quietly slept in the Lord. Henry being before demanded if Luther had seduced him: He answered, Even so as Christ seduced his Apostles.

The year after there was one Henry Sutphen, who having been with Luther, came to Antwerp, from which he was driven for his Religion; From thence did he go to Breme, where he was requested by some godly Citizens to Preach to them, and the Citizens hearing him preach the Gospel so sincerely, they were so in love with his Doctrine, that they requested him to tarry amongst them to be their Minister: But the Popish Clergy presently complained of him to the Magistrates, accusing him of Heresie, and desiring that he might be banished the Town: But not prevailing there, they complained to the Arch-Bishop, and sent their Chaplains daily to his Sermons to entrap him in his words: But it pleased God so to work upon them by his Ministry, that most of them were converted, and did openly witness that he taught nothing but the truth of God.

Not long after he was sent to Meldorp, to preach the Gospel to them also; wherefore he thought good to try what God would work by him there: But the Citizens of Breme were very unwilling to part with them, because the Gospel had not as yet took much deep root amongst them, and because the Persecution was very great, &c. Yet Sutphen alledged, that in Diethmarch there was more need of his labors, the People being as Sheep amongst Wolves, and that with a safe conscience he could not deny their request, and that he did not intend utterly to forsake Breme, but only for a moneth or two, after which he would return to them again. So having made all things ready, he went into Diethmarch to Meldorp, where he was joyfully received. But before he began to preach, the Devil and his instruments began to fret and fume, and consulting together, they resolved to hinder him from Preaching, fearing that if the People once heard his Doctrine, it would be too late to stop it. Hereupon they grievously complained to the Magistrates, telling them that if they suffered this Heretick to Preach, he would infect all the Country as he had done at Breme, and that it would be a most grateful service if they would put him to death: This so far prevailed with these ignorant Men, that they resolved that he should be put to death unseen and unheard: They wrote also to forbid him to Preach, whereunto, he answered, That since he was come at the request of the whole Parish to Preach, he resolved to answer that call, and rather to obey God

The Persecution of the Church in Germany.

God than Man, and that if God had determined that there he should lose his life, that there was as near a way to Heaven from thence as from any other place, assuring himself that sooner or later he must die for the Gospels sake: And accordingly the next day he preached, and the people so like him, that they resolved to have him for their Preacher, and to defend him to their power: In the afternoon he preached again, afterwards also he preached a third time with such a spirit and grace, that all Men admired him, praying God earnestly that they might long enjoy such a Preacher: But his Enemies were not all this while idle; For going to the Rulers of the Country, they procured some of them to joyn with them, and privately raised Five hundred Men, with whom they went in the night time to Meldorp, brake into the House where surphen lay, pulled him out of his Bed naked, and in their rage had almost pulled him to pieces: They then bound him, and asked him for what cause he came into Diethmarch? He gently declared it to them, yet they led him away bare-foot; so that his Feet being pitifully cut with the ice, he desired a Horse to ride on, for which they jeered him, saying, Must we provide an Horse for an Heretick? Thou shalt go on foot whither thou wilt or no: Afterwards they bound him with chains, and set him in the stocks: Then was he removed to another place, and shut up in a Cupboard; The next day binding him, Hands; Feet and Neck, they carried him forth to be burned. Then a certain Woman came to them, and proffered her self to suffer Two thousand stripes, and to give them a great sum of money if they would but respite his life till he had a publick hearing, but they threw her underfoot and trod upon her. They also fell upon surphen, cutting and mangling him in several parts: The fire was often kindled, yet would not burn; Then they fell upon him again, cutting and flashing him, and at last bound him to a Ladder, and threw him into the fire, and when he began to pray, one of them struck him, saying, Thou shalt first be burnt, and then pray and praise thy self: Another trode upon his Brest, and another endeavored to strangle him: Another ran him through with an Halberd: Another struck him on the Brest with a Mace till he died: And lastly, they rosted him upon the coals, and so he finished his Martyrdom. About the same time many other godly persons were thrown into the River of Rhine and drowned; and in the Town of Diethmarch, another faithful Servant of God suffered Martyrdom.

In Hala a godly Preacher was slain by a company of Cut-throats, set out by the Friars. And not long after the Town of Miltzburg was taken, sacked, many slain, and others imprisoned for maintaining Carlostadius, to be their Preacher. Two other godly persons were buried at Vienna.

Also a godly Minister for reproving sin in his Prince sharply, was condemned to be hanged, and a cruel Gentleman with a Troop were sent to apprehend and hang him: The Gentleman when he came to his House saluted him friendly; pretending that he came to make good cheer with him, for he was a good House-keeper, and the Gentlemen of the Country used oft to resort to him: The Minister in a short time prepared a sumptuous Banquet for them, whereof they did eat freely. Dinner being ended, the Gentleman said to his Men, Take this Priest our Host and hang him without delay: His Servants astonished hereat, abhorred to do the deed, saying, God forbid that we should commit such a crime, as to hang a Man that hath used us so courteously; its a wicked act thus to render evil for good, &c. But the Gentleman still provoked them to accomplish his command: Then did the Minister say, I beseech you shew not such cruelty upon me, rather lead me to purge my self to my Prince, before whom I doubt not to purge my self from any thing wherewith I shall be charged, neither so violate ye the Laws of Hospitality which I have shewed to you and other Noble men, which used to resort to my House. Besides, consider what a sting this act will leave in your consciences: For I have faithfully and truly taught the Doctrine of the Gospel, and that's the principal cause that my Prince bears me this ill will, &c. But whatsoever this good Man could say in his own behalf, the wicked Gentleman continued resolute, provoking his Servants to accomplish that which he commanded them, withal saying to the Minister, You shall gain nothing by your Preaching in this sort, for I am fully determined that the Princes will shall be fulfilled. At last the Servants took the Minister, and with great lamentation and mourning, hanged him upon a beam in his own House, the Gentleman standing by and looking on.

Peter Spengler.

Also about the same time there was a godly learned Minister, called Master Peter Spengler in a Town called Schlat, who faithfully discharged the duty of his place, and was much beloved for his affable and courteous carriage: He was also a great peace-maker, and very prudent in composing differences, well studied in the Scriptures, whereby he saw that Persecution was at hand, the Enemies of the truth beginning now to rage, and proudly to lift up their Heads; yea, shortly after he saw many Bodies of the Saints cruelly tormented, beaten, exiled, drowned and burned; and to the end that he might not defile himself with fornication, he married his Maid, who was one that feared God, and by whom afterwards he had many Children. About this time there was a great commotion of the Boors, who went to Abbies and Monasteries, robbing, plundering, and spoiling what they could not carry away; one company of them came to his House, whom he entertained kindly, yet they rancked and robbed him of all, even to his very apparel, not leaving him so much as a pair of stockings, though he labored to convince them of their wickedness: As they were going out of his House he fell a weeping, and said to them, I tell you that this your wickedness will in the end bring much mischief upon your selves; you pretend the Gospel, but walk contrary to the rules of it, &c. But for his good counsel they requited him with scoffs and jeers.

It pleased God not long after, that this faithful Pastor in the night-time was taken by a company of Popish Soldiers, who bound him Hands and Feet with a great Rope, and so carried him away to Friburg: It would have grieved any heart to hear the barbarous and despiteful taunts and scoffs that they gave him: From thence they carried him to another place, where they cast him into Prison, cruelly tormented him in his privy members, and other parts of his Body, and at last adjudged him to death. As he was going to Execution, he said, I shall be an acceptable sacrifice to my Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath given me a quiet conscience, as knowing my self innocent from the crimes objected against me: For my death, it is all one whether I die thus or no; For if you had let me alone, I must shortly have forsaken this skin, which already scarcely hangs to my bones. I know that I am a mortal and corruptible worm, I have long desired my last day, and have oft prayed that I might be delivered out of this mortal body, to be joynd with my Saviour Jesus Christ, &c. Then was he cast headlong into the River; which afterwards for a certain space was as red as Blood.

Popish cruelty.

Another godly Man there was, who (after the commotion raised by the Anabaptists was quieted) was apprehended under pretence that he was one of them, and cast into Prison, in which he was long detained, and at last they hoisted him up with a Cord, with a great Stone fastned to his Feet, where they kept him six hours, so that the sweat that dropped from his Body, through pain and anguish, was almost Blood. At last his strength failing, they let him down with great violence; where he lay as a stock almost dead, only they perceived him to breath: Then did they use means to recover him, and gave him some food, after which they let him down into a deep Dungeon: There he continued eighteen days, in the end whereof they took him forth, and examined him of divers things, which he denied. Then did they devise sundry kinds of torments to force him to accuse himself falsely, yet he constantly denied it. Afterwards they hired an Hangman who left no kind of cruelty unpractised upon him; yet at length he was constrained to give over his cruelty, and pronounce the Man innocent, in that he had constantly endured so many and grievous torments: Then did they again cast him into the Dungeon, and in the mean time suborned two false witnesses against him, whereupon they condemned him unheard,

and having let down a Cord, they drew him up out of the Dungeon to his Execution: As he was going to it, a Friar perswaded him to confess his sins in his ear, and he would absolve him, and so he should go to Heaven: To whom he answered, Thou wicked Friar, get thee from me, I have long since bewailed my sins to God, and obtained absolution at the hands of my Saviour Jesus Christ, and therefore I have no need of thy absolution, &c. At the place of Execution, after he had made his Prayer to God, and vindicated his own innocency, his Head was cut off. These were written by Oecolampadius.

Wolfgang Scuch coming to Hippolitus in Lorraine, was chosen to be their Pastor, where through Gods blessing upon his Ministry, he mightily prevailed with the people to bring them from darkness to light, so that they forsook their former Idolatry, and abolished the Mass, and other superstitious practices from amongst them, which much enraged their Popish neighbors about them, so that they complained to the Duke that they had not only fallen from the Pope, but went about to cast off their obedience to him, and to shake off his authority: This so provoked the indignation of the Duke, that he threatened utterly to destroy the Town with fire and sword; Wolfgang being informed hereof, wrote to the Duke in humble wise, defending his Ministry and the Doctrine which he taught, and the whole cause of the Gospel: He also excused the people as innocent and guiltless, confuted the slanders of their malicious Adversaries, and professed their ready and willing subjection to that authority which God had placed over them. But this Epistle prevailed nothing, by reason of the virulent accusations of their Enemies: Whereupon, to save the Town from ruin, he went of his own accord to the Duke to render an account of his Doctrine, thereby deriving all the Odium and danger upon himself.

Then was he called to justify his Faith, which he did wittily and learnedly, confuting all that did oppose him; and though they called him Heretick, Judas, Devil, &c. yet he regarded it not, but went on confirming his Doctrine by the Scriptures: But when his Adversaries could not make their part good against him, they took his Bible and burned it, and proceeded to condemn him to be burned; which sentence when he heard pronounced against him, he sang the 122 Psalm. When he came to the place of his Martyrdom, they asked him if he would have his pain shortned, he answered, No; for saith he, God that hath been with me hitherto, I trust will not now leave me when I have most need of him. When faggots were heaped about him, he sang the 51 Psalm; and so continued singing till the flame and smoak took away his voice and life.

IN Holland there was a grave Widow called wendelmuts, to whom it pleased God to reveal his truth, and she became a zealous Professor of it, for which cause she was apprehended and cast into Prison, and afterwards brought forth at the Sessions, where many Monks perswaded her to recant, but could not prevail. Many also of her kindred and other Women were suffered to perswade with her, amongst which was a noble Matron, who coming to her, said, My Wendelmuts, why dost thou not keep those things which thou believest secret in thy heart, that thou mayest prolong thy life? To whom she answered, Truly you know not what you say; for with the heart Man believes to righteousness, but with the tongue confession is made to salvation. Then was she condemned to be burnt to ashes, and her goods to be confiscated, which sentence she took patiently and quietly.

There were two godly and learned Men apprehended in Colen, and cast into Prison, where they were kept a year and an half, and the sweating sickness raging exceedingly at that time in Germany, the Popish Clergy preached that the way to pacifie Gods wrath, and to remove the plague, was to cut off Hereticks, whereupon these two godly Men were brought out, and condemned, and presently after burned.

Thither the Doctors of Levain came, thinking either to convert them or confound them: But the Spirit of God assisting his Saints, the Doctors went away confounded themselves. A great Persecution.

Martin converted in his old age.

Also one Justus Insberg in the same City, for having a New Testament and some of Luthers Sermons found in his House, was cast into Prison, and command given that none should speak with him. At the same time there were Prisoners in a Room under him, Egidius and Encenas mentioned before, whose door being left open accidentally, they went to this poor Man, and much confirmed and strengthened him in the Faith, insomuch as when the Lovian Doctors came to persuade him to recant, he before them all made a bold Confession of his Faith, from which he would not be dissuaded, whereupon he was condemned and Beheaded.

About the same time there was one Giles Tilleman, a Cutler at Bruxels, who by diligent reading of the Scriptures, through Gods grace, was converted, and became very zealous for the truth: He was also very humble, mild, and merciful; whatsoever he could spare from his own necessity, he gave it to the poor, living by his trade himself. Some he refreshed with meat, others with cloathing; to others he gave shooes, to others household-stuff; to others he ministered godly exhortations for their edification. One poor Woman being delivered of a Child, and wanting a Bed to lie on, he sent her his Bed, and himself was content to lie on the straw. At last he was discovered and cast into Prison, where much pains was taken to bring him back to Popery, but always his Adversaries went away with shame: After eight months imprisonment he was sent to Bruxels to be judged, in which place he comforted many that he found in Prison there, exhorting them to constancy that they might attain the Crown: Most of his food he divided amongst them, contenting himself with some few scraps. He was so ardent in Prayer, kneeling by himself in some secret place, that often he forgot himself; and being many times called to his meat, he neither heard, nor saw them that stood by him till he was lifted up by the Arms.

Divers Friars coming to reduce him, he would still request them to go their ways, for he was at a point; and when they reviled him, he would not answer them again, insomuch as they reported abroad that he had a dumb Devil in him. But when they spake of matters of Religion, he answered them freely, mightily confuting them by the Scriptures: Often he might have escaped, the Prison Doors being set open, but he would not, that he might not bring his Keeper into trouble. Afterwards he was removed to another Prison, where they sought by torments to enforce him to recant; and when all would not prevail, he was condemned to the fire; which when he heard of, he gave hearty thanks to God for that the hour was come, wherein he might glorifie his name. Seeing a great pile of Wood prepared for his burning, he desired that most of it might be taken away and given to the poor, for a little, said he, will serve to burn me; and seeing a poor Man by that lacked shooes, he gave him his. Being tied to the Stake, the Hangman would have strangled him, but he refused, saying, It needs not, I fear not the fire; and so in the midst of the flames he gave up the Ghost.

Anno 1543 and 1544. There was a great Persecution all over Flanders, so that there was neither Town nor City in all the Country, wherein some were not banished, beheaded, or condemned to perpetual imprisonment; neither was there any respect either of age or sex: But especially at Gaunt, many of the chief Men were burned for Religion.

Also at the Emperors going to Bruxels, there was a terrible persecution and slaughter made of Gods People in Brabant, Artois, &c. so that Two hundred Men and Women were apprehended at one time, whereof some were drowned, some buried quick, some privily made away, others sent to perpetual Prison; yea so many others were put to death, that the hands of the Hangman were tired with slaying them.

Anno 1545. There was one Martin, at Gaunt, a Fishmonger, who lived very dissolutely to his old age: But it pleased God by a Sermon that he heard, to bring bring him to the knowledge of the Truth, and to repentance for his former sins; whereupon he left Gaunt, and sought out the company of godly Christians, who used much reading of the Scriptures, by whom he was further instructed and grounded in the Truth. Then after three Moneths he returned to the City again, where he visited the Captives in Prison, comforted them in Persecution, and confirmed them in the Truth, which were led to the fire.

The Fryers seeing this, though formerly he had been very bountiful to them, yet now they conspired against him, whereby he was laid in Bands, and by sharp and cruel torments they would have informed him to recant; but not prevailing, he was condemned, and his Goods confiscated. As he stood at the Stake, a Fryer said to him, Martin, except thou dost turn, thou shalt go from this temporal to everlasting fire: To whom he answered, It is not for you to judge me. And so he quietly slept in the Lord.

The next day after, two other Men were burned, and a Woman buried alive for the same cause, who joyfully and chearfully suffered Martyrdom.

At Delden, two Virgins of a noble stock, who frequently and diligently attended Sermons, being apprehended and examined, courageously confessed and maintained the Truth; whereupon they were condemned, and the younger was first burned. In the fire, she prayed so ardently for her Enemies, that the Judges greatly marvelled at it: Then did they exhort the elder, That if she would not recant, yet, at least, that she would Petition to have her punishment changed into beheading, instead of burning: Whereupon she answered, That she held no Error, of which she had cause to repent, but the Truth which was consonant to the Scriptures; in which, she trusted to persevere unto the end. And for the kind of her punishment, she feared not the fire, but would rather follow the example of her dear Sister; and so being put into the fire, she quietly slept in the Lord. But this was marvellous, That after their death, the Bodies of them both remained white, and unhurt by the fire; whereupon some Christians privily in the night buried them.

A Miracle.

Anno Christi 1545. There was in Mechlin, one Andrew Thiessen, who had three Sons and a Daughter, whom he carefully brought up in the knowledge of the Truth. After which, he went into England, and there died: Two of his Sons went into Germany to study there, and after a time returned home again, instructing their Mother, Brother, and Sister, in the right knowledge of Christ; which being taken notice of, they were all carried before the Magistrate, and exhorted to return to the Church of Rome again. The younger Brother and Sister, being not so thoroughly grounded in the Truth, by reason of their years, yielded something, and so were sent home again. The Mother, who remained constant, was adjudged to perpetual imprisonment; the two elder Brethren defended the Truth stoutly against the Fryers, Disputation not prevailing, they proceeded to torments, endeavoring to know of them who was their Master, and what Fellows they had: They answered, That their Master was Christ, who bare his Cross before them; and for Fellows they had innumerable, dispersed in all places. At last they were condemned to the fire; and at the place of execution, they began to exhort the people; whereupon Balls were put into their Mouths, which through vehemency in desiring to speak, they thrust out again, intreating them for the Lords sake, that they might have leave to speak: And so singing with a loud voice, they were fastned to the Stake, where they prayed for their Persecutors, exhorted one another, and endured the fire patiently. One of them feeling the violence of the flame, said, O what a small pain is this compared with the glory to come! And so committing their Spirits into the Hands of God, they finished their race.

Anno 1545. There was a great Persecution in Dornick; and amongst others, there was one Adrian Tailor, and his Wife, apprehended; and upon their examination, the Man being somewhat timorous, relented something, and so was beheaded: But the Woman being more constant, was put into an Iron grate, and so buried alive.

Master Peter Bruly.

There was also one Master Peter Bruly, about the same time, sometimes a Preacher in Strasburg, but now at the request of the faithful in Dornick, a diligent Preacher there: He used to Preach in Houses, the door standing open. The Magistrate hearing of it, laid wait for him, shutting up the City Gates, and searching three days for him: But the Brethren in the night time let him down in a Basket over the Wall. And when he was down, one of them leaning over the Wall, to bid him farewell, unawares threw down a loose Stone, which falling upon his Leg, brake it in pieces. He complaining of his hurt, the Watchmen heard him, and apprehended him. Then did he give thanks to Almighty God, who by that providence staid him there to bear witness to his Truth. Whilest he was in Prison, he ceased not to instruct and confirm all them that came to him in the Word of Grace. After four Moneths imprisonment he was condemned to be burnt, and his Ashes to be cast into the River. The Fryers took care that he should have but a small fire, that his pain might be the more increased, yet he constantly and chearfully suffered Martyrdom.

Two Men and their Wives.

God made the Ministry of this good Man very powerful to many; amongst others there was one Peter Mioce, who had lived long in all manner of wickedness and licentiousness; but being, through Gods Grace, converted, he excelled all the rest of the Brethren in zeal and holiness. At last he was apprehended, and being asked, whether he was one of Peter Brulies disciples? He said, That he was, and that he had received much benefit by his Doctrine; withal professing, That his Doctrine was consonant to the holy Scriptures. Whereupon he was let down into a deep Dungeon full of Toads and other Vermine: Afterwards he was brought forth before the Senate, who had provided some Fryers to convert him; to whom he said, when I lived an ungodly life, in all manner of vice and wickedness, you never said word to me; but now for savoring and favoring the word of God, you seek my blood. Then did they examine him about sundry Articles of Religion; to which, whilest he was making a full answer, they cut him off, bidding him answer in two words, Yea or No. Whereupon he said, If you will not give me leave to answer fully to things of such importance, send me again to my Dungeon amongst the Toads and Frogs, who will not interrupt me whilest I talk with my Lord my God. Shortly after, he was condemned to be burned; and having a Bag of Powder hung about his Neck; when the fire came to it, it gave a crack. Whereupon the Fryers told the People, That the Devil came out of him, and carried away his Soul to Hell.

A Tyrannous Prince in Germany apprehended a godly Minister, and for his constancy in the Truth, put out both his eyes, and kept him a long time in Prison, afflicting him with divers kinds of torments. Then did he cause him to be degraded, shaving the skin off his head, and rubbing it with Salt, till the Blood ran down his shoulders, and paring off the ends of his fingers. So that four days after, he patiently yielded up the ghost.

Not long after, there was a godly Minister in Antwerp, called Christopher Fabri, that was betrayed by a Woman, who pretended a great zeal to Religion, and was cast into Prison, where he lay for a long time, and endured much misery. At last he was brought forth and condemned to be burnt alive: And when the Margrave brought him forth to execution, the People, having first sung Psalms, fell to casting of Stones against the Executioner; so as the poor Prisoner being bound, and fire set to him, the Margrave durst stay no longer but run away, and so did the Executioner: But before he fled, by the command of the Margrave, he took a Hammer and beat out Fabri's Brains, and stabbed him into the back with a Dagger; so that the People running to save him from the fire, found him dead. After which, by the command of the Margrave, he had a great Stone tied about his Neck, and was thrown into the River.

Anno 1549. One Nicholas and Barbara his Wife, and one Austin and Marrian his Wife, Germans by birth, went to Geneva, where they lived for a space: Then returning through Germany, they intended to go into England, but having passed passed through Dornick, they were discovered to the Lieutenant thereof, who speedily pursuing them, overtook them: Yet at that time, God delivered Austin out of their hands; but Nicholas, and the two Women, were apprehended and carried back by the Soldiers: Coming to an Inn by the way, at Table Nicholas gave thanks, whereat the wicked Captain swearing grievously, said, Let us see, thou leud Heretick, if thy God can deliver thee out of my hand. Nicholas replied, Hath Christ ever offended you, that by your blasphemous swearing, you thus tear him in pieces? Pray you, if you have any thing against Christ, rather wreak your anger upon this poor body of mine, and let the Lord alone. Then did he bind them hands and feet, and carried them to Bruges, and cast them into the Dungeon.

Divers Fryers coming to them, Nicholas in disputing with them, so confounded them, that they went away ashamed, saying, That he had a Devil, crying, To the fire with the Lutheran. Afterwards the Magistrate sought to pump out of Nicholas, what acquaintance he had in that City: But not prevailing with him, he went to his Wife, and by flattering speeches and fair promises, he wrought so upon her weakness, that he gat out all that she knew, whereupon ensued a great Persecution.

Popish subtilty

Shortly after, Nicholas was condemned to be burned; at the hearing of which Sentence, he blessed the Lord, who had counted him worthy to be a witness in the cause of his dear and welbeloved Son Jesus Christ. At the place of execution, he was commanded not to speak to the People; for, if he did, he should have a Wooden Ball thrust into his Mouth: Yet as he was binding to the Stake, forgetting the command, he cried out, O Charles, Charles, how long shall thy heart be hardened? With that one of the Soldiers gave him a great blow. Then he said, Ah miserable People, who are not worthy that the word should be preached to you: The Fryers crying out, That he had a Devil; he answered them in the words of David, Depart from me all ye wicked, for the Lord hath heard the voice of my weeping. And so commending his spirit into the hands of God, he ended his life in the midst of the flames.

Marrian was condemned to be buried quick; and when some Earth was thrown upon her, the Hangman stamped upon her with his feet till she died. Afterwards Austin that had before escaped, was apprehended, and being examined, though by nature he was a very timorous and weak Man, yet did he stand to the defence of the truth valiantly, and answered his Adversaries very boldly. Being condemned to be burnt, as he was going to execution, a Gentleman drank to him in a Cup of Wine, exhorting him to pity himself, at least, not to destroy his Soul. Austin thanked him, saying, What care I have of my Soul, you may see by this, In that I had rather give my Body to be burned, then to sin against my Conscience. Being tied to the Stake, and fire set to him, he heartily prayed to the Lord, and so patiently departed.

Anno 1551. The Emperor Charles the Fifth, having obtruded the interim upon Germany, many godly Ministers were persecuted and driven from their places, for opposing the same; as may be seen in my First Part of Lives. The City of Magdenburgh also for refusing it, had an Army sent against it, which besieged it for a whole year together, whereby many of the godly Citizens lost their lives, and others indured great miseries. But at last, Gods Providence so ordering of it, War arose betwixt the Emperor and the King of France, whereupon Peace was granted unto Magdenburgh upon good terms, and the Inhabitants enjoyed their former Religion quietly.

Anno 1555. There was one Hottins, born at Gannt, who for some time, was a member of the French Church, here in London, in King Edwards days; but in the beginning of Queen Maries Reign, he went with his Family to Norden in Friesland: And afterwards having some business to Gannt, he went thither, where he instructed many of his Friends in the Truth; and hearing that a Fryer used to Preach good Doctrine, he went to hear him, but the Fryer that day defended Transubstantiation, which so grieved him, that he could scarce refrain from speaking till the Sermon was ended. When the Fryer was come down from the Pulpit, he charged him for Preaching false doctrine, perswading the people by the Scripture, that the Bread was but the Sacrament of the Lords Body; but the people making a tumult, carried him out of the Church in a croud; and he had not gone far before he was apprehended by an Officer, and carried to prison. Then came divers Fryers to reason with him, and he would stand to the tryal of the Scriptures only, which they refused. During his imprisonment, he wrote a consolatory Letter to his Wife, exhorting her to bring up his children in the fear of God. Being condemned, he was commanded not to speak to the people; being bound to the stake, he prayed for his Enemies, and was first strangled, and then burnt.

The same year there was at Dornick, one Bertrand, who to enjoy the freedom of his Conscience went to wesel; but being desirous to draw his Wife and Children thither, he went thrice to Dornick to perswade her to go with him; yet could he by no means prevail with her. Then did he set his house in order, desiring her to pray, that God would establish him in the Work that he went about: And on Christmas-day he went to the great Church at Dornick, and the Priest being at Mass, when he was about to elevate the Host, Bertrand took the Cake out of his hand, and trampled it under his feet, saying, That he did it to shew the glory of that god that they worshipped, or rather, what little power he had: Laboring to perswade them, that the Cake was not their Saviour. At first the people stood amazed, but presently they raised such a tumult that Bertrand hardly escaped with life.

The Governor hearing of it, was exceedingly enraged, and sent for Bertrand into the Castle, asking him, Whether he was sorry for his fact, and whether he would do it, if it were to do again? Bertrand answered, That he would; and if he had a hundred lives to lose, he would lose them all in that quarrel. Then was he thrice put to the rack and tormented cruelly to draw from him who were his letters on; yet could they get nothing from him. Then was he condemned, and drawn from the Castle to the Market-place, with a Ball of Iron in his Mouth. There he was set upon a Stage, and had his right hand, wherewith he did the fact, crushed between two hot Irons with sharp edges, till the form of his hand was quite changed. Then did they bring other red hot Irons for his right foot, which they used as they had done his hand, which he with marvellous patience and constancy underwent, putting out his foot of his own accord to them: Then taking the Ball of Iron out of his Mouth, they cut out his Tongue; notwithstanding which, he continually called and cried unto God, which caused them to thrust in the Ball of Iron again. Then was he let down in an Iron Chain upon the fire, and pulled up again; and so they continued pulling up, and letting down, till he was burnt to ashes, which ashes they threw into the River.

Two other good Men born in Dornick, went into divers Reformed Churches, where they increased much in knowledge and godliness; and at last resolved to return to Dornick, to do what good they could in their own Countrey; and it so fell out, that on a day when many good people were gone to a Wood, to hear the Word of God Preached to them by a Minister of Jesus Christ, their Adversaries having intelligence of it, followed them thither, and took about thirty of them, amongst whom were these two Men, who fell to singing of Psalms, supposing, that they should be presently burned; but afterwards they were condemned to be beheaded; and so they comfortably ended their lives.

Also one Godfrid, being condemned at Darnick for an Heretick. Nay, said he, not an Heretick, but an unprofitable Servant of Jesus Christ. When the Hangman would have strangled him to ease his pain in burning, he refused, saying, That he would abide the Sentence of Death which was passed upon him.

Besides these, there were both in the Upper and Lower Germany many others secretly made away, some drowned, some buried quick, some murdered in prison, &c. A godly Minister was also poisoned by a Priest at Erford, for Preaching the Truth of Christ; besides many others.

A Minister

in Lisle.

In the City of Lisle, the Gospel was secretly Preached for three years together, sometimes in Houses, then in Woods, Fields, and Caves of the Earth, not without hazard of their dearest lives, if they had been discovered: Yet did not dangers cool the zeal of Gods People; but what was Preached, was accordingly practised amongst them: Works of Mercy and Charity were their exercise, not only towards those of the Honbold of Faith, but towards those which were without also: So as many by means hereof, were drawn and brought to the knowledge of Christ.

Christian charity.

This so enraged Satan and his instruments, that June 1556, the time being come, wherein God had given them power to try and exercise the Faith of his People, they neglected not to shew their cruelty upon them; and for that end, one night about ten of the clock, the Provost of the City, with his armed Sergeants, made search to see if they could find any met together: But, by Gods Providence, there was no meeting of Gods People at that time. Then went they to the House of one Robert Ogure, which was a little Church; for all in it, both small and great, were familiarly instructed in the knowledge and fear of God.

Robert Ogure
and his family

Being violently entred into the House, seeking up and down for their prey, they found certain Books which they took away with them: But Baudicon, the Son of Robert, whom they principally sought after, was not then at home, being gone abroad to confer of the Word with some of the Brethren. Before the Provost was departed, Baudicon came home, and knocked at the door. Martin, his younger Brother, who watched for his coming, had him presently to be gone. But he thinking that he had mistaken him for some other, continued knocking, saying, It is I, open the door. Then came the Sergeants and opened the door, and laying hold on him, said, Ah Sir, you are well met; and with that, the Provost arrested him in the Emperors name, withal, causing the Father, Mother, and two Sons to be bound, and so carried them away towards the Prison. As they went through the Streets, Baudicon said aloud. O Lord, assist us by thy Grace, not only to be Prisoners for thy Names sake, but to confess thy holy Truth in all purity before Men, so far as to seal the same with our Blood, for the edification of thy poor Church. They were all cast into several Prisons, yet remained cheerful, praising God for accounting them worthy to suffer for his Truth: And after a few days they were all brought forth before the Magistrates, who speaking to Robert Ogure, said, we hear that you never come to Mass; that you dissuade others from it; that you keep Conventicles in your House, where Erroneous Doctrine is Preached, &c. Robert answered, I indeed refuse to go to Mass, because the death and precious Blood of Christ is utterly abolished there, and trodden under foot, &c. And I cannot deny but there have met together in my House honest people fearing God: Not with intention to harm any, I assure you, but for the advancement of Gods glory, and the good of many, &c. Then one demanded what they did when they met together; to which Baudicon answered, When we meet together in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ to hear the word of God, we first, falling on our knees before God, in the humility of our Spirits, do make confession of our sins before his Divine Majesty. Then we pray, that the word of God may be rightly divided, and purely Preached. Then we pray for our Sovereign Lord the Emperor, that the Commonwealth may be peaceably governed to the glory of God; yea, we forget not you whom we acknowledge our Superiours, intreating our good God, that you may maintain this City in tranquillity, &c.

Thus you hear what we do in our Assemblies; and if you will not be offended to hear the sum of our Prayers, I am ready to recite the same unto you. One of the Magistrates wished him to go on, whereupon, kneeling down, he prayed before them all with such fervency of Affection, and ardency of Zeal, that it forced the Magistrates to break forth into tears. Baudizon rising up, said, Your Masterships may hereby take a scantling, how we are employed in our Meetings.

They are tortured.

Being further examined, every one of them made an open Confession of his Faith, and so were returned to Prison again: And not long after they were tortured upon the Rack, to make them confess who they were that met at their House; but they would discover none, but such as they knew were at that time out of their reach.

Robert and Baudizon condemned.

Four or five days after, the Men were again convented before the Magistrates, who asked them, If they would submit themselves to the will of the Magistrates. Robert and Baudizon said, They would; but Martin, the younger Son, said, He would not submit thereto, but would accompany his Mother; and so he was sent back to Prison, and the Father, with his eldest Son, were presently adjudged to be burnt alive. Sentence being pronounced, one of the Judges said, This day shall you go to dwell with all the Devils in Hell fire. Then were they returned to Prison, praising God, and by their patience and constancy, conquered the rage and fury of their Enemies. In Prison there came some Fryers to them, telling them, That the hour was come wherein they must finish their days. They answered, Blessed be the Lord our God, who now delivering our Bodies out of this vile Prison, will receive our Souls into his glorious and heavenly Kingdom. Then said one of the Fryers, Father Robert, thou art an old Man, I intreat thee in this thy last hour think of saving thy Soul; and if thou wilt give ear to me, I will warrant thee thou shalt do well. Robert answered, Poor man, how dardest thou assume that to thyself, which belongs to God alone, and so rob him of his honor? &c. Another wishing him to pity his Soul, he said, Dost thou not see what pity I have on it; when for the Name of Christ I am willing to give my Body to the fire, hoping to day to be with him in Paradise, &c. Then said a Fryer, Out Dog, thou art not worthy the name of a Christian; thou, and thy son, are resolved to damn your Souls with all the Devils in Hell.

Popish malice.

Note.

Then would they have severed the Father from his Son, which Baudizon perceiving, said, Pray you let my Father alone, he is an old Man, hinder him not from receiving the Crown of Martyrdom. Another Fryer said, Away Varlet, thou art the cause of thy Fathers perdition. Whilest Baudizon was stripping and fitting himself to be Sacrificed, some of the Fryers had fastned a Crucifix in the old Mans hands, perswading him, That it would please the People, and that for all that, he might lift up his heart to God, &c. But so soon as Baudizon saw it, he said, Alas Father, what do you now? will you play the Idolater at your last hour? And so pulling the Idol out of his hand, he threw it away.

Zeal.

At the place of execution they were set upon a Scaffold, and Baudizon desired leave to make a Confession of his Faith: Answer was made, That he might confess himself to a Fryer if he would, which he refusing, was readily haled to the Stake, where he began to sing the sixteenth Psalm, Then said a Fryer, Do you not hear what wicked Errors these Hereticks sing, to beguile the people withal? Baudizon hearing him, replied, Thou simple Idiot, callest thou the Psalms of David, Errors? But no marvel, for thus are ye wont to blaspheme against the Spirit of God. Then seeing them about to chain his Father to the Stake, he said to him, Be of good courage, Father, the worst will be past by and by. Then did he often breathe forth: O God, Father everlasting, accept the Sacrifice of our Bodies for thy beloved Son Jesus Christ his sake. A Fryer cried, Our Heretick, thou liest, God is none of thy Father, the Devil is thy Father. Baudizon fixing his eyes upon Heaven, said to his Father, Behold, I see the Heavens open, and millions of Angels ready to receive us; and rejoicing to see us thus bearing witness to the the Truth in the view of the world. Father, let us rejoyce and be glad, for the joys of Heaven are opened to us. Then said a Fryer, I see Hell open, and millions of Devils are ready to carry you thither. A poor Man in the croud, cried out, Be of good comfort Baudizon, stand to it, thou fightest in a good quarrel, I am on thy side. Which words so soon as he had spoken, he departed, and so hastned himself from danger.

The fire being kindled, Baudizon oft said to his Father, Yet a very little while, and we shall enter into the heavenly Mansions. The fire increasing, the last words which they spake, were, Jesus Christ, thou Son of God, into thy hands we commend our Spirits; and so they sweetly slept in the Lord.

After the death of these worthy Champions of Christ, many of the Popish rabble were sent, if possible; to seduce the Mother and Son, remaining in Prison; and coming to them, the first subtilty they used was to separate them a-funder; then they set upon the Woman; as the weaker vessel, and so wrought upon her, that she began to waver, and let go her first Faith. This the Adversaries much rejoyced in; and the poor Flock of Christ, in that place, hearing of it, were as much afflicted with the news: But God left them not in this mournful condition long; for a Monk one day going to her, perswaded her to draw her Son Martin to the same recantation with her self, which she promised so to do. But when they came together, Martin perceiving the grievous Apostacy of his Mother, bewailed it with many tears, saying to her, O Mother, what have you done? have you denied him that redeemed you? Alas, what injury hath he done you, that you should requite him with so great an injury and dishonor? Now am I plunged into that wo which I most feared: Ah good God, that I should live to see this which pierceth me to the very heart? His Mother hearing his pitiful complaints, and seeing him drowned in tears for her sake, began again to renew her strength in the Lord, and with tears cried out, O Father of Mercies, be merciful to me miserable sinner, and cover my transgressions under the Righteousness of thy Blessed Son: Lord inable me with strength from above, to stand to my first Confession, and make me to abide steadfast therein even to my last breath. Presently in came the Seducers, hoping to find her in the same mind that they left her; but she no sooner saw them, but cried, Avoid Satan, get thee behind me; for henceforth thou hast neither part nor portion in me, I will, by the help of God, stand to my first Confession; and if I may not sign it with Ink, I will seal it with my Blood. And so after this time, through Gods gracious assistance, she grew stronger and stronger. Then were they both condemned to be burnt alive, and their Ashes to be sprinkled in the Air. When the Sentence was passed, as they returned to Prison, they said. Now blessed be God who causeth us thus to triumph over our Enemies: This is the wished hour, our gladsome day is come; let us not therefore forget to be thankful for that honor that God doth us, in thus conforming us to the Image of his Son. Let us remember those that have trodden this path before us; for this is the Highway to the Kingdom of Heaven, &c. Hereupon some of the Fryers, being ready to burst for anger, said unto Martin that was most valiant, we see now, Heretick, that thou art wholly possessed Body and Soul with a Devil, as were thy Father and Brother, who are now in Hell. Martin answered, As for your railings and curtings, God will this day turn them into Blessings, in the sight of himself, and all his holy Angels.

When they came into Prison, there came to them two persons of great quality, of whom, one of them said to Martin, Young Man, I have compassion on thee, if thou wilt be ruled by me, and return to the Church of Rome, thou shalt not only be freed from this shameful death, but I will also give thee an hundred pounds. Martin presently replied, Sir, you present before me many Temporal Commodities: But alas! Do you think me so simple, as to forsake an Eternal Kingdom, for the enjoyment of a short Temporal Life? No Sir, it is now too late to speak to me of worldly Commodities: I will hearken to no other speech, but of those Spiritual Commodities which I shall enjoy this day in Gods Kingdom, &c. Soon after, Martin and his

A Fryer at Gaunt, called Charles Coninck, being through Gods mercy converted to the Truth, left his Fryers weed, and joyned himself to the Brethren: For which he was apprehended, and remaining constant, was condemned. Then came a special Friend perswading him to recant, and he would procure him a Canonship; To whom Charles answered, Sir, I thank you for your good will and kind offer, but I cannot accept them without offending God; and that rest is no true rest and quietness, which is obtained against the Peace of a good Conscience. Shortly after his death, one of his Adversaries which had the greatest hand in procuring of it, fell into grievous terror and horror of Conscience, whereof within a few days he died.

The Persecution by the Duke de Alva in the Netherlands.

When the Light of the Gospel was much spread abroad in the Netherlands, King Philip of Spain, sent the Duke de Alva with a great Army to root out the Professors of it, who exercised unparell'd cruelty against all sorts of persons, both of the Nobility and Commons, permitting his Soldiers to ravish honest Matrons and Virgins, many times causing their Husbands and Parents to stand by and behold it.

This Duke on a time boasted at his own Table, that he had been diligent to root out Heresie: For that, beside those which he had slain in War, in the space of six years he had put into the hands of the Common Hangman above Eighteen thousand persons.

His Son also Don Frederick being sent by him to Zurphen, was received by the Burghers, without any opposition; yet was he no sooner entred, but he fell to murther, hang and drown a number of the Inhabitants, with infinite cruelties shewed upon Wives and Virgins; yea, not sparing the very Infants. From thence marching to Naerden in Holland, the Inhabitants made an agreement with him, and he entred the Town peaceably. But never did Turks or Scythians, or the most Barbarous and Inhumane Nations in the World, commit more abominable cruelties than Don Frederick did in this Town: For when the Burghers had given the best entertainment that they could to him and his Soldiers, he caused it to be proclaimed, That they should all assemble themselves together in the Chappel of the Hospital, where they should be made acquainted with such Laws, according to which they should hereafter govern themselves. But when these poor people were thus assembled, he commanded his Soldiers to murther them all, without sparing any one: The Men were massacred; the Women were first ravished, and then murdered most cruelly; the Children and Infants had their throats cut; and in some Houses they tied the Inhabitants to Posts, and then set fire on the Houses, and burnt them alive. So that in the whole Town, neither Man, Wife, Maid, nor Child, old nor young were spared; and then the Town was wholly razed to the ground, without Pity or Mercy.

After this Don Frederick besieged Harlem, which held out against him for a long time, but at last, their Provision being spent, they made Bread of Linseed and of Turnups, and lived upon the flesh of Horses, Dogs, and Cats, and such like.
And

and this also in the end failing them, they were enforced to surrender the Town upon composition, by which they were to pay Two hundred and forty thousand Florins to redeem themselves and Town from spoil.

The Town

Don Frederick having thus got the Town into his hands, commanded that at the tolling of the great Bell, all the Bourgers and Soldiers should bring their Arms into the State-house; That the Townsmen should go into the Cloister of Zyel, the Women into the Cathedral Church, and the Soldiers into another Church, this donè, all the Ensign-bearers were singled out and imprisoned, and whilst the poor Bourgers were guarded in the Church, the perfidious Spaniards plundered their Houses. The next day this bloody Don Frederick caused Three hundred walloons to be hanged and beheaded. The next day Captain Riperda and his Lieutenant were beheaded, and a godly Minister called Stembach, was hanged, and Two hundred forty seven Soldiers were drowned in the Sea of Harlem. The next day a great number were executed, and the day following Three hundred more Soldiers and Bourgers lost their Heads; and with them a godly Minister called Simon Simonson. Presently after three of the principal Men lost their Heads, and shortly after all the English and Scots were beheaded, and to fill up this Sea of Blood, all the wounded and sick were beheaded before the Hospital Door.

But Noircarmes being entred, he kept the City Gates shut for divers days, and most perfidiously and barbarously hanged up all the French Soldiers, with all the Ministers and Protestant Merchants, and confiscated their goods. Anno 1560. There was in Flanders one John Herwin, a Soldier of a very dissolute life: But God having a purpose to shew him mercy, put it into his heart to go into England; and accordingly he came to London in the beginning of Queen Elizabeths Reign, and by Gods good Providence was entertained in a Brewers Family, where both Master and Servants feared God: His Master caused him often to go to the Dutch Church, where, by the Ministry of the Word, he first began to tast, and afterwards more and more to increasè in the saving knowledg of Christ. After a while he returned back into Flanders, and at Furne he was presently laid wait for by the Popish Bailiff: This occasioned his removal to Honfcor; and yet there also, the Bailiff being informed of him, went in the night with his Sergeants, and apprehended him: By the way they met some drunkards in the streets; whereupon the Bailiff said, we have, as they say, many Gospellers in this Town, but it little appears by these disorders. Herwin hearing him, said, Is drunkenness a sin, Master Bailiff? The Bailiff answered, what of that? Herwin replied, why then do ye not commit these Men to Prison, seeing it is your office to punish vice, and to protect them that fear God? To this the Bailiff answered not.

In the Prison Herwin behaved himself so vertuously, that every one admired him. Being somewhat long before he was called before the Magistrate, he was much troubled at it, his heart being inflamed with an holy zeal to confess Jesus Christ before his Judges. Yet many of the Brethren were very fearful of him, considering what his former life had been, and what a novice he as yet was in the Profession of the Gospel.

Being asked of Christs real presence in the Sacrament, he answered, That the Highest dwelleth not in Temples made with hands, &c. Whereupon he admonished his Judges to examine the Doctrine of the Church of Rome by the true touchstone of Gods Word, whereby they might easily see how contrary it is to the Scriptures, &c. And having made a free Profession of his Faith, he craved Justice one way or other; but they still urged him to recant, to which he answered, My Faith is not built upon Mans opinion, but the Lord hath taught me to eschew evil, and to do good. Then was he returned to Prison again.

During his imprisonment he was dangerously assaulted by some subtile and cunning Fryers, who alledged the saying of divers of the Fathers to prove their Transubstantiation: But he, through Gods mercy, holding close to the Word of Christ, overcome them. In Prison he used to recreate himself by singing of Psalms, and the People used to flock together to the Prison Door to hear him: This so angered the Popish Clergy, that they sought to hinder him from singing, and for this end they caused two desperate Malefactors to be put into the same Room with him: But within a few days, these Villains brake Prison and escaped, leaving opportunity to Herwin to escape also; But he, fearing that his flight might be prejudicial to other godly Persons in the City, upon whom it would be charged, resolved rather to remain there, than to flee. Presently after news was brought him that sentence of death was passed upon him, whereupon he thanked God for advancing him to so high an honor as to be accounted worthy to suffer for his name: Testifying the inward joy which he felt in his soul by a Letter that he wrote to the Brethren, wherein he exhorted them to constancy and perseverance in the Doctrine of the truth which they had received from God: Within a few days after he was carried forth to hear his sentence, at which time the Magistrate by earnest intreaties and large promises sought to bring him to a recantation, and to worship their Breaden God, promising that thereupon he should be presently released: But Herwin refusing their offer of life upon those terms, was bound and carried into a Chappel where they celebrated the Mass, at which time, to shew his detestation of their Idolatry, he turned his back, winked with his eyes, and stopped his eares. At the Elevation of the Host, one asked him, if Jesus Christ was not now between the Priests hands? To which he answered, No, he is in heaven at the right hand of his Father. Then was the sentence of death read against him.

As he was going to execution, he said to the People, See here how this wicked world rewards the poor Servants of Jesus Christ; whilst I was a Drunkard, a Player at Cards and Dice, living in all dissoluteness and ungodly behavior, I was never in danger of these bonds; yea, I was then counted a good Fellow, and at that time, who but I? But no sooner began I, through Gods grace, to seek after a godly life, but presently the world made war upon me, and became mine enemy, &c. yet this discourageth me not; For the Servant is not better than his Lord; seeing they persecuted him, no question but they will persecute us. At the place of execution, one gave him his Hand, and comforted him: Then began he to sing the Thirtieth Psalm, whereupon a Fryer interrupted him, saying, Oh John turn, there is yet time and space; The Martyr disregarding his words, turned his back upon him; and some of the company said to the Fryer, Turn thou, thou Hypocrite; and so Herwin quietly finished his Psalm, many joyning with him in singing of it; Then said the Fryer, Be not offended good People to hear this Heretick sing of God; The People answered, Hold thy peace thou Balaamite, here is no body offended. There were present at least Four hundred that encouraged the Martyr to continue to the end, as he had well begun; To whom he answered, Brethren, I fight under the Standard, and in the quarrel of my great Lord and Captain Jesus Christ. Then he prayed, and so went into his Cabin made with fagots, saying to the People, I am now going to be sacrificed; Follow you me when God of his goodness shall call you to it: and so he was first strangled, and then burnt to ashes.

Anno 1561. There was apprehended in Antwerp one John de Boscane, who for his constancy in Religion was condemned to death: But the Magistrate fearing an uproar if he should put him to death publicly, knowing that he was a Man free of Speech, and beloved of the People, he resolved for this cause secretly to drown him in the Prison; and for this end a Tub with Water was provided, and an Executioner sent to drown him: But the Water was so shallow, and the Martyr so tall, that he could not possibly be drowned therein; whereupon the Executioner gave him many wounds and stabs with a Dagger, and so this holy Martyr ended his life.

About the same time another Servant of Jesus Christ, having made a bold Profession of his Faith, was in the same City sentenced to death; and because they durst not execute him publicly, they privately sent and beheaded him in Prison. His name was John de Buisson.

John de Buisson beheaded in Prison.

The godly in this City of Antwerp, being desirous to take all opportunities to meet together in the fear of God, on a day when the Popish party was met to behold great triumphs, they withdrew themselves out of the City, and went into a Wood, where their Minister preached the Word of God to them: The Drosart of Marksem being advertised hereof, took his Officers and went thitherward; By the way he met with some poor Boys that were Cowherds, to whom he promised new Cloaths if they would bring him to the place in the Wood where their Assembly was; which they undertaking, he sent some of his Officers along with them into the Wood, who coming to the place like Wolves, the Sheep of Christ began to flie. The Minister seeing their fear, admonished them not to stir: The Persecutors were not above Five or Six, and the persecuted Four or Five hundred, so that they might easily have resisted them, but they would not. The Officers chiefly aimed to apprehend the Minister, and having caught one of the Assembly, they thought him to be the Man, crying one to another, Hold the Priest fast, striking him with their Pistols and Staves, and so carried him to the Drosart: They caught also two or three more, which afterwards made an escape. The Man only that remained with the Drosart whose name was Bartholomew, was often set upon to be turned aside from his holy Profession; why, say they, cannot such a young Man as thou art content thy self with our Religion and glorious Church, adorned with gold, silver, precious stones, in which there is such melodious Musick, both of voices and instruments, but thou must needs joyn thy self to that Church that is hated, despised, and exposed to all manner of contempt? Bartholomew overcame all these temptations by the power of the Almighty, saying, That which is greatly esteemed amongst men, is altogether abominable in the sight of God; Then was he condemned and beheaded; by which death he glorified God.

Anno 1568. There were apprehended in Antwerp, one Scoblant, John de Hues, and Joris Coomans, who being cast into Prison were very joyful, confessing that nothing befel them but by Gods divine Providence, as they acknowledged in a Letter which they wrote to the Brethren, wherein they thus write, Seeing it is the will of God that we should suffer for his name, and in the quarrel of his Gospel, we certifie you, dear Brethren, that we are joyful; and however the flesh continually rebels against the spirit, counselling ever and anon according to the advice of the old Serpent: yet we are all assured that Christ, who hath bruised, will still bruise the Serpents head, and not leave us comfortless; we are indeed sometimes pricked in the heel, yet we are not discouraged, but keep our Faith close to the promises of God, &c. When he was brought before the Judges, and examined of his Faith, he answered freely, and proved what he said by the holy Scriptures; and being asked, whether he was resolved to die for the Faith which he professed? He answered, I will not only venture to give my Body, but my Soul also for the confirmation of it; and so being condemned, he was shortly after burned, dying with much comfort.

The Persecution growing hot in Flanders, one Giles Annik, and John his Son removed to Emden: But by reason of their sudden departure they could not take their Wives with them; whereupon in the year 1568. they returned back to fetch their Wives, who were at Renay; yet in regard of the danger, they durst not go into the Town openly, but took up their lodging in the evening, at an honest Mans house, called Lewis Meulin.

Gauderin.

Now it so fell out that that very night the Enemies had appointed to make a secret search after such as professed the Gospel, and so passing by this House, and seeing the light of a Candle in it, expecting their prey, they forced open the Door, and took these two, together with their Host, Prisoners, God having appointed them to bear witness to his truth: After they had been in Prison a while, they were all three condemned for Hereticks; and presently after Giles the Father, was burned. John the Son, being fetched to execution, when he saw the Man that first apprehended him, he called him to him, saying, I forgive thee my death, and so he, with Lewis Meulin, were both beheaded.

About the same time there was also a godly Widow apprehended and cast into Prison, her crime was, for that about two years before she had suffered a Minister to preach in an out-house on the back side of her dwelling. She was very charitable in relieving the poor, and every way shewed forth the fruits of a true saving Faith. After seven months imprisonment she was condemned to die, and a Priest coming to her, to hear her Confession, she spake to him with such a divine grace, and with a spirit so replenished with zeal, that he went from her with tears trickling down his cheeks, saying, I came to comfort you, but I have more need to be comforted of you; when she was carried forth to execution, she went with much boldness and joy of heart, and having her Head cut off, she sweetly slept in the Lord.

There was also one Christopher Gauderin, that at first was brought up under the Abbat of Hename; But the Abbat dying, he betook himself to the weaving of Linnen, and quickly grew expert in his trade: But having been trained up in a bad School, when the Sabbath came, he spent riotously what he had gotten all the week by his labour: Now, through Gods mercy, it so fell out that a godly Man working with him, would often tell him of the danger of his present condition, exhorting him rather to distribute his gettings to the poor, assuring assuring him that if he spent his money so wastfully, God would call him to an account for it: These with the like exhortations so wrought upon him, through the grace of God, that he began to change his course, and instead of frequenting Taverns, he became a diligent hearer of Sermons, and gave himself much to reading of the holy Scriptures; so that not long after he was called by the Church to the Office of a Deacon, which he discharged carefully and faithfully.

His Conversion.

Shortly after having occasion to go to a place called Audenard, to distribute some Alms to the poor there, he was apprehended; and the Bailiff that had formerly seen him in the Abbats House, asked him how he came to turn Heretick: Nay, said he, I am no Heretick, but a right believing Christian, and what I learned of him, I am now ashamed to remember.

His imprisonment.

In Prison he had many disputes about his Faith, which he so maintained and defended by the Word of God, that he silenced all his Adversaries. Some told him that he would cast away himself in his youth, being but thirty years old, to whom he answered, That Mans life consisted but of two days, viz. The day of his Birth, and the day of his Death, and therefore he must needs die once, And for my part, said he, I am now willing by death to pass into Eternal life.

His conversion.

Mans life but two days.

When news was brought him in the evening that he must die the next day, he retired himself, and poured out his Soul in Prayer unto God till ten a Clock; and after his rest, the like he did the next morning: Having ended his Prayer, he put on a clean shirt and washed himself; saying to his Fellow-Prisoners, Brethren, I am now going to be Married, I hope ere noon to drink of the Wine of the Kingdom of Heaven: When he came down, he found three other Prisoners that were to suffer with him. These four exhorted and encouraged one another to suffer patiently and constantly: Then came a Fryer, saying, That he came to convert them; To whom Christopher said, Away from us thou seducer of Souls, for we have nothing to do with thee: The Hangman coming to put gags in their mouths; One of them said, what? shall we not have liberty at this our last hour to praise God without Tongues? Christopher answered, Let not this discourage us, the more wrong our Enemies do to us, the more assistance we shall find from God; and so ceased not to comfort them, till himself was gagged also. Their Sentence was, That they should be hanged for hearing Sermons; and so with admirable constancy they yielded up their Souls to God: One of them being a Woman was condemned to be beheaded, because she had sung Psalms, and exhorted her neighbors out of the Word of God, at a Womans upfitting: Her Body was grown very feeble, so that she was caused to sit on a stool, where she received three blows with a Sword overthwart her Teeth, yet did she constantly sit till she received the Crown of Martyrdom.

The Popish Clergy of Gand having intelligence hereof, fearing lest by this means, their Doctrine and authority would come into contempt, caused him to be apprehended and cast into a deep and dark hole, where he remained bearing his affliction patiently, and calling upon God night and day, praising him for accounting him worthy to suffer for his Names sake. Whilst he lay there, many good People came to visit him, receiving such instructions and consolations from him, that they could not be drawn to leave him till necessity enforced, neither then could they depart without abundance of tears.

A great Persecution.

The Priests and Fryers sought by all means to draw him to a recantation; but to no purpose, for he still kept himself close to the Word of God, which so vexed them, that at last they procured his condemnation to be hanged. The Spanish Soldiers which carried him to execution, would needs have him burned, binding and straining him exceedingly with cords, and in the way abused him shamefully with mocks and scoffs, thrusting him forwards and striking him: The Captain also gave him a blow on the Face with his Gantlet, which much disfigured him; yea, they used him worse than a Dog, being the more enraged against him, because of his patient and meek carriage: At last they thrust him into a little Cabin piled with Faggots, and so burnt him, continually calling upon God till he resigned up his Spirit to him Anno 1568. There was a Goldsmith dwelling in Breda, who had long been a Deacon of the Church in that place, his name was Peter Coulogue; In his House the Church often met for the service of God: The Popish Adversaries being much enraged hereby, cast him into Prison, which the faithful much grieved at, and endeavored to visit and comfort him. This the Enemies taking notice of, removed him to the Castle; during his abode there, though all others were excluded from him, yet his Maid-Servant brought him his food daily, never ceasing to confirm and comfort him out of the Word of God, as well as she was able, for which at length they imprisoned her also: This she was right glad of, thinking her self happy to suffer for righteousness sake.

Not long after Peter was put to the torment, which he endured patiently; Then did they fetch Betkin the Maid also to it, whereupon she said, My Masters, wherefore will you put me to this torture, seeing I have no way offended you? If it be for my Faiths sake, you need not torment me; for as I was never ashamed to make a Confession thereof, no more will I now be at this present before you, but will, if you please, freely shew you my mind therein; Yet for all this they would have her to the Rack, whereupon she again said, If I must needs suffer this pain, I pray you give me leave to call upon my God first: This they consented to; and whilst she was fervently pouring out her Prayers unto God, one of the Commissioners was surpris'd with such a fear and terror, that he fell into a swoon, and could not be recovered again, by which means the poor Maid escaped Racking.

Shortly after, these two innocent Persons were condemned to be burned, and as they were led to execution, there was much lamentation among the People: Peter and Betkin prayed earnestly unto God to strengthen them, and perfect the good work that he had begun in them, and to assist them till they had finished their course.

The courage and constancy of the Maid did so work upon many of the People, godly Men and Women, that not considering the danger, they brake through the multitude, embracing the Prisoners, and praising God for their constancy, saying to them, Fight manfully for the Crown is prepared for you: At the place of execution Betkin with a chearful and amiable countenance spake thus to the People, Dear Brethren and Sisters, be always obedient to the word of God, and fear not them that can kill the Body, but have no power over the Soul: As for me, I am now going to my glorious Spouse the Lord Jesus Christ; Then falling upon their knees they prayed to the Lord with great devotion; And the Executioner fastening them to the Stake, strangled Peter, Betkin encouraging him till he yielded up the Ghost, and till the fire had taken hold of her self; and in the flames she was heard to magnifie the Lord, till she yielded up her Spirit into his hands.

About this time multitudes of Persons were murdered in Flanders by the Bloody Inquisition, whose dead Bodies were cast out to be gazed upon in every place; and multitudes of Believers, both Men and Women were cast into Prisons, Prisons, where they languished till many of them died. In the City of Valence there were executed Fifty seven Persons, most of them Burgesses, only because they clave to the true Faith of Jesus Christ.

The Martyrdom of William of Nassaw, Prince of Orange.

THE Estates of the United Provinces, having declared the King of Spain to be fallen from the Government of those Countries, they chose William of Nassaw, Prince of Orange, to be their Captain General, whereupon he was proscribed by the King of Spain, and a great sum of money promised to him that should slay him. Not long after a desperate Villain called Joanville was suborned to do the feat; For which end he was directed to charge his Pistol with two Bullets, and to shoot him behind in the Head: The day appointed for this execution was March 18. 1582. upon which day the Prince was to be at a great Feast at the Duke of Anjou Court; But the press being great there, Joanville chose rather to do it at the Prince of Oranges own House as he was at Dinner. The Villain being thus desperately resolved, a Jacobin Fryer came to confess him, fortifying him in his resolution with many sweet words, perswading him that he should go invisible, for which end he gave him some Characters in Paper, and little Frogs Bones, and other Conjurations.

Popish subtilty.

Being thus assured, he drunk a Cup or two of Malmsey, and so accompanied with his Ghostly Father, he went to the Princes Court: At the Stair-foot the Fryer gave him his blessing, encouraged him, and so left him. The Prince of Orange was set at Dinner, with the Earls of Laval, Hohenlo, and many other Noblemen; Joanville came into the Dining-room, attired like a Frenchman, so that he was taken for a Servant to some of those French Noblemen: He thrust forward twice or thrice to come behind the Prince to shoot him in the Head, as he was directed, but was still repulsed by the Princes Gentlemen that stood about him; Dinner being done, the Prince was going to his retiring Chamber, whereupon this Villain gat before a Window in the Hall, close by the Door of that Room into which the Prince was to go. As the Prince passed towards it, he was shewing the Earl of Laval the cruelties that the Spaniards had exercised in the Low-Countries, which were wrought in the Hangings; and having his Face turned, this Murderer discharged his Pistol at him; But the Prince, as God would have it, turning at the same instant, the Bullet entred in at his Throat under the right Chap, being so near that the fire entred with the Bullet into the wound, burning his Ruffe and Beard; It brake out one of his Teeth, pierced the jugular Vein, but hurt not his Tongue, and so came out at his left Cheek hard by his Nose: The blow being given, one with an Halberd could not contain himself, but thrust the Villain through, and slew him.

A special Providence.

The Chirurgions being sent for, found that the fire which entred the wound, had cauterized the jugular Vein, and had done him much good so that the wound was not mortal. The Fryer was afterwards apprehended and executed.

Anno 1584. The Spaniards thinking they had no greater Enemy in the World than the Prince of Orange, and that if he were dead they should quickly attain their desires in the Netherlands; they suborned one Baltazar Gerard, an high Burguignon, to murder him, who bought a good pair of Pistols, and on the Tenth of July watched when the Prince should go down into the Hall to Dinner at Delph in Holland, and as he passed by, he demanded a Passport of him: The Princes observed that he spake with an hollow and unfetled unsettled voice, she asked her Husband, who he was: saying, That she did not like his countenance; The Prince answered, That he demanded a Passport, which he should presently have: After Dinner the Prince going out of the Hall, the Murtherer stood behind a Pillar in the Gallery, and as the Prince passed by, suddenly shot him from the left side to the right, through the stomach and the vital parts, who said no more, but O my God, take pity of my Soul, I am sore wounded; my God, take pity of my Soul and of this poor People; and presently after he gave up the Ghost.

CHAP. XXXII.

The Modern Persecutions of the Church in Germany, since the year 1630.

Abominable
villanies.

THe Swedes being possessed of a Town called Pasewalk, the Imperialists took it by storm, beat, killed, and drove out the Swedes, and not content therewith, they fell to torturing of the Townsmen, ravishing Women and Girls in the open Streets and Church-yards, yea Women in Child-bed; Then they killed the Men, fired their Houses, and burnt many in them; Thrust straw into Cellars where Children were hidden, and so burnt and smothered them; Then they burnt the Churches, and massacred the Ministers, and at last burnt down the whole Town.

Magdenburg
burnt.

The like cruelty was used against the City of Magdenburg, famous for Religion, which being taken by Tilly and Pappenheim, Anno 1631, was in twelve hours space wholly turned into cinders, except One hundred thirty nine Houses, by which fire six goodly Churches were burnt down; no mercy shewed to any age, sex, or condition: Above Twenty thousand Persons were slain, burnt, and smothered to death; Six thousand were drowned in the River Elbe; Ladies and Gentlewomen, like Beasts were yoked together all about the Country, and driven into Woods to be ravished; and such as resisted were stript stark naked, whipt, had their ears cropt, and so were turned up.

Cruelties used
there.

Anno 1634. The Popish Army having taken the Town of Hoxter, they spared neither Man, Woman nor Child, most inhumanely butchering and hewing in pieces all, without respect of age, sex, or condition; and what the Sword could not spoil, they caused the fire to consume, and the dead corpses they cast into the Weser.

Cruelties at Hoxter.

Griphenburg.

At Griphenburg they kept the Senators shut up in a Chamber, massacrating and tormenting them so long with hunger and smock, that divers of them died.

Heidleberg.

In Heidleberg they shut up divers Reverend Ministers and Bourgers in Prison, allowing them nothing to eat but Bread and Water.

Frankendal.

Frankendal being surrendered upon Articles, contrary to Covenants, the grave Counsellors and other Electoral Ministers, were forced to endure such conditions, as were fitter for Dogs than Men: Some were cast into Prison, and so abused that they died there; others were forced to redeem themselves with unreasonable ransoms; The goods of such as were fled were confiscated; and though the Inhabitants were willing to have, left their Houses, and all their Goods, yet were they detained in the City, and their destruction most cruelly plotted.

Their rage was so great against the Professors of the Gospel, that neither Turks nor Heathens did ever exceed them. Princes sacred Persons were not exempted exempted from their fury, the old Landgrave of Hessen, and the old Dutchess Dowager of Wirttenburgh were taken prisoners, reviled, and abused. In Saxony, Tillies Soldiers tortured the Protestants by half strangling them, and pressing their Thumbs with Wheels. In Pomeran they forced the People to eat their own Excrements; and if they refused, they thrust them down their Throats, whereby some of them were choaked. If they suspected that any had hidden their Gold or Silver, they used exquisite torments to make them to confess it: They wound and tied about the Heads of some, strong Matches or Cords, and with short Truncheons twisted them, till Blood came out of their Eyes, Ears, and Noses, yea, sometimes till their Eyes started out of their Heads: To others they tied burning Matches between their Fingers, yea, to their Eyes, Ears, Noses, Tongues, Cheeks, Breasts, Legs, and Secret Parts; yea, such Parts that Nature hideth, they either stuffed with Gun-powder, or hung Bags of Powder to them; and so giving fire to it, in an horrible manner they burst their Bellies, and killed them. With Bodkins they made holes, or with Knives they cut the Skin and Flesh of many. They drew Strings and Cords through the fleshy parts of some, and through the Muscles of their Thighs, Legs, Arms, &c. or through their Noses, Ears, Lips, &c. Some they hung up in the smoak, drying them with small fires, and sometimes refreshing them with small Drink, or Water, taking care, lest in their torments they should die too soon. Some they put into hot Ovens, roasting or smothering them there: Some they roasted with fires of straw: Some they stifled, strangled, or hanged; and this was a great favor, so soon to rid them out of their pain. Of many they bound their Hands and Feet so hard, that the Blood spirted out of their Fingers and Toes end: Of some they tied their Hands and Feet backwards together, stopping their Mouths with Clouts, to hinder them from praying. Some they hung up with Ropes fastned to their Privy parts, and hearing their cries, strove by their roaring to drown their cries, as in sport.

Where they found poor Creatures troubled with Ruptures, they enlarged them by villanous means, filling them with Gun-powder, and blowing them up, as a Mine, by giving fire thereto. Many they drew up on high, hanging great Weights at their Feet to pull their Bodies out of joynt: Of some they Plained their Faces with Chisels: Some Men they openly gelded in the presence of their Wives and Children. The Mouths of some they let wide open with Gags, and then poured down their Throats stinking Water, Urine, and other liquid things, till they grew sick, and their Bellies swelled like Tuns, whereby they died less surely with greater torment.

Down the Throats of some they violently thrust knotted Clouts, and then with a string pulled them up again, whereby they displaced their Bowels, and put them to miserable torment, insomuch, as some were made dumb, others deaf, others blind, and others lame.

If the Husband intreated for his Wife, or the Wife for the Husband, they would take the Intercessor and torture him in the same manner, before the others eyes; and when any of these poor Creatures, in their torments or agonies of death, called and cried unto God for Mercy, they would command, and seek to force them to pray and cry unto the Devil. Yea, their Devilishness proceeded so far, that they studied to find out new and unheard of torments. Some they bound, hung up, and sawed off their Legs; of others, they rubbed off the Flesh off their Legs to the very Bones, of others, they tied the Arms backwards, and hanged them up by those distorted parts. Many they drew through the Streets of the Cities stark naked, then brake and wounded them with Axes and Hammers, and generally used them with such Barbarous cruelty, that many begged to be shot or slain instantly, rather than to live and be partakers of such miseries. In most places they took away all the Corn and Provision of Victuals, leaving the places so bare, that many of the best rank, for the space of divers days after, saw not one bit of Bread, but were glad to live with Roots and Water. In other places they spoiled the Inhabitants of their Garments, exposing them to that nakedness, that neither Man, Woman, nor Child, had cloaths to put on. Hereby fruitful Countreys were totally ruined: Cities, Towns, and Villages, were spoiled and turned into Pillars of Fire and Smoak: Churches lay delolate, the Woods were cut down, the Ground lay waste and untilled.

killed with a Cat.

One Reverend Aged Divine they stripped, bound him backwards upon a Table, and set a big Cat upon his naked Belly, beating and pricking the Cat to make her fix her Teeth and Claws therein. So that both Man and Cat, with hunger, pain, and anguish, breathed their last.

The Crabats labored much to teach their Horses, not only to kill Men, but to eat humane Flesh; and consulted how to find out more new and exquisite torments, than ever were before used.

Magdenburg.

At the taking of Magdenburg, a godly Minister of great esteem, was found in one of the Churches, whom they dragged out to his own House, where they ravished his Wife and Daughters before his face; his tender Infant they snatched from the Mothers Breast, and stuck it upon the top of a Lance: And when his Eyes and Heart were glutted with this so cruel a spectacle, they brought him forth bound into the Street, and there burned him with his own Books.

Rapes and Ravishings.

Rapes and Ravishings were committed beyond all humane modesty: Maids and Matrons, Wives and Widows, they forced and violated without distinction, yea, and that in the presence of their Parents, Husbands, and Neighbors; yea, Women great with Child, and others in Child-Bed. Their beastliness was such that no Pen can write it, no Faith can believe it. Chappels and Churches were not freed from their filthy pollutions; yea, Hospitals and Bedlam-houses were not spared.

In Hessen Land they took divers poor Women, some mad, some dumb, some lame, and tying up their Coats about their Ears, so used them as a modest Pen cannot express.

In Pomeran, they took the fairest Maids and ravished them before their Parents faces, making them sing Psalms the while. One beautiful Maid being hid by her Parents in a Dunghil, they found her out, had their pleasure of her, then cut her in pieces, and hung up her quarters in the Church. Yea, very Girls of ten years old and under, they ravished till some of them died: Virtuous and chaste Women, they would threaten to kill, to throw their Children into the fire, if they would not yield to their Lusts. Divers Maids and Women to avoid the Lusts of these Hell-born Furies, have leaped into Rivers and Wells, and some have otherwise killed themselves; and that which was never before heard of. They did not only violate sickly and weak Maids and Women till they died, but committed the like filthiness with the dead corps.

Basil Merchants murthered.

The Merchants of Basil returning from Straasburgh Mart, were set upon by the Imperialists in their Lodging, and though they craved their lives upon their knees, yet they killed ten of them, saying, They must die, for that they were Hereticks; the rest leaving their Goods and Garments, escaped by flight stark naked in the night.

Two Noble Countesses, with their fair Daughters, were rifled in their Coaches of all that they had, nor sparing the very Garments that covered them.

A Minister
murdered.

Near Friburgh, these Bloody miscreants cut in pieces a Reverend Minister, a Man of rare Learning and Piety; after whose death, the Dogs would not lick his Blood, nor touch his Flesh. For the common people, they made not so much account of them as of Dogs, murdering them upon every trifling occasion, neither pitying old nor young, Men, Women, nor innocent Babes, whom sometimes most barbarously they used to eat, even when other meat might be had; yea, such inhumane cruelty they used, that in some places they scarce left any remaining alive to relate the sufferings of the dead. Many times they cut off the Noses and Ears of the living, carrying them about in bravery.

Collected out of a Book composed by Dr. Vincent, a Divine who was an eye-witness of many of these things.

BEfore this great Persecution befel the Church of God in Germany, God gave his People warning of it by many and strange Prodigies. For Octob. 26. Anno Christi 1618. there appeared a terrible Comet with a great Blazing Tail, at first of a Red, afterwards of a Pale-red colour, which continued for the space of Twenty seven days, and in some places it was seen longer. This fearful and ominous Link or Torch, the Lord sent to those who had long despised and slighted his Voice in his sacred Word, Preached by his vigilant and faithful Ministers, to awaken them from their dead sleep of sin; and by Repentance to bring them to the Reformation of their lives; or otherwise to assure them, that he would come suddenly upon them, and plague them with all those evils and miseries which he had denounced against them by his Messengers, and whereof he gave them warning by this dreadful sign.

Anno 1619. At Groningen, in the Dukedom of Brunswick, was seen a great Blazing-Star, and two Armies, one in the East, and another in the North, fighting together, till one of them was defeated and slain.

At Wien in Austria, the Water in a Ditch was seen to be like Blood for the space of eight days; and shortly after three Suns appeared in the Heavens. In the beginning of April, Anno 1619. And Anno 1621. in March, in the same Countrey of Austria, were two Armies seen in the Heavens by clear Day-light, fighting furiously together with great thundering of Ordnance and Cannons.

In the same Countrey, Anno 1623. in the Moneth of January, just over the City of Lintz, two Swords were seen one over against the other, and two great Armies fighting a pitched Battle together, which caused great terror to the Beholders.

At Heidelbergh in February, Anno 1622. were seen three Suns, and three Rainbows. Shortly after which, that City was besieged by the Imperialists, and at last taken, where a great slaughter was made of the Inhabitants, and in Neck-ergemund three miles off, all the Inhabitants, Men, Women, and Children, were put to the Sword.

In April, Anno 1622. In the Countrey of Darmstadt, were Trees, whose Leaves dropped Blood: And the year after, in the same Countrey, in divers Towns and Villages, were seen Bloody signs on Houses and Stone Walls. About Meyenfeld and Malants, as Men were Reaping their Corn, their Hands and Sickles were all Bloody.

In July, Anno 1621. In the Dukedom of Wittenburgh, it Rained so much Blood, that it fell upon the Hands and Cloaths of People in the Fields, and was seen upon Trees, Stones, and other places.

May the Twelfth, Anno 1624. in the Dukedom of Anhalt, there appeared a strange Prodigy in the Heavens, which continued from Six till eight a clock at Night. First, there came out of the Clouds an Ensign-Bearer; after him came forth a grave Man in the same habit: Then came forth a Chariot drawn with two particoloured Horses; then another Chariot with four Armed Horses; then suddenly there brake out of the Clouds an infinite number of People, like a swarm of Bees: After them followed a Man sitting on Horseback with a long Robe, putting the People before him. A quarter of an hour after came forth another Army consisting of many Horse and Foot, &c. The two Armies fought till one of them was routed, and presently after all, vanished away.

Anno 1624. In May a strange Tempest hapned at Ratisbone, the Weather being very calm, with little Rain, two dark Clouds met together, which suddenly belched out a great Wind mingled with Fire, which raised such a Tempest, that near to the City, it tore up Trees by the Roots, and in a moment drave them into divers places; and thence extending it self to the City, it overturned above Two hundred Houses in the Town and Suburbs, not leaving a Chimney standing, nor a Roof to cover an House. The Church of Emerans, besides the shattered Windows, had one of the Steeples laid flat to the Ground, and the other broke off in the middle: Two other of the chiefest Steeples in the City were also broken down. This Tempest lasted not above a quarter of an hour, nor extended beyond the City, neither were there above four Men slain by it.

A Fight of Jackdaws.

Anno 1625. near Troppasb, a great multitude of Jackdaws met in the Air, where they fought a great Battle, and that with so great eagerness, that many of them fell down dead; so that the Countrey men gathered up whole Sackfuls of them.

Two Armies.

Anno 1628. in Pomerland, the Heavens seemed to open, and an Army came forth of the Northern part, the Avantguard consisting of Pioneers and Muskettiers; then followed great Pieces of Ordnance, and in the Rear came the Cavalry: Another Army came forth on the other side, and betwixt them there became a cruel Battle; the Victory inclining to the Northern Army: And at last a fiery Beam followed upon the Northern Conqueror, which continued for the space of some hours.

Water turned into Blood.

Anno 1631. at Hall in Saxony, the Water was turned into Blood, to the great astonishment of the Inhabitants.

A monstrous Child.

During the Siege of Magdenburg, a Captains Wife being in Travail, when she could not be delivered, and was near Death, she desired, That when she was dead, her Body might be opened; which being done, there was found in her Womb, a Boy almost as big as one of three years old, with an Head-piece and Breast-plate upon him, great Boots after the French Fashion, and a Bag by his side with two things in it like Musket-Bullets.

Two Armies.

June the Nineteenth, Anno 1631. In the Lower Saxony, two great Armies appeared in the Air, one in the North, the other in the South, which fought a great Battle together; after long fighting, the Northern Army obtained the Victory. After the Battle was ended, there appeared a Man in a long Coat, bearing a Bow, with which he shot at, and overthrew the Commander of the Southern Army.

Bloody Bread.

In the same Countrey, a Woman having bought a Loaf of Bread, when she came home, was dividing it, and in the cutting of it there came forth Blood.

A Fish-Pond turned to Blood.

Anno 1633. in the Countrey of Altenburgh, a Fish-Pond was turned into Blood, which stank so extremely, That if any Passengers did but touch it, they could not wash off the stink thereof in three days space.

It Rained Blood and Brimstone.
A Battle of Birds and Dogs.

Anno 1634. at Berlin in Brandenburg, it Rained Blood and Brimstone.

Anno 1635. in Hessen there met two Armies of strange Birds which fought a set Battle; and not far off, about that same time, a multitude of Dogs had their Rendezvous, which fought so eagerly, that they would not be reconciled; and when the Governor of a Neighbor-Garrison sent out four Companies of Muskettiers against them; they seeing a common Enemy, joyned together, and in despite of their Guns, beat them away, and devoured nine of them.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The Persecution of the Church in France, which began Anno Christi 1524.

Anno Christi 1209. There were certain Learned Men in France, Disciples of one Almericus at Paris, whose names were, Master William, a Subdeacon of Poitiers, well studied in the Arts, and Divinity; Bernard, another Subdeacon; William Goldsmith; Steven, a Priest; Steven of the Seller; and one John, a Priest, who upon examination, held, That God was no otherwise present in the Sacramental Bread, than in any other Bread: That it was Idolatry to build Altars to Saints, or to cause their Images. They mocked those that kissed the Relicks: They said, That the Pope was Antichrist, and Rome Babylon: That God was not seen in himself, but by his Creatures. For which (when they could not be drawn to recant) they were condemned to be burnt at Paris, which accordingly was executed. Beorinus out of Cesarus. And Almuennus who had been their Master, had his Body digged up in the Church-yard, and was buried in the Field; and all his French Books of Divinity were for ever condemned and burned.

Anno Christi 1524. At Melden, in France, there was one John Clark, who set up a Bill upon the Church-door against the Popes pardons, lately come thither, wherein he called the Pope Antichrist; for which, being apprehended, he was adjudged three several days to be whipt, then to have a mark burned in his Forehead as a note of Infamy: His Mother, a good Woman, when she saw her Son so pitiously scourged and branded, encouraged him, crying with a loud voice, Blessed be Christ, and welcome be these marks for his sake. Afterwards he removed from thence and went to Metz, in Lorraine, where for a time he followed his Calling of a Wool-carder: But the people of the City used, once a year, all of them to go forth into the Suburbs to worship some Idols there. Whereupon John Clark, inflamed with an holy zeal, went the night before and brake down all those Images. The next morning when all the Clergy and People came to the place to worship them, they found all their Idols broken upon the Ground. This set all in a tumult, and great searching there was after the Author of this deed; and quickly was John Clark suspected and apprehended. He presently confessed the fact, and told them the Reasons why he did it.

The People hereupon cried out against him in a great rage. Before the Judges he professed the pure Doctrine of the Son of God, and thereupon was condemned to a cruel death, which he sustained with admirable patience and constancy. First, his right hand was cut off, then was his nose with sharp Beccers pulled violently from his face; then were his arms and breasts pulled off with the same instrument; yet he, through Gods Grace, endured all with great quietness, pronouncing the while, that of Psalm 115. Their Idols are Silver and Gold, the work of Mens hands. Lastly, he was cast into the fire, and there consumed.

Mr. Castellane. Not long after Master John Castellane, Doctor in Divinity, born at Tourney, being through Gods Mercy called to the knowledge of the Truth, became a zealous, fervent, and faithful Preacher of it in divers places, and at last he was taken Prisoner by the Cardinal of Lorraines Servants, by whom he was carried to the Castle of Nommeny, where he indured much cruel usage; yet still he perievered in confessing the true Doctrine of the Son of God. Then was he carried to the Castle of Vik, and after a time was condemned, degraded, and delivered over to the Secular Power, with this hypocritical Speech. My Lord Judge, we pray you as heartily as we can for the love of God, and the contemplation of tender pity and mercy; and for respect to our Prayers, That you will not in any point do any thing that shall be hurtful to this miserable Man, or tending to his Death, or the maiming of his Body. Then was he burnt alive, which death he underwent with much patience and comfort.

Popish Hypocrite.

His Martyrdom.

James Panane.
Dennis de Reux.

At Paris, one James Panane, a School-master, was burnt for the Truth.

Also at Melda, Dennis de Reux was burned, for saying, That the Mass was a plain denial of the Death and Passion of Christ. He used often to meditate of, and to repeat those words of Christ. He that denies me before men, him will I deny also before my Father. He was burnt in a slow fire, and so abode much torment.

John de Cadurco.

John de Cadurco, Preaching to his Countreymen of Limosine, was apprehended and degraded. The Fryer that was to Preach at his Degradation, took that Text, 1 Tim. 4. The Spirit speaks expressly, that in the latter days men shall depart from the Faith, giving heed to lying spirits and doctrines of Errors. Then did John call to him to read on, but the Fryer stood dumb, and could not speak a word more. Then did John read on, Teaching false doctrine in hypocrisie, having their consciences seared with an hot iron, forbidding to marry, and to eat meats created by God to be received with thanksgiving, &c. Presently after he was burned.

A Special Providence.

Five burnt at Paris.

About the same time, five Men for scattering about certain Papers against the Mass, and other Popish Superstitions, were apprehended and burnt at Paris. One of them for speaking freely, had his Tongue burned through, and with a wire tied fast to one of his Cheeks.

Alexander Canus.

Alexander Canus, a godly Minister, for Preaching and confessing the Truth of Christ, was burned at Paris with a small fire, whereby he indured great pain.

John Pointer.

Also John Pointer, a Chirurgeon, had his Tongue first cut out, and then was burnt about the same time.

Peter Gaudet.
Popish treachery.

Peter Gaudet, living at Geneva, was by a Popish Uncle trained into France, apprehended, condemned, and after many and long torments sustained in Prison, was burned.

Divers others were apprehended, condemned, and burned at Arras.

John Cornon.

A godly Virgin was burned at Fountains, Anno 1534. As also one John Cornon, an Husbandman; but one indowed with such wisdom by God, that all his Judges were amazed at it: Yet was he condemned and burned.

Martin Gonin.

Martin Gonin was cast into the River and drowned.

Claudius.
Popish treachery.

Anno 1540. One Claudius endeavoring to convert his Friends and Kinsfolk in Paris, was by them betrayed, adjudged to have his Tongue cut out, and then burned.

Stephen Brune.
A Special Providence.

Stephen Brune at Rutiers, being for the constant Profession of his Faith condemned to be burned: When the fire was kindled, a great wind so drave away the flame from him, that he stood for an hours space, exhorting and instructing the People. Then did they bring Oyl Vessels, and more Faggots, yet still was the flame driven from him. Whereupon the Hangman took a Staff, and struck him on the Head, to whom he said; I am condemned to be burned, and do you strike me with staves like a Dog? With that the Hangman, with a Pike, thrust him through the Belly, threw him down into the fire, and afterwards scattered his ashes in the wind.

Note.

An excellent Speech.

At Roan four Christians were condemned to be burned, and being carried to the Stake in a Dung-cart, they said, Blessed be God, we are here reputed as the Excrements of this world, but yet our death is a sweet savor unto God.

John

John de Beck, a godly Minister, being condemned for the Doctrine of the Gospel, constantly indured the torment of the fire at Troyes.

Aymond de Lavoy, a godly Minister, Preaching the Truths of God faithfully, was complained of by the Popish Clergy to the Magistrates of Bordeaux, who sent to apprehend him: Hereupon some of his Friends perswaded him to flee, but he refused, saying, That thereby he might cause the People to think that he had fed them with Dreams and Fables, and not with the pure word of God; whereas he feared not to yield up both Soul and Body, in the quarrel of the Truth which he had taught, saying, That with Paul, he was ready not only to be bound for the testimony of Christ in the City of Bordeaux, but to die also.

After the Sumner came, he staid three days and Preached three Sermons; and whereas the People would have rescued him out of the Sumners hand, he desired them not to stop his Martyrdom: For, said he, since it is the will of God, that I shall suffer for him, I will not resist his will. At Bordeaux many witnesses came in against him, against whom he made many Exceptions, but they would not be admitted. Nine Moneths he remained in Prison, suffering great misery, much bewailing his former course of life, though yet it had been such as none could charge him with any crime. Then the Judges proceeded to his condemnation, and he had greater Fetters put upon him: He was also examined with torments, which he indured two or three hours, though but of a weakly Body, comforting himself thus. This Body must once die, but the Spirit shall live: The Kingdom of God abideth for ever. During his torments he favoured, and when he came to himself again, he said, O Lord, Lord, why hast thou forsaken me? Nay said the President, wicked Lutheran, Thou hast forsaken God. Aymond replied, Alas, good Masters, why do you thus miserably torment me? O Lord, I beseech thee forgive them, for they know not what they do. See, said the President, this Caitiff how he prayeth for us? Shortly after he was condemned; and when the Fryers came to confess him, he bad them depart from him, for he would confess his sins to the Lord. He went to the place of execution with much joy, exhorting the People all the way: At the place of execution they tumbled him out of the Cart, and when he was upon the Stage he said, O Lord, make haste to help me, carry not, despise not the work of thy hands. And seeing some Scholars, he said to them, My Brethren, I exhort you to study and learn the Gospel, for the word of God abideth for ever: Labor to know the will of God, and fear not them that kill the Body, but have no power over your souls. And afterwards he said, My Flesh doth wonderfully resist the Spirit, but presently I shall cast it away. At the Stake he often repeated, O Lord my God, into thy hands I commend my Soul; and so he was first strangled by the Hangman, and then burned.

Francis Brihard, Secretary to the Cardinal of Bellay, being convicted for adhering to the Truth, had first his Tongue cut out, and then was burnt Anno 1544.

About the same time, William Hufson, an Apothecary, came from Bloys to Rouen, and in the Palace where the Council sat, he scattered sundry Books concerning the Christian Doctrine, and against Mens Traditions; and presently taking Horse rode away. The Books being found, the Council made diligent search for the Author, and at last heard, that probably this Hufson had scattered them there: Whereupon Posts were sent out every way to apprehend him, and by some of them he was taken riding towards Dreux, and brought back to Rouen; who being examined, professed his Faith boldly, and acknowledged that he had scattered those Books, and that he was going to Dreux to do the like there. For this he was condemned to be burnt alive; and as he was carried to execution, because he refused to worship an Image, his tongue was cut out; afterwards his hands and feet being bound behind him, he was pulled up with a Pully, and so let down into the fire, in which, he with a cheerful countenance held up his head, and fixed his upon Heaven, till he yielded up his Spirit unto God.

James Cobard.

Anno 1545. James Cobard, a School-master in the City of St. Michael, declared and proved, That the Mass, neither profited the quick nor dead, &c. For which he was burned.

Fourteen martyred.

Also at Melde, fourteen godly persons were cast into Prison, where they were cruelly racked to make them confess their fellows, which they stoutly refused to do, and at last were condemned to the fire; seven of them had their Tongues cut out, and so all of them were burned together, their Wives being compelled to stand by to see their torments: Many others were scourged and banished.

Peter Chapot.

Zeal.

Anno 1546. There was one Peter Chapot, who having been a while at Geneva, out of a zeal to do good to the Church of Christ, carried divers Bibles into France, and dispersed them amongst the faithful; at last he was apprehended and carried to Paris; there he readily rendered an account of his Faith, exhorting the Judges to do their office uprightly. Three Doctors of Sorbonne were appointed to dispute with him, but he made them all to go away ashamed: Then was he condemned to be burnt. At the Stake, one of the Doctors pressed him sorely to pray to our Lady; which he refused, crying only, O Jesus, Son of David, have mercy on me. The Doctor bad him say only Jesus Maria, and he should not be burnt alive, but he for a while refused, yet at last through his importunity, he said Jesus Maria; but presently checking himself, he said, O God what have I done? Pardon me, O Lord, for against thee only have I sinned. And so he was presently strangled, and then burned: But upon the complaint of the Doctor, the Court made a Decree; That all which were to be burned, unless they recanted at the Stake, should have their Tongues cut out; which was diligently afterwards observed.

A Cripple martyred.

Zeal.

There was living at Meaux, a Lame Cripple, to whom God was pleased to reveal his Truth; and after a time he was apprehended, and examined, at which time he confessed more than they desired to hear. Then did they ask him, whether he would stand to that which he had said? To whom he answered, And I ask you again, Dare you be so bold as to deny that which is so plain and evident in the holy Scriptures? Being advised to take care of his life, he said to the Judges; For Gods sake take care of your own lives and Souls, and consider how much innocent Blood you spill daily in fighting against Jesus Christ, and his Gospel. At last he was carried to Paris, where he endured many sorts of torments, and lastly was burned.

His Martyrdom.

Stephen Polliot.

At Fera, one Stephen Polliot was apprehended, carried to Paris, and there cast into a foul and dark Dungeon, where he lay long in Bonds and Fetters. At last he was brought forth and condemned to have his Tongue cut out, and to be burned with his Sachel of Books hanging about his Neck, which was accordingly executed.

John English.

Anno 1547. There was one John English condemned by the Court of Paris, for confessing the Truths of God; and so sent to Sens in Burgundy, where he was burned.

Michael Michelote.

Faith and Courage.

Also Michael Michelote, being apprehended for professing the Gospel, was put to his choice, either to recant and be beheaded, or to persevere and be burned. He answered, That he trusted, that he which had given him Grace not to deny the Truth, would also give him patience to abide the Fire: And so he was burned.

Treachery.

Another being betrayed by false Brethren, was burned at Bar in Burgundy.

Seven Martyrs.

Five Men and two Women were condemned to the fire at Langres, for adhering to the Truth; one of the Women being the youngest, was reserved to be burned last; and in the mean time she much encouraged them all, saying, This day we shall be married to the Lord Jesus, to live with him for ever. And so they all quietly slept in the Lord. Four others about the same time were condemned, and cruelly burned at Paris for the same cause.

Four Martyrs.

Blondel.

Anno 1548. There was one Blondel, a Merchant of Precious Stones, that frequented many great Fairs in France, and was well known, both in Court and Countrey. He was a Man of singular integrity, and a favorer of Gods Word; who being at an Inn in Lions, he freely reproved the filthy talk and superstitious behavior behavior which he there heard and saw: Hereupon the Host complained of him to an Officer; withal, informing him of his rich Coller of Jewels: These two suborned one to borrow money of him, which because Blondel refused to lend, the Fellow caused him to be apprehended for Heresy, thinking thereby to attach his goods; But Blondels Friends prevented it, privily conveying them away.

Popish malice

Blondel being examined of his Faith, gave a plain and full Confession of it; whereupon he was sent to Prison, in which he did much good amongst the Prisoners, paying the debts of some and so loosing them, feeding others, cloathing others, &c. At length through the importunity of his Parents and Friends, he changed his Confession; yet was he sent to the High Court at Paris, where being examined again concerning his Faith, he adhered to his first Confession, much bewailing his former fall: Then was he condemned to be burnt; and great haste was made for his execuion, lest his Friends at Court should have his life.

Anno 1549. One Hubert, a young Man of Nineteen years old, was so constant in the Faith, that neither the persuasions of his Parents, nor the threats of his Adversaries could remove him from his stedfastness, for which he was burnt at Dyon.

Hubert

The same year there was a godly Minister, called Florent Venote, cast into Prison at Paris, where he lay above four years, in which time there was no kind of torment; which he did not endure and overcome: Amongst others he was put into so narrow a place, that he could neither stand nor lie, in which he remained seven weeks, whereas there was never any Malefactor that could endure it fifteen days, but he either grew mad or died. At last when a great shew was made at the Kings coming into the City, and divers other Martyrs in sundry places of it were put to death, Florent also, having his Tongue cut out, was brought forth to see their execution, and lastly was himself burnt.

His Martyrdom

About the same time one Anne Audbert, as she was going to Geneva, was apprehended and brought to Paris, where she was adjudged to be sent to Orleanse and burned there; when she was had forth to execution, a Rope being put about her, she called it her wedding girdle, wherewith she should be married to Christ; and being to be burned on a Saturday, she said, On a Saturday I was first married, and on a Saturday I shall be married again: She much rejoyced when she was put into the Dung-cart, and shewed such patience, and constancy in the fire, as made all the Spectators to wonder at it.

Courage and Comfort in Death

Not long after the Coronation of Henry the Second, King of France, at whose coming into the City of Paris divers godly Martyrs were burned, there was a poor Tailor, that dwelt not far from the Kings Palace, apprehended for working upon an Holy-day: Being by the Officer asked why he wrought upon that day: He answered, That he was a poor Man living only upon his labor, and that he knew no day but the Sabbath wherein he might not work, his necessity requiring it; then was he clapt up in Prison. This being noised in the Court, some would needs have the Tailor sent for, that the King might have the hearing of him: Then was the Tailor brought thither, and the King sitting in his Chair of State, commanded the Bishop of Macon to question with him. The Tailor being nothing amazed at the Kings presence, after he had done reverence to his Prince, gave thanks to God for honoring him so greatly, being such a Wretch, as to bring him where he might bear witness to his truth before so great a Prince: The Bishop questioned with him about the greatest matters of Religion, and he with an undaunted spirit so answered for the sincere truth, and with such pregnant proofs of Scripture, as was wonderful. And though the Nobles that were present jeered and taunted at him, yet could they not dash him out of countenance, but that still with much liberty and freedom of Speech he defended the truth of Christ, neither flattering their persons, nor fearing their threats. The King seeming to muse much within himself, that so mean and simple a person should shew such audacity in such a presence, the Bishop and Popish Lords taking notice of, cryed out that he was an obstinate and impudent Heretick, and therefore remanded him back to Prison; and within a few days after he was condemned to be burnt alive. And lest the King should be affected with what he heard from the Tailor, the Bishops often suggested that the Lutherans were such as carried a vain smoak in their mouths, which being put to the fire would soon vanish. They also would needs have the King present at his execution: But it pleased God to give such strength and courage to the Tailor at his execution, as much more astonished the King than all his former carriages; For having espied the King in the Window where he sat, he beheld him with so stedfast a countenance, that his Eyes were never off him; yea, when the fire was kindled about him, he still kept his Eyes so fixed upon the King, that the King was constrained to leave the Window, and to withdraw himself, and was so wrought upon thereby, that he confessed that he thought the shadow of the Tailor followed him whithersoever he went, and for many nights after, he was so terrified with the apparition thereof, that he protested with an Oath, that he would never see nor hear any more of those Lutherans, though afterwards he brake his Oath, as it follows in the Story of Anne Du Bourg.

About the same time one Claudius, a godly Man was apprehended as he came from Geneva, and burned at Orléance.

Cruelty.

Anno 1551. One Thomas, a young Man of about eighteen years old, coming from Geneva to Paris, rebuked one for swearing, whereupon he was apprehended for a Lutheran, and carried before the High Court; by them he was committed to Prison, and cruelly racked to confess his Companions, which he still refused to do, whereupon they continued to rack him, till one of the Bloody Inquisitors turned his back and wept, and till the Hangman was a weary; Then was he carried to be burned, and was let down with a pulley into the fire; and after a while, being pulled up again, they asked him if he would yet turn? To whom he said, That he was in his way to God, and therefore he desired them to let him go, and so he quietly slept in the Lord.

Anno 1553. There was apprehended at Lions one Peter Bergerius, who for his bold and constant confession was cast into Prison, and put into a Dungeon, where was a Thief that had lain there seven or eight months, who being in great pain and torment, cryed out of God, and cursed his Parents that begat him, being almost eaten up with Lice, and fed with such Bread as Dogs and Horses had refused to eat: But it pleased Almighty God of his goodness, through the instructions and prayers of Bergerius, that he was converted and brought to the knowledge of the truth, after which, the very next day, his Lice which before extremely abounded, so went away, that he had not one remaining: And God so stirred up the Hearts of good Men, that he was fed plentifully, and that with white Bread, so that with much patience and joyfulness he bore his imprisonment, and had great comfort afterwards in his Soul.

Three godly Men.

About the same time three godly Men were apprehended at Lions, and being condemned for the Truth; when they were to be led forth to execution, two of them had Ropes put about their Necks: The third, having served the King in his Wars, was favored to have none; Whereupon he said to the Lieutenant, That he also desired to have one of those precious Chains about his Neck in honor of his Lord; the which being granted, they all went singing to the fire, where with much patience they yielded up their spirits unto God.

Not long after in the same place was apprehended one Matthew Dimonet, who formerly had lived a most wicked life, full of all filthiness and abominations; He had been also a searcher out of the Professors of the Gospel, and a great Persecutor of them; yet at last it pleased God to shew him mercy, and he was converted to the knowledge of the truth: After which, being apprehended and examined,

he

he made a stout profession of his Faith; and during his imprisonment he had great conflicts with the infirmity of his own flesh, but especially with the temptations of his Parents, Kindred, and Friends; yet the Lord did so strengthen him that he endured constant to the end: At his burning he spake much to the people, and was hearkned to with great attention.

Temptation resisted.

Simon Laloe coming upon some occasions from Geneva into France, was apprehended by the Bailiff of Dyon, by whom he was imprisoned and racked to force him to confess what Fellows he had: But that not prevailing, he was condemned to be burned. At his death the Executioner, seeing his great Faith, Patience, and Constancy, was so wrought upon thereby, that he fell into great terrors of conscience, so that he was near to utter despair, and all the promises of the Gospel could scarce comfort him; yet at last, through Gods mercy, receiving comfort, he with all his Family removed to the Church of Geneva, where he afterwards lived till his death.

Simon Laloe.

An Hangman converted.

Nicholas Naile, carrying some good Books to Paris, was there apprehended, and made a bold confession of the Faith, for which he was cruelly tormented fundry wife, and racked all his joynts asunder, and lastly being condemned, when he was carried to the Stake, they put a gag into his Mouth, which they tied in so hard with a Rope about his Head, that Blood gushed out of his Mouth: They also besmeared all his Body with Oyl and Brimstone, so that at the first taking of fire, all his skin was shrivelled together, whilst his inward parts were untouched. The Cord being burnt in sunder, and the gag falling out of his Mouth, he praised God in the midst of the fire, till he yielded up his spirit unto God.

Nicholas Naile.

Popish cruelty.

Peter Serre was at first a Priest, but God of his mercy revealing his truth to him, he went to Geneva, and there learned the Shoemakers craft, whereby he maintained himself: And having a Brother at Tholouse, out of a singular love to his Soul, he went thither to instruct him. His Brothers Wife being not well pleased herewith, revealed it to one of her Gossips, who informed the Official against him: Hereupon he was apprehended and carried before the Inquisitor, to whom he made an excellent declaration of his Faith, and so was delivered to the Judge. Who asked him of what occupation he was? He said, That of late he was a Shoemaker; Then did the Judge ask him of what Occupation he had formerly been? He said, He had been of another formerly, but he was ashamed to utter it, or to remember it, being the worst and vilest Science of all others in the world: The Judge and People supposing that he had been some Cutpurse or Thief, were more importunate to know what it was; But shame and sorrow so stopped his Mouth, that he could not declare it. At last through their importunate clamor, he told them he had been a Popish Priest: This so incensed the Judge, that he presently condemned him to be degraded, to have his Tongue cut out, and to be burned; which was accordingly executed. In the fire he stood so quiet, looking up stedfastly to Heaven at the time of his burning, as if he felt no pain at all, which caused wonderful admiration in the people; and one of the Parliament said, That it was not the best way to bring the Lutherans to the fire, for it would do more hurt than good.

Anno 1554. There were two godly Men, with one of their Sons and a Daughter going towards Geneva, whom a Lieutenant overtaking by the way, like a Judas, he insinuated himself into their company, pretended great favor to them and to that Religion, which he said, he supposed them to be of: And so with fair words he circumvented them, and drew out of them that they were Protestants, and their Wives at Geneva, whither they were now travelling: Then did he apprehend them, and carry them to the Castle of Niverne. During their imprisonment, they were examined of many Articles, to which they made a full and clear answer according to their Faith: After this they were racked extremely for three hours together to force them to recant, which they bore with admirable patience: Being therefore condemned, as they went to execution, the Officer bound a wooden Cross between their Hands, but they pulled it out with their Teeth, and threw it away, whereupon their Tongues were cut out, notwithstanding which God gave them utterance, so that they spake plain, saying, we bid sin, the flesh, the world, and the devil farewell for ever, with whom we shall never have more to do hereafter, and much more to the like purpose. When the Officer came to besmear them with Brimstone and Gunpowder, they said, Go to, salt on, salt on the stinking and rotten flesh; and so persisting constant in the flames, they finished their Martyrdom.

Philbert Hamlin.

Anno 1557. Philbert Hamlin, Priest, was through Gods grace brought to the knowledge of the Truth, whereupon he went to Geneva, where he exercised the Art of Printing, and sent Books abroad. Afterwards he was made a Minister, and preached at the Town of Alenart, in which and in some other places he did much good: At last he with his Host, a Priest, whom he had instructed in the knowledge of the Gospel, were apprehended and cast into Prison, at Bourdeaux; And whilst they lay there, in came a Priest with his furniture to say Mass: But Philbert, inflamed with a holy zeal, went and plucked the garments from his back, and overthrew the Chalice and Candlesticks, saying, Is it not enough for you to Blaspheme God in the Churches, but you must also pollute the Prison with your Idolatry? The Jailor seeing this, fell upon him, and beat him with his staff, and also removed him into a dungeon, loading him with Irons which made his Legs to swell: There he lay eight days. The Priest his Host, terrified with the Prison and fear of death, renounced Christ and his Word, and was set at liberty; whereupon Philbert said to him, O unhappy and more than miserable Man! Is it possible that you should be so foolish, as for to save your life a few days, you should so start away from and deny the Truth? Know you therefore, that although hereby you have avoided the corporal fire, yet your life shall be never the longer; For you shall die before me, and yet shall not have the honor to die for the cause of God; and you shall be an example to all Apostates. Having ended his Speech, and the Priest going out of Prison, he was presently slain by two Gentlemen, who formerly had a quarrel to him. Philbert hearing of it, professed that he knew of no such thing before, but spake as it pleased God to guide his Tongue. Philbert being condemned, and had to execution, they labored to drown his voice by sounding of Trumpets, and so in the midst of the flames, praying and exhorting the people, he rendered up his Soul unto God.

Nicholas of Jonville.

Popish treachery.
Blind zeal.

Anno 1558. Nicholas of Jonville, a young Man that had lived at Geneva, coming into France to get up some money that was owing to him, was betrayed by a Lady, apprehended and condemned, and being carried in a Cart to execution, his Father met him and would have beaten him with a staff, but the Officers not suffering it, were about to have stricken the old Man; The Son seeing it, cryed to them to let his Father alone, saying, That he had power over him to do to him what he would. At the Place of execution he had an Iron Ball put into his mouth; and so he patiently took his Martyrdom at Jonville.

Popish malice.

About the same time a company of the Faithful of about Three or Four hundred were met together at an House in Paris, in the beginning of the night, to receive the Sacrament of the Lords Supper: Some Priests getting intelligence of it, gathered many of that faction together, and came, and beset the House, making an outcry that the watch might come and apprehend them, so that in a short time most of the City of Paris was up in Arms, supposing that there had been some conspiracy. The people following the noise, and perceiving that they were Lutherans, they grew into a great rage, seeking to murder them, and thereupon stopped the streets and lanes with Carts, and made fires that none might escape them; But through Gods mercy, before this tumult began, the Faithful had finished their administration and prayers, with as much quiet as ever they had done. And now seeing this sudden danger, they were somewhat amazed; whereupon the Pastors of the Congregation exhorted them, and fell to prayer: After which, considering the cowardliness of the multitude, it was resolved that that such as had weapons should adventure through the press, which being put in practice, the admirable power of God appeared, in that notwithstanding the fires, and stopping of the passages, yet they all escaped safe, only one was beaten down with stones, and slain: The rest, which wanted weapons, being about One hundred and twenty, stayed in the House with the Women and Children, some of which leaped into Gardens, where they remained till the Magistrates came: The Women, which were all Persons of good quality, save Six or Seven, perceiving their danger by reason of the fury of the people, went up into the Windows, shewed their innocency, and desired that they might be tried in an ordinary way of Justice, yet there they were inclosed by the rabble for Six or Seven hours; At last came the Kings Attorney with many Serjeants and Officers, who with much ado appeasing the people, entred into the House, and their seeing the quality of the Persons, and their innocency the Attorney much pitied them, yet carried them to Prison in the little Castle: But as they went, the furious multitude plucked and haled the Gentlewomen, tore their garments, pulled their Hoods from their Heads, and all besmeared their Faces with dust and dirt.

A special Providence.

Popish rage and cruelty.

In the Prison they were used no better; For the Villains and Thieves being let out of their holes, and stinking Caves, these Lambs of Christ were put into their rooms. Then followed the cruel and slanderous reports of the Fryers, who in their Sermons railed upon them, told the people that they were assembled to make a Banquet in the night, after which, putting out the Candles, they went together Jack with Jill; after a filthy and Beastly manner: They charged them also with sedition, as if they conspired against the King, &c. And these cursed defamations were no sooner vented, but they were spread abroad far and wide, yea in the Court it self, and the Cardinal of Lorraine procured a certain Judge to come to the King, who testified that he found in the House divers Couches, upon which they intended to commit their Whoredoms and Adulteries, which much enflamed the King against them.

Popish lies and slanders.

Satan's subtilty.

These things made the Enemies to triumph exceedingly, and on the contrary, the Brethren which escaped, were full of perplexity, and lamentations, sorrowing not so much for themselves, as for the imprisonment of their Friends; yet they much comforted themselves in the consideration of their own wonderful deliverance. They upon debate also resolved, First, That all of them should humble themselves before God in their own Families. Secondly, That they might stop the false rumors, to write two Apologies; one to the King, and another to the People. Thirdly, To write consolatory Letters to their Friends in Prison.

Christian wisdom.

The Apology to the King was written and conveyed privily into his Chamber, where it was met with and read openly before the King and his Nobles; yet this prevailed little, for their Adversaries suggested to him that all was false, and a pretence to hide their wickedness; But that to the People did very much good, and so did their consolatory Letter to their Friends in Prison.

The Adversaries all this while did bestir themselves to bring them that were in Prison to execution, and procured a Commission from the King to certain Judges to hasten their trial. But it fell out by Gods Providence, that at this time the Protestant Princes of Germany were met at a Colloquy at Worms, to whom divers learned Men resorted from Geneva, requesting them to send their Ambassadors to the French King, in the behalf of these poor Christians thus imprisoned: By whose mediation, and the Kings other business, who was now in War with the King of Spain, many of them were delivered, yet some of them were executed before the coming of the Ambassadors.

Gods merciful Providence.

Among them were Nicholas Clivet, and one Granvelle, both of them Elders of the Congregation, who stoutly defended the Truth against the Sabbath Doctors, and afterwards patiently resigned up their Souls to God in the cruel flames. Also a young Gentlewoman of about Twenty three years old, which came from

Gascoigne to joyn her self to the Church at Paris, was brought forth with the former, and endured many conflicts with the Judges and Sorbonists; who when she was urged to recant, said, That she had learned her faith from the word of God, and therefore therein she would live and die: Her neighbors testified against her that there was much singing of Psalms in her House, and that sometimes they had seen abundance of people come out of it, and that at the death of her Husband no Priest was called for, &c. But presently after, two of these witnesses fell out, and one slew the other with a Knife.

The Cardinal of Sens much hastened this Gentlewomans death, that he might have her estate. When she was condemned, she had her Tongue cut, as the two former also were served. Going to execution, she dressed her self like a Bride, being that day to be married to her Spouse Jesus Christ; she went to the fire without ever changing countenance; and so quietly yielded up her spirit to God.

Divers others of this Congregation suffered in the like sort, the rest, at the mediation of the Prince Elector Palatine, and the Protestant Switzers were released.

In other parts of France also sundry faithful Christians were imprisoned, cruelly racked, had their Tongues cut out, and finally were burned, concerning whom because I find nothing extraordinary, I have forbore to mention them.

Anno 1559. The King of France, Henry the Second, coming into the Parliament in Paris, there was one Anne Du Bourg, a noble Counsellor, a Man of singular understanding and knowledge, bred and nursed up in the bosom of the Church of Christ, who made a bold Speech before him, wherein he rendred thanks to Almighty God, for moving the Kings Heart to be present at the decision of so weighty a cause as that of Religion was, humbly intreating him to consider well thereof, being the cause of Christ himself, which of good right ought to be maintained by Princes, &c. But the King, instead of hearkening to his good advice, was so far incensed against him, that he caused him to be apprehended by the County of Montgomery, Constable of France, and to be carried to the Prison, protesting to him in these words, These Eyes of mine shall see thee burnt; and presently after he sent a Commission to the Judges to make his Process.

During his imprisonment there was a godly Woman, who was Prisoner also in a Chamber just over against his, who at her Window, sometimes by words, other sometimes by signs, did much encourage him to persevere constantly in the truth, whereby he was so comforted, that when some of his Friends perswaded him to recant, he said, God forbid; For a woman hath taught me my lesson, how I ought to carry my self in this business; He was often examined about sundry points of Religion, and being once asked whether he had conferred with any one about them, he answered, That he had conferred with his Books, especially with the holy Scriptures.

Having drawn up a confession of his Faith, he intended to present it to the Parliament: But some Advocates that belonged to that Court, who pretended a great love to him, labored to draw him to make another confession, not contrary to the truth, but in such ambiguous terms as might satisfy his Judges, who would not stand strictly to examine it; Du Bourg long resisted, but at last was prevailed with to draw up such a confession, supposing it sufficient that himself knew his own meaning: So soon as this his confession came into the hands of his Judges, great hopes were conceived of his enlargement; But when the Christian Congregation had gotten a copy of it, they were much grieved; whereupon they ordered Master Augustine Marlorate, a learned and godly Minister, to write a large discourse concerning the duty of such as were called to bear witness to the truth of God before Magistrates, wherein he set down Gods threatenings and judgments against such, as either directly or indirectly deny the Truth,

The Persecution of the Church in France:

Truth, exhorting him more highly to prize the glory of God than his own liberty; the truth of his Gospel than a short and transitory Life, shewing that he ought not now to give over, having made so happy a beginning and progress in his Christian course: That the fame of his constancy was spread, not only through France, but all Christendom over: That he had been a means to confirm many weak ones, and caused others to enquire after the means of salvation: That all Mens eyes were fixed on him to enquire by what means he got out of Prison; so that, if through fear and faint-heartedness, he should enterprise ought that should contradict his first Profession, he would give much scandal and offence, and therefore he exhorted him to give glory to God, to edifie his Church; Telling him, that then he might assure himself, that God would neither leave nor forsake him.

These Letters brought Du Bourg to a sight of his sin, for which asking pardon of God, without any further delay he wrote to the Judges, retracting his last, and protesting to stand to his first confession; so that shortly after he was condemned.

In the mean time great Feasts were preparing in the Court, for joy of the marriages that should be of the Kings Daughter and Sister: The day whereof being come, the King imployed all the morning in examining the President, and other Counsellors of the Parliament against Du Bourg, and other his Companions that were charged with the same Doctrine, intending to glut his Eyes in seeing their execution, and then went to Dinner.

After Dinner the King being one of the Defendants at the Tilting, which was near the Prison where Du Bourg and his Fellows lay, entered the lists, and behaved himself valiantly, breaking many Spears against Count Montgomery and others, whereupon he was highly commended of the Spectators, and all thinking that he had done enough, desired him to give over with praise: But he being puffed up with their commendations, would needs run another course with Montgomery, who kneeling on his knees craved pardon, refusing to run against him; The King being eagerly set on, commanded him upon his Allegiance to run, and put the Spear into his Hands, Montgomery thus enforced, addrest himself to the course, and the King and he meeting together, brake their Spears, and the Kings Helmet falling down, at the same instant, one of the splinters of Montgomerys Spear entered just into his right Eye, and so pierced his Head that the Brains were perished; which wound, despising all means of cure, killed him within eleven days, whereby his hope of seeing Du Bourg burned was frustrated, and thereupon Du Bourg his execution was deferred for six months longer: At the end whereof, he having constantly persevered in the confession of his Faith, was first degraded, and the next day carried out to execution: The Judges appointed Six or Seven hundred Horse and Foot well armed, to guard him, He was first hanged, and then his Body was burnt to ashes.

Presently after, divers others were burnt in Paris, and in many other places for their Religion; many also were massacred as they passed along the streets for not doing reverence to the Images, which were then newly set up in the corner of every street; such also as refused to contribute money to buy wax Candles to burn before them, it cost them their lives. Notwithstanding which cruelties, those of the Religion increased daily, both in zeal and number in all parts of the Realm.

This much incensed the Duke de Guise in his Government of Dauphine, whereupon he sent Mangiron, a cruel man, and great Enemy to the Protestants, with charge wholly to root them out: This Mangiron first played his part very subtilly; But at last he fell upon Valence, sackt the Houses of the Protestants, as if he had taken the Town by assault, and the more to strengthen him in his mischief, he had many Troops of Horse, and some Lanciers sent him: Truchet also, President of Grenoble, cast sixty of the chieftest of the Protestants into Prison, at Valence, whilst Mangiron pillaged those of Montelimart, to whom he had promised and sworn to do no wrong.

Popish cruelty.

Two Ministers beheaded.

Truchon caused two Ministers at Valence to be beheaded, and three of the principal Citizens to be hanged; The rest he punished with great fines, whippings, and banishments.

At Roan he hanged two Men; whipt one, and afterwards sent him to the Gallies.

Arms Ecclesia.

Anno 1559. In Provence, a godly Gentleman was traiterously massacred for his profession of Religion.

A great conversion.

Those of the Religion, seeing themselves destitute of all humane aid, resolved in all their dangers instead of seeking to Man for help, to pray to God, to hear his Word, to continue in true obedience unto it, living in great love and concord one with another, whereby abundance of Papists were so edified, that by whole Troops they left the Mass, and made open profession of the Protestant Religion.

Popish malice.

Anno 1561. There happened a great mutiny in the City of Paris, raised by some Priests, which rang a Bell while those of the Religion were hearing a Sermon: From which proceeded wounds, murthers, and imprisonments; Four of the Protestants were hanged to please the people, and the rest paid a fine.

C H A P. XXXIV.

The Persecution in the time of the Civil wars.

Christians murdered at a Sermon.

Anno 1562. The Duke de Guise passing towards Paris, and coming near to Vassy, understanding that the Bell rang to a Sermon, which was to be preached in a Barn, in which place there were assembled about Twelve hundred Men, Women, and Children, he presently went with all his Troops to the Barn, and entering it, they cried out, Death of God, kill, kill these Huguenots; Then did some of them shoot at those which were in the Galleries; others cut in pieces such as they met with. Some had their Heads cleft in twain, others had their Arms and Hands cut off, so that the Walls and Galleries of the Barn were died with the Blood of the slain: The Duke with his Sword drawn, stood amongst them, charging his Men to kill without sparing, especially the young Men: Some of these godly Persons getting upon the roof, hid themselves there; but at length some of this Bloody crew spying them, shot at them with long pieces, whereby many of them were slain, falling down from the roof like Pigeons. Then they fell to murdering of them all without distinction; The poor Saints of God made no resistance, only praying unto God; and every one running to save himself, as it pleased God to direct him, many Men and Women were slain; others being fore wounded, escaped, which died shortly after; The poor Mans Box was taken and emptied. The Minister in the beginning of the Massacre ceased not to preach still, till one discharged his Peece against the Pulpit: Then falling upon his knees, he intreated the Lord to have mercy upon him; and upon his poor persecuted flock; and so coming down from the Pulpit, attempted to escape, but by the way he received divers wounds, whereupon finding himself as he thought, mortally hurt, he cried, Lord, into thy hand I commend my spirit, for thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth; yet before he was slain, some took him and carried him before the Duke, who said to him, who made thee so bold thus to seduce the People? Sir, said the Minister, I am no seducer, but have faithfully preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ to them. Then did the Duke curse and swear, saying, Death of God, doth the Gospel teach sedition? And calling the Provost, Slanders.

Provost, he said, Take this Varlet and hang him upon a Gibbet; Then was the Minister delivered to two Pages, who basely abused him: The Popish Women also threw dirt at him, and could scarce be restrained from tearing him to pieces. He was kept close Prisoner, none being suffered to bring him necessaries; and he was oft threatened to be fown up in a sack and drowned; yet at last, through Gods mercy, he was released, at the earnest request of the Prince of Portion. The Pulpit was broken down, the flain stript stark naked, and so the Duke departed with his Bloody Troops, founding his Trumpets as if he had obtained a great Victory.

A special Providence.

Barbarous cruelty.

When he came to Paris, he with the Constable and Marshal of Saint Andrews, seized upon the King, defaced and overthrew the places where they of the Religion used to assemble, which so encouraged the Popish party, that in every place they so abused those of the Religion, as the most cruel Barbarians would have been ashamed to do the like. This caused a Civil War, wherein the Duke of Guise, having taken Roan, sacked it for three days space, and executed many of the Citizens.

Not long after he went to Orleanse, boasting that within Twenty-four hours he would win the Town, and neither spare Man, Woman, nor Child in it, and that he would so destroy the Town that the memory of it should be extinct for ever. But Man purposes, and God disposes; For the same night there was a young Gentleman named John Poltro, who watching his opportunity, shot him with his Pistol laden with three Bullets, whereof he shortly after died; And Poltro declared at his death, that he did it to deliver France, and especially the City of Orleanse from the violence of the Duke of Guise; After whose death peace was shortly after concluded between the Queen-mother and the Protestants.

Gods Judgment on Persecutors.

But before this peace took place, those of the Religion suffered much in sundry parts of the Realm.

In Paris they were persecuted cruelly, the Popish People being wholly set upon Blood, and the Parliament there sparing neither great nor small that fell into their Hands, either of that City, or such as were brought thither upon appeal, or summons.

Persecution in Paris.

At senlis many godly Christians suffered much, some were beheaded, some murdered in a popular tumult, some were whipt, some imprisoned, some fined, and others sent to the Gallies, not sparing the simple Women. Yet through Gods mercy, some escaped, amongst whom was one John Gardens and his Wife, who lived with his Wife and Child in the Fields, at length determined to go back into the City, casting themselves upon Gods providence; But when they came into the Suburbs, they met some who bad the Soldiers to put them to the Sword. The Woman kneeling down, begged of the Soldiers, that if they must needs die, they would kill her Child first, laying, that so she should die with the more comfort; which Speech of hers so wrought upon the Souldiers, that they spared all their lives.

At senlis.

A special Providence.

In Chaalons there was a godly Minister, called Fournier, apprehended and spoiled of all that he had: They stripped him also of his apparel, instead whereof they put him on a thredbare cloak, and so carried him away in a Cart, by reason of an hurt that he had gotten in one of his Feet. By the way, they did nothing but jeer and scoff at him, and every moment he was in danger of his life; the rude people also had almost pulled him in pieces; But it pleased God that he was preserved by those which had designed him to death. When he came to Munchon he was cast into Prison, and after a while there came a Captain to him with many Soldiers, who mixing mocks and threatnings together, sward that within three hours he should be hewen in pieces. After them came in some of the Judges, commanding the Jailor to load him with Irons, saying to him, You are no better I am sure than Saint Peter, whom they laid in Prison: But if you have as much Faith as he, God will then deliver you as he did him, by sending an Angel to you. I will not, said Fournier, compare my self with Saint Peter, yet it is not twelve years ago, since for Preaching the same Doctrine that Peter did, I was imprisoned at Tholouie, and there was admirably delivered. And though Peter was delivered out of Prison, yet in the end he glorified God by his death; and if I should be counted worthy with him to suffer for the truth, may it not be said that I have the like precious Faith with Saint Peter? When they were gone, the Jailor forbore putting Bolts upon him, because of his fore Leg, yet did he put him into a straiter Prison.

Popish cruelty.

Afterwards the Duke of Guise being made Governor in that place, he was put to the torture, where first they strained his Thumbs so hard with a small Cord that Blood came forth: Then turning his Arms behind his Back, they hoisted him up with a Rope put between his Thumbs, twitching him up and letting him down five or six times: They tied also great Stones to both his great Toes, and let him hang till his spirits failed; then they let him fall with such violence upon his Face, that he was grievously hurt thereby. Then was he thrown into Prison, and they would not suffer him to have a Chirurgion to cure him of the gashes which the Cords had made in his flesh even to the bare Bones: so that his torment and anguish was very great, neither could he lift his Hands to his Mouth, which he was likely to lose the use of. But it so fell out by Gods providence, that after he was condemned, news coming of the Duke of Guise his death, his Enemies began to tremble, and some of his Judges coming to him in Prison, asked him, If he did not bear them ill will? He answered, That Men of his Profession and Religion ought not to bear malice to any, being enjoined by God to love and pray for those that persecute them; Shewing also, That whatsoever troubles had befallen him; were none other but such as God had fore-ordained for the setting forth of his own glory, for which he esteemed himself most happy; yet he warned them to lay to heart the wrong that they had done him, lest the vengeance of God did sooner or later overtake them for it. The next day Buisi, one of his Persecutors, having received Letters from the Constable of France to release him, swore that he should be delivered indeed, but into the Hands of the multitude.

His delivery.

But it pleased God that just at that time there came by, the Prince of Portion with his Germane Soldiers, which were for the Protestants, who sent word that they would not leave so much as a House standing except they would deliver Fournier; This so affrighted his Enemies that they released him out of Prison, protected him from the violence of the multitude, and conveyed him in safety to the Prince: There he was kindly welcomed and entertained, all grieving for the miseries which he had indured, and two days after he preached before the Prince and his followers; and the day after at the instant request of the Protestants of Virty, he went to them to Preach and Baptize their Children, and shortly after was called to Ver, where he gathered a Congregation, and spent some time amongst them with wonderful fruit; But by reason that he was so extremely weakened by his strait imprisonment and tortures, (being above fifty years old,) he soon after finished his course, and quietly resigned up his Soul unto God.

His death.

At Amiens: Bibles burnt.

At Amiens, all Bibles, New Testaments, and Psalm-Books were sought for and openly burnt, as also the Ministers Pulpit. Then did the Guisians proceed to killing some of the Protestants, and casting them into the River, some they shot to death, and others they hanged.

At Abbeville.

At Abbeville they slew the Lord of Hancort, with divers others; one Beliard they dragged along the Streets with his Face downwards, and then drowned him in the River.

At Meaux.

At Meaux the Protestants were the stronger party, and therefore continued the free exercise of their Religion for a while: But the Parliament of Paris gave judgment against them, and exposed them to the spoil of such as would undertake it: Then a Company of Soldiers entring the Town, disarmed the Citizens, Citizens, and slew about Four hundred of the Religion. Then Monsieur de Bois entering with more Soldiers committed a Thousand villanies; Women and Maids were ravished in the open Market-place and Streets; some were beaten and haled to Mass, Children were re-baptized; others married again; Houses were pillaged and plundered: Some that fled into the Fields died with hunger and cold. Many Men, Women and Children, were massacred and drowned; Infants were dashed against the Walls, and some others were hanged. The Executioners running into divers places, committed a world of mischief; and divers Priests amongst them slew some of the Protestants with their own Hands.

At Bois villanies.

At Troyes, Bibles and Divinity-Books were rent and torn in pieces; They of the Religion were murdered, and their Houses sacked; Eighteen Men were hanged; Women were dragged through the Streets, and cast into the River; and Infants were pulled from their Mothers Breasts, and re-baptized.

At Troyes Bibles burnt.

At Bar the Popish Enemies entering the Town, committed such cruelties as never were seen, especially against Women and little Children; Some of their Breasts they cut open, pulled out their Hearts and gnawed them with their Teeth, rejoicing that they had tasted of an Huguenots Heart: A young Counsellor they hanged at the request of his own Father; with most horrible Blasphemies they ravished Women and Girls.

At Bar:

Popish cruelty.

A Father unnatural.

Unnatural cruelty.

Monsieur de St. Esteen, with his two Brothers, were cruelly stabbed by their own Cousin-germane, their Wives were spoiled of all they had, and led away Prisoners.

The Pesants in some places committed infinite murders and mischiefs against those of the Religion; Monsieur de Vigney with his Wife and Servants they massacred in his own House, which afterward they pillaged and spoiled.

In Crant, the Pesants entering the Town, murdered many; one young Child together with his Father they burnt.

At Crant:

In Sens One hundred Protestants were cruelly murdered, and their naked Bodies thrown into the River; One hundred Houses were plundered, the Church where they preached was defaced.

At Sens:

At Auxerre one Colson was barbarously massacred; A fair young Gentlewoman was stabbed and cast into the River; many other outrages and robberies were committed.

At Auxerre:

At Nevers the Ministers were cast into Prison, whereof one perished miserably there; Another miraculously escaped; Children were re-baptized, marriages reiterated, and many Houses plundered.

At Nevers:

The Popish party entering Chastillon, left no kind of cruelty unexercised, neither upon Women nor Children, old nor young; yea not sparing the Women with Child that were ready to be delivered.

At Chastillon:

At Guyen they used all the cruelty that possibly could be invented; and some Italians, in hatred of their Religion, cut an Infant in two pieces, and eat his Liver.

At Guyen:

At Montargis, there lived the Lady Rene, Dutchess Dowager of Ferrara, and Daughter to King Lewis the Twelfth; The Duke of Guise sent thither one Malicorn, a Knight of the Order, who entering the Town, murdered some of the Religion, and committed other outrages; Then he proceeded so far as to threaten the Lady to batter her Castle with Cannon-shot, if she would not deliver up those of the Religion which were with her; To whom the Princess bravely answered, I charge you, look what you enterprise; For no Man in the Realm can command me but the King only; and if you proceed to your battery, I will stand in the breach, to try whether you dare kill the Daughter of a King; neither do I want means or power to be revenged on your boldness, even to the Infants of your rebellious race. This stout answer made Malicorn to pull in his horns and depart.

At Montargis:

A brave answer of the Lady Rene.

At Monliu.

'At Monliu, Monsieur de Monture used all extremity against the Protestants; and without any form of Law he hanged up two Artificers, drave others out, and plundered their Houses, and murdered many.

At Mans.

At Mans Two hundred Persons were put to death, Men, Women, and Children: The Houses of the Protestants were pillaged; such as were fled, were executed by their pictures, their goods confiscated, and their Children made incapable of their offices and estates, yea of inheriting their Lands. Some they beheaded; Others they hung up; Others they massacred, and being half dead, threw them into the River: Above One hundred and twenty Men, Women, and Children were murdered in the neighboring Villages. One Captain threw above fifty persons in his Fishpond to feed his Pikes, and above as many more were thrown into Ditches,

One godly Man, a Weaver, had his Throat cut, and his Mouth stuffed with the Leaves of a New Testament which they found about him.

At Angers.

Bibles burnt.

Horrible blasphemies.

At Angers they murdered a godly Minister, cast many into prison, robbed the Houses of others, and slew such as they found therein: In a Merchants House, finding many Books of the holy Scriptures, they openly burnt them in the middle of the Town: One fair guilt Bible they hung upon an Halberd, and carried it in Procession, saying, Behold truth hanged, the truth of the Huguenots, the truth of all the Devils: Behold the mighty God, behold the everlasting God will speak; and when they came to the Bridg, they threw it into the River, crying louder, Behold the truth of all the Devils drowned.

Above eighty other persons were executed. An aged Gentlewoman of the age of seventy years was beaten to death with their Pistols; Then drawn through the dirty Streets, and thrown into the River, terming her, The Mother of the Devil, that preached to the Huguenots. A Counsellers Wife that lay Bed-ridden was murdered; Women and Maids were ravished: Two young Maids were ravished before their Fathers Face, who was forced to look on the while: All that were but suspected to be of the Religion, were massacred, and their Houses pillaged. A valiant Captain, contrary to their Faith given to him, they broke upon a Cross, and so they left him hanging in great misery till he died.

Popish perfidiousness.

A bloody Edict.

Anno 1562. A Decree was made by the Parliament of Paris, commanding all Catholicks presently to rise in Arms, to sound the Bells in every place, to destroy all those of the Religion without respect of quality, sex, or age, to spoil their Houses, and utterly to root them out. This encouraged all sorts of Rascals to rise up in Arms, forsaking their Vocations, and to march against the Protestants.

In Ligneuil.

John de Tour.

In Ligneuil they hanged up some, put out the Ministers Eyes, and then burnt him in a small fire: In other places they committed infinite villanies; One young Man they flayed alive; The Village of Aze they burnt down, and massacred thirty persons therein. A godly Minister was drowned, called John de Tour, at Seventy five years old.

At Tours.

Barbarous cruelties.

At Tours, One hundred and forty were murdered and cast into the River; divers others were drowned, sparing neither Man, Woman, nor Child. The President being suspected to favor them of the Religion, was beaten with staves, stript to his shirt, hanged up by one Foot, his Head in the Water up to the Brest, and whilst he was yet living, they ript up his Belly, pluckt out his Guts, and threw them into the River; and sticking his Heart upon the point of a Lance, they carried it about, saying, It was the Heart of the President of the Huguenots.

Shortly after came thither the Duke de Montpensier, who caused Gibbets, Wheels and Stakes to be set up, whereupon many more, especially of the richer sort, were murdered to the number of some Hundreds; when they put any Man or Woman to death, they entred their Houses, murdered their Children, and took all their Goods.

A poor Woman, whose Husband was a little before drowned, having a young Infant sucking at her Breasts; and a beautiful Daughter of about Sixteen years old in her hand; These bloody Villains drew them to the River: There the Woman on her knees prayed ardently unto God: Then took her Infant, and shifting it in the Sun, laid it upon the grass: In the mean while this Hellish Rabble endeavored, partly by threats; partly by fair promises to seduce the young Maid; and one of them finer than the rest, promised to marry her if she would do it, so that the poor Wench stood in a disway, which her Mother perceiving, who was now ready to be thrown into the River, she earnestly exhorted her Daughter to persist in the truth; The Daughter hereupon cryed out, I will live and die with my Mother, whom I know to be a vertuous woman; as for your threats and promises I regard them not, do with me what you please. The Mother was not yet dead when they threw in the Daughter after, where making towards her Mother, they mutually embraced each other, and so yielded up their Souls into the hands of God.

Also in the same City there was a godly Matron, called Glee, who was carried before the Captain, where she gave a reason of her Faith, and confirmed it by evident testimonies of Scripture: She disputed also with some Fryers, whom she so silenced that they had nothing to say, but that she was in a damnable condition. It seems so indeed, saith she, being in your hands; But I have a God that will not fail nor forsake me, &c. Then was she committed to Prison, where she was much solicited to recant, but all in vain; For she spake her mind freely, and comforted the Prisoners which were in the same Prison for Religion. News being brought her that she was condemned to be hanged, when the Rope was put about her Neck, she kneeled down, praising and magnifying the Name of God, in that he shewed her such mercy as by this death to deliver her out of the troubles of this wretched world, as also for that it pleased the Lord to honor her so far as to die for his Truth, and to wear his livery, meaning the Halter; Then she brake her fast with the rest of the company, and giving thanks to God, she exhorted them to be of good courage, and to trust to the end in his free mercy, &c. As she went to execution, a Kinswoman met her with her little Children, perswading her to recant, telling her that thereby she might preserve her life, and see those her Babes provided for; This meeting wrought so upon her motherly affection, as made her shed plenty of tears; But presently taking new courage, she said, I love my Children dearly, yet neither for love to them, nor for any thing else in the world, will I renounce my God or his truth. God will be a Father to these my Children, and will provide better for them than I could have done, and therefore to his providence and protection I commend and leave them. At the place of execution having prayed to, and praised God with a chearful heart and voice, she quietly resigned up her spirit unto God.

The Duke de Aumale in Normandy, took Pontea de Mer by subtilty, where he used all kinds of cruelty, especially against the Minister, Master Briene; Shortly after, Roan was besieged, and two Forts taken, wherein they put all to the Sword, the Queen-mother in an impudent manner leading the King, who was but twelve years old, to shew him the naked Bodies of the Women weltring in their own Blood; After divers assaults the City of Roan was taken, wherein the Kings Soldiers used all kind of monstrous cruelty, massacring all they met: Many English and Scott Soldiers were hanged; the sick and wounded were cast into the River: Divers Ministers were retreated into a strong Tower, which they yielded upon promise of safety, but contrary thereunto they were cast into Prison; Augustine Marlorat, with three Counsellors were condemned to be hanged, which was presently executed, with many opprobrious speeches against Marlorat; The sackage of this Town lasted four months together, in which space divers were executed.

In Valoungnes divers persons of good quality were massacred, and the Houses of the Protestants were filled with Soldiers that did what they listed therein. Amongst other outrages they slew a godly Minister, called Monsieur de Valoungnes, whose Body they stripped naked, dragged it up and down his House with many scorns and jeers; At last bringing it into the Chamber where he used to preach to his people, they spurned his corps, saying, Now pray to God, and preach if thou canst; The Priests that were present stuffed his mouth and wounds with the Leaves of his Bible, saying to him, Preach the truth of thy God, and call upon him now to help thee.

In Vire as they came from a Sermon, some were slain, some stoned, and a while after many were put to the Sword.

In and about Agen, Monluc killed and massacred many, two young Children were roasted.

In the Castle of Reime, Monluc used great cruelty against those of the Religion, sparing none, but murdering young Children in their Mothers Arms, and then killing the Mothers: Some other Women they reserved for their lust, which they so abused, that (saith mine Author) I abhor to write it. Above Five hundred men were hanged upon Gibbets, amongst whom was a grave Counsellor in his long Gown and square Cap. One poor Man they cut and mangled in several parts of his Body, filling all his wounds with salt.

In the City of Blois there was a godly Woman called Nichola, at whose House some holy people used to meet to pray, and confer together for their mutual edification and comfort. The murderers hearing of it, came rushing in, thinking to have found a Minister preaching, but being disappointed in their expectations, they dragged these good Women out by the Hair of the Head, loaded them with many stripes, and then threw them into the River: But behold a singular Providence! God so endowed them with strength and skill, that they swam safely to an Island: Yet after a while some Watermen finding them there, they stript them stark naked, and threw them again into the River, yet they still sought to save themselves by swimming, and coming at last to the Suburbs of Vienne, they were there most cruelly knocked on the Head by the bloody Papists.

Monluc having defeated a party of the Protestants under Monsieur Duras, he took divers Prisoners, most of which he hanged, especially the Ministers. Amongst the Prisoners was a Captain called La-mothe, whom Monluc meeting with, gave him divers stabs with a Dagger, and thrust him through with a Rapier, saying, Villain, thou shalt die in despite of God: But he proved a liar; For the Man being carried away, though he had many mortal wounds, yet he was wonderfully cured and lived after.

In Guillac, the murders committed upon the Protestants were many and horrible; and amongst others this was one of their practices; There was by the City, the Abbey of St. Michael, built upon a very high Rock, under which ran a swift and deep River called Tar. Many of the Protestants they forced to go up to the top of this Rock, whom they threw headlong down into the River; By the way there was another Rock, upon which most of the Bodies falling, were dashed and broken all to pieces, and if any escaped with life into the River, they had their Cutthroats waiting upon the River in Boats to knock them on the Head; Amongst others there was one Peter Domo, an Apothecaries Servant, who seeing them bent to murder him, requested that he might have leave to cast himself down from the top of the Abbey, provided that if God should preserve him in the fall, they would suffer him to escape with life: This they promised; whereupon having made his Prayers to God, he fetched his leap from the top of the Abby, and flew so far, that missing the Rocks under him, he fell safely into the River, and endeavored to swim out with life; But these perfidious Villains, contrary to their promise made, knocked him on the Head and slew him.

The Persecution in the town of the Castillon.

In Souzaize, there was one Captain Durre, who with his Soldiers going in to the House of a godly Widow, called Castille Ragues, he caused her to be bound with Cords, and a Rope to be put about her Neck, by which he hauled her up and down, almost strangling her; Then he asked her, how often she had played the Whore with those of her Religion? She answered, That in their Christian meetings they had no such Villanies committed. Durre fretting and fuming at this answer, took her by both the Cheeks, and often dashed her Head with such violence against the Wall, that he had almost beaten out her Brains; Then he required her to give him the Seven hundred pieces of Gold which she had hidden; she told him that she was a poor Woman, and had only one French penny: This more enraged him, whereupon he drew her again about by the Neck, and applied burning hot Eggs to her Arm-pits, till they were all blistered, bidding her in derision, to cry to her Father which was in Heaven. She answered, I will not cry aloud for thee, and yet my God can hear me well enough, and when his pleasure is, he will deliver me out of thy hand. This made him so to BlaspHEME that the poor Woman was more afflicted to hear his Blaphemies than with all her pain. Then did he call her Hogswate Whore, telling her that these were but the beginnings of her sorrows, except she fetched him out her Gold, which if she refused, he would draw her Cheeks and Breasts with Lard, and so roast her quick, and afterwards throw her headlong from the highest Steeple in the Town. well, said she, If you throw my Body never so low, that shall not hinder my Soul from ascending into Heaven: This her courage and constancy did still further enrage him; Then did he open her Mouth with his Dagger, and crammed lime down her Throat; After which he made her drink a Glass of Urine which himself had made before her, withal throwing the Glass with the remainder into her Face. After this he carried her to his quarters, where with strange cruelties he intended to have slain her: But some of the Neighbors pitying her sad condition, redeemed her from him with Ten Crowns, and conveyed her to her House, where shortly after she finished her days.

Some other of these Hell-hounds meeting with one Peter Koch, constrained him to dig his own grave, and then to try how it fitted him; which whilst he was doing, they buried him alive.

In Saint Marjans in Castillon, they took the Wife of one Andrew Renard, stripped her stark naked, and would have violated her chastity, which she resisting, they whipt her most cruelly, wounded her with their Swords, crowned her with Thorns, and lastly shot her to death.

They took also one Fanetta Calvin, whom they carried into the City of Brignole, stripped her, whipt her cruelly, crowned her with Thorns, and first stoned, and afterwards burned her.

In Mont de Marfin, Six of the principal Men had their Heads stricken off, others were executed divers ways: One was buried quick, and a young Woman being pursued to be ravished, threw her self out of a Window and died.

In Tholouse the Papiests fell upon the Protestants, hurt many, killed some outright, divers they threw into a Well; Then did some Counsellors proclaim, that they should not spare to kill and spoil all them of the Religion, for that they were licensed by the King and Pope. This soon ran through all the Villages, and the Papiests rang their Bells; In Tholouse were about Thirty thousand Protestants, so that there began one of the most horrible Massacres that was in those parts. The Prisons were presently filled, and many were knocked on the Head at the Prison doors, because they could hold no more: The River in a short space was covered with dead Bodies; many were thrown into the Streets out at the Windows; If any sought to escape out of the Water, they were presently slain with Swords or Stones.

Some of the Protestants gat into the Town-house, where they stood upon their guard, and at last it was agreed, that leaving their Arms, they should depart in safety; and so after they had received the Sacrament, commended themselves

Carcasson.

At Carcasson those of the Religion being gone out of the Town to hear a Sermon, when they returned, the Gates were shut, and the Papists shot at them, who afterwards issuing out against them, slew some, and hurt others: One they beat down, cutting off his Nose and Ears, and pulling out his Eyes; some they took Prisoners, whom they hanged; one they beheaded, and put others to great ransoms. One they took, blacked his Face, Hands and Feet, and gave it out that he had a Devil within him, then hanged him, and threw his Body to the Dogs; Others they banished, or condemned to the Gallies.

Popish lies.

At Limoux.

In Limoux the Papists used all manner of cruelty, deflowering Women and very Girls in a most detestable manner; The Minister was slain, Two Gentlemen, and Sixty others were hanged. A Widdow of great account redeemed the virginity of her only Daughter with a great sum of money; But the Villain that promised to defend her, ravished her in her Mothers presence, and then killed them both. Yea, after peace was proclaimed, Fourteen of the Religion coming thither were all slain.

Abominable villany.

At Nonnay.

Blasphemy.

Barbarous cruelties.

In Nonnay, Monsieur Chaumont having surprised the Town, murdered many Protestants, spitting out infinite and horrible Blasphemies against God himself: A Locksmith being commanded to despise and Blaspheme God, because he refused to do it, was presently hewen in pieces; For the same cause another was brained with the butt end of a Musket: A Naylor, because he would not give himself to the Devil, was drawn about his shop by the Ears; Then being laid on his Anvile, they beat his Head in pieces with Hammers; yea all manner of cruelty was used that could be devised. Three of the principal in the Town were thrown down from an high Tower; many others were thrown down to make sport: Some were burnt in their Houses, others thrown out at Windows; others stabbed in the Streets: Women and Maids were most shamefully handled. A young Woman that was found hid in an House with her Husband, was first ravished before her Husbands Face, then forced to hold a Rapier; wherewith one thrusting her Arm, made her kill her own Husband.

At Foix.

In Foix, many Protestants were cast into Prison, of whom some had their Arms and Legs cut off, and then were beheaded; Some burnt, some hanged, and others sent to the Gallies.

At Aurange.

Horrible cruelties.

Perfidiousness.

At Grenoble.At Cisterne.At Beaune.

In Aurange they killed the Protestants without distinction of age, sex, or quality: Some they stabbed, others they threw upon the points of Halberds; Some they hanged, others they burnt in the Churches; Of some they cut off their privy members, sparing neither old nor bed-ridden, nor the diseased in the Hospitals. Women and Maids were killed, others hanged out at Windows were harquebused, sucking Children massacred at their Mothers Breasts; Girls of Five or Six years old ravished and spoiled; The wounds of the dead were filled with Leaves torn out of Bibles. Those in the Castle yielding upon Oath and promise of safety, were all stabbed, or thrown over the Walls, being One hundred and ninety of them.

In Grenoble, they slew many of the Religion, and others they cast from the Bridge into the River.

In Cisterne, the Men that were of the Religion being fled, the Popish party fell upon the Women and Children, wherof they slew Three or four hundred: Some Women with Child were ript up, many were buried quick; Some had their Throats cut like Sheep; others were drawn through the Streets, and beaten to death with Clubs.

In Beaune, they were bereaved of the exercise of Religion, their were three Ministers imprisoned; many were driven out of the Town to the number of Eight Eight hundred persons, with Women and Children: Their Houses were filled with Soldiers who made spoil of all; such as were found in their Houses, were vilely abused, and some were slain.

In Malcon the Bloody Persecutors having apprehended a godly and learned Minister called Bonnet Bor, who was of a very unblameable life, having served twenty years in the Ministry, and in that time had been put to his ranome three times. They carried him along the Streets with a thousand scoffs and scorns, smiting him with their Fists, thrusting him up and down; and then made a Proclamation, That whosoever would hear this holy Man Preach, should come to the Slaughter-house: At which place, they again buffeted and mocked him two hours together. Hereupon he requested them, that before his death they would permit him to pray to God; then one stepping to him, cut off half his Nose, and one of his Ears, saying, Now pray as long as thou wilt, and then we will send thee to all the Devils. And so this holy Man kneeling down, prayed with such fervency of spirit, that drew sighs from some of the Murtherers: And afterwards directing his Speech to him that had cut off his Nose, he said, Friend, I am now ready to suffer what thou hast further to inflict upon me: But I intreat thee and thy companions to bethink you well of the outrages committed by you against this poor City; for there is a God in Heaven, before whose Tribunal you must shortly give an account of these your cruelties. A Captain passing by, cried, Send that wretched Man to the Devil: Which one of them hearing, took him by the hand, pretending to have him to the River to wash off his Blood; but when he came thither, he threw him into it, battering him with stones till he was drowned.

CHAP. XXXV.

The History of the Massacre at Paris.

ANno 1571. After the end of the Third Civil War in France, great means was used to draw the chief of the Protestants to Paris, under pretence of a Marriage between the Prince of Navar, and the Lady Margaret, Sister to the King of France. But in the mean time, the Papiſts in Roan murdered divers Protestants, as they came from a Sermon, and grievously beat others: This seemed much to displease the King; and three or four were executed for the mutiny. Then were the Articles of Marriage agreed upon; the place for it, Paris, and the Admiral sent to by the King, to be present at the Wedding; and to prevent all jealousies, those of the House of Guise were sent away; whereat they seemed much discontented. The Admiral was allowed to bring with him Fifty Gentlemen armed for his greater security. When he came to Paris, he was honorably received and conducted to the King, who called him his Father, protesting, That in all his life he had not seen any day more agreeable to his mind than that; wherein he assured himself to see the end of all troubles, and the beginning of firm peace and quietness in his Realm. The Queen-Mother, and the rest of the great Courtiers, received him with greater favor than he expected. Then did the King send him One hundred thousand Franks out of his Treasury, for the losses which he had received in the Wars, &c.

Devilish
lation.

The Admiral had divers Advertisements of the intended Treachery; yet God so blinded him at that time, though a very prudent Man, that he gave little heed to them. Yea, such a general stupidity seized upon the Protestants, that their minds were very wavering, and few there were that shewed themselves zealously bent to Religion: But all, both great and small, thinking deeply upon worldly matters, built them goodly castles in the air.

In the former of these Castles.

The Queen of Navar dieth.

Then was the Queen of Navar sent for by the King of France to Paris, to prepare all things against the wedding: But presently after her coming, she fell sick of a Feavor, made her will in a most Christian manner, had much inward joy and comfort, and at five days end died, not without suspicion of poison from certain perfumes given to her: And after her death, the Chirurgions were not suffered to open her head, where the mischief lay, whereby it was the better concealed.

The Admiral was again advertised of his danger; but he, resting upon the testimony of a good Conscience, and the providence of God, mis-intrepreted those advices, as if they proceeded from men desirous of new troubles. Many Lords and Gentlemen of the Religion accompanied the King of Navar, and the Prince of Conde to Paris.

Diffimulation.

The King of France, the better to delude the Protestants, spake openly, That he gave not his Sister to the King of Navar only, but, as it were, to the whole Church of the Protestants to joyn with them in an indissoluble union, and as a tie to their peace and safety.

The King of Navar married.

August 17. Anno 1572. The King of Navar, and the Lady Margaret were married by the Cardinal of Bourborn, upon a Scaffold, in the sight of all the people, and that day was spent in Banquets, Dances, and Masks, with a strange mixture of Protestants and Papists together: But in the mean time the Queen-Mother with her Privadoes, as also the Duke of Anjou, with the Guises, consulted about killing the Admiral, and dividing the Protestants.

The Admiral shot.

Five days after, as the Admiral came from the Court, accompanied with about fifteen Gentlemen, reading a Petition as he went, one shot at him with a Caliver; the Bullet taking away his right Forefinger, hurt him in the left Arm. He that shot had a Spanish Jennet at the back-door of his Lodging, upon which, he immediately mounted and escaped. The door being burst open, it was found that the Caliver left behind, was brought to the House, the day before, by one Chally, Steward of the Kings House, and a great dealer for the Duke of Guise: The Admiral being conveyed to his Lodging, shewed most admirable piety, patience, and constancy.

Diffimulation.

The King complained of the mischief, swearing, and promising to execute such Justice upon the Offender, that the Admiral, and all his Friends, should think themselves well satisfied. He caused also all the Gates of Paris to be shut, Swearing and Blaspheming, that he would not that they which had done the Fact should escape: He also appointed many Lords and Gentlemen, of the Protestants, to lodge in the Admirals Quarter, the better, as he pretended, to secure themselves against any danger.

neglected.

After noon the King went to visit the Admiral, and there, with many Oaths and Protestations, assured him of his love to him, care over him and them of the Religion, and that he would severely punish the Authors of his present hurt. Presently after the Vidame of Chartres (John de Ferriers) advised the King of Navar, the Prince of Conde, the Admiral, and other chief Lords of the Religion, presently to depart out of Paris, assuring them that that blow was but the beginning of the Tragedy which was soon to insue; but they trusting to the Kings word, rested secure.

Deep dissimu-
lation.

That day also, the King wrote to the Ambassadors of Foreign Princes, and to the Governors of all his Provinces; how much he was offended at the Admirals hurt, how severely he would punish it, yea, he desired, That all the World might know how much he was offended at it; and the Queen-Mother wrote the like.

The Massacre
suspected.

In the mean time, the Dukes of Anjou and Guise, implored some to go from House to House to take the names of all the Protestants, and to return the Catalogue to them; so that presently after, they of the Religion began to discover, that some Bloody intentions were hatching against the Admiral and his Friends. For the King set a Guard of fifty Harquebushiers at the Admirals Gate. Great store store of Arms were carried into the  Louvre ; and about Evening all the people were in Arms.

The chief of the Protestants hereupon assembled again in the Admirals Lodging, where the Vidame of  Chartres  advised as before, that they should essay presently to carry the Admiral out of  Paris , and that the rest should presently dislodge; yet all the rest refused this counsel, resolving to relie upon the Kings word, who had promised them Justice.

In the Evening some Protestant Gentlemen proffered to watch with the Admiral, but he would not suffer them: At night the Duke of  Guise  sent for the Captain of the  Switzers , shewing him his Commission to kill the Admiral, and all his partakers, exhorting him and his men to be courageous in shedding of Blood: At midnight the Provost, Sheriffs, and Captains of every Ward had the same shewed them, with assurance, That through the whole Realm the like should be done to all the Protestants, and that the Watch-word for the general Massacre should be, the tolling of the Bell in the Palace to be rung at the break of day, and the Badge of the Executioners should be a white Handkerchief tied on their Arms, and a white Cross in their Hats; the Duke of  Guise , and his Associates, were to begin at the Admirals Lodging. Some of the Protestants being awakened with the noise in the Streets of Men running up and down in Arms, and with Torchcs, gat up to inquire what was the matter; but presently the Bell rung, and the Duke of  Guise  with his Cut-throats hasted to, and knocked at the Admirals Gates: He that opened them was presently stabbed; the Admiral hearing the noise, gat out of Bed, and joyned with his Minister ( Master Merlin ) in fervent Prayer, commending his Soul into the hands of God. Then said he,  It is long since I disposed my self to die; save you your selves, if it be possible, for you cannot save my life. I commit my Soul into the hands and mercy of God.  Then did  Merlin  his Minister, and the rest get up to the top of the house, and crept out of the Windows into the Gutters to hide themselves; yet most of them were slain in the next house. Then seven or eight men brake into the Admirals Chamber, and one of them went to him with his naked Sword, offering him the point, to whom he said,  Young Man, thou oughtest to respect my age and infirmity, yet shalt thou not shorten my life.  With that he thrust him into the Body; and all the rest laid at him; so that he fell to the ground, where he lay gasping. The Duke of  Guise  below, called to them to throw his Body out at Window, which they did: His face being all bloody, the Duke of  Guise  wiped it, and looking on it, said,  Now I know him, it is he;  and so kicked him on the face with his foot, whom all the Murtherers in  France  feared so much when he was alive.

Then went he out into the Streets, crying,  Courage my fellows, we have here made a good beginning, let us now fall upon the rest, the King commands it. It is his expresse pleasure, he commands it.  The Admirals Head was sent to the King and Queen-Mother, and by them sent to the Pope and Cardinal of  Lorrain  as a grateful present. The Pope when he heard the news, set apart a day of publick Thanksgiving to God, in the Church of  St. Lewis , and published a Bull of extraordinary Indulgences to such as should pray for the Heavenly assistance to the King and Kingdom of  France ,  Strada . The Common people cut off the Admirals hands and privy members, drawing his Body about the Streets three days, and then hung it by the feet upon the Gallows.

All the Attendants of the King of  Navar  and Prince of  Conde  which lay in the Kings Palace were Massacred; the like was done to the Lords and Gentlemen that lay about the Admirals lodging, and then through all the City were the Protestants murdered, so that that night and the two next days there were slain in  Paris  about ten thousand persons of all Ranks, Ages, and Sexs, yea, they spared not Children in the Cradle, nor Infants in their Mothers wombs. But to colour this their villany, they gave it out, that the  Huguenots  had conspired to kill the King; they boasted also that they had in one day done that, which Processes, sentences of Justice, and open War could not do in twelve years.

The Lords and Gentlemen were most inhumanely murdered, some in their Beds, others on the roofs of their Houses, and in all other places wheresoever they were found.

The River died red with blood.

There were at this time in Paris about sixty thousand men with Pistols, Pikes, Curtelaces, Poinards, Knives, and such other bloody Instruments, that ran up and down swearing and Blaspheming the sacred Majesty of God, cruelly massacring all that they met with: The Streets were covered with mangled Bodies, Gates and Doors defiled with Blood; shoutings and howlings of the Murtherers, mixed with the cries and groans of the dying; the breaking open of Doors and Windows, with the noise of Guns and Pistols, all which made an Hellish noise; multitudes of dead Bodies were thrown into the Seine, which was died red with their Blood.

Prince of Conde's zeal, and courage,

The King certified the King of Navar and the Prince of Conde of all that was done, saying, that he saved their lives upon condition that they should renounce their Religion, and turn Papists. The King of Navar desired him not to force his conscience, but to remember the Alliance so lately contracted betwixt them: The Prince of Conde with more zeal told him, that his Body and estate were in his power to do with them what he pleased; but for his Religion he was fully purposed not to forsake it, but to remain constant therein to the loss of his life; he put the King in mind also that he had given his Faith to him, and to those of the Religion, and therefore he hoped he would not falsifie his oath, &c. This so enraged the King that he called him Rebel, and the Son of a Rebellious person, with horrible threatnings that he should lose his Head, if within three days he altered not his mind.

Divellish dissimulation,

The King and his Confidants perceiving that this Massacre would not quench the Fire, but rather stir up the Protestants in other parts of the Kingdom to defend themselves; they presently dispatched away Letters to the Governors of Towns, with expresse commands to Massacre all the Protestants: yet at the same time the King wrote other Letters, wherein he laid the fault of the Murther of the Admiral upon the Duke of Guise; pretending that he had quieted all things in Paris, and intended that his Edicts of pacification should hold inviolably.

Above thirty thousand massacred in three months,

Upon the receipt of the first Letters, the Papists fell upon the Protestants at Meaux, Trois, Orleanse, and other places, and murdered them without all pity, besides such as were massacred in Villages and Fields, where they thought to save themselves, so that in a few weeks there were above thirty thousand persons massacred in France. But besides this general account, some particulars deserve remembrance, which are these that follow.

The Lord de la Place his holy zeal,

Monsieur de la Place, President of the Court of Requests, had a Captain armed that came into his House, telling him that the Duke of Guise, had slain the Admiral at the Kings appointment, with many other Huguenots, and that he was come to protect him in that common destruction; only he desired a sight of the Gold and Silver that was in his House: The Lord de la Place amazed at his audaciousness asked him whether he thought there was a King or no? The Captain Blaspheming, willed him to go with him to know the Kings pleasure; hereupon the Lord went from him to secure himself; then did the Captain rifle his House, taking above one thousand Crowns out of it: The Lord would have secured himself in three several Houses, all which refused to entertain him, which caused him to go back to his own House again, where he found his Wife very heavy, whom he rebuked, discoursed to her of the promises, told her that we must through many afflictions enter into the Kingdom of God, &c. which much comforted her: Then calling his Family together, he made an exhortation to them, went to Prayer, and began to read a Chapter in Job, with Calvins Exposition upon it. Then went he to Prayer again, resolving to suffer all torments of death, rather than to do any thing that might be dishonorable to God: Then came the Provost-Marshal with many Archers to his House, pretending to secure him, and safely to convey him to the King, who would speak with him; De la Place told him that he was most willing to do it, but saw it impossible (in regard of the horrible Massacres committed every where) without apparent danger of his life; In brief, presently after came the Provost of Merchants, who would needs also have him to the King, yet he would have excused it as before, but the Provost would have no nay, wherefore resolving upon death, which he saw he could not avoid, he embraced his Wife, wishing her above all things, to continue in the fear of God, and so went on his way boldly, but in the Street some Murtherers that attended there for his coming, with their Daggers stabbed him, and then pillaged him, carrying his Body into a Stable, and covering his Face over with Dung, and the next day they threw him into the River.

The Lord de la Place murdered.

Peter Ramus also, the Kings Professor in Logick was not forgotten; the murtherers breaking into the Colledge of Priests where he was, massacred him; and then cast him out of the Chamber Window, so that his Bowels issued out on the Stones: Then was his Body trailed through the Streets, and whipt by certain young Scholars, who were set on by their Popish Tutors to do it.

Peter Ramus murdered.

A Godly young man going early abroad on the Sabbath Morning, and hearing of the death of the Admiral, and seeing the insurrection, out of a singular Child-like affection to his Mother, he hasted home, informed her of the danger, secured her in a place of great secrecie; after which he shut himself up in his Study, by Prayer to fit himself for death, into which the murtherers breaking with Battle-axes and Staves, so loaded him with blows on the Head, that he received his blood into his own hands; and when they had killed him, they threw him into the River.

A dutiful and loving Son.

Two Ministers belonging to the King of Navar were also murdered, and thrown into the River: God miraculously preserving all the other Ministers in the City.

Two Ministers murdered.

A Jeweller being in Bed with his Wife, who at that time had the Midwife with her, being near the time of her Delivery, these bloody Villains came knocking at the Door, and in the Kings name demanded entrance; the woman as ill as she was, opened the Door, whereupon rushing in, they stabbed her Husband in his Bed; the Midwife seeing that they were bent to murder the woman also, earnestly intreated them to tarry at least so long till the Infant (which would be the twentieth Child that God had given her) was Born, but notwithstanding her request, they took the woman, and thrust a Dagger into her Fundament up to the Hilt; the woman finding her self mortally wounded, yet desirous to bring forth her Fruit, fled into a Corn loft, whither these Tygers pursuing her, gave her another stab into the Belly, and so cast her out of the Window into the Street, and upon the fall, the Child came forth of her Body, the head foremost, gaping and yawning in a pitiful manner.

Helthless cruelty.

One of these murtherers snatching up a little Child in his Arms, the poor babe began to play with his Beard, and to smile upon him, but instead of being moved to compassion, this Villain, whose heart was harder than the Rocks, wounded it with his Dagger, and cast it all gore Blood into the River.

An Infant murdered.

The Kings Letters being come to Meaux upon the same Sabbath, to Coffet the Kings Attorney there, upon the sight of them, he presently went about to his Cut-throats, warning them to come to him armed at seven a'clock at night, withal causing the Gates of the City to be shut up, the hour being come, he with his Partisans went up and down, cruelly murthering the innocent Servants of Jesus Christ, in which Bloody employment they spent all that night: The next day they pillaged their houses, and took above two hundred Protestants more, and shut them up in prison; the day after towards evening, Coffet with his companions went to the prison, where having a Catalogue of the prisoners names, names, Coffet called them out one by one, and then they murdered them, till they were weary : Then they went to Supper, that so they might breath and refresh themselves ; and then filling themselves with Wine, they went back to glut themselves with Blood also : They took with them Butchers Axes, that they might dispatch them the more easily, with which, as they called them forth, they knocked them down and murdered them. Amongst those that were thus Butchered, was an Elder of the Reformed Church, who praying for his Enemies, they laughed him to scorn ; and because he had a Buff-coat on, which they were loth to spoil, they opened it before, and stabbed him into the Brest.

Another was an ancient Man that had been Sheriff of the City, him they were not content to kill out-right, but first cut off his Nose, Ears, and Privy Members ; then they gave him several small thrusts into the Body, tossing him up and down, till through loss of Blood he fell down, calling upon the name of the Lord : And so with many wounds he was slain.

At Troyes.

The Kings Letters being come to Troyes, the Protestants were all shut up in Prison : Then did the Bailiff send for the Common Hangman to murder them ; but he refused, saying, That his Office was only to execute such as were legally condemned ; and so went his way. Then was the Keeper of the Prison sent for, who being sick, he sent one Martin to know what the business was, to whom the Bailiff imparted the matter, wishing him to murder all the Prisoners ; and that their Blood might not run out into the Street, he bad him to make a great trench in the midst of the Prison, and to cause certain Vessels to be set into it to receive the Blood. This Martin going back with abhorrency of the Fact, concealed it from the Jailor ; the next day the Bailiff came to the Prison, and smiling, asked the Jailor, If it was done ? But he, being ignorant of his meaning, asked him, what should be done ? Hereupon the Bailiff was so enraged, that he was ready to strike him with his Dagger, till he promised to perform his will : Then did the Jailor go to the Prisoners, who were in the Court recreating themselves, and shut them up one by one in their several Cells, which made them suspect that they were destined to slaughter ; and therefore they betook themselves to Prayer. The Jailor called his companions about him, acquainted them what was given him in charge, and caused them to swear to execute it : But when they approached to the Prisoners, they were so surpris'd with fear, that they stood gazing one upon another, having not hearts to act so horrid a deed. Whereupon they returned to the Jailors Lodge, and sent for eight quarts of the strongest Wine, with other things, to intoxicate their Brains. Then they took a Catalogue of all their Prisoners, and gave it to one Martin to call them forth in order. The first Prisoner being called for, presented himself with a chearful countenance, calling upon the name of the Lord ; then opened his Brest to them, receiving the mortal stroke, whereof he died.

Another being called forth, one of them thrust at him several times with the point of his Halbard, wounding, but not killing him : Whereupon the Prisoner took the point of the Halbard, and set it against his heart, saying with a stedfast voice, Here Soldier, here, right at the heart, right at the heart ; and so finished his life.

The rest were all murdered in the like manner ; after which, the murderers made a great Pit in the backside of the Prison, into which they cast the Bodies one upon another, some of them yet breathing ; yea, one of them raised up himself above his fellows, whereupon they threw in Earth, and so smothered him. But the Bailiffs order of making a trench being not observed, the Blood of the slain ran so abundantly out of the Prison door, that thence, through the channel, it ran into the River, and turned it into the colour of Blood, which bred an horror in the very Papists themselves which saw it.

The Massacre
at Orleans.

At Orleans the Kings Edict for observing the Treaty of Peace was solemnly published, which made those of the Religion very secure, whereupon above Three hundred of them, Men, Women, and Children, met together at a Sermon ; but but the same night came the Kings Letters for the massacring of them all: Then did the Major and Sheriffs raise the Companies in Arms to put it in execution. One of these murtherers, with some of his Companions, went to a Noble Counsellors house, bidding themselves to Supper: The Counsellor ignorant of their intents, made them good cheer; but when Supper was ended, with horrible Blasphemies they murthered him, and then plundered his house.

About the Ramparts of the Wall, inhabited many of the Religion, amongst whom, all night was heard nothing but shooting of Guns and Pistols, breaking open of doors, fearful out-cries of the Men, Women, and Children, that were massacred, trampling of Horses, rumbling of Carts, that carried the dead Bodies away, and the cryings out of the murtherers that went up and down, howling out, Kill, kill them all, and then take the spoil.

This Massacre continued all the week long, the Bloody Beasts crying out to those whom they murthered, where is now your God? what is become of all your Prayers and Psalms now? Let your God whom you called upon, save you if he can. Others sang in scorn to them the forty third Psalm, Judge and revenge my cause, O Lord. Others, Have mercy on me, O God, &c. Yet notwithstanding all these taunts, the faithful died couragiously. In this Massacre the Papists boasted, that they had slain above Twelve thousand Men, besides Women and Children; some of them said Eighteen thousand.

Blasphemy?

On Tuesday night some of these murtherers came and knocked at the door of a Doctor of the Civil Law, and when he opened it to them, they told him, That he must die, whereupon he fell to Prayer with such ardency and affection, that they being amazed and over-ruled by a Divine Power, only robbed him and went away. The next day came some Schollars to his house, desiring to see his Library, which he shewed them: Then they asked, some one Book, some another, which he gave them; yet they told him they were not satisfied, but they must kill him. Whereupon betaking himself to Prayer, when he had done, he desired them to kill him there, which they refused, forcing him out into the Streets, leading him by the Schools; and there he again desired them to kill him in that place, where he had taught so long, but they still refused: And when they had led him a little farther, they knocked him on the head.

And to fulfil the measure of their cruelty, such Protestants as through fear revolted to them, they placed them in the fore-front of their companies, putting Weapons in their hands, compelling them to give the first onset, crying, Smite them, smite them; are they not your holy Brethren and Sisters? And if any refused, they presently slew him.

The revolt of Protestants.

In Lions, Mandolet Governor thereof, hearing of the Massacre at Paris, presently caused the City Gates to be shut, raised Forces, commanding them, That if any of the Protestants came out of their Houses, though but with Swords, they should presently kill them: But the Protestants seeing a storm coming, which they knew could not arise without the special Providence of God, set themselves to bear it with invincible patience. The day following, if any of them did but go abroad about their necessary occasions, they were presently clapt in Prison; and when night came, the murtherers entred their houses, which they rifled and plundered, and pretending to carry the Protestants to Prison, some they stabbed in the Streets, others they threw into the River, whereof some were carried down the stream half a mile below the City, by which means they escaped. The day after, Proclamation was made by sound of Trumpet, That all of the Religion should appear at such a place to know the Kings pleasure concerning them: Many went, but so soon as they came, they were were sent to several Prisons, and the night following every corner and part of the City was full of lamentable cries and shriekings, partly of such as were but massacred in their Houses, partly of such as were but half murdered, and so haled to be thrown into the River; and from that time there were such horrible murders committed in the City, as if the Devils in the likeness of men, ran roaring about to do mischief; the Sabbath Morning following, those that had hitherto escaped massacring, were then dispatched.

In the Arch-Bishops House there were three hundred and fifty Prisoners shut up, and a bloody crew of Cut-throats were appointed to murder them, to whom the Keys were delivered, and they rushing into the great Court, gave notice to the Prisoners with a loud voice that they must die; then having first taken all the Prisoners Purse, they fell upon them with Barbarous cruelty, hacking and hewing them in a furious manner, so that within an hour and an half, they were every one cut in pieces; the Prisoners were all slain, with their eyes and hands lift up to Heaven, whilst their hands and fingers were cut off.

su and his two Sons.
The Father en-courageth his Sons to die.

There was a Merchant called Francis de Bossu that had two Sons; the Father seeing the horrible Massacres, said to his Sons, Children, we are not how to learn that it hath always been the Portion of believers to be hated, Persecuted, and devour- ed by unbelievers, as Christs Sheep of ravening wolves; if we suffer with Christ, we shall also Reign with him: Let not therefore these drawn Swords terrifie us, they will be but as a Bridge whereby we shall pass to Eternal life; we have lived long enough a- mongst the Wicked: Let us now go and live with our God, let us joyfully go after this great Company that is gone before us, &c. When he saw the murderers come, he clasped his arms about his two Sons, and they theirs about him, as if they strove mutually to ward off the blows each from other, who were afterwards found dead in their mutual embraces.

Prodigious
cruelty.

The murderers went up and down the City boasting that they had died their White Doublets Red in the Blood of the Huguenots; one bragging that he had killed an Hundred, and some more, and some less: When the people went into the Arch-Bishops House, and saw the slaughter that had been made there, though they were Papists, yet they said, that surely they were not men, but Devils in the Habit of men that had done this. The dead Corps were carried out, and lay spread like Dung upon the face of the earth, and when they were about to throw them into the River, an Apothecary told them that much money might be made of their Grease, whereupon all the Fat bodies were sought out, ripped up, and their Grease sold for Three shillings a pound; which being done after many years bestowed upon the dead Carcasses, some were tumbled into a great Pit, others thrown into the River. The Countries which lay below upon the River, were amazed to see such multitudes of dead bodies to come down the stream, some with their eyes pulled out, others their noses, ears, and hands cut off; and stabbed into every part of their Bodies, so that some had no part of humane shape remaining.

Their Grease
is sold.

Shortly after the Popes Legat came thither, and as he came out of the great Church from Mass, all the chief Massacres kneeled down for to have his absolution, and when he was told who they were, and why they kneeled there, he absolved them all by making the sign of the Cross.

The murder-

A Gentleman at Paris, as soon as the Massacre was ended there, went to Angiers, and coming to the House of a Reverend, Godly, and Learned Minister called Master John Mason, meeting his Wife at the Door, he saluted her, asking where her Husband was? She said, That he was walking in his Garden, directing him the way to him; when he came to him, he lovingly embraced him, and then said, Do you know wherefore I am come to you? The King hath Commanded me presently to kill you; and therewithal he presented a Pistol to his Breast; the Minister replied, that he knew not wherein he had offended the King; But seeing, said he, you will have my life, pray you give me leave to pray to God, and to beg Presently after the King sent one Puzilliard, who drowned Nine or Ten more in that place, and amongst the rest, the Wife of this Mt. Mason, who shewed an admirable constancy of Faith, even to her last Breath.

At Roan Six thousand murdered.

In Roan in a few days they murdered above Six thousand Men, besides Women, upon whom they exercised no less cruelty than upon the Men; their dead Bodies they carried out in Tumbrels, and threw them by heaps into great pits digged for that purpose.

At Tholouse.

The news of the Massacre of Paris coming to Tholouse, the great Gates of the City were presently shut up; But it pleased God, that that Morning most of the Protestants were gone out of the City to hear a Sermon; The report of the shutting up of the Gates coming to them, some thought it not fit to return, others would needs go back to take order about their affairs: These were suffered to enter peaceably, leaving their Swords at the Gates, the rather to draw in the rest, amongst whom were divers Counsellors; and great means were used to entrap them, and indeed some of them were enticed to come back; but when they saw they could get in no more, the Wednesday morning following Soldiers were sent to break into all the Houses of those of the Religion, and to carry them to sundry Prisons; and the Gates were watched that none should escape; command also was given that none should conceal any of the Protestants: Amongst the Prisoners were Five or Six Counsellors, who much comforted and encouraged the rest. Then were all the Prisoners brought together into one place, and Letters procured from the King to massacre them all: And accordingly some leud persons, armed with Axes and Butchers Knives, were sent to effect it, who calling them out one by one, murdered them all, not permitting them so much as to speak, much less to pray. The number of the slain was above Three hundred, who were all stript stark naked, and their Bodies left to the common view of all for two days together: Then were they, thus naked, thrown into pits one upon another, only the Counsellors were hung up in their long Gowns upon an Elm in the Palace-yard; All their Houses were also sacked and plundered.

Popish fury.

And cruelty.

Three hundred murdered.

At Bordeaux when the news of the Massacre of Paris came thither, the Protestants were taking Boats to go into a meadow to hear a Sermon; But the Governor sent and stayed them, yet under pretence of securing them against the multitude; Then were the Gates guarded that none might escape, yet it pleased God that the Ministers were conveyed away, who afterwards took Ship and came into England.

A bloody Jesuite.

There was a Jesuite that daily preached in that City, to stir up the Governor and People to massacre the Protestants; proposing the example of the Persians to them. The Governor could not well tell what to do, but the Lord of Montpessat assured him that it was the Kings mind that they should all be murdered; and that he could not do a more acceptable service to him; whereupon he, gathering the scum of the Citizens together, commanded them to kill all the Protestants without sparing one, and to give them an example, himself went to the Lord of Obiers House, and murdered him in his own Court; Then did they murder a Country Minister also that was come thither for shelter, together with the rest of the Protestants, and afterwards pillaged their Houses: An old Man that was a Deacon of the Reformed Church, being at this time sick in Bed, they dragged him forth into the Streets, asking him whether he would go to Mass, to whom he answered; I hope I shall not so far forget the eternal salvation of my soul, as for fear of death to prolong my life for a few days; For thereby, I should buy a short time of life at too dear a rate; whereupon they instantly murdered him. It was lamentable to see the poor Protestants wandring up and down, not knowing where to hide themselves; some were rejected of their own Parents and Kinsfolk, who would not open their Doors to them; others were betrayed by their Friends, and delivered into the Hands of their murtherers; yet some were hidden by their very Enemies; whose Hearts abhorred such detestable outrages.

CHAP. XXXVI.

The Siege of Sancerre, Anno Christi 1573.

Gods care of his people.

YET in the midst of these Massacres and dangers, God provided some Pella's [places of refuge] for his people; as Rochel, Montalbon, Nismes, Sancerre, Privas, &c.

A special Providence.

Anno 1573. Sancerre was besieged by the Lord of Chastre, with an Army, who planting his Cannons, played incessantly upon the Town, so that the Stones of the Wall, the pavement in the Streets, and the shivers of Timber flew about continually, yet the mighty power and providence of God herein appeared, that none within the City were slain, but only one Maid that was slain with the Breath of a Cannon-bullet; yet were the stocks of Musquets sometimes broken in the Hands and on the Shoulders of the Townsmen, and themselves not hurt; yea some had their Coats, Breeches and Hats shot through, and their Bodies not hurt; yea some Stones that were beaten off the Wall, flew violently between a Ministers Legs, and hurt him not. Many were the assaults given to this Town, yet still the Assailants were beaten back with great loss.

A terrible Famine.

The siege continuing long, the Townsmen began to be in want, so that they were forced to eat their Horses, Asses, and Mules, which food lasted but a moneth; Then they did eat all the Dogs, Cats, Rats, Mice, and Moles that they could get; and those also being spent, they lived upon hides of Beasts, Calves and Sheep-skins: Then did they eat Parchment, Horse and Beasts hoofs, Hornes, Lanthorns, Halters, and Furniture for Horses, Girdles of Leather, Herbs and Wild-roots; and these being all spent, and no Bread left in the City, such as could get Linseed, or any other Seed, ground it, or beat it in a Morter, and made Bread thereof, as also of Herbs mixed with Bran if they could get it: This being spent they did eat Bread made of Straw-meal, Powder of Nut-shells, yea of Slates, Suet, old Ointments, and other old Grease served to make Pottage, and with it also they fryed the excrements of Horses and Men, which they did eat, yea the filth in the Streets was not spared.

Two executed for eating part of their own Daughter.

In this extremity a poor Laborer and his Wife were taken and executed for eating the Head, Intrals, and Brains of their Daughter of Three years old, that died of Famine; They had dressed also the rest of her Body to eat at other times; and that which aggravated their fault was, that it was proved that that day there was given to them a little Pottage made with Herbs and Wine, which might have satisfied them in that necessity: Such as went forth of the Walls to seek relief, were either slain by the Enemy, or lived upon sprigs of Vines, Blackberries, red Snails, and Herbs. Amongst other sad and lamentable spectacles, one was of a Laborer and his Wife found dead amongst the Vines, and two of their Children crying by them, the lesser being but Six Weeks old, which a charitable Widow took home to her House and sustained: Many died in this Famine, some in their Houses, others fell down in the Streets, and gave up the ghost; most of the Children under Twelve Years old died: Lamentable it was to hear the poor Fathers and Mothers mourning and weeping to see their misery, and yet they could not relieve them: Nevertheless most of them did wonderfully encourage themselves with the assurance of the grace of God, whereof there is this notable example.

A Boy of five years old, languishing divers Weeks, ran along the Streets, till nature failing him, he fell down in the presence of his Father and Mother, who wept and lamented over him; and feeling upon his Arms and Legs, they were as dry as a stick; whereupon the Child said; why do you thus weep to see me die of hunger? I ask you no Bread, Mother, for I know you have none; But seeing it is the will of God that I should die in this sort, I must take it thankfully: Had not the holy Man Lazarus hunger? Have not I read it in my Bible? and saying so, he yielded up his spirit unto God. A remarkable Story.

That which preserved all from being famished, was this; There were yet Six Kine kept to give Milk for some Infants, and certain Horses of service which were reserved for an extremity; These were killed, and their flesh sold to comfort those that lived. Also some little Corn was brought into the Town by stealth, which was sold for Two Shillings Six Pence a Pound.

The War killed but Eighty four persons, but the Famue killed above Five hundred, besides those which were brought so low that they hardly recovered.

During these miseries, divers Soldiers, and some Townsmen gat out, chusing rather to die by the Sword of the Enemy, than by Famine, of whom some were slain, others imprisoned, and executed.

So all hope of being saved in Mans judgment failed to those of Sancerre: For the King had sworn that he would make them devour each other. But Mans misery is Gods opportunity; The King of Kings found out a strange means to deliver his people that put their trust in him: Just at this time, by the solicitations of the Bishop of Valence, the Polonians had chosen the Duke of Anjou, Brother to the French King, King of Poland, and Ambassadors were come to fetch him into that Country, who hearing of this siege, solicited the Bishop of Valence to perform the promise, which he had sworn to them in the name of his Master, viz. To set at liberty all the Towns of France that were molested for Religion: By this means the poor Sancerreans, half dead for hunger, were delivered at the request of these good Men who came from a far Country to be their deliverers, though their Enemies had oft-times threatned them with a general Massacre; They were suffered to depart with their Arms and Goods, and such as would stay, not to be questioned for any thing past; They had a promise also that the honor of Women and Maids should be preserved; and such Ministers and others, as had fled thither for safety, had Passports given them, and they were suffered peaceably to depart. A wicked Oath.

The Siege of Rochel, Anno 1573.

ABout the beginning of the same year Rochel was also besieged; The Townsmen often sallied out, and there were very hot skirmishes betwixt them and the Besiegers; in one of which there came a young Gentleman, who with horrible Blasphemy boasted that he was one of the Admirals murderers, shewing his Courtelace, which he said, he brought from that conflict, with it threatning to slash the Rochellers; yet, when it came to trial, his heart failed, and he ran away; But one of the City Soldiers pursuing him, slew him, stript him, and left his naked Body in the Field, the Dogs rearing his Face before next morning. Gods Justice meted out a bloody Pay for such.

In one moneths space, the Enemy discharged above Thirteen thousand Cannon shot against the Rochellers; and made many assaults, wherein they still went away with the worst. Then came the Duke of Anjou to the Army to be the General: The siege having continued some moneths, the Rochellers began to want Victuals, which Famine, after a while, much encreased upon them; But behold the admirable Providence of God! when all other Provision failed them, there came an infinite number of small Fishes never before seen in that Haven, as it were yielding themselves to the mercy of the poor People, which gathered them every day so long as the siege lasted, but presently after the publishing of the Edict for peace, they went away, and were never seen afterwards.

During this siege came the Ambassadors from Poland to fetch their new King; by whose means a truce was granted to the Rochellers, and lastly Articles of peace were agreed upon, whereby the Army was withdrawn, and Rochel enjoyed her Priviledges: Yet this is further very remarkable, That all the chief persons that were employed in the Massacre of Paris and other places, were drawn forth to this siege, by God, there to receive the reward of all their impieties, some of them being slain, and others receiving there those wounds whereof they shortly after died; Amongst whom were the Duke de Aumale, and Cossens Marshal of the Field, that first entred the Admirals Lodging; Three Masters of the Camp; divers great Lords and Gentlemen; above Sixty Captains; as many Lieutenants and Ensigns, and above Twenty thousand common Soldiers.

Anno 1574. King Charles himself, that was at least the countenancer of all these horrible Massacres, being in the prime of his youth, about Twenty four years old, fell sick of a languishing disease; His Physicians let him Blood and purged him, but to no purpose; For by degrees he so faded away, as caused great astonishment to many. He long struggled against his disease, but at last was fain to betake himself to his Bed, and the two last weeks of his sickness, much Blood issued from divers parts of his Body, and once he rolled himself in his own Blood, and a little before he died, he desired his Mother to pursue his Enemies to the uttermost, with great vehemency reiterating his Speeches; saying, Madam, I pray you heartily to do it; and so he breathed forth his Soul, May the Thirtieth, Anno Christi 1574.

I shall here add a few words also of the great miseries which the people of God endured in Rochel, Anno Christi 1628. expecting help from England, which proved but a staff of Reed, which whilst they leaned upon, it ran into their Hands: The City being besieged by the King of France his Army, the Inhabitants were brought to such extremity, that for want of other meat, the Citizens and Soldiers, having eaten up all the Horses, Dogs, Cats, Rats and Mice, lived two months with nothing but Cow-hides and Goat-skins boiled; Then did they eat up all the old Gloves, and whatsoever was made of Leather; yea, the poor People cut off the Buttocks of the dead, and did eat them. Young Maids of Fourteen or Sixteen years old, did look like old Women of One hundred years old. All the English that came out after the surrender of the City, looked like Anatomies: The prizes of things were as followeth, A bushel of Wheat, twenty pounds: A pound of Bread, twenty shillings: A quarter of Mutton, above six pounds: A pound of Butter, thirty shillings: An Egg, eight shillings: An ounce of Sugar, two shillings and six pence: A dried Fish, twenty shillings: A pint of French wine twenty shillings: A pint of Milk, thirty shillings: A pound of Grapes, 3 shillings, &c.

Anno 1593. There was one Margaret Pierron of the Town of Sansay in France, who by her Maid-Servant was accused to the Jesuites, for not going to Mass, and for keeping a Bible in her House, in reading whereof was her whole delight: The Jesuits, complaining hereof to the Magistrate, caused her to be apprehended, yet had she some notice of it before-hand from her Friends that advised her to flie from the danger: But God had a purpose that she should bear witness to his truth, so that she was taken and cast into Prison; After a while the Judges sent for her, saying, Margaret, Are you not willing to return home to your House, and there to enjoy your Husband and Children? Yes, said she, if it may stand with the good Will of God: Then, said they, if thou wilt do but a small matter matter thou shalt be set at liberty; If, said she, it be not contrary to Gods glory and mine own salvation, you shall hear what I will say to you. No such thing, said they, for all that we require is but this, that a Scaffold being set up in the chief part of the City, you shall there crave pardon, for offending the Law, and a fire being by, you shall burn your Bible in it without speaking a word. I pray you my Masters, said she, Tell me, is my Bible a good Book or no? Yea, said they, we confess it is: why then, said she, would you have me cast it into the fire? Only said they, to give the Jesuites content: Imagine it to be your Paper, and when you have burnt it, and you may buy you another Bible at any time, and have it as good as new. Thus they spent above two Hours in perswading her, that thereby she might do a less evil, and a greater good would come of it: But she confidently answered, That by the help of God she would never do it: What will the People say, (said she) will they not say, Yonder is a wretched woman indeed, that burns the Bible wherein all the Articles of Christian Religion are contained? I will certainly burn my Body rather than my Bible.

The church to be burnt rather than her Bible.

Then did they commit her close Prisoner, fed her only with Bread and Water, and her Friends were debarr'd from coming to her; But when nothing could remove her from her constancy, she was condemn'd to be set upon a Scaffold, to have her Bible burnt before her Face; Her self to be strangled, and her Body to be dragged through the streets to a Dunghill, which Sentence she underwent chearfully, and so slept in the Lord.

Protestants murdered at Church.

THe Grison Lords, who were the Sovereign Magistrates of this Country, had by sundry Decrees granted liberty to the Protestants to exercise their Religion freely: But when as the Minister of Tell, with his Congregation, were met together about the service of God, the Bloody Papists rising in Arms, set upon them, slew one, and beat others so cruelly with Staves, that they were forced to desist from their purpose: Shortly after they murdered some others, and conspiring with some other bloody Villains, they set guards upon all the passages of the Valley, that so none of the Protestants should escape them; Then ringing their Bells, they raised all the Country, and if any Protestants stirred out of their Houses, they murdered them in the Streets: They also brake into the Houses of others, drew them out of their Beds, and murdered them. Some of the Protestants retired to the Houses of Papists that were near of kin, or otherwise engaged to them, to secure themselves, but there they were betrayed and murdered: Some they strangled; some they shot: Of some they beat out their Brains, and others they drowned in the River Alba.

A Noble Gentleman that had hid himself in the River, was found by them, who requested them to spare his life, for his dear Childrens sake: But they told him that this was no time for pity, except he would abjure his Faith, and swear by the Popes Bull: Nay, said he, God forbid, that to save this temporal life, I should deny my Lord Jesus Christ, who with his precious Blood upon the Cross redeemed me at so dear a rate; And having through his grace so long freely and publicly professed him, that I should now hazard the loss of eternal life, to which I was elected before the foundation of the world; I say God forbid. Hereupon in a barbarous and savage manner they murdered him. They brake also into the Palace of the Governor, and murdered him; Women and Maids they deflowered; and of all the Protestants in that part of the Countrey, there were only three that escaped over the horrid and vast Mountains of the Alps into Rhetia.

These wicked Villains having thus dispatched the Protestants in this place, they marched to another, coming just at the time when the Protestants were at Church hearing a Sermon: They were guided to the place by two Fryers; The Protestants seeing them coming, shut the Church Doors, barricadoing them up with Benches: These Villains labored to break open the Door, but when they could not readily do it, they clambered up into the Windows, through which they shot with their Musquets at the people, whereby they wounded and killed many: The Minister being a Man rarely endued with learning and piety, according to the shortness of time, exhorted them with lively reasons to persevere in the truth, notwithstanding all the danger: But in the mean time these barbarous Papists had forced open the Door, where they fell to murdering of all without respect of quality, sex, or age: Some Lords and Gentlemen were here slain, the Minister was shot to death; divers Ladies and Children gat into the Belfree to save themselves; But these Hell-hounds set fire to the place, and miserably burnt them all.

These savage Wretches having thus glutted themselves with innocent Blood in this place; marched to Sondress: The Papists in that place hearing of their coming, went to the Justice, protesting that they would guard him from danger, and that they would not suffer such villanies to be committed amongst them: Then did they beat their Drums, ring their Bells, and arm themselves under pretence of securing the Protestants, who trusting to their promises, mixed themselves amongst them to stand for their own defence: These Popelings concealing their mischievous intent, killed now one, then another, as if it had been by accident, so that though divers of them were slain, yet they found not out the mystery of the practice; yet some, both Men and Gentlewomen sought to escape, but all passages being shut up, they were met with and cruelly murdered. Then did they more openly discover their malice, killing the Protestants wherever they met them: Hereupon some Eighteen of the Protestants, together with some Ladies and young Children gat together; And the Men being well armed, they marched close together, repulsing their Enemies, and at last came to a Church in the Mountain of Sondress, unto which place a Minister, and some others, in all about Seventy three Men were gathered together, and after their Prayers made unto God, they passed the Valley of Malen, which was beset by the Enemy on two sides; But such as kept the passages, were by Gods special Providence, so astonished that they fled away; and the Protestants, though they were pursued to the tops of the Mountains, yet did miraculously escape with safety.

Then did the Pefants joyne with these Villains to rob and plunder the Houses of the Protestants, and amongst them, divers Noblemens Houses richly furnished with great abundance; They ran up and down also through Fields, Woods and Mountains, searching every bush for the Protestants; and as they found any of them, they presently murdered them.

There was an honorable Lady that not long before came out of Italy to enjoy her liberty of Conscience, whom they exhorted to change her Religion, which she refusing, they advised her that yet at least she would do it out of a care of her young Infant which she held in her Arms, which otherwise, together with her self should presently be slain: But she with an undaunted courage answered; I have not departed out of Italy, my native Country, nor forsaken all the Estate that I had there, to renounce now the Faith which I had wrought in me by the Lord Jesus Christ; yea I will rather suffer, if it were possible, a Thousand deaths: And how shall I have regard in this case to my Infant, since God my heavenly Father spared not his own Son my Lord Jesus Christ, but delivered him up to death for his love to me, and such sinners as I am? And so giving her Child to one, she said, Behold my Child, the Lord God, who hath care of the Birds of the air, is much more able to save this poor Creature, although by you it should be left to these wild Mountains: Then unlacing her Gown, she opened her Brest, saying, Here is the Body which you have power to kill; but my Soul, on which you have no power to lay your hands, that I commend to my God; and so she was presently slain, and hewen in pieces: The Infant being a lovely and sweet Child, they spared, and delivered it to a Popish Nurse to be brought up.

These miscreants finding such sweetness by the plunder of the Protestants, they spared none, plundering their Houses twice or thrice over: Some noble Matrons had their Rings pulled off their Fingers; and if they refused presently to draw them off, they would cut off either their Hands or Fingers from them. Some Women with their Children were dragged to the tops of high Mountains, and threatned to be thrown down headlong with their Children, if they would not promise to go to Mass; and though one amongst them was found, that through terror, promised them to do it, yet did they throw her down with the rest without all pity.

One Dominico Berto of Sixteen years old, they set upon an Ass with his Face to the Tail, and the Tail in his Hands for the Bridle, and thus with many jeers they led him to the Market-place: Then they cut off his Nose, Ears, and Cheeks; Then burned many holes in several parts of his Body with hot Irons, continuing these torments till in that barbarous manner they had killed him. Yet through the wonderful goodness of God; some Ministers with their Wives and Children, by great travel, dangers, and difficulties amongst the craggy and high Mountains, were delivered out of the Hands of these bloody Persecutors,

A special Providence.

Theophilus Messino.

Theophilus Messino was shot with a Musquet, but being not slain, they set open his Mouth with a gag, filled it with Gunpowder, and giving fire to it, tore his Head miserably; His Son was slain with many wounds.

Constancy.

Another being wounded and stripped naked, was carried out and thrown into the Woods; yet afterwards he gat up and went home to his own House, where he had Mountains of Gold profered him if he would turn Papist; yet, through Gods mercy, he continued faithful to the death.

Temptation resisted.

A young Gentleman, too much addicted to the vanities of the world, being earnestly solicited to forsake the Protestant Religion, stoutly refused, whereupon they shot him with a Musket, and having lain a while, and then raising himself up, he besought them to dispatch him, that he might render his Soul to his Creator.

Prodigious
cruelties.

Divers Men and Women were thrown down from Bridges into the River Adda, and drowned for their constancy in the truth.

A noble Virgin.

Some had their Mouths slit up to their Ears; others had the flesh cut from their Faces; others were slashed in other parts of their Body till they died; and others were often put to the strappado, and then hewen in pieces.

An excellent Speech.

A noble Virgin that was come to Sondres for Religion sake, these Villains took and carried her through the Streets with the greatest shame and disgrace that could be: They put a Mitre of Paper on her Head, besmeared her Face with dirt, buffeted her on the Cheeks, then exhorted her to call upon the Saints; But she smiling thereat, said, My trust and my salvation is only in my Saviour Jesus Christ, and upon him only will I rest; as for the Virgin Mary, though she be blessed above all women, yet is she not omniscient, and therefore knows not our requests; yea, she her self had need of the merits of her own Son, without which she could not have been saved, &c. They still continuing to scorn and deride her, she manfully said, I willingly endure all this as it becomes me to do, desiring no better usage, seeing the same was done to my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and to his Apostles, and to Thousands of the holy Martyrs. Then was she carried away and murdered in the Fields.

A wicked Edict.

Some Ministers and many other godly Christians, Men and Women, noble and ignoble were murdered sundry ways. Many hid themselves in holes, and Caves, and Woods, out of which they durst not come, but by night only to get them food; yet were they so watched, that many times they were murdered: Others in those places were famished for want of food; Others living upon Roots, Herbs, Grains, &c. contracted diseases whereof they died, so that the Mountains and Woods lay scattered with dead Carcasses everywhere.

Papish perfidiousness.

Then came there a Letter to these Blood-suckers from a Governor, that they should with all their power, murder, strangle, and massacre without all pity and mercy all the Lutherans wheresoever they were; whereupon these murderers having slain all in Tyrane, Bruse, Tell, Sondres, and Malenco, they went to Berbenno, where they presently murdered sundry Persons of good rank and quality, and that with great cruelty, contrary to their Faith and promise given them; The like they did in Cassano and Traben, and divers other places, shewing neither pity nor favor to any: In one House they flew a Man and his Wife; and seeing an Infant of three years old lying in a Cradle, the Child being a Girl of of a sweet and amiable countenance, and seeming to smile upon them, they took her by the heels, and dashed out her Brains. Then did these Villains march to Bruse, where also they murdered many; shooting some, drowning others, stoning others, burning others, and grinding their very Bones to powder: Amongst others, finding an aged Matron of eighty years old, they much solicited her to hear Mass, wishing her to have respect to her age, To whom she answered with a noble resolution; God forbid that I, who now of a long time have had one foot in the grave, should forsake my Lord Jesus Christ, who hath so long time preserved me in the knowledg and profession of his truth, and to put my trust in Creatures, and instead of his holy word to receive the traditions of Men; whereupon they instantly slew her.

The Persecution of the Church in Scotland, which began Anno Christi 1527.

MAfter Patrick Hamilton of an ancient and honorable Family, called Abbot of Fern, as one hating the world, and the vanity thereof, left Scotland, and went into Germany, and the fame of the University of Wittenberg being greatly divulged, thither he went, and became familiar with those great lights and notable Servants of Jesus Christ, Martin Luther, and Phil. Melancthon, whereby he greatly encreased in godly knowledg and learning; From thence he went to the University of Marpurg, which was then newly erected by Philip Lantgrave of Hessen, where he was intimate with other learned Men, especially with Francis Lambert, by whose instigation he was the first that there publicly set up conclusions to be disputed of concerning Faith and good Works, By reason of his learning and integrity of life he was had in admiration by Many: But the zeal of Gods glory did so eat him up, that he could not rest till he returned into his own Country, where the bright Beams of the true light, which by Gods grace was planted in his Heart, began most abundantly to break forth, as well in publick as in secret.

Patrick Hamilton

Zeal

In proceſs of time the fame of his Doctrine troubled the Clergy, and came to the Ears of James Beton, Arch-Bishop of Saint Andrews, who grew impatient that by this means the kingdom of darkness was disturbed; and therefore he so labored with Patrick Hamilton, that he gat him to Saint Andrews, where, after divers days conference, he had his freedom and liberty, the Bishop seeming to approve his Doctrine, acknowledging that in many things there needed a reformation in the Church; But withall, fearing that their Kingdom should be endamaged, they labored with the King, who was then young and much led by them, to go on Pilgrimage to Saint Dotheſſe in Rosse, that so by reason of his absence no intercession might be made to him, for the saving the life of this innocent Servant of Jesus Christ, who not suspecting the malice that lodged in their hearts, remained as a Lamb amongst Wolves.

Popish

The King being gone, upon a night, Master Hamilton was seized upon by the Bishops officers and carried to the Castle, and the morrow after he was brought forth unto judgment, and was condemned to be burnt for the testimony of Gods truth; The Articles for which he suffered, were about Pilgrimages, Purgatory, Prayer to Saints, and for the Dead, &c. And that his condemnation might have the greater Authority, they caused it to be subscribed by all those of esteem that were there present, and to make their number great, they took the subscription of very Children if they were of the Nobility.

His condemnation

Immediately after Dinner the fire was prepared, and he was led to execution, yet most Men thought that it was only to terrifie him, and to cause him to recant. But God, for his own glory, the good of his Servants, and for the manifestation of their Beastly Tyranny, had otherwise decreed: For he so strengthened him, that neither the love of life, nor fear of that cruel death could once move him to swerve from the truth which he had professed. At the place of execution he gave to his Servant that had long attended him, his Gown, Coat, Cap, and his other Garments, saying, These will not profit in the fire, they will profit thee; After this of me thou canst receive no commodity except the example of my death, which I pray thee to bear in mind; For though it be bitter to the flesh, and fearful before Men, yet it is the entrance into eternal life, which none shall possess which denies Christ Jesus before this wicked generation: And so being tyed to the Stake in the midst of coals and timber, they gave fire to some powder, which with the blast scorched his left Hand and the side of his Face, but neither killed him, nor kindled the wood and coals; till they ran to the Castle for more powder, and more combustible matter, which being at last kindled, with a loud voice he cried, Lord Jesus receive my spirit; How long shall darkness overwhelm this Realm? and how long wilt thou suffer the tyranny of these Men? The fire was slow, and therefore put him to the greater torment; But that which most grieved him was the clamor of some wicked Men set on by the Fryers, who continually cried, Turn thou Heretick; call upon our Lady; say, Salve Regina, &c. To whom he answered, Depart from me and trouble me not thou Messenger of Satan; And speaking to one Campbell, a Fryer that was the Ringleader, who still roared on him with great vehemency, he said to him, wicked Man, thou knowest the contrary, and hast confessed the contrary to me; I appeal thee before the Tribunal Seat of Jesus Christ; After which words he resigned up his spirit unto God, Anno Christi 1527. And within a few days after the said Fryer died in a phrensie, and as one that despaired.

Thomas Forret.

Anno 1534. The said Arch-Bishop of Saint Andrews, convented before him David Straton, a Gentleman, and Master Norman Gourlay; The first of these having a Fisher-boat that went to Sea, the Bishop of Murray demanded tithe Fish of him, to whom he answered, That if they would have tithe of that which his Servants caught in the Sea, they should take it in the place where it was caught, and so caused his Servants to throw the tenth Fish into the Sea again; All this while he had nothing in him for Religion. But when hereupon he was summoned to answer for Heresie, it troubled him exceedingly, and then he began to frequent the company of such as were godly, and there appeared a wonderful change in him; so that whereas before he despised the Word of God, now all his delight was in hearing of it read to him, and he was a vehement exhorter of all Men to peace and concord, and contempt of the world. He much frequented the company of the Laird of Dun Areskin, whom God in those days had marvellously illuminated: Hearing that Text read (for he could not read himself) He that denieth me before Men, or is ashamed of me in the midst of this wicked generation, I will deny him before my Father and his holy Angels: At those words, being suddenly as one revived, he fell upon his knees, and steadfastly lifting up his Eyes and Hands to Heaven, at length he burst forth into these words, O Lord, I have been wicked, and justly mayst thou withdraw thy grace from me; But Lord, for thy mercy sake, let me never deny thee nor thy truth for fear of death or any corporal pain. Being afterwards, together with Master Norman brought to judgment in Holy Rood-house; the King himself being present, much means was used to draw this David Straton to make a recantation; But he persevered in his constancy, still denying that he had offended, and so they were both condemned to the fire, and after Dinner Anno 1534. they were both first hanged, and afterwards burnt.

Not long after the burning of these two holy Men; There was one Dean Thomas Forret, who used to preach every Lords day to his Parishioners, out of the Epistles and Gospels as they fell in order: This was counted a great novelty, for none used to preach but the Fryers, and therefore they envying him, accused accused him to the Bishop of Dunkeld for an Heretick, and one that shewed the mysteries of Scripture to the vulgar people.

The Bishop instigated by the complaint of the Fryers called the said Dean Thomas before him, to whom he said, My joy Dean Thomas, I love you well, and therefore I must give you counsel how to govern your self; The Dean thanked him, and then he proceeded, My joy Dean Thomas, I am informed that you preach the Epistle and Gospel every Sunday to your People; and that you take not your dues from them, which is very prejudicial to the Churchmen; and therefore my joy Dean Thomas, I would have you take your dues, or else its too much to Preach every Sunday; for by so doing, you make the People think that we should do so also; Its enough for you when you find a good Epistle or Gospel, to set forth and preach the liberty of holy Church; and let the rest alone.

Thomas answered, My Lord, I presume none of my Parishoners complain for my not taking my dues; and whereas you say its too much to Preach every Sunday, I think it is too little, and wish that your Lordship would do the like. Nay, nay, Dean Thomas, said the Bishop, let that be, for we are not ordained to Preach; Then said Thomas, whereas you bid me Preach when I meet with a good Epistle and Gospel; I have read them all over, and I know no bad ones amongst them, but when your Lordship shews me such, I will pass by them. Then, said the Bishop, I thank God I never knew what the Old and New Testament was; and Dean Thomas, I will know nothing but my Portuise and Pontifical. Go your ways; and let all these fancies be; For if you persevere herein, you will repent you when tis too late.

Gross Ignorance.

I trust, said Thomas, my cause is good and just in the presence of God, and therefore I care not what follows thereupon; and so he went his way: But shortly after he was summoned to appear before the Cardinal, by whom he was condemned and burned for a chief Heretick and teacher of Heresie.

His Martyrdom.

But notwithstanding all their Bloody tyranny, the knowledg of God did wonderfully encrease in that Kingdom, partly by reading, partly by Brotherly conference, which in those dangerous days was much used to the comfort of many, which so enraged the Popish party, that Anno 1538. there were burned in one fire four Persons of good quality.

The year after there were apprehended Ferome Russel, a Man of a meek and quiet nature, and Alexander Kennedy of about eighteen years old; These two poor Servants of Jesus Christ being brought before the Arch-Bishop and his Associates to judgment, Kennedy at first was faine, and would fain have recanted; But when all place of repentance was denied him, the Spirit of God (which seasonably comes in with comfort,) began to refresh him; yea the inward comfort began to burst forth, as well in his visage, as in his tongue and words: For with a chearful countenance and joyful voice, falling on his knees, he said, O eternal God, how wonderful is that love and mercy that thou bearest unto Mankind; and to me a vile Caitiffe and miserable wretch above all others! For even now when I would have denied thee, and thy Son our Lord Jesus Christ, my only Saviour, and so have cast my self into everlasting damnation, thou by thine own hand hast pulled me from the very bottom of Hell, and made me to feel that Heavenly comfort which takes from me that ungodly fear wherewith before I was oppressed. Now I desie death, do with me what you please, I praise God I am ready. Then did they rail upon him and Ferome, who also said unto them, This is your thair and power of darknes; Now sit ye as Judges, and we stand wrongfully accused, and more wrongfully to be condemned; But the day will come when our innocency will appear, and ye shall see your own blindness, to your everlasting confusion. Go forward and fulfil the measure of your iniquity. Shortly after they were condemned to die, and as they went to execution, Ferome comforted Kennedy, saying to him, Brother, fear not; greater is he that is in us, than he that is in the world; The pain that we are to suffer is short, and shall be light, but our joy and consolation shall never have an end. Let us therefore strive to enter into our Master and Saviours joy, by the same straight way which he hath taken before us. Death cannot hurt us, for it is already destroyed by him for whose sake we now suffer. And thus passing chearfully on, they constantly triumphed over Death and Satan, in the midst of the flaming fire where they gave up their spirits to God.

Popish cruelty. Anno 1543. Cardinal Beton coming to Edenburg, caused many godly persons to be called before him, and when he could prove nothing else against them, he caused four Men to be hanged upon suspicion that they had eaten a Goose upon a Friday: And a Woman with her Child sucking on her Breast to be drowned for refusing to pray to the Virgin Mary.

John Rogers. Many others he caused to be banished, others to be imprisoned at Saint Johnstons, amongst whom was one John Rogers, a godly and learned Man, that had fruitfully preached Christ Jesus to the comfort of many in Angus and Meannes, whom he caused to be murdered in Prison, and then thrown over the Wals, giving it out that by attempting to escape, he had broken his Neck.

CHAP. XXXIX.

The Life of Master George Wisheheart, or Wischard, who died, Anno Christi 1546.

His Character. George wisheheart was born in Scotland, and brought up first at School, from whence he went to the University; After which he travelled into several countries, and at last came to Cambridge, where he was admitted into Bennet College; He was tall of stature, and of a melancholy constitution; He had black Hair, a long Beard, comely of personage, and well-spoken, courteous, lowly, lovely, willing to teach, desirous to learn. For his habit, he wore a Frize Gown, a black fustian Doublet, plain Hose, coarse Canvas for his Shirts, falling Bands, &c. All which apparel he gave to the poor, some weekly, some monthly, some quarterly; having a French Cap that he wore, which he kept a twelve month. He was modest, temperate, fearing God, having covertness. His Charity was extraordinary, he forbore his food one meal in three, one day in four, that he might the better relieve the poor. His lodging was upon straw, and he had coarse new Canvas Sheets, which when once foul, he gave away; He had by his Bed-side a Tub of water, in which, in the dark night, he bathed himself; He taught with great modesty and gravity, so that some about him thought him severe, and would have slain him; But the Lord was his deliverer, and he, after due correction for their malice, by good exhortation amended them; His learning was no less sufficient than his desire of it; He was always ready to do good to his ability; both in his private Chamber and publick Schools, he read divers Authors, yea he always studied how to do good to all.

His Charity.

A special Providence.

Popish malice. Anno 1544. Some of the Nobility of Scotland, coming to treat with King Henry the Eighth, about the marriage between his Son Prince Edward, and their young Queen Mary, at their return, Master Wischard went with them into Scotland, being a Man of admirable graces, and singularly learned both in Divine and Humane Sciences; He first preached in Rosse, and then in Dundee, where with great admiration of all that heard him, he went over the Epistle to the Romans, till at the instigation of the Cardinal, one Robert Misle, a principal Man there, and formerly a Professor of Religion, inhibited him from preaching, requiring him that he should trouble their Town no more, for he would not suffer it; And this was spoken to him in the publick place; whereupon he mused a space, with his Eyes bent unto Heaven, and afterwards looking sorrowfully upon the Speaker and People, he said, God is my witness witness that I never minded your trouble, but your comfort; for your trouble is more dolorous to me then it is to your selves: But I am assured that to refuse Gods word, and to chase from you his Messenger, shall not preserve you from trouble, but shall bring you into it: For God shall send you Ministers that shall neither fear burning nor banishment. I have offered you the word of salvation; with the hazard of my life I have remained amongst you: Now ye your selves refuse me; and I must leave my innocency to be declared by my God; If it be long prosperous with you, I am not led by the Spirit of truth: But if unlookt for trouble come upon you, acknowledge the cause, and turn to God, who is gracious and merciful; But if you turn not at the first warning; he will visit you with fire and sword; and so he came down from the Pulpit. Some Noblemen being present, would have perswaded him to stay, or to have gone with them into the Countrey, but by no means would he stay till he had past the River Tay.

A Prophecy.

He goeth into the West.

He is opposed by the Bishop.

Then went he into the West-Countrey, where he made offers of Gods Word, which was gladly received by many, till the Bishop of Glasgow, by the instigation of the Cardinal, came with his Train to the Town of Ayre to resist Wischard: The Earl of Glencarne and some other Gentlemen hearing of it, came thither also with their retinue, and when they were all come together, the Bishop would needs have the Church himself to preach in. Some opposed, but Wischard said, Let him alone, his Sermon will not do much hurt, let us go to the Market-Cross, and so they did, where he made so notable a Sermon, that his very Enemies themselves were confounded.

Wischard remained with the Gentlemen in Kyle, preaching sometime in one place, sometimes in another, but coming to Machlenc, he was perforce kept out of the Church; Some would have broken in, but he said to one of them, Brother, Jesus Christ is as mighty in the Fields as in the Church, and himself often preached in the Desert; At the Sea-side, and other places. In the word of Peace God sends by me: The Blood of none shall be shed this day for the preaching of it; and so going into the Fields, he stood upon a bank, where he continued in preaching to the people above three hours; and God wrought so wonderfully by that Sermon, that one of the most wickedst Men in all the Countrey, the Laird of Sheld was converted by it, and his Eyes ran down with such abundance of tears, that all Men wondred at it. Presently news was brought to Wischard that the plague was broke out in Dundee, which began within four days after he was prohibited for preaching there, and raged so extremely, that its almost beyond credit how many died in Twenty four hours space; This being related to him, notwithstanding the importunity of his Friends, he would needs go thither, saying, They are now in trouble, and need comfort; Perhaps this hand of God will make them now to magnifie and reverence the word of God, which before they lightly esteemed.

The power of the Word.

His Prophecy accomplished.

His second coming to Dundee.

Coming to Dundee, the joy of the faithful was exceeding great, and without delay he signified that the next day he would preach; And because most of the Inhabitants were either sick, or employed about the sick, he chose the East Gate for the place of his preaching, so that the whole were within, and the sick without the Gate; His Text was Psal. 107. He sent his word and healed them, &c. wherein he comfortably intreated of the profit and comfort of Gods Word, the punishment that comes by the contempt of it, the readiness of Gods mercy to such as truly turn to him, and the happiness of those whom God takes from this misery, &c. By which Sermon he so raised up the Hearts of those that heard him, that they regarded no death, but judged them more happy that should then depart, rather than such as should remain behind; considering that they knew not whether they should have such a Comforter with them, yea or no. He spared not to visit them that lay in the greatest extremity, and to comfort them. He provided all things necessary for such as could take food, the Town being very bountiful to them, through his instigation. But whilst he was thus busying himself for the comfort of the afflicted, the Devil stirred up the Cardinal, who corrupted a desperate Popish-Priest, called John Weighron, to slay him. And on a day, the Sermon being ended, and the People departed, suspecting no danger, the Priest stood waiting at the bottom of the Stairs with a naked Dagger in his Hand, under his Gown; But Master Wischard, being of a sharp piercing Eye, seeing the Priest as he came down, said to him, My Friend what would you have? and withal clapping his Hand upon the Dagger, took it from him; The Priest herewith being terrified, fell down upon his knees, confessed his intention, and craved pardon; A noise being hereupon raised, and it coming to the Ears of those which were sick, they cryed, Deliver the Traytor to us, or we will take him by force; and so they burst in at the Gate, but Wischard taking him in his Arms, said, whosoever hurts him shall hurt me; for he hath done me no mischief, but much good, by teaching me more heedfulness for the time to come: And so he appeased them, and saved the Priests life.

When the plague was almost quite ceased, he took his leave of them, saying, That God had almost put an end to the Battel, and that he was now called to another place; For the Gentlemen of the West had written to him to meet them in Edenburg, where he should dispute with the Bishops, and should be publicly heard, which he willingly assented to. But first he went to Montrosse, to salute the Church there, where he sometimes preached, but spent most of his time in private meditation, in which he was so earnest, that night and day he continued in it; during which time, the Cardinal again conspired his death, causing a Letter to be sent to him, as if it had been from his familiar Friend, the Laird of Kinnur, desiring him with all possible speed to come to him, for that he was taken with a sudden sickness: In the mean time he had provided Sixty Men armed to lie in wait within a mile and an half of Montrosse to murder him as he passed by that way. The Letter coming to his Hands by a Boy, who also brought him an Horse to ride on, being accompanied with some honest Men his Friends, he set forwards; But suddenly stopping and musing a space, he returned back again, which they wondring at, asked him the cause; To whom he said, I will not go, I am forbidden of God, I am assured there is treason: Let some of you go to yonder place and tell me what you find; which they doing, found out the treason, and hastily returning back, they told Master Wischard of it, whereupon he said; I know that I shall end my life by that blood-thirsty Mans Hands, but it will not be on this manner.

The time approaching wherein he should meet the Gentlemen at Edenburg, he took his leave and departed: By the way he lodged with a faithful Brother called James Watson of Inner Gowry: In the night time he gat up and went into a Yard; which two Men hearing, privily followed him: There he walked in an Alley for some space, breathing forth many sobs and deep groans, then he fell upon his knees, and his groans increased; Then he fell upon his Face: Those that watched him, heard him weeping and praying, in which posture he continued near an hour; Then getting up, he came to his Bed again. Those which attended him, making as though they were ignorant of all, came and asked him where he had been? But he would not answer them: The next day they importuned him again, saying, Be plain with us, for we heard your mourning, and saw your gestures: Then he with a dejected countenance, said, I had rather you had been in your Beds; But they still pressing upon him to know something; He said, I will tell you; I am assured that my warfare is near at an end, and therefore pray to God with me that now I shrink not when the Battel waxeth most hot: When they heard this, they fell a weeping, saying, This is small comfort to us; Then said he, God shall send you comfort after me. This Realm shall be illuminated with the light of Christs Gospel as clearly as any Realm since the days of the Apostles; The House of God shall be built in it, yea it shall not lack in despite of all Enemies, the top-stone; Neither will it be long before fore this be accomplished; Many shall not suffer after me, till the glory of God shall appear and triumph in despite of Satan: But alas! If the people shall afterwards prove unthankful, then fearful and terrible shall the plagues be that shall follow.

Then went he forward on his journey, and came to Leith, but hearing nothing of those Gentlemen that were to meet him, he kept himself private a day or two: At which time he grew very pensive, and being asked the reason of it; he said, *what do I differ from a dead Man, but that I eat and drink? Hitherto God hath used my labours for the instructions of others, and to the disclosing of darkness, and now I lurk as a Man ashamed that dare not shew his Face: Hereby they perceived that his desire was to preach, whereupon they said to him, It's most comfortable to us to hear you; but because we know the danger wherein you stand, we dare not desire it: But, said he, if you dare hear, let God provide for me as best pleaseth him; and so it was concluded that the next day he should preach in Leith; His Text was of the Parable of the Sower, Math. 13. The Sermon ended, the Gentlemen of Louthain, who were earnest Professors of Jesus Christ, would not suffer him to stay at Leith, because the Governor and Cardinal were shortly to come to Edenburgh, but took him along with them, and so he preached at Brünstone, Languedine, and Ormstone. Then was he requested to preach at Eneresk near Muscelbrugh, where he had a great confluence of people, and amongst them Sir George Douglas, who after Sermon, said publickly, *I know that the Governor and Cardinal will hear that I have been at this Sermon: But let them know that I will avow it; and will maintain both the Doctrine, and the Preacher to the uttermost of my power; This much rejoiced those that were present.

He comes to Leith.

Faith, and Courage.

His departure from Leith.

Amongst others that came to hear him preach, there were two Gray-Fryers, who standing at the Church door, whispered to such as came in: Which Wischard observing, said to the people, *I pray you make room for these two Men, it may be they come to learn; and turning to them, he said, Come near, for I assure you, you shall hear the word of truth, which this day shall seal up to you either your salvation or damnation; and so he proceeded in his Sermon, supposing that they would be quiet: But when he perceived that they still continued to disturb all the people that stood near them, he said to them the second time with an angry countenance; O Ministers of Satan, and deceivers of the Souls of Men! will ye neither hear Gods truth your selves, nor suffer others to hear it? Depart and take this for your portion; God shall shortly confound and disclose your hypocrisie within this Kingdom; ye shall be abominable to Men, and your places and habitations shall be desolate. This he spake with much vehemency, and turning to the people, he said, *These Men have provoked the Spirit of God to anger; and then he proceeded to the end of his Sermon.

Popish malice.

A Prophecy.

Afterwards he preached in divers other places, the people much flocking after him: In all his Sermons foretelling the shortness of time that he had to travel, and the near approaching of his death.

Coming to Haddington, his Auditory began much to decrease: The cause, as it was conceived, was this; The Earl Bothwell, who had great observance in those parts, by the instigation of the Cardinal, had inhibited both those of the Town and Countrey from hearing him. Presently after, as he was going to Church, he received a Letter from the West-Countrey Gentlemen, and having read it, he called John Knox, who had diligently waited upon him since he came into Louthain, to whom he said, That he was a weary of the world, because he saw that Men began to be a weary of God: For, saith he, the Gentlemen of the West have sent me word, that they cannot keep their meeting at Edenburgh. John Knox wondering that he should enter into conference about these things so immediately before his Sermon, contrary to his custom, said to him; Sir, Sermon-time approaches, I will leave you for the present to your meditations. Then did Master Wischard walk up and down about half an hour, his his sad countenance declaring the grief of his mind: at last he went into the Pulpit, and his auditory being very small, he began on this manner, O Lord, how long shall it be that thy holy word shall be despised, and Men shall not regard their own salvation? I have heard of thee, O Haddington, that on thee there used to be Two or Three thousand Persons at a vain and wicked Play; and now to hear the Messenger of the Eternal God, of all the Parish can scarce be numbred One hundred present. Sore and fearful shall be the Plagues that shall ensue upon this thy contempt, with fire and sword shalt thou be plagued; yea thou Haddington in special, Strangers shall possess thee; and you the present Inhabitants shall either in bondage serve your Enemies, or else you shall be chased from your own habitations, and that because ye have not known, nor will know the time of your visitation.

A Prophecie:

This Prophecie was accomplished not long after, when the English took Haddington, made it a Garrison, enforced many of the Inhabitants to flee; oppressed others; and after a while, a great plague breaking forth in the Town, whereof multitudes died, the English were at last forced to quit it; who at their departure burnt and spoiled a great part of it, leaving it to be possessed by such as could first seize upon it, which were the French that came as Auxiliaries to Scotland, with a few of the ancient Inhabitants, so that Haddington to this day never recovered her former beauty, nor yet Men of such wisdom and ability as did formerly inhabit it.

His apprehension by Bothwell.

That night was Master Wischard apprehended in the House of Ormeiston, by the Earl Bothwell, suborned thereunto by the Cardinal. The manner was thus; After Sermon he took his last farewell of all his Friends in Haddington; John Knox would fain have gone with him; but he said, Return to your Children, and God bless you; One is sufficient for one sacrifice: Then went he the Laird of Ormeistons with some others that accompanied him. After Supper he held a comfortable discourse of Gods love to his Children; Then he appointed the 51 Psalm to be sung, and so retired to his Chamber.

Before midnight the House was beset; and the Earl Bothwell called for the Laird of the House, and told him that it was in vain to resist, for the Governor and Cardinal were within a mile with a great power; But if he would deliver Master Wischard to him, he would promise upon his Honor that he should be safe, and that the Cardinal should not hurt him: Master Wischard said, Open the Gates, the Will of God be done; and Bothwell coming in, Wischard said to him, I praise my God that so honorable a Man as you, my Lord, receive me this night; For I am perswaded that for your Honors sake you will suffer nothing to be done to me but by order of Law? I less fear to die openly then secretly to be murdered: Then said Bothwell, I will not only preserve your Body from all violence that shall be intended against you without order of Law, but I also promise in the presence of these Gentlemen, that neither the Governor nor Cardinal shall have their will of you, but I will keep you in mine own House, till I either set you free, or restore you to the same place where I receive you: Then said the Lairds, My Lord, if you make good your promise, which we presume you will, we our selves will not only serve you, but we will procure all the Professors in Louthain to do the same, &c. These promises being made in the presence of God, and Hands being stricken by both parties, the Earl took Master Wischard and so departed.

Bothwell's promise.

He is carried to Edinburgh.

Bothwell falsifies his promise.

Master Wischard was carried to Edinburgh; But Gold and Women easily corrupt fleshly Men; For the Cardinal gave Bothwell Gold; and the Queen, that was too familiar with him, promised him her favor, if he would deliver Master Wischard into Edinburgh Castle, which he did; and shortly after he was delivered to the Blood-thirsty Cardinal: who, seeing that it was forbidden by their Canon Law for a Priest to sit as a Judge upon life and death; he sent to the Governor, requesting him to appoint some Lay-Judge to pass sentence of death upon Master Wischard.

The Governor would easily have yielded to his request, but that David Hemilton, a Godly man, told him, that he could expect no better an end than Saul, if he persecuted the truth which formerly he had professed, &c. Hereupon the Governor sent the Cardinal word, that he would have no hand in shedding the Blood of that good man; the Cardinal being angry, returned this answer, That he had sent to him of meer Civility, and that he would proceed without him, and so to the great grief of the Godly, the Cardinal carried Master Wischard to St. Andrews, and put him into the Tower there; and without any long delay he caused all the Bishops, and other great Clergy men to be called together to St. Andrews.

He is carried to St. Andrews.

Feb. ult. 1546. Master Wischard was sent for to appear before them, to give an account of his seditious and Heretical Doctrine, as they called it; the Cardinal caused all his retinue to come Armed to the place of their sitting, which was the Abby Church, whither when Master Wischard was brought, there was a poor man lying at the Door, that asked his Alms, to whom he flung his Purse; when he came before the Cardinal, there was a Dean appointed to Preach; whose Sermon being ended, Wischard was put up into the Pulpit to hear his charge: And one Lawder, a Priest, stood over against him, and read a scrowle full of bitter accusations and Curses, so that the ignorant people thought that the earth would have opened and swallowed up Wischard quick: But he stood with great patience without moving, or once changing his countenance: The Priest having ended his Curses, spit at Master Wischards Face, saying, What answerest thou? Thou Runnagate, Traytor, Thief, &c. Then did Master Wischard fall upon his Knees, making his Prayer unto God; after which he said, Many and horrible sayings unto me a Christian man, many words abominable for to hear, have ye spoken here this day, which not only to teach, but even to think, I ever thought it a great abomination, &c. Then did he give them an account of his Doctrine. Answering to every Article as far as they would give him leave to speak.

His accusation.

His Prayers.

But they, without having any regard to his sober and Godly answers, presently condemned him to be Burnt. After which sentence he falling upon his Knees, said,

O immortal God, how long wilt thou suffer the rage, and great cruelty of the ungodly to exercise their fury upon thy Servants, which do further thy Word in this world, whereas they on the contrary seek to destroy the truth, whereby thou hast revealed thy self to the world, &c. O Lord, we know certainly that thy true Servants must needs suffer for thy names sake, Persecutions, Afflictions, and troubles in this present world, yet we desire that thou wouldest preserve and defend thy Church which thou hast chosen before the Foundations of the world, and give thy People grace to hear thy word, and to be thy true Servants in this present life.

His Prayers.

Then were the Common people put out, the Bishops not desiring that they should hear the innocent man speak, and so they sent him again to the Castle, till the Fire should be made ready; in the Castle came two Fryers to him, requiring him to make his Confession to them, to whom he said, I will make no Confession to you, but fetch me that man who Preached even now, and I will speak with him; Then was the Sub-Prior with whom he conferred a pretty while, till the Sub-Prior wept, who going to the Cardinal, told him that he came not to intercede for Master Wischards Life, but to make known his innocency to all men; at which words the Cardinal was very angry, saying: we knew long ago what you were.

Popish Priests.

The Captain of the Castle with some Friends, coming to Master Wischard, asked him if he would break his Fast with them: Yea, said he, very willingly, for I know you be Honest men: In the mean time he desired them to hear him a little; and so he discoursed to them about the Lords Supper, his suffering and death for us, exhorting them to love one another, laying aside all rancor and malice as becomes the members of Jesus Christ, who continually intercedes for us to his Father. Afterwards he gave Thanks, and Blessing the Bread and Wine, he took the Bread and brake it, giving it to every one, saying, eat this, remember that Christ died for us, and feed on it spiritually; so taking the Cup, he bad them remember that Christ's blood was shed for them, &c. Then he gave thanks and prayed for them, and so retired into his Chamber.

The Cardinals fear.

Presently came two Executioners to him from the Cardinal, one put upon him a Black Linnen Coat, the other brought him Bags of Powder, which they tied about several parts of his Body, and so they brought him forth to the place of Execution; over against which place, the Castle Windows were hung with rich Hangings, and Velvet Cushions laid for the Cardinal and Prelates, who from thence fed their eyes with the torments of this innocent man: The Cardinal fearing lest Wischard should be rescued by his Friends, caused all the Ordinance in the Castle to be bent against the place of his Execution, and commanded his Gunners to stand ready all the time of his burning; then were his hands bound behind his back, and so he was carried forth; in the way some Beggars met him, asking his Alms for Gods sake: To whom he said, My hands are bound wherewith I was wont to give you Alms, but the merciful Lord, who of his bounty and abundant grace feeds all men, vouchsafe to give you necessities both for your Bodies and Souls. Then two Fryars met him, perswading him to pray to our Lady to mediate for him; to whom he meekly said, Cease, tempt me not, I entreat you: and so with a Rope about his neck, and a Chain about his middle, he was led to the Fire: Where falling upon his Knees, he thrice repeated; O thou Savior of the World have mercy upon me; Father of Heaven, I commend my Spirit into thy Holy hands: Then turning to the People, he said: Christian Brethren and Sisters, I beseech you be not offended at the word of God for the torments which you see prepared for me; but I exhort you that you love the word of God for your Salvation, and suffer patiently, and with a comfortable heart for the words sake, which is your undoubted Salvation and everlasting Comfort; I pray you also shew my Brethren and Sisters which have often heard me, that they cease not to learn the word of God which I taught them, according to the measure of grace given to me, for no Persecution or trouble in this world whatsoever: And shew them that the Doctrine was no old wives Fables, but the truth of God; for if I had taught mens Doctrine, I had had greater thanks from men: But for the word of Gods sake I now suffer, not sorrowfully, but with a glad heart and mind: For this cause I was sent into the world that I should suffer this Fire for Christs sake; behold my Face! You shall not see me change my countenance: I fear not the Fire; and if Persecution come to you for the words sake, I pray you fear not them that can kill the Body, and have no power to hurt the Soul, &c. Then he prayed for them which accused him, saying, I beseech thee, Father of Heaven, forgive them that have of ignorance, or of an evil mind, forged lies of me: I forgive them with all my heart; I beseech Christ to forgive them that have condemned me this day ignorantly: Then turning to the people again, he said, I beseech you Brethren, exhort your Prelates to learn the word of God, that they may be ashamed to do evil, and learn to do good, or else there shall come upon them the wrath of God which they shall not eschew: Then the Executioner upon his Knees, said, Sir, I pray you forgive me, for I am not the cause of your death; and he calling him to him, kissed his cheeks, saying, Lo here is a token that I forgive thee; My heart, do thine Office; and so he was tied to the Stake, and the Fire kindled.

A Prophecie.

The Captain of the Castle coming near him, bad him be of good courage, and to beg for him the pardon of his sin; to whom Master Wischard said, This Fire torments my Body, but no whit abates my Spirits: Then looking towards the Cardinal, he said, He who in such state from that high place, feeds his eyes with my torments, within few days shall be Hanged out at the same window to be seen with as much ignominy, as he now leans there with pride; and so his breath being stopped, he was consumed by the Fire.

This Prophecie was fulfilled, when after the Cardinal was slain, the Provost raising the Town, came to the Castle Gates, crying, What have you done with my Lord Cardinal? where is my Lord Cardinal? To whom they within answered,

Return

Return to your Houses, for he hath received his reward, and will trouble the world no more: But they still cryed, we will never depart till we see him: Then did the Leslies hang him out at that Window to shew that he was dead, and so the people departed.

But God left not the death of this Holy man long unrevenged: For the people did generally go out of the cruelty used against him, especially John Lesley, Brother to the Earl of Rothes, and Norman Lesley his Cousin, fell foul upon the Cardinal for it: But he thought himself strong enough for all Scotland, laying, Tush, a Fig for the Fools, and a Button for the bragging of Hereticks. Is not the Lord Governor mine, witness his Eldest Son for a pledge at my Table? Have I not the Queen at my devotion? Is not France my Friend? Why should I fear any danger? Yet he had laid a design to cut off such as he feared and hated, which was discovered after his death by Letters and memorials found about him. He kept himself for his greater security in his Castle; and on a Friday night there came to the Town of Saint Andrews, Norman Lesley, William Kircaldy, John Lesley, and some others; and on the Saturday morning they met together not far from the Castle, waiting till the Gate was opened, and the Draw-Bridge let down, for the receiving in some Lime and Sand, to repair some decays about the Castle, which being done, Kircaldy, with six more, went to the Porter, falling into discourse with him, till the Leslies came also with some other Company: The Porter seeing them, would have drawn up the Bridge, but he was prevented, and whilst he endeavoured to keep them out at the Gate, his Head was broken, and the Keys taken from him; the Cardinal was asleep in Bed; for all night he had for his Bedfellow, Mistress Mary Ogleby, who was a little before gone from him out at the Postern Gate, and therefore the Cardinal was gone to his rest.

There were about one hundred Work-men in the Castle, which seeing what was done, cried out, but without hurt; they were turned out at the Wicket Gate: Then William Kircaldy went to secure the Postern lest the Cardinal should make an escape that way: The rest going to the Gentlemens Chambers, who were above Fifty, without hurting them, they turned them all out at the Gates; they which undertook this enterprise were but Eighteen men. The Cardinal being awaked with the noise, asked out at the Window what the matter? Answer was made, that Norman Lesley had taken his Castle: Then did he attempt to have escaped by the Postern, but finding that to be kept, he returned to his Chamber, and with the help of his Chamberlain fell to Barricadoing up the Door with Chests, and such things: Then came up John Lesley and bids open the Door: The Cardinal asked who was there: He answered John Lesley: The Cardinal said, I will have Norman, for he is my Friend: Content your self, said the other, with those that are here: And so they fell to breaking open the Door; in the mean time the Cardinal hid a Box of Gold under some Coals in a secret corner. Then he said to them, Will ye save my life? John Lesley answered, It may be that we will. Nay, said the Cardinal, swear unto me by Gods wounds that you will; and then I will open the Door: Then said John, that which was said, is unsaid, and so he called for Fire to burn down the Door, whereupon the Door was opened, and the Cardinal sat him down in his Chair, crying, I am a Priest, I am a Priest, ye will not slay me: Then John Lesley and another struck him once or twice; but Master James Melvin, a man that had been very familiar with Wilchard, and of a modest and gentle nature, perceiving them both to be in choler, plucked them back, saying, This work and Judgement of God although it be secret, ought to be done with great gravity: And so presenting him the point of his Sword, he said, Repent thee of thy former wicked life, but especially of shedding the blood of that notable Instrument of God, Master George Wilchard, who though he was consumed by the Fire before men, yet cries is for vengeance upon thee, and we from God are sent to revenge it; for here, before my God I protest, that neither the hatred of thy Person, the love of thy Riches, nor the fear of any hurt thou couldst have done me, moveth me to strike thee; but only because thou hast been, and still remainest

an obstinate Enemy against Jesus Christ and his Holy Gospel; And so he thrust him through the Body, who falling down, spake never a word, but I am a Priest, I am a Priest, Fie, Fie, all is gone.

The death of this Tyrant was grievous to the Queen Mother, with whom he had too much familiarity, as with many other women; as also to the Romanists, though the people of God were freed from their fears in a great measure thereby.

Adam Wallace.

Anno 1550. There was one Adam Wallace, a man that had no great learning, but was zealous in Godliness, and of an upright life; him the Bishop of St. Andrews caused to be apprehended, and carried to Edenburgh, where after a while he was brought to Judgment before Duke Hamilton, Huntly, and divers others; the Bishops and their instruments accused him: First, that he took upon him to Preach; To which he answered, that he never judged himself worthy of so excellent a Vocation, and therefore never took on him to Preach; Yet he denied not, that in private places he used to read the Word, and out of it to exhort such as were willing to hear him. Knave, quoth one, what have you to do to meddle with the Scriptures? I think, said he, it is everyones duty to labor to know the will of God, and to get assurance of his Salvation, which is to be found in the Old and New Testament. what then, said another, shall we leave to the Church-men to do? To whom he answered, Their work is publickly to Preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and to feed the Flock which he hath redeemed with his own Blood, as all true Pastors are commanded to do, &c. The Bishops being angry hereat, caused his charge further to be read; as that he denied Purgatory, praying to Saints, and for the dead, &c. To which he answered, That he had oft read over the Bible, and yet found no mention of Purgatory, nor Command to pray to the Saints, or for the dead; Therefore I believe, said he, they are but meer inventions of men, devised for covetousness sake. Then did they ask him what he thought of the Mas? He answered, I say as my Lord Jesus Christ said, that which is greatly esteemed before men, is abomination before God: Then cryed they all out, Heresie, Heresie, and so adjudged him to the Fire, which he patiently underwent the same day upon the Castle Hill.

Henry Forrest.

Anno 1553. Henry Forrest was accused of Heresie, but when they brought him to Trial, nothing could be proved against him, whereupon they sent him to Friar Langius to be confessed. The Friar amongst other questions, asked him what he thought of Patrick Hamilton, who had been formerly burned for Religion? He answered, That he was a good man, and that his Articles were to be maintained. This wicked Friar discovered his Confession, which was taken as a sufficient proof against the poor man, who thereupon was condemned to be Burnt. As he went to the place of Execution, he complained of the Friar who had betrayed him, saying, Let no man trust the false Friars after me; they are despisers of God, and deceivers of men; and so in the Flames he resigned up his Spirit unto God.

Walter Mill.

Anno 1558. Andrew Oliphant accused one Walter Mill, formerly a Priest; who being at Prayer, Oliphant said to him, Rise up Sir Walter; but when he had ended his Prayers, he said, My name is Walter: I have been too long one of the Popes Knights. Then said Oliphant, Thou keepest my Lords too long here, therefore make an end. He answered, I must obey God rather than men: When he was brought forth to Judgment, they asked him concerning Priests Marriage? He answered, It is Gods Ordinance, that they which cannot abstain, should Marry. But you abhor it, vowing Chastity, which you cannot keep, but take other mens wives and Daughters: Then they asked him if there were not seven Sacraments? He answered, Give me two, and take you the rest: After other questions, they asked him if he would recant? He answered, I am Corn and not Chaff; I will not recant the truth: They then commanded him to go to the Stake; But he said, By the Law of God I am forbidden to lay hands on my own self, therefore do you put me into the Fire, and you shall see my Resolution. Having made his Prayer to God, he said to the people; Although I have been a great sinner, yet it is not for that, but for Gods truth contained in his word of the Old and New Testament that I now suffer; and God out of his abundant mercy doth honor me so far, as to make me, amongst other of his Servants, seal his truth with my Blood; Dear Friends, as you would escape eternal death, be no more seduced with lies of Arch-Bishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, &c. But only trust in God, and so he quietly slept in the Lord; and was the last man that died for Religion in Scotland,

CHAP. XL.

The Persecution of the Church in Ireland, Anno Christi 1642.

THough the Barbarous cruelty used by the Irish against the English, go usually under the name of Rebellion, yet I rather look upon it as, and chuse to call it a Persecution, because their cruelties were exercised upon Protestants only, so far as ever I could hear; neither were the English Papists murdered, yea, they joyined with the Irish in murdering of their Brethren. Besides, the Jesuites, Priests, and Friars were the chief instigators to those murders, stirring up continually all sorts, both of the Gentry and Commonalty, to shew the utmost of their zeal therein; and when their design was so surely laid, that they thought it impossible to be prevented, they did in their publick devotions recommend by their Prayers the good success of a great design, tending much to the advancement of the Catholick cause: And that they might stir up the people with the greater animosity and cruelty to put it in Execution, they every where declaimed loudly against the Protestants, saying, That they were Hereticks, not to be suffered any longer to live amongst them; That it was no more sin to kill one of them, than to kill a Dog; and that it was a mortal and unpardonable sin to relieve or protect any of them.

Popish malice

They also with much acrimony represented the severe courses taken by the Parliament of England to suppress the Romish Religion, and utterly to extirpate the Professors of it: They told them that in England they had caused the Queens Priests to be hanged before her Face, and that they held her self under a most severe Discipline; and that the like cruel Laws should be made against Popery in Ireland, &c.

Popish rage

When their plots were ripe for Execution, we find their first proceedings against the English very various; some of the Irish only stripping and expelling them; others murdering Man, Woman, and Child without mercy; yet all resolving universally to root out all the Protestants out of Ireland; yea, so deeply malicious were they against the English Protestants, that they would not endure the very sound of that Language, but would have all such punished as spake English; and the names of all English places they would have changed into the old Irish.

The malice against the English

In many places they killed the English Cows and Sheep, moerly because they were English: sometimes they cut off their Legs, or cut out a piece of their Buttock, and so left them to live in pain: Yea, in some places, when Cattel they could not devour, they killed, and left in great multitudes stinking in the Fields.

The Priests gave the Sacrament unto divers of the Irish, upon condition that they should neither spare Man, Woman, nor Child of the Protestants, saying, That it did them a great deal of good to wash their Hands in their Blood. One Magellan, a Priest, read an Excommunication against all those, that from thenceforth forth should relieve or harbor any English, Scotch, or Welch man, or give them Alms at their Doors, whereby many were famished to death. The Friars with tears exhorted them not to spare any of the English: They boasted, that when they had destroyed them in Ireland, they would go over into England, and not leave the memorial of an English man under Heaven.

They openly professed, that they held it as lawful to kill a Protestant, as to kill a Sheep or a Dog. One of their Priests said, That it was no more pity or conscience to take their lives or Estates from them, than to take a Bone out of a Dogs mouth.

The day before this Massacre was to begin, the Priests gave the people a dismissal at Mass, with free liberty to go out and take possession of all their Lands, which they pretended to be unjustly detained from them by the English. As also to strip, rob, and despoil them of all their Goods and Cattel; The Protestants being, as they told them, worse than Dogs, for they were Divels, and served the Divel, and therefore the killing of such was a meritorious act, and a rare preservative against the pains of Purgatory; for that the Bodies of such of them as died in this quarrel should not be cold, before their Souls should ascend up into Heaven, so that they should not need to fear the pains of Purgatory; and this caused some of these Murtherous Cains to boast, after they had slain many of the English, that they knew that if they should die presently they should go straight to Heaven.

Popish perfidiousness.

The chief Gentlemen of the Irish, when this Persecution first began, perswaded many of their Protestant neighbors, that if they would bring their Goods and Cattel to them, they would secure them from the rage of the Common people; and hereby they got abundance peaceably into their Hands, whereof they cheated the Protestants, refusing to restore them again; yet, so confident were the Protestants at first of their good dealing in regard of former familiarity, that they gave the Inventories of all they had; nay, digged up such of their best things as they had hidden in the ground, and deposited them in their custody. They also gat much into their Hands by fair promises, and deep Oaths and Engagements, that if they would deliver them their Goods, they would suffer them with their Wives and Children quietly to depart the Country; yet, having got what they could, they afterwards murdered them.

Prodigious cruelties.

Having thus seized upon all their Goods and Cattel, ransack't their Houses, and gotten their persons under their power; the next work, was to strip man, Woman, and Child stark-naked, and so to turn them out of Doors, not suffering them so much as to shelter themselves under Bushes, or in the Woods, strictly prohibiting all the Irish, under great penalties, not to give them any relief as they passed in the High Ways; and their great design herein was, that they on whom they would not lay their Hands and cruelly Murther in cold Blood, might miserably perish through cold, nakedness, and want; and therefore if any of them gat any old rags to cover their nakedness with, they stripped them again and again, sometimes twice or thrice over, the Irish Women being very active herein, yea, they taught their very Children to do the like; yea, they would not leave to the Women so much as a Smock or an Hair-lace: So that many of them being starved, fell down dead in the High Ways: Others that got to any English Town, by reason of Famine, and cold suffered by the way, died so soon as they came thither.

Many starved and stript.

In the Town of Colerain, of these miserable people, that fled thither for succour, many Thousands died in two days, so that the living being not able to Bury them, laid the Carcasses of those dead persons in great ranks in waste and wide holes, piling them so close and thick as if they had packed up Herrings together.

One Magdalen Redman deposed that she, and divers other Protestants, amongst whom were Twenty two Widows, were first robbed, and then stripped stark-naked; and when they had in an House covered themselves with Straw, the the Bloody Papists threw burning straw in amongst them on purpose to burn them; then did they drive them so naked into the wilde Woods in Frost and Snow, so that the Snow covered their skins, where a long time it lay unmelted, and some of their Children died in their Arms with the extremity of the cold; and whereas some of these poor Souls went towards the Burre for shelter, the cruel Irish turned them back again, saying, They should go to Dublin; and when they went towards Dublin, they beat them back, saying, They should go to the Burre, and so tossed them to and fro, that some of them died: Those which through many difficulties gat to the Burre, many of them died there, and those that survived, lived miserably by reason of their many wants.

Yet though these Bloody Villains exercised such inhumane cruelties towards the poor Protestants, they would commonly boast, that these were but the beginnings of their sorrows; and indeed they made it good; for having disarmed the English, robbed them of their Goods and Cattel, stript them of their Cloaths, and having their persons in their power, they furiously broke out into all manner of abominable cruelties, horrid Massacres, and execrable Murthers, so that it would make any Christians ear to tingle, and his Heart to ache to hear the mention of them.

For there were multitudes murdered in cold Blood, some whilst they were at Plough, others as they sat peaceably in their Houses, others Travelling upon the High Ways; all without any manner of provocation given by them, were suddenly destroyed.

In the Castle of Lisgool were about One hundred and fifty Men, Women, and Children consumed with Fire. At the Castle of Monagh were One hundred slain all together. At the Castle of Tullah, which was delivered to Mac Guire upon composition, and faithful promises of fair quarter, as soon as he and his entred the Court, they began to strip the people, and most cruelly put them to the Sword, Murthering them all without mercy.

At Liffenskeah they Hanged and killed above One hundred of the Scottish Protestants, shewing them no more favor than they did to the English. Yea, the Country thereabouts being well planted and peopled, was in a most horrible manner quite destroyed. In the Countries of Armagh and Tyrone, where the Protestants were more numerous, their Murthers were more multiplied, and with greater cruelty, if it were possible, than in other places.

Mac Guire coming to the Castle of Liffenskeah, desired in a Friendly manner to speak with Master Middleton, who admitting him in, as soon as he was entred, he first burned the Records of the County which were kept there: Then he demanded One thousand pounds which was in his custody of Sir William Balfour, which as soon as he had, he caused Master Middleton to hear Mass, and to swear that he would never stir from it, and then immediately caused him, his Wife and Children to be Hanged up: Hanging and Murthering above One hundred persons besides in that place.

At Portendown Bridge there were One thousand Men, Women, and Children carried in several Companies, and all unmercifully drowned in the River, the Bridge being broken down in the midst, and the people driven and forced on, till they tumbled down into the Water. Yea, in that Country there were Four thousand persons drowned in several places, the Barbarous Papists driving on the poor Souls, when they had miserably stripped them, unto the places of their sufferings like Swine; and if any were slack in their pace, they pricked them forward with their Swords and Pikes; yea, to terrifie the rest, they killed and wounded some, and when they were cast into the River, if any assayed to swim to the Shore, the Rebels stood and Shot at them.

In one place One hundred and forty English were taken and driven like Cattel for many Miles together. Other Companies they carried out under pretence of safe conduct, thereby causing them to march cheerfully till they had got them to some place fit for Execution, and then murthered them there. One hundred hundred and fifteen Men, Women, and Children they sent with Sir Philem O-neales Pass, till they had brought them to the Bridge of Portendown, and then forced them all into the Water, and such as by swimming, or other means sought to escape, they either knocked them on the Head, and after drowned them, or else shot them to death in the Water. One Mistris Camphel being forced by them to the River, and finding no means to escape their fury; suddenly clasped one of the chief of them in her Arms, and so both tumbling into the River, they were drowned together. At another time One hundred and forty Protestants being thrown in at the same place, as any of them swam to the Shore, the Bloody Villains with the But-ends of their Musquets knockt out their Brains.

At Armagh, O Cane gat together all the Protestants thereabouts, pretending to conduct them to Coleraine: But before they were gone a days Journey, they were all Murthered, and so were many others, though they had protections from Sir Philem O Neale. The aged people in Armagh were carried to Charlemount, and there Murthered.

Presently after the Town of Armagh was burnt, and Five hundred persons of all sorts were there Murthered and drowned. In Killoman were Forty eight Families Murthered. In one House Twenty two Protestants were Burned: In Kilmore all the Inhabitants were stript and Massacred, being Two hundred Families: Some they set in the Stocks till they confessed where their Money was, and then Massacred them: The whole County was Common Butchery; where many Thousands perished in a short time, by Sword, Famine, Fire, Water, and all other cruel manner of deaths that rage and malice could invent.

To many these bloody Villains shewed so much favor as to dispatch them presently, by no means allowing them so much time as to pray. Others they imprisoned in filthy Dungeons full of dirt and mire, and there clapping Bolts on their Legs, suffered them to perish at leisure. One told John Cowder that they would kill him, but first bid him say his prayers, and when he kneeled down to pray, they presently cut off his Head. When some others upon their Knees begged but leave to pray before they were slain, they would bid them bequeath their Souls to the Divil; others would ask them, why do you desire to Pray? your Souls are already with the Divil? And so would immediately slaughter them. At Casel they put all the Protestants into a loathsome Dungeon, where they kept them twelve weeks in great misery. Some they Barbarously mangled and left them languishing upon the High Ways, crying out but for so much mercy as to be dispatched out of their pain; some they Hanged up twice or thrice: Others they Buried alive. Some when they were half Hanged, they cast into Pits, covering them with a little earth, where they sent out most lamentable groans for a good while after.

In Queens County, an English Man, his Wife, Five Children, and a Maid, were all Hanged together, then put into a Hole; the youngest Child being not dead, put up the hand cried Mammy, Mammy, and yet without mercy they Buried it alive.

Thomas Mason in Laugal was extreemly beaten and wounded, yet his Wife and some others carried him away, whereupon these Villains cruelly hacked, flashed, and wounded them, and then dragged the said Mason into an Hole, and there threw Stones on him with the weight whereof they kept him under: There he lay languishing and groaning till his own Wife, to put him out of pain, stopped his breath with her Handkerchief.

At Clownes Seventeen men were Buried alive, yet so as their pitiful cries were heard afar off.

Some were deadlly wounded, and so Hanged upon Tenter-hooks. Some with Ropes about their Necks were drawn through the Water. Some with Ropes about their Middles were drawn through Woods and Bogs.

In Castle Cumber one of these Cut-throats took two Boys, wounded them, and hung them up upon a Butchers tenters. Some were hanged up, and taken down several times to make them confess their monny, which when they had done, they presently murdered them. Some were hung up by the Arms, and then with their Swords they made experiment how many blows an English Protestant would endure ere he died. Some had their Bellies ript up, and so were left with their Guts running about their heels:

An ancient Woman coming towards Dublin, was stript Seven times in one day, and they bad her go and look for her God, and bid him give her cloaths again. Blasphemy.

In Kilkenny they cruelly beat an English Woman, till they forced her into a Ditch, where she died: Then they took her Child; a Girl of about Six years old, ript her Belly, and let out her Guts. Many had their Bellies ript.

One they forced to go to Mass with them, yet afterwards wounded him, ript his Belly, took out his Guts, and so left him alive.

A Scottish Man they stripped and knocked on the Head, who afterwards coming to himself, went into the Town naked: Then did they again take him and hewed him all to pieces; They also ript up his Wives Belly, so that a Child dropped out of her womb. Many other Women great with Child they hung up; then ript their Bellies; and let the Infants fall out. Sometimes they gave their Children to be devoured of Swine and Dogs. One John Stone with his Son, Two Sons in Law, and their Wives, they took and hung them all up; and one of the young Women being great with Child, they ript her Belly, took forth her Child, and used such beastly barbarous actions to her as are not fit to be mentioned. At the Newry they ript up a Womans Belly that was great with two Children, throwing them to be devoured of Swine. Also another Woman being deliverd of a Child in the Fields, they which had formerly killed her Father and Husband, killed her also with two of her Children; and gave the new-born Infant to be devoured of Dogs.

In the County of Armagh they robbed, stripped, and murdered abundance of Protestants, whereof some they burned, some they slew with the Sword, some they hanged, and some they starved to death; and meeting Mistress Howard, and Mistress Frankland with six of their Children, and themselves both great with Child, with their Pikes they killed and murdered them all, ript open the Gentlewomens Bellies, took out their Children, and threw them into a Ditch. A young Scottish Womans Child they took by the heels, and dashed the Brains out against a Tree; The like they did to many other Children. Children had their Brains dashed out.

Anne Hill going with a young Child on her back, and four more by her side, these cruel Persecutors pulled the Child off her back, trod on it till it died, stripped her self and the other four Children stark naked, whereby they died of cold.

Some others they met with, hanged them up upon a Windmill, and before they were half dead, cut them in pieces with their Skeins. Many other Protestants, especially Women and Children they pricked and stabbed with their Skeins, Forks and Swords, flashing, cutting and mangling them in their Heads, Faces, Breasts, Arms, and other parts, yet killed them not, but left them wallowing in their Blood, to languish, starve, and pine to death; and when they desired them to kill them out of their pain, they refused; yet sometimes after a day or two, they would dash out their Brains with Stones or Clubs, which they accounted as a great favor.

One Goodwife Harvey at Kilkenny was forced to go to Mass, yet afterwards, together with her Children, was stripped, and one of her Daughters had her Belly ripped that her Intrails fell out; and her self was so beaten and wounded, that she hardly escaped with life.

Many burned.

The Castle of Lisgoole being set on fire by these merciless Papists, a Woman leaped out at a Window to save her self from burning, but they presently murdered her: The next morning her Child was found sucking at her Breast, which they murdered also. And whereas many Protestants, with their Wives and Children fled into Vaults and Cellars to hide themselves, they were all murdered there. One Jane Addis they stabbed, and then putting her Child of a quarter old, to her Breast, bid it suck English Bastard, and so left it to perish there.

Some perish by Famine.

One Mary Barlow had her Husband hanged before her Face, and her self with six Children were all stript stark naked in frost and snow, after which, sheltering themselves in a Cave, they had nothing to eat for three weeks, but two old Calves skins, which they beat with stones, and so eat them hair and all, her Children crying to her rather to go out and be killed than to famish there.

In the cold weather many Thousands of Protestants of all ranks, ages, and sexes, being turned out stark naked, perished of cold and hunger, Thousands of others were drowned, cast into Ditches, Bogs, and Turf-pits. Multitudes were inclosed in Houses, which being set on fire, they were burnt miserably. Some that lay sick of feavers they drew out of their Beds and hanged them. Some Men, Women, and Children they drove into Boggie pits; and if any of them endeavored to get out, they knockt them on the Heads.

Unnatural cruelties.

Some aged Men and Women, these Barbarians enforced their own Children to carry them to the River where they were drowned; yea some Children were compelled unnaturally to be the Executioners of their own Parents: Wives were forced to help to hang their own Husbands, and Mothers to cast their own Children into the Water, after all which, themselves were murdered. In Sligo they forced a young Man to kill his own Father, and then hanged him up: In another place they forced a Woman to kill her Husband; Then caused her Son to kill her, and then immediately hanged the Son; and this they did that they might destroy both Soul and Body: Yea such was their detestable malice against the English Protestants, that they taught their Children to kill English Children. One of these Villains Wives was very angry with their Soldiers, because they did not bring the grease of a fat Gentlewoman, whom they had slain, with them for her to make Candles of.

Children kill English Children.

Some boiled in Cauldrons.

The Irish Women that followed the Camp, egged on the Men to cruelty, always crying out, Kill them all, spare neither, Man, Woman, nor Child. They took the Child of one Thomas Straton, being about twelve years old, and boiled him to death in a Cauldron. One Goodwife Lin and her Daughter were carried into a Wood, where they first hanged the Mother, and then the Daughter in the hair of the Mothers Head. Some Women and Children of the Irish, meeting an English Woman great with Child, stript her to her smock, then pulled off her smock, and so rent and abused her, that the poor Woman falling into labor, both she and her Child died under their hands.

Some had their Eyes pulled out.

In some places they plucked out the Eyes, and cut off the Hands of the Protestants, and so turned them out into the Fields to wander up and down till they perished. The very Women in some places stoned the English Women to death, together with their Children. One Man they shot through both his thighs, then digging a hole in the ground, they set him in it upright upon his Feet, and then filled up the hole, leaving out only his Head, where they left him till he pined and languished to death. Of another Man they held his Feet in the fire till he was burned to death.

In Munster they hanged up many Ministers in a most barbarous manner. One Minister they stripped stark naked, and drove him through the Town, pricking him forwards with Darts and Rapiers, and so pursued him till he fell down dead.

Neither

Neither did all the malice that they bore to these poor Christians, end with their lives when they had slain them, but extended after death to the denying burial to their Carcasses, casting some into ditches, leaving others to be devoured of ravenous Beasts and Fowls; yea some that had been formerly buried they digged up, and left them as dung upon the face of the earth.

These barbarous Villains vowed that if any Parents digged graves to bury their Children in, they should be buried therein themselves. They stripped one William Loverden naked, then killed him before his Wife and Children, cut off his Head, and held it up for them to gaze at; and when his Wife had buried him in his Garden, they digged him up, and threw him into a Ditch. Divers Ministers Bones that had been buried some years before, they digged up, because they were, as they said, Patrons of Herésie.

Poor Children that went out into the Fields to eat weeds and grass, they killed without all pity. And a poor Woman, whose Husband was taken by them, went to them with two Children at her Feet, and one at her Brest, hoping to beg her Husbands life; But they slew her and her sucking Infant; brake the Neck of another, and the third hardly escaped: And which was a great aggravation of their wickedness, they exercised all this cruelty upon the English Protestants who never provoked them thereto, yea that had always lived peaceably with them, administering help and comfort to them in distress, putting no difference betwixt them and those of their own Nation, and cherished them as Friends and loving Neighbors. Notwithstanding all which courtesies, they now shewed them no favor or pity. Alas, who can comprehend the fears, terrors, anguish, bitterness, and perplexity that seized upon the Hearts of the poor Protestants, finding themselves so suddenly surprized without remedy, and inextricably wrapt up in all kind of outward miseries, which could possibly by Man be inflicted upon humane creatures. What sighs and groans, trembling and astonishment! What shrieks, cries, and bitter lamentations of Wives, Children, Servants and Friends, howling and weeping, finding themselves without all hope of deliverance from their present miseries! How inexorable were all their barbarous Tormentors that compassed them in on every side, without all bowels of compassion, or the least commiseration and pity! One Ellen Millington they put into a hole, fastning her in with Stones, and left her there to languish to death, bragging how many of them went to see her kick and toss in the hole. Yea they boasted upon their success, that that day was there one, and that ere long they would not leave one Protestant Rogue living, but would utterly destroy every one that had but a drop of English Blood in them: Their Women crying out, Slay them all, the English are fit meat for Dogs, and their Children are Babards. Yea so implacable was their malice, that they vowed that they would not leave an English Beast alive, nor any of the breed of them. How grievous was it to any Christian Heart to hear a base Villain boast, that his Hands were so weary with killing and knocking down Protestants into a Bog, that he could not lift up his Arms to his Head! Another boasted that he had been abroad and had killed sixteen of the Rogues. Others boasted that they had killed so many, that the Grease and Fat which stuck upon their Swords, might well make an Irish Candle. Yea two Boys boasted, that at several times they had murdered and drowned Thirty six Women and Children.

These merciless Papists having set a Castle on fire, wherein were many Protestants, they rejoicingly said amongst themselves, O how sweetly do they fry!

At Kilkenny, when they had committed many cruel murders, they brought Seven Protestants Heads, amongst which one was the Head of a Reverend Minister, all which they set upon the Market-Cross, on a Market day, triumphing, flashing, and mangling them; and putting a gag into the Ministers mouth, they slit up his Cheeks to his Ears, and laying a Leaf of a Bible before it, they bid him preach; for his mouth was wide enough: It cannot be imagined with what scorn and derision they acted these things, and with what joy and exaltation their Eyes beheld the sad spectacle of the Protestants miseries; what greedy delight they took in their bloody executions.

An English Woman, whom they had stripped stark naked, gat a little straw, which she tied about her middle to cover her nakedness; But these impudent Villains set fire to it, boasting what brave sport they had, to see how the fire made the English Jade dance.

At Kilmore they put many Protestants, Men, Women, and Children together into a thatched House, and then set fire on it, boasting of the lamentations and out-cries that they made whilest they were in burning, and how the Children gaped when the fire began to burn them; taking pride, and glorying in imitating those cries.

Prodigious
cruelty.

They took one Mistress Maxwel being in labor, and threw her into a River; boasting that the Childs Arm appeared, and that it was half-born when the mother was drowned.

These bloody Persecutors took great pleasure and delight in their cruelty, and to encrease their misery, when they butchered them, they used to say, Thy Soul to the Devil. One of them coming into an House with his Hands and Cloaths all Bloody, made his boasts, that it was English Blood, and that his Skein had pincked the clean white Skins of many of them, even to the hilt thereof. When any of them had killed a Protestant, many of them would come one after another, each of them stabbing, wounding, and cutting his Body in a most despiteful manner, and then leave it naked to be devoured of Dogs, Beasts, and Fowls; and when they had slain any number of them, they would boast that they had made the Devil beholding to them in sending so many Souls to Hell.

But its no wonder that they carried themselves so towards these innocent Christians, when they spared not to belch out their execrable Blasphemies against God and his holy Word.

Bibles burnt.

In one place they burnt two Protestant Bibles, and then said it was Hell-fire they burnt. Other Bibles they took, cut in pieces, and then burnt them, saying, that they would do the like to all Puritane Bibles. In the Church at Power-scourt they burnt the Pulpit, Pues, Chests and Bibles belonging to it. Others of them took the Protestants Bibles, and wetting them in dirty Water, did several times dash them on the Faces of the Protestants, saying, I know you love a good Lesson; Here is an excellent one for you, come to morrow and you shall have as good a Sermon as this. Others they dragged by the Hair of the Head into the Church, there stripped and whipped them in a most cruel manner, saying, If you come to morrow, you shall hear the like Sermon. They took the Bible of a Minister called Master Edward Slack, and opening it, they laid it in a puddle of Water, and then stamped upon it, saying, A Plague on it; This Bible hath bred all the quarrel, and that they hoped within a few weeks all the Bibles in Ireland should be used as that was, or worse.

Blasphemies.

They did most despitefully upbraid the Profession of the truth to those blessed Souls, whom neither by threats nor terrors, pains nor torments they could draw to forsake their Religion. And though some by extream torments were drawn to profess the change of their Religion, yet did they find no more favour with these Hell-hounds, who with great scorn used to say, That it was fit to send them out of the world whilst they were in a good mood.

Apostates
murdered.

At Glasgow, a Priest with some others, drew about Forty or Fifty English and Scottish Protestants to be reconciled to the Church of Rome, and then he told them that they were in a good Faith, and for fear they should fall from it and turn Hereticks, he with his companions presently cut all their throats.

John Nicholson and Anne his Wife, being received into the Protection of one Fitz Patrick, he labored to perswade them to go to Mass, and to joyn in the present massacre; But they professed, That rather than they would forsake their Religion

Religion they would die upon the Swords point; Then he would have had the Woman burn her Bible, but she told him, Rather than she would burn her Bible, she would die the death; Whereupon, the Sabbath morning after they were both of them cruelly murdered: But he that acted the Villany was so tormented in Conscience, and dogged with apparitions of them as he conceived, that with inward horror he pined away.

Contrary and Courage.

Gods Judgements on Persecutors.

In the County of Tipperary near the Silver works, some of these barbarous Papists met with Eleven English Men, Protestants, Ten Women, and some Children, whom they first stripped of their Cloaths, and then with Stones, Poleaxes, Skeins, Swords, &c. they most barbarously massacred them all; This was done on a Sabbath Evening, the day having been very fair and clear: But just at that time, God sent a fearful storm of Thunder, Lightning, Wind, Hail and Rain, so that the Murtherers themselves confessed, that it was a sign of Gods anger against them for this cruelty; yet they persisted in their bloody act, hacking, hewing, slashing and stabbing them, so that most of them were cut in pieces; Then tying Withs about their Necks, they threw them into a hole which they made for the purpose; yet it pleased God, that one Scottish and an English Man, though they had many grievous wounds, and were left for dead, after a while revived, and with much difficulty escaped with their lives: But as God shewed his great mercy in preserving them, so he shewed his just judgment upon Hugh Kennedy, the chief of those Murtherers, who presently fell into a most desperate madness and distraction, neither resting day nor night, till about Eight days after he drowned himself.

In the County of Mayo, about Sixty Protestants, whereof Fifteen were Ministers, were upon Covenant, to be safely conveyed to Galway by one Edmund Burk and his Soldiers; But by the way this Burk drew his Sword, teaching thereby the rest of his Company to do the like, and so they began to massacre these poor Protestants, some they shot to death, some they stabbed with their skeins, some they thrust through with their Pikes, some they cast into the Water and drowned, the Women they stript stark naked, who lying upon their Husbands to save them, were run through with Pikes, so that very few of them escaped with life.

Papish persecution.

In the Town of Sligo Forty Protestants were stript and locked up in a Cellar; and about midnight a Butcher, provided for the purpose, was sent in amongst them, who with his Axe knocked them all on the Heads.

Many knocked on the Heads.

In Tirawly, Thirty or Forty English, who had formerly yielded to go to Mass, were put to their choice whether they would die by the Sword, or to be drowned: They chose the latter, and so being driven to the Sea-side, these barbarous Villains with their naked Swords forced them into the Sea; The Mothers with their Children in their Arms wading to the Chin, were afterwards overcome by the waves, where they all perished.

But present death was counted too great a favor, and therefore of some they twisted Withs about their Foreheads till the Blood sprang out at the Crown of their Heads: Others they hanged, and let down several times, &c.

The Son of Master Montgomery, a Minister, aged about Fifteen years, met with one of these blood-suckers, who formerly had been his School-master, who drew his Skein at him, whereupon the Boy said, Good Master, whip me as much as you will, but do not kill me; yet this merciless Tyger, barbarously murdered him without all pity. A Scottish Man was first wounded, and then buried alive in a Ditch.

A Boy murdered by the Master.

In the Town of Sligo, all the Protestants were first stript, and robbed of all their Estates: Afterwards they were summoned to go into the Goal, and such as refused, were carried in; and then about midnight, they all were stripped stark naked, and there most cruelly and barbarously murdered with Swords, Axes, Skeins, &c. some of them being Women great with Child, their Infants thrust out their Arms and Legs at their wounds, after Barbarous cruelty, and oppression.

after which execrable murthers, they laid the dead naked Bodies of the Men upon the naked Bodies of the Women in a most immodest posture, where they left them till the next day to be looked upon by the Irish, who beheld it with great delight: Also Isabel Beard, great with Child, hearing the lamentable cries of those that were murdered, ran forth into the Streets, where she was barbarously murdered, and was found the next day with the Childs Feet coming out of the wounds in her sides; many others were murdered in the Houses and Streets: But by Gods just judgment the River of Sligo, which was before very full of Fish, whereby many were nourished, for a long time after it afforded no Fish at all. A Prior also that had a Hand in the murder of Isabel Beard, and of casting her into the River, presently after fell mad.

About Dungannon were Three hundred and sixteen Protestants in the like barbarous manner murdered: About Charlemount above Four hundred: About Tyre Two hundred and six.

One Mac Crew murdered Thirty one in one morning: Two young Villains murdered One hundred and forty poor Women and Children that could make no resistance: An Irish Women with her own Hands murdered Forty five.

Many drowned.

At Portendowne Bridge were drowned above Three hundred. At Lamgh were drowned above Two hundred: In another place Three hundred were drowned in one day. In the Parish of Killamen there were murdered One thousand and two hundred Protestants.

They made Candles of their Grease.

Many young Children they cut into quarters and gobbets: Eighteen Scottish Infants they hanged upon a Clothiers Tenterhooks. One fat Man they murdered, and made Candles of his Grease: Of another Scottish Man they ript up his Belly, took one end of his small Guts, tied it to a Tree, and forced him round about it till he had drawn them all out of his Body, saying, That they would try whether a Dogs or a Scotchmans Guts were the longer.

Prodigious cruelties.

By the command of Sir Philem O Neale, Master James Maxwell was drawn out of his Bed, being sick of a Feavor, and murdered: And his Wife being in Child-birth, the Child half born, they stript her stark naked, drove her about a flights shoot, and drowned her in the Black-water; The like, or worse they did to another English Woman in the same Town. They took one Master Watson, and cutting two collops out of his Buttocks they roasted him alive. Of a Scottish Woman great with Child, they ript up her Belly, cut the Child out of her Womb, and so left it crawling on her Body.

Popish uncleanness.

Master Starkey, Schoolmaster at Armagh, being above One hundred years old, they stripped stark naked; Then took two of his Daughters being Virgins, whom they stripped stark naked also, and then forced them to lead their aged Father under the Arms a quarter of a mile to a Turfpit, where they drowned them all three, feeding the lusts of their Eyes, and cruelty of their Hearts with the same object at the same time.

Their cruelty to the Cattle.

In some places they shewed the like cruelty to the English Beasts, which they would not kill out-right, but used to cut collops out of them, delighting to hear their roaring, and so the poor Cattel would sometimes live two or three days in that torment.

Henry Cowel.
Constancy.
Robert Ecklin.
A Childs Constancy.

To one Henry Cowel, a gallant Gentleman, they profered his life, if he would marry one of their bale Trulls, or go to Mass, but he chose death rather than to consent to either. Also to one Robert Ecklin, a Child about Eleven years old, they profered his life if he would go to Mass, but he refused, saying, That he saw nothing in their Religion for which he would change his own.

Many of the Protestants they buried alive, solacing themselves in hearing them speak to them, whilst they were digging down old Ditches upon them.

They

They used also to send their Children abroad in troops, armed with long Wattles and Whips, wherewith they used to beat dead Mens Bodies about their privy members, till they beat them off, and then would return very joyful to their Parents, who received them, as it were in Triumph for their good actions.

Children brutally cruelty.

If any Women were found dead, lying with their Faces downwards, these brutish persons used to turn them on their Backs, viewing and censuring every part of them, especially those parts that are not fit to be named, which also they abused so many ways, and so filthily, as chaste Ears would not endure the naming thereof.

Popish un-cleanness.

They brake the Back-bone of a young youth, and so left him in the Fields, and some days after he was found, having, like a Beast, eaten all the Grass round about him; yet neither then could they kill him out-right, but removed him to a place of better pasture, wherein was fulfilled that saying, The tender mercies of the wicked are cruelty.

Monstrous cruelty to a Boy.

In the County of Antrim they murdered Nine hundred fifty four Protestants in one morning, and afterwards about Twelve hundred more in that County. Near Lisnegarvy they forced above Twenty four Protestants into a House, and then setting fire on it, they burned them all, counterfeiting their outcries in definition to others.

Many burnt.

Sir Philem O Neal boasted that he had slain above Six hundred at Garvagh; and that he had left neither Man, Woman, nor Child alive in the Baronry of Mounsterlong. In other places he murdered above Two thousand Persons in their Houses, so that many Houses were filled with dead Bodies.

Above Twelve thousand were slain in the high ways as they fled towards Down. Many died of Famine; many were starved to death for want of Clothes, being stript of all in a cold season: Some Thousands were drowned. So that in the very Province of Ulster there were about One hundred and fifty thousand murdered by sundry kinds of torments and deaths.

One hundred and fifty thousand murdered in Ulster.

These bloody Persecutors themselves confessed, that the Ghosts of divers of the Protestants which they had drowned at Portendowne Bridge, were daily and nightly seen to walk upon the River, sometimes singing of Psalms, sometimes brandishing naked Swords, sometimes screeching in a most hideous and fearful manner, so that many of the Popish Irish which dwelt near thereabouts, being affrighted herewith, were forced to remove their habitations further off into the Countrey.

Gods judgment on these Persecutors.

The Popish English were no whit inferiour, yea rather exceeded the natural Irish in their cruelty against the Protestants that lived amongst them, within the pale, being never satisfied with their Blood till they had seen the last drop thereof.

Anne Kinnard testified, that Fifteen Protestants being imprisoned, and their Feet in the Stocks, a Popish Boy being not above Fourteen years old, slew them all in one night with his Skein. Another not above Twelve years old, killed Two Women in another place. An English Papist Woman killed Seven Men and Women of her neighbors in one morning. And it was usual for the Papists Children to murder the Protestants Children, and sometimes with their wooden Swords, sharp and heavy, they would venture of People of ripe years.

Boys and Women murderers.

An English Woman, who was newly delivered of Two Children, some of these Villains violently compelled her in her great pain and sickness, to rise from her Bed, and took One of the Infants that was living, and dashed out his Brains against the Stones, and then threw him into the River of Barrow. The like they did by many other Infants: Many others they hanged without all pity.

The Lord Mont Garret caused divers English Soldiers that he had taken about Kilkenny to be hanged, hardly suffering them to pray before their death, they they died very patiently, and resolutely in the defence of the Protestant Faith; and one of them, being an Irish Man, had his life offered if he would turn Papist, but he rather chose to die, and so was executed with the rest.

Some of these Persecutors meeting a poor young Girl that was going to see her Friends, they first half-hanged her, and then buried her quick.

Popish perfidiousness.

One Fitz Patrick enticed a rich Merchant, that was a Protestant, to bring all his goods into his House, promising safely to keep them, and to redeliver them to him. But when he had thus gotten them into his possession, he took the Merchant and his Wife, and hanged them both: The like he did to divers others.

Some English Mens Heads that they had cut off, they carried to Kilkenny, and on the Market day, set them on the Cross, where many, especially the Women, stab'd, cut, and slashed them, every one accounting themselves happy that could but get a blow at them.

Gods Judgment on Persecutors.

One of the Heads being a Ministers, a Woman struck so hard with her fist, that the same night her Hand grew black and blew, and so rankled, that she was lame of it a quarter of a year after: Another Woman that looked on those Heads with much rejoicing, presently after fell so distracted, that neither night nor day she could rest, but cryed out continually that she saw those Heads before her Eyes.

One English Protestant, saying, That he would believe the Devil as soon as the Pope, they presently hanged him up in an Apple Tree till he died.

Some worried with Dogs.

A poor Protestant Woman with her Two Children going to Kilkenny upon business, these bloody miscreants baited them with Dogs, stabbed them with Skeins, and pulled out the Guts of one of the Children, whereby they died: And not far off, they took divers Men, Women, and Children, and hanged them; and one of the Women being great with Child, they ripped up her Belly as she hanged, so that the Child fell out in the cawl alive. Some after they were hanged, they drew up and down till their Bowels were torn out.

The Munster Remonstrance

How many Thousands of Protestants were thus inhumanely murdered by sundry kinds of deaths in that one Province of Ulster we have heard before: What the number of the slain was in the Three other Provinces, I find not upon Record; But certainly it was very great; For I find these passages in a general Remonstrance of the distressed Protestants in the Province of Munster. We may (say they) compare our woe to the saddest Parallel of any Story; Our Churches are demolished, or which is worse, profaned by Sacrifices to Idols: Our habitations are become ruinous heaps: No quality, age, or sex privileged from Massacres, and lingring deaths, by being robbed, stript naked, and so exposed to Cold and Famine. The famished Infants of murdered Parents swarm in our Streets, and for want of food, perish before our Faces, &c. And all this cruelty that is exercised upon us, we know not for what cause, offence, or seeming provocation its inflicted on us, (sin excepted) saving that we were Protestants, &c. we can make it manifest that the depopulations in this Province of Munster, do well near equal those of the whole Kingdom, &c.

Gods judgments on Persecutors.

Apparitions at Portendown Bridg.

And thus in part we have heard of the merciless cruelties which the bloody Papists exercised towards the Protestants: Let us now consider, at least some of Gods judgments upon the Irish, whereby he hath not left the innocent Blood of his Servants to be altogether unrevenged. Some particular instances have been mentioned before: As also the apparitions at Portendown Bridg which affrighted them from their Habitations, concerning which it is further testified, that by their own confession, the Blood of those that were knocked on the Head, and then thrown into the River at that Bridg, remained for a long time upon the Stones, and could not be washed away: As also that oftentimes they saw apparitions sometimes of Men, sometimes of Women rising Brest-high above the Water, which did most extreemly screech and cry out for vengeance against the Irish that had murdered them there.

Catharine

Fig: 10

Catharine Coke testified upon oath, that when the Irish had barbarously drowned One hundred and eighty Protestants, Men, Women, and Children, at Portendown Bridge, about nine days after she saw the apparition of a Man bolt up right in the River, standing Breast-high, with his hands lift up to Heaven, and continuing in that posture from December to the end of Leam, at which time some of the English Army passing that way, saw it also, after which it vanished away.

Elizabeth Price testified upon oath, that she and other Women whose Husbands and Children were drowned in that place, hearing of these apparitions, went thither one Evening, at which time they saw one like a Woman rise out of the River Breast-high; her Hair hanging down, which, with her skin, was as white as Snow; often crying out, Revenge, Revenge, Revenge, which so affrighted them, that they went their way.

Divers Protestants were thrown into the River of Belterbert, and when any of them offered to swim to the Land, they were knocked on the Head with Poles, after which their Bodies were not seen of Six Weeks: But after the end thereof, the Murtherers coming again that way, the Bodies came floating up to the very Bridge where they were.

Sir Con mac Gennis with his Company, slew Master Turge, Minister of the Newry, with divers other Protestants, after which the said Mac Gennis was affrighted with the apprehension of the said Master Turge his being continued in his presence, that he Commanded his Soldiers not to slay any more of them, but such as should be slain in Battel.

A young Woman being stript almost naked, there came a Rogue to her, bidding her give him her Money, or he would run her through with his Sword. Her answer was, You cannot kill me except God give you leave, whereupon he ran three times at her naked Body with his drawn Sword, and yet never pierced her skin, whereat he being confounded, went his way and left her; this was attested by divers Women that were present and saw it.

But besides these forementioned Judgments of God which befall them for their Inhumane cruelties; we may observe how the Hand of God hath been out against them ever since, and that in a special manner, by emasculating and debasing their Spirits; whereby it hath come to pass that ordinarily a few English Soldiers have chased multitudes of them, and generally in all the Battels and Fights that have been betwixt them, they have always been beaten, though the odds was great on their side: And as they made themselves formerly Drunk with the innocent Blood of the unresisting Protestants; so now God hath given them their fill of Blood in jealousy and fury. Many Thousands of them have perished by the Sword of War: And how heavy hath the Hand of God lain further upon them this present year 1650. in that terrible and universal Plague that hath been scattered all over the Nation, whereby many Thousands more of them have perished, and God is still Fighting against, and probably will continue their destruction, till they either shall truly be humbled for their horrid sins, or be utterly consumed from the Face of the Earth!

Amen; Even so come Lord Jesus, come quickly.

These particulars were attested upon Oath by sundry persons before Commissioners appointed to take their Examination.

A Continuation of the History of the Waldenses from the Year 1560. ending with the late Persecution in the Vallies in PIEMONTE.

An Edict in favor of the Protestants.

Nno Christi 1561. the Duke of Savoy published an Edict in favor of the Evangelical Churches in the Vallies of Piemont, wherein he granted an indemnity to the people of the Vallies of Angrogna, Bobio, Villaro, Valguicchiardo, Rora, Tagliaretto, and La Rica di Boneti at the end of La Torre, Saint Martino, Perosa, Roccapiatta, and Saint Bartholemo, from all former actings; and restored them into his favor, as if they had never acted any thing against His Highness; receiving them into his safeguard and protection: He granted them also to have Preaching Assemblies, and other Ministerial Offices according to their Religion in their wonted places, &c.

A cruel Edict.

But in the year 1565. Another Edict was published, at the instigation of the Popish party, whereby all men who lived in the Duke of Savoy's Dominions, and would not conform to the Romish Religion, were enjoined to come and declare the same to their respective Magistrates within Ten days after the publication thereof, and Two Months after to leave the Country, having One years time given them to dispose of their Goods movable, and unmovable, during which time they should enjoy the revenue thereof, &c.

The Elector Palatine intercedes for them.

The tidings of this Cruelty so wrought upon the Hearts of the Protestant Princes of Germany, that they sent an Embassy to the Duke of Savoy to intercede in their behalf: Amongst whom the Prince Elector Palatine was exceeding zealous, sending one of his Counsellors of State, a person of singular worth, to the Duke of Savoy, to mediate in their behalf; at whose return, the Prince being informed by him of the unworthy dealing of that Court, and finding that notwithstanding all their fair promises, they did not at all cease from Persecuting these poor people, he wrote a very smart and Pathetical Letter to the said Duke, challenging him for breach of promise to himself and the other German Princes, in that he suffered his Ministers still to Persecute and Banish those poor innocent people, meerly upon the account of Religion, concluding that such severity was neither pleasing to God nor Man; neither (saith he) is it the way to bring men to the true knowledge of God, which should be done by persuasions, and Scripture-proofs, not by Persecutions, &c. wherefore I pray your Highness that you will give us an evidence of that love which you have for us, by delivering those poor people who are now in the Gallies, and by recalling those who have been lately Banished, as you promised by your Letters. Have compassion upon so many poor wandering Exiles, deprived of all their Goods and Estates: Call them home, and restore them to their Habitations; and grant them, and the other Inhabitants of your Highness Countries the publick exercise of their Religion, which they prefer before their necessary Food: Free them from their false accusations, that they may live in peace under your Highness Government, &c. If your Highness will grant me this request, I doubt not but you shall experimentally find find the favor and Blessing of God, and you shall oblige us to you in all things: If otherwise, you will both provoke God to lift up his Hand against you, and estrange from you the affections of those who desire to do you pleasure and service, &c.

Dated 1566.

Now that you may see upon what occasion the Prince wrote this Letter, you are to understand that Castrocaro (one of their Popish Governors) being extremely troubled that the Prince Electors Ambassador had obtained several promises at the Court for the poor peoples advantage, did immediately after the said Ambassadors departure, publish through the Valley of Lucerne, two Ordinances: By the one he commanded all the Inhabitants throughout his Government, that were not Natives, to depart within a day after the publication thereof, upon pain of death, and Confiscation of their Goods: By the other he prohibited upon the same penalty those of the reformed Religion, inhabiting Lucerne, Bubbiana, Campiglione, and Fenile, to hear Sermons at Saint Giovanni; and for their not submitting, he imprisoned and tormented a great number of them in the Castle of La Torre, which dealing made poor people to make their address to the Dutchess of Savoy, who pitying their condition, wrote to the said Castrocaro in their behalf, commanding him in the Dukes name to set at liberty the imprisoned, and to cease to molest them in the enjoyment of their antient habitations and privileges.

They are cruelly dealt with.

This Letter stopped the fury of Castrocaro for the present: But it was far from working any change of affections in him, as was evident by his after actions: For in the year 1571. he did so incense the Governor of Bobio against the poor Inhabitants of that Valley, that he did not only grievously molest them upon all occasions as they came under his clutches, but also wrote bitter Letters to the Duke against them, improving the uttermost of his parts and power for their ruine and extirpation: And certainly Castrocaro had then effected his design, had not the Dutchess, upon the joynt supplications of the Evangelical Churches, very effectually interposed for them, and procured the continuation of their just and undoubted privileges.

Gods Providence for them.

Anno 1571. Many of the poor Protestants of the Valleys were grievously molested under pretext that in the former War of France against those of the Religion, they had joyned themselves to the Protestant Troops: But King Charles the ninth being moved with compassion towards them, wrote a Letter to the Duke of Savoy in their behalf, requesting him to receive them with gentleness into his grace and favor, and to re-establish them in their estates, &c. The subject of which Letter was not only satisfactory to those for whom it interceded, but also to all other faithful ones of the Valleys, out of the great hopes they had of future tranquillity. But it endured no longer than till their Enemies had an opportunity of molesting them, which they greedily embraced upon the news of the horrible Massacres in France.

King of France intercedes for them.

For Castrocaro did thereupon so threaten the poor Protestants, that they retired themselves, with their Families, and movables, to the tops of the neighboring Mountains, and into all other places where they hoped for safety: But the Duke of Savoy not approving the cruelties exercised against the Protestants in France, sent to those his Subjects, who were thus withdrawn, commanding them to return to their Houses, and Habitations, promising that they should suffer no prejudice, nor incur the least danger thereby. Neither indeed were their sufferings great afterwards, so long as Madam the Dutchess was living, who was a refuge to them upon all occasions.

Popish malignity.

Gods mercy.

After the death of this Princess, which happened Octob. 19. 1574. The Popish party came forth like Lions, improving the uttermost of their endeavors to devour and destroy this poor people upon all occasions, But the goodness of God was so great towards them, that they always found some considerable Friends about the Duke, who inclined his heart to gentleness and moderation: But after the death of this Philibert Emanuel, who died Aug. 20. 1580. Charles Emanuel vors them.

Emanuel his Son, having invaded the Marquisate of Saluces, Monfieur L'Esdi- guieres by way of retaliation, seized upon the Vallies of Piemont: But the French Army was no sooner gone home, then there was a rumor spread throughout the Vallies, that the Duke was resolved to take this occasion to extirpate all the Protestant Churches, because they had taken an Oath of fidelity to the French King, neither was it groundless: For the thing was really propounded in the Dukes Council, but it pleased God so to order affairs, that the leading men amongst them did not at all approve of the business: Yea, the Duke himself did extremely dislike it: And after he had retaken Mirebuc, he did not a little revive the Spirits of the Representatives of the Protestants of Lucerna, who met with them at Villaro on purpose to assure his Highness of their fidelity, and to beg the continuance of his grace and favor, to whom (in the presence of a great number of his Lords) he returned this Answer: Be but faithful unto me, and I will be sure to be a good Prince, nay a Father unto you; and as to the liberty of your Conscience, and the exercises of your Religion, I shall be so far from innovating any thing against those liberties in which you have lived unto this present, that if any offer to molest you, have recourse to me, and I shall effectually relieve and protect you.

Satans malice.

These Words being spoken in such a presence, and in so obliging a manner, were very advantageous to the poor peoples interest: For some time after, they served to counterballance the threats of their fiercest Enemies: Yet were there some amongst the Popish party that thought it an unpardonable sin to suffer them to live one year in peace, and on the contrary an acceptable service to molest them, either by secret stratagems, or by open force and violence.

Such was the condition of this poor people from the year 1595. to the year 1602. at which time all the Masters of Families in the Valley of Lucerna, professing the Protestant Religion, were cited to appear before Count Charles of Lucerna, the Governor Ponte, the Arch-Bishop Broglia, and others, and were by them commanded in the Dukes name, either to go to Mass, or to quit Lucerna, and all their pretensions thereto, without the least hopes of ever obtaining favor to return, or in case of disobedience, to prepare themselves for inevitable mischiefs and calamities: which threats were pressed with so much violence, that it caused many of the poor Creatures to submit, at least seemingly, to the change of their Religion, though many others of them were the deeper rooted by these shakings.

Popish subtilty
prevented.

From Lucerna the aforementioned Lords removed their seat to Bubiana where they found the Reformed so stiff in their Principles, that they could not remove them an hairs breadth from the same, wherefore they caused the chief of them to be summoned to appear at Turin, thinking that the Dukes presence might prevail more with them than all their threatening Speeches: The persons thus summoned were Master Valentine, and Master Boules his Brother, with one Peter Morese, and Samuel Falc, who were brought one after another before his Highness: Master Valentine was the first, whom the Duke perswaded to embrace the Roman Catholick Religion, and to draw others to do the like, promising him great rewards and preferments if he obeyed, &c. To this Master Valentine answered, That next to the service of God, he had no greater desire then to obey, and please his Highness, in whose service he would willingly adventure his person and Estate, when ever there should be occasion: But as for his Religion which he knew to be true, and confirmed by the Word of God, he could not abandon it without disobeying God, and wounding his own Conscience, so as never to enjoy any comfort in his Soul afterwards: And therefore he humbly intreated his Highness to be satisfied with what he could do with a good Conscience, and to leave him to the liberty of his Religion which he valued above his life: The Duke replied, That he also doubted not of the truth of that Religion which he professed, and that such as embraced it, should find how much they had gratified him in so doing, yet would he not force the Conscience of any man, and so he gave them leave to depart.

Courage and
Constancy.

CHAP. XLII.

The Marquisate of Saluces described, with its several troubles and Persecutions.

THe Marquisate of Saluces is on the South side of the Vallies of Piemont, containing in it several Cities, and considerable Vallies, very Fruitful in all sorts of Fruits. Its most Northerly Valley is that of Po, where the Famous River Po hath its rise, and source; one only Mountain separates this from the Valley of Lucerna on the North side: In this Valley were those ancient Churches, viz. Pravillem, Biolets, and Bietone, who retained the purity of Christian Religion for several Hundreds of years, and lived in great Union with their neighboring Churches.

Anno Christi 1561. The Church of Dronier, which was one of the most flourishing, understanding that the publick exercise of the Reformed Religion was permitted in France, obtained Letters from the Kings Council to Sieur Louis of Birague, Governor of that Country in the Duke of Nevers absence, whereby he was ordered to provide for the Petitioners a convenient place for the publick exercise of their Religion: But not long after their Adversaries, by their importunity, prevailed so far that the said Letters were revoked: This occasioned the said Church to send Monsieur Francis Galatee, their Minister, into France, with some others, to recover (if it were possible) their former priviledges. But this falling out in the time of their troubles in France, all that they could obtain, was only bare promises. In the mean time they received many hortatory and consolatory letters from the chief Ministers in the Churches of France, and amongst others from those of Grenoble, Lions, &c. to perswade them to patience, and perseverance in that truth which they had embraced, which accordingly they did, notwithstanding all the malice and subtilty of their Adversaries: So that their Churches were continued and upheld, convenient order being had for the preaching of the Word, administration of the Sacraments, exercise of their Discipline, &c. only there wanted in some places liberty of having General Assemblies, and publick Sermons.

For the better safety of their Ministers in the places that were most dangerous, one Pastor had the charge of the Faithful in several Cities and Communalities, which rendred their residence and exercises less visible to their Adversaries: Hereby the Gospel (through Gods mercy) made a very considerable progress at Dronier, Verzo, and some other places of more note. The Church of Acell in the Valley of Mairi was extraordinary peopled, and enjoyed more liberty than the others, by reason of the situation of the place: But Satan the Enemy of Christs Church and Kingdom, perceiving such a growth of the Reformed Religion in those places, ceased not to employ all his power and policy to hinder the same; and therein he made use of instruments for the effecting of it, viz. First the Anticodemites, whose ringleader was Baronius, who lived at Valgrane and thereabouts, accommodating himself to the times: For when the Church had rest and ease, he wrote strange things, and cryed out of the abuses in Popery: But in times of Persecution he usually played the Hypocrite, and labored to draw others to do the same, by which means he had a multitude of Followers, and amongst them, the Lord of Valgrane, and Maximilian de Saluces, who set his name to Baronius to add luster to his writings against the Ministers, reproaching them for that they would not give way to any dissimulation in their Disciples, whereby they exposed them to great extremities. This Lord had some learning and knowledge of the truth, but to avoid the bearing of the Cross, he thought it convenient to dissemble, and condemned those who any way gain said the Papists. Yet Monsieur Gelido, Minister of Acell, opposed them both, very learnedly edly in several Letters that he wrote unto them : So did Monsieur Truchi, Minister of Dronier, together with other Pastors of the neighbouring places, demonstrating both by Scripture Testimonies, and by the Example of the Primitive Church, that they had done nothing but what they ought to do, and what every Faithful Christian was bound to, and consequently that the opinion of Baronius and his Followers, was pernicious to the Church in times of Persecution.

The other Instruments that Satan made use of to the prejudice of the Church, were the Roman Clergy, with their passionate Profelites, who would faine have done to these godly Christians, as their Brethren in iniquity had done to their neighbours in the Dukedom of Savoy, viz. Banish, Imprison, Kill, and Confiscate the Goods of the Protestants : But (through Gods mercy) they were hindred by the Kings Edicts, confirming to those his Subjects of Saluces a peaceable Habitation, without being molested for their Conscience and Religion, or questioned for any thing they did in their private Houses (provided they abstained from the publick exercise of it) by which means their Ministers had opportunity of assembling in small Companies, Baptizing, Marrying, comforting the Sick, and instructing every one in particular ; which provoked their Adversaries to bend themselves chiefly against the Ministers, thinking that if they could find out any means to extirpate them, they should easily prevail upon the Common people, having none to animate and instruct them.

Popish policy.

Accordingly they published an Edict of Octob. 19. 1567. in the name of the Duke of Nevers, Governor for the King on this side the Mountains, injoyning all of the Religion there inhabiting or abiding, that were not the Kings natural Subjects, to depart, together with their Families within the space of three days, and never to return thither to inhabit, pass, or otherwise to abide without a special safe conduct, upon pain of life, and confiscation of their Goods.

Persecution renewed.

Now the greatest part of the Ministers not being natural Subjects to the King, by this Edict were to quit the Marquisate, or to obtain a safe conduct, or lastly to incur the penalty : A safe conduct they could not obtain, and yet they thought themselves bound in Conscience not to abandon their people ; wherefore continuing with their Congregations, two of them were apprehended and imprisoned, viz. Monsieur Francis Truchi, and Monsieur Francis Soulf, where they were detained four years, four months, and odd days, the poor people being not able by any means to obtain their deliverance, though they continually solicited de Birague their Governor, and others that had undertaken the management of these affairs ; yet the Lord was so pleased to restrain the power of their Enemies that they could not take away their lives ; Yea, by degrees they obtained for them a more spacious and convenient Prison than that wherunto they were at first confined.

Gods Providence.

To procure their full deliverance the Churches of the Marquisate sent their supplications to the King by the aforesaid Minister Galatee, and another ; who set out July 27. 1571. and went as far as Rochel to implore the intercession of the Queen of Navar, as also to intreat the assistance of divers others in several places : And the great Patrons of the reformed Religion disputed their case before the King, and in the end obtained Letters under the Kings own Hand for their enlargement, Octob. 14. 1571. which was accordingly effected ; but it was four months after before it could be done.

Gods mercy.

When Sieur Galatee returned, he was overjoyed, as well for the prosperous success of his negotiations, as for the great hopes of a profound peace, founded upon the smooth promises of his Majesty, and upon the alliance which he had made by the Marriage of his Sister to the King of Navar, who professed the Reformed Religion. But this joy lasted but from the month of May 1572. to the beginning of September, at which time there arrived the lamentable news of the Massacre of many noble persons, and multitudes of others who were most inhumanely manely murdered in divers places of France, to the great astonishment of all the faithful in those parts.

About the same time there arrived letters from the King to the Governor Birague, by which he was required to have an eye, that at the arrival of the news of what happened at Paris, they of the Religion should make no combustion; remitting the rest of his pleasure to those instructions which he had sent him by the bearer, the contents whereof were, that he should put to death all the chief of the Protestants within his jurisdiction, whose names he should find in the Roll that should be presented to him.

Birague having received this command, together with the Roll aforementioned, was much troubled, and immediately called his Council together, whom he acquainted with the Kings Orders: Whereupon some were of opinion that they should be immediately Executed: But others, seeing the King in his late Patents, not many months before, had enlarged the Ministers that were imprisoned, and had ordered that those of the Reformed Religion should not be any ways molested for their Conscience sake; as also upon consideration that nothing had occurred since that time worthy such a change, they therefore thought it sufficient to secure the persons of such as were enrolled, and to defer Execution for a while, and in the mean time to inform the King that they were persons of Honor, Faithful to His Majesty, living peaceably with their neighbors, and inoffensive in their lives: Adding, that in case His Majesty was resolved that they should be put to death, there was yet time enough to Execute his pleasure therein.

A special Providence,

This advice Birague approved of, and accordingly apprehended some, but others escaped, and concealed themselves: And in the mean time he dispatched a Messenger to the King, to inform him as abovesaid, and to know his further pleasure. This Messenger met with another at Lions, by whom the King had sent to Birague to advertise him, that in case his former Order was not already Executed, he should desist from it, and only have a special care that those of the Religion should make no insurrection, or have any public exercises.

But they of the Reformed Religion in the Marquisate were not a little troubled when they heard of the cruel Massacre of their Brethren in France without distinction of Age, Sex, or Quality, inasmuch as divers of them fled; many Papists also secretly caused the Families of their Kindred and Friends of the Religion to retire their Families and themselves till such time as Birague had published the Kings pleasure, after which they returned by little and little; and though their public exercises were prohibited, yet they were well satisfied with the assurance of their lives, and estates, besides that they had the liberty of private exercises in their Families.

This was the condition of the Protestant Churches in Saluces during the time that it was under the Dominion of the King of France, which continued to the year 1588. at which time the Duke of Savoy took the possession of it, who for a while after suffered them to enjoy their privileges in general: But in particular, some of the chief Members of the Church of Dormier, being cited to Turin, were so befooled with subtilty Artifices, that one part of them promised to go to Mass, which gave a considerable blow to the said Church, yet it lost not its courage in general, although the great failings of the former encouraged their Adversaries to attempt the like upon others by both words and Letters.

Anno Christi 1597. the Duke of Savoy wrote his Letter to them, wherein he told them how desirous he was that all his Subjects in the Marquisate of Saluces should embrace the Romish Religion, and finding that his exhortations had prevailed with some, he hoped that they would have the same effect upon the rest, desiring that laying aside their Horrid obstinacy, they would embrace the true Religion out of respect to Gods glory, and their own good, making large promises to to such as should submit, and telling them that it should return to their great advantage.

Their Answer, The Churches of the Marquisate having received this Letter, they answered, First, That they returned His Highness many thanks for that he had suffered them to enjoy their Religion hitherto as he had found them in the year 1588. when he took possession of the Marquisate. Secondly; They humbly intreated him to continue to them the said benefit; as also to grant them his protection, seeing that they knew that their Religion was founded upon the Holy Scriptures, according to which they ordered their lives and Conversations, so as none had any just occasion of offence: And considering that even the Jews and other Enemies of Christ were suffered to live in peace, and to enjoy their Religion, they hoped that those which were found Christians; Faithful to God, and loyal to their Prince, should not be denied the same privilege.

After this Answer they lived a while in peace, and the Duke took a Voyage into France, after which followed a War, so that they continued as aforetime: But after the exchange of the Marquisate was established upon him, his soft Letters were turned into sharp Edicts, wherein he commanded all those of the Religion within the Marquisate, that every one should go, and declare to his ordinary Magistrate within the space of fifteen days, whether he would renounce his Religion, or go to Mass or no; which if they would do, they should not only enjoy their Habitations, and Estates, but many other favors also: But if they resolved to persist in their Religion, they were enjoined to depart out of His Highnesses Dominions within the space of two months, and never to return without express permission, and that upon pain of death, and confiscation of all their goods: yet they were permitted within the said term of two months to transport their Goods as they should think meet.

A cruel Edict.

This unexpected Edict being published through the Marquisate, July 1601. much troubled those of the Reformed Religion, who immediately sent Deputies to His Highness to obtain a revocation, or at least a moderation of it; and indeed they had some hopes given them by divers persons of quality, so that many of the poor people resting upon this broken Reed, let slip much of the said prefixed time without preparing for their departure, whereby they were the more amazed when they understood, not many days before the time was expired, that all hope of favor was now wholly taken away; yet most of them prepared for their departure; some recommending their goods to their kindred and Friends who remained in the Country, others leaving all they had at random, except what they could carry with them to serve for their present necessities.

Popish subtilty.

In these two months space they who were resolved to depart, were continually set upon by their Friends and kindred, with all manner of persuasions to divert them from their purposes, especially when they presented themselves to the Magistrate to give in their Answer in writing: For then they were caused to stand in a certain Pew in publick view, where the Magistrates had either Monks, or other Ecclesiasticks, who ceased not to urge them by all possible arguments and motives thereby to shake their Faith and Constancy: Amongst others, a certain Capuchin Friar, called Philip Ribot, who a little before had been employed in the same manner in the Valley of Peroza, being now employed in this place, ran up and down, using all subtilties imaginable, especially among those who through feebleness of Age, weakness of Sex, or want of Estates, might probably make them more easie to be seduced: They caused them also to be brought before the Magistrate one by one, that so the Constancy of some might not encourage others: Yea, hardly were Husbands permitted to declare for their Wives and Children; and they so sifted the tender ones, that it was hard for them to escape without making Shipwreck of their Faith and Religion: And to promote their design, they prohibited all upon pain of death, not to dissuade others from revolting. Yet through Gods mercy, they were so fortified in their Spirits, that most of them withstood the temptations, and went forth as Providence dence guided them, not knowing whether they went. Some steered their course beyond the Alps to France, Geneva, and other places: Others retired themselves into the Valleys of Piemont, and remained there without trouble, though the Edict required that they should depart out of his Highnesses Dominions. Course and Contancy.

They are habited.

In the beginning of this Persecution, the Adversaries fearing some resolute union among these poor persecuted Souls, to prevent any combustion, they gave it out in the Churches of the Mountains, that though the Edict was general, yet the intention thereof was only to unlodge those in the lower Plains, in the great Villages, and other publick places: And that such as inhabited amongst the Mountains might be sure to live in peace and quiet: This indeed was a cause that at the first there was not such an universal union amongst those of the Reformed Religion that were destined for slaughter, as they could have desired: But this fraud at length appearing, occasioned a more close union amongst them: Neither was it without cause; For at last they spared those in the Mountains no more than those of the plains; only that they made no enquiry after the Church of Pravillelm, and the quarters thereabouts; who thereupon, trusting to the ancientness of their possession, troubled not themselves to make any declaration to the Magistrate, or to prepare themselves for their departure, as if the Edict had not at all concerned them: Neither indeed were they disturbed till all the rest were departed out of the Province, and scattered in several places. But at length they were given to understand, that seeing they had not yielded obedience to the Edict, they were liable to the punishment therein appointed: And therefore some warned them to have a care of themselves, both in general, and each particular: Hereupon they repaired to the Syndicks of the Commualty, requesting them to intercede for them, shewing the reasons why they conceived not themselves concerned by the Edict, and therefore they had not offended out of any malicious intention. Popish subtilty.

The Syndicks accordingly made many journeys about this business, but brought back nothing but sad and uncomfortable messages; so that at last they were forced to flee. One part of them (the Men having ordered their Families which they left in their Houses) retired into the Western Mountains: Those who were fit to bear Arms (being about Two hundred) with their Arms retired into the Castellenie of Casteau Dauphine which was near at hand: But those of Dauphine, and who were less disposed, retired themselves into their highest Forests. They are forced to flee.

Yet before their departure they declared to their Popish neighbors, that being forced to retire themselves by reason of the threats which were given against them for their Religion; and being unable to take their Families along with them, they intreated them to take care of them; withall telling them, that they would make a sudden return, either of the good or evil that should be done to their Relations, either by themselves, or by their permission. This so prevailed with the Papists, that either out of fear, or for some other reasons, they so far solicited; and prevailed with their Superiors, that the others had liberty of returning to their ancient Habitations without being molested, and that for many years together.

C H A P. XLIII.

The Artifices and wicked practices used to consume and destroy the Faithful in the Valleys of Piemont.

Popish subtil-
ty.

THe Popish Clergy having several persons under pay, whose business it is to kindle strifes and quarrels amongst the Protestants, and to engage them in suits of Law one against another : And when they see them reduced to poverty and despair, they secretly offer them all the favor imaginable, provided that they will either openly revolt, or remain as spies amongst their Brethren to betray them : And the better to dispose them hereto, they assure them that they shall get a full victory over their Enemies, in case they will imploy some Churchmen to recommend their affairs to the Judges, who in all publick employments are preferred before the Protestants, and made their superiors, that so they may over-rule them as they list.

The Popish Clergy also, knowing that young Men are apt to be in love, which captivates reason, they propound to them by their Emissaries, a match with some Papist, whose portion and other advantages they amplify by officious lies, and so they inveigle some poor Souls, sometimes without, and sometimes against the consent of their Parents, and Friends : And if any amongst the Protestants be so wicked as not to regard the admonitions of their Ministers and Elders, so that they are forced to excommunicate them, these Monks and Priests perswade them to embrace the Romish Religion, where they shall be protected against such as pursue them for their crimes ; yea, they promise that they shall be set over them in all publick Offices, by which means they may have power in their Hands to be revenged of them. This was the practice of the Monks in the year 1640, 1641, &c. even towards some who were manifestly convicted of Witchcraft, who, revolting to Popery, had their lives spared, and were set at liberty ; yea, they have often rewarded them with money, merchandizes and other things, withal exempting them from all manner of Taxes ; and when the Protestants complained hereof, the Duke of Savoy indeed gave them a favorable answer by his Edict, dated in June 1649. but they could never obtain the putting of it in execution.

But of all the means used for these last sixty years to root out, and ruin the Protestant Churches in the Valleys of Piemont, there hath been none like that of the Missionaries established by Pope Clement the Eighth, Anno Christi 1596. For the Monasteries of these Firebrands have ever been so many Citadels in the Valleys, wherein very many wicked instruments have been harbored, who never ceased to contrive mischief by their lies, calumnies and slanders wherewith they have filled the Ears of the Magistrates and Princes, who have always given more credit to them, than to the true complaints of these poor People in their own just defence, whereupon they have published many bloody Edicts against them : And though the Protestants reiterated their humble supplications to his Highness, and therein declared their own innocency, and the boldness of those Missionaries, which was grown to such a height as was altogether intolerable, yet have they prevailed nothing ; and that which makes these Monks the more confident, is, that they know they are not to be punished by any Magistrate for whatsoever they say or do against the Protestants ; no not when they steal away their Children from them ; whereas the Protestants are put to death if they speak but the least word against the Missionary Priests, or but go about to dissuade any, though of their own Families from turning Papist. Yea, by the Dukes Edict, any one witness is sufficient against a Protestant, and a reward of an Hundred Crowns is promised to any that will come and witness against them, whereby all those are encouraged, who either out of revenge, envy,

envy, or covetousness, shall report such false things against them as by the Romish Fryers they shall be directed to.

By vertue of this Edict the Monks have made bold upon all occasions both in the Streets, yea in the very Churches, and that in the Sermon time to set upon the Protestant Ministers, with all the most base, vile, and unsufferable Speeches they could possibly device, knowing that no Man durst either censure their zeal, or witness against them for what they said or did against the Protestants, for fear of the severe penalties ordained against the favorers of Hereticks. Nay, if their abusive carriage could but draw any word out of the Ministers, or out of another Mans mouth that did not please them, they had their hired witnesses in a readiness to bring the Minister, or other Protestant to the Stake, and that without redemption.

These Men got an Edict from Madam Royal, of Jan. 16. 1641. having made her believe that the Papists were compelled to contribute towards the maintenance of the Protestant Ministers, with some other such like fictions; upon which they obtained an Order for the Officers, called Castellani, to give the Missionaries all the Writings they should demand of them: By means whereof they usurped power over the said Castellani, and so over the poor Protestants, compelling the Castellani to make most unjust Ordinances against these poor people. As for Example; When the question is concerning their habitation, the Missionaries do persuade them that come to witness the truth, that so to do, is to favor the Hereticks, whereby they will fall irrevocably under the censure of Excommunication; whereas its a meritorious work to witness against them by such officious lies as are suggested to them by the Popish Clergy: Nay, the Judges themselves durst not pass a righteous Sentence, when it reflected in the least upon the Catholick party. And that they may have the opportunity of negotiating with the Protestants, they procure of his Highness every year, the Assignations of Grain, and other Impositions; that so they of the Reformed Religion, being obliged to make their payments to these Publicans, they may have the advantage to shew favor, and give ample rewards to such as will comply with their superstitious Idolatry, and to lay heavy burdens upon the Backs of those that are true to their Principles.

Mention might here be made of their frequent falling into the said Valleys with Troops of Armed Men, under pretence of quartering them there, whereby they have miserably surprized, and made a prey of them: As likewise the cunning stratagems which they have used in all their Treaties, which have been as full of Jesuitical Equivocations, as of Lines and Sentences, following therein their old Maxime, That Faith is not to be kept with Hereticks.

To this may be added their diligent search, and strict enquiry after all Protestant Books and Writings, which they commit to the fire with much devotion, lest they should discover their rotten Principles, and the wickedness of their actions to the world.

Another stratagem they have to allure Men to revolt, wherein are proffers of great rewards made, and published in the Princes name; as may be seen in the Dukes own Letter, wherein are these words. To encourage the Hereticks to turn Catholicks, it is our pleasure, and we do hereby expressly command, that all such as shall embrace the Holy Roman Faith, shall enjoy an exemption from all, and every tax for the space of five years commencing from the day of their conversion, &c. Which term of Five years he hath sometimes lengthned out to Ten or Fifteen years; whereas indeed the burden that they took off from these Revolters, they laid upon the Backs of those that persevered in their Religion, the better to break and destroy them.

But as if all this were too little to compass their ends, the Duke erected a Congregation for extirpating the Hereticks, who were to judge concerning the rights of the Protestants. Their meeting place was in the Arch-Bishops House, the Bishop himself being President, together with the Dukes Confessor, and divers others, every one of them hired by the Court of Rome, to undermine the liberties of the Protestant Churches, by robbing them of their ancient Priviledges under sundry pretences, and upon false Informations. And the better to disguise their proceedings, they usually incense the Duke by grievous accusations, and so procure grievous Edicts from him against the poor Protestants. These were they who procured from Charles Emanuel, Anno Christi 1602. An Edict, wherein he enjoyns the Protestants upon pain of death to banish from amongst them, all manner of Schools both publick and private, (as Julian the Apostate had formerly done to extirpate the Christian Religion) And by another Edict of Decemb. 18. 1622. He forbade them to receive any strangers amongst them that should be either Ministers or School-masters, as also from sending their Youth into Forreign Schools suspected of Heretic. He also degraded all manner of Protestants from publick Offices, either great or small. In another Edict, all Protestants were commanded either to go to Mals, or to depart within two months after the publication thereof: And by another Edict the same was commanded, and but fifteen days given them.

Another order was given out, Novemb. 18. 1634. enjoyns the Protestants of Campiglione, to leave that place within Twenty four hours, and that upon pain of death, which was executed without mercy. The same was done Anno Christi 1655. by Gastaldo, who gave no longer than Twenty four Hours to those of the Valleys of Saint Martino and Persa, to depart upon pain of death; and to those that lived beyond Pelice, but three days.

Many times when these Missionary Fathers could not possibly perswade his Royal Highness to an open Persecution against the generality of the Protestants, then they usually tormented them one by one upon sundry false pretences, whom they delivered up to the Inquisitors, who contrary to all Forms of Justice, forthwith condemned them, without so much as hearing them, or letting them know their accusers.

Anno Christi 1622. They took one Mr. Sebastian Basan, and after the Inquisitors had cruelly tempted and tormented him for the space of fifteen months, they burned him alive at Turin, Novemb. 23. 1623. where he died, singing the praises of God in the midst of the flames.

Anno 1655. These Missionary Fathers stole away very many of the Protestants Children in the time of the Massacre; whom they would not afterwards restore, though his Highness had promised it by his Patent; which practice is the most execrable of all the Turkish Tyrannies. Yet there is this difference, that the Turks do so only to their own Subjects, whereas the Popes Ministers do it to those over whom they have no right at all. Two instances may be given (amongst many others) of the subtle insinuations of the Jesuites to withdraw Men from the truth; There were two Ministers, the one Mr. Peter Gros, the other Mr. Francis Aguit, with whom they had thus prevailed: But the Lord in mercy shewing them the greatness of their sin, they made a publick Recantation in a full Congregation, August 28. & 29. 1655. at Pinache in the Valley of Perouse; wherein they testified their extream sorrow for their defection through infirmity, from the true Religion, during the time of their imprisonment at Turin, together with their abjuration of Papery, which they conclude thus.

Humane frailty.

Repentance.

Do not think us unworthy your holy communion, although we have been an occasion of offence: Suffer us to pour into your bosoms a torrent of tears to deplour our condition, and to assure you in the anguish of our Souls, that our grief is greater than we can express: Help us by your holy Prayers to the Lord, and publish our repentance in all places where you conceive our sin hath been, or shall be known, that so it may be evident to all the world, that from the very bottom of our Souls we grieve, and sorrow for it, and that in the presence of of God, and of his holy Angels, and in the sight of those who have been witnesses of our conversion, we do abjure, and detest the Mass, the authority of the Pope, and in general, all sorts of beliefs, and worship dependent upon them; we recant whatsoever we may have pronounced to the prejudice of the Evangelical Truth, and promise for the future, through the Grace of God, to persevere in the profession of the Reformed Religion to the last moment of our life, and rather to suffer Death, and Torments than to renounce that holy Doctrine that is taught in our Church according unto the word of God: Even as we swear, and promise, with our bended knees upon the earth, and our hands lifted up to the Eternal, our Almighty God and Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. As we desire his assistance to do this, even so help us God. Amen.

The Motives of the late Persecution in the Valleys of Piemont; Anno Christi 1655. with the publication of that bloody Order of Castaldo, and the flight of the Protestants in the midst of winter.

The chief Officers and Gentry of Savoy, are moved to endeavor the extirpation of the Reformed party, chiefly for these Causes: 1. That by evil entreating the Reformed Churches, they may conserve the Papal authority, of which they have oft-times so much need, to cover and cloke their incestuous marriages contracted by Dispensations from the Pope: And thus they become engaged to maintain Popery, for fear of being declared guilty of Incest. 2. Because the Courtiers, for persecuting the Reformed party, are rewarded with Prebendaries, Bishopricks, Abbies, and Priories, especially such as are members of the Council for extirpating of Hereticks. 3. Under this pretext, the poor people of the Valleys become a prey to the said Courtiers, who daily rob, and spoil them, extorting the best part of their livelihood by sundry subtle devices. 4. The Gentry of Lucerna (who are very poor) promote this work all they can, by perpetual calumnies against them, rendring themselves by such good Offices capable of meriting, and receiving those pensions which are assigned them by the Court of Rome for the same purpose. 5. For this end of late, they have made the Gentlemen of the respective Valleys subordinate to the Monks, and Mass-Priests, who teach and appoint them what to do, as to the bearing of false witness against their Neighbors, sowing discord amongst them, murdering of some, procuring the Assassination of others, stealing, and carrying away their Children, &c. without the performance whereof they refuse to pay them their yearly Pensions. 6. But the chief ground of all, why the Court of Savoy strives so much to extirpate this poor people, is, the Design that they have to wrest Pignorolio out of the hands of the King of France, to which the habitation, and liberty of those people are a great hindrance: For they, inhabiting the Neighboring parts of Pignorolio, both in the Plain and Mountains, cannot, upon the account of conscience, be brought to make any agreement with the Spanish party for assaulting, and surprising that place: Hence the Court of Savoy seeks all manner of occasions to root them out, especially those of Lucerna, Fenils, Babia, Campiglione, Bricheras, and Saint Secondo, which are near Pignorolio, and to deprive it thereby of all sorts of commodities which it receives from the Valleys, which alone doth furnish it with more than all the Neighboring Valleys which belong to the Duke. Now if these people were extirpated, and others put in their places, Men forward to execute their Designs, they might easily seize on Aulange, a narrow passage above Pignorolio, on that side which looks towards France, where a very few Persons would be able to hinder the French Armies from relieving Pignorolio.

Reasons why they persecuted the Protestants.

Upon

Upon these, and the like grounds the Court of Savoy hath sought their destruction, though its true, that in all the Persecutions which they have raised against them, especially in this last, 1655. those ravening Wolves approached in sheeps cloathing, the better to deceive, and destroy the innocent Lambs of Christ. For these Evangelical Churches had, long before that fatal Year, cleared themselves of all those calumnies which the Council for the extirpation of Hereticks, (to the end that they might enjoy their promised Pensions) had cast upon them. Yea, His Royal Highness had now given an ample testimony of his being fully satisfied in this point, and by an Authentick Decree published Anno Christi 1649. had confirmed all former Concessions; which confirmation was again renewed Anno 1653. confirming the Grants made to them in the Years 1603. and 1620. without any addition, or diminution, amplification, or restriction whatsoever.

Now as these poor people sought for an Interimation of these Grants, His Royal Highness, knowing that the delay thereof proceeded not from any negligence of their part, but was occasioned by the multitude of Troops that were then quartered upon them, whereby they could not possibly have the convenience of assembling, &c. out of his goodness towards them, he declared by an Edict, of May 19. 1654. that his intention was that they should enjoy the Concessions as effectually as if they had been interimated, upon condition that they did procure the Interimation thereof within Three Months following. So that till this time of May 19. 1654. none can say that those of the Reformed Religion had committed any thing whereby to be deprived of the benefit of their Concessions; yet contrary to all their expectations, shortly after, viz. January 25. 1655. this infamous Order was published by Andrew Gassaldo, Doctor of the Civil Law: Mr. Auditor Ordinary, &c. That every Head of a Family, with its members of the Reformed Religion, of what rank, degree or condition soever, none excepted, inhabiting and possessing estates in the places of Lucerna, Lucernetta, St. Giovanni, La Torre, Bubbiana, and Fenile, Campiglione, Briccherassio, and St. Secondo, within three days after the publication thereof should withdraw and depart, and to be with their Families withdrawn out of the said places, and translated into the places and limits tolerated by His Highness, during his pleasure, as namely, Bobbio, Villaro, Angrogna, Rorata, and the Country of Bonetti, under pain of death, and confiscation of Houses and Goods, situated or being out of the said limits; Provided, if they make it not appear to us within Twenty days following that they are turned Catholics, or that they have sold their Goods to the Catholics. And that it was not the mind of His Royal Highness by any Act whatsoever to enlarge the said limits: But on the contrary, he declares by these presents, that the said Acts are meer usurpations, contrary to the intention as well of his Orders, as of his Magistrates, published to that end; and that therefore the transgressors have incurred the punishment therein contained: Besides, in the aforesaid places favorably tolerated, he wills that in every one of them shall be celebrated the holy Mass, forbidding those of the pretended Reformed Religion any ways to molest, either by deed or word, the Missionary Fathers, or their Attendants, much less to dissuade any that would turn Catholics, under the same pain of death, giving it in charge particularly to the Ministers of the said pretended Religion, inviolably to observe the same, upon pain of answering it in their proper Names, &c.

It's easie to conjecture the miserable inconveniences of a flight in the midst of Winter, especially to such a people amongst whom were many aged and decrepit, many sick and diseased, besides a multitude of Women big with Child, or newly brought to Bed, together with a number of tender Infants, yet all forced to flee, and none being in capacity to succor another. Yet did these bloody Beasts in the most violent and rigorous Winter season chase and drive out of their Houses all on a sudden those poor people, who scarce had Clothes to cover their nakedness, much less were they provided to resist the extremities of cold and hunger ; thinking hereby either to force them to change their Religion, or to cause them to die in the craggy Rocks and snowy Mountains ; yea, they were so subtilly malicious as to chuse those very days, when by reason of the multitude of violent Waters in the Plain, and of Snow upon the Mountains, they judged it impossible for those silly Sheep ever to elcape.

But these poor people, considering that the Apostacy propounded was the way to eternal damnation, chose rather to follow Christ in bearing his Cross, and to hazard their temporary lives, rather than to lose their Souls for ever ; yet that they might leave no lawful means unattempted, they presently dispatched their Deputies to the Governor, to represent to him the strangeness of this command, to force them with their Families, to abandon their ancient Habitations ; as also that it was impossible for so many Souls as they were in number, to subsist in the said place, to which by the Edit. they were confined, they being scarce sufficient to supply in any sort those that inhabited them : As likewise, that this command was contrary to all their former Concessions, upon which account they protested and appealed to His Royal Highness. But the Governor, knowing well the intention of the Council for the extirpating of Hereticks, would neither admit of the one or of the other. Hereupon the poor people, seeing they could obtain nothing of him, entreated him to grant them at least some time to have recourse to the Duke by humble supplications ; But this also was denied, unless they would draw up their Petition by a model which he should prescribe, which indeed was prejudicial both to their just Rights and Consciences. These poor people (I say) seeing this, to the end that they might remove all pretext for accusing them of Rebellion, under that colour to ruin and destroy them ; Hoping also that at last they might find some means to lay their griefs at the feet of His Royal Highness, and that his Clemency and Justice would in the end re-establish them in their ancient habitations, they chose rather to suffer this violence, and therefore recalling their Protestation, thereby to testify their profound respect to their Prince, they quitted their Houses, and Goods, and retired with their Families, their Wives and Children, great and small, young and old, whole and sick ; yea, halt, lame and blind ; dragging after them such as were infirm by sickness or age, through Rain, Snow, Ice, Waters, and a Thousand difficulties.

They go into banishment.

Oh think with your selves, what bitter tears, what wringing of Hands, what smiting upon the Breasts, what mourning, sighings, and lamentations there were in the Families of these miserable and distressed Creatures, who were now reduced to the utmost of extremities ; Before them, were a multitude of violent and roaring Waters, on each hand most barbarous and snowy Mountains, Behind them, Men, sevenfold worse than the Egyptians, ready to butcher and destroy them ; yet recommending themselves, Souls and Bodies to Gods protection, they are resolved to undergo the worst of temporary miseries, rather than by denying their Religion, to damn their Souls.

Constancy.

This their Constancy and Resolution was no small comfort to other Churches, and a matter of great astonishment to their Persecutors ; The rather considering the great advantages they might have purchased by quitting their Religion, as Pardon for all Crimes, Liberty if in Prisons, Exemption from all manner of Taxes, &c.

They were no sooner departed from their Houses, but a number of Thieves and Robbers entred them, spoiling and pillaging whatever the people had left behind them, pulling down their Houses, cutting down all their Trees, and turning their Habitation into a desolate Wilderness ; of which violence the poor people complained to the Duke, and received from him such an answer, that they apprehended his intentions were, not that they should wholly quit their Houses till their cause might be heard and judged ; In confidence hereof, they sometimes returned to their Houses to guard them from these Robbers, and to Husband their ground, that so they might have wherewithal to pay their Taxes; yet for this they were branded with Rebellion, though they had neither taken up Arms, nor acted any other hostility, every one living peaceably without giving any cause of offence.

Popish cruelty.

Gastaldo having thus driven these poor people from their ancient Inheritance, without legal citing them, hearing their plea, or giving them the least time to provide for so sad a flight; Their last refuge was to have recourse to the Lord by fervent Prayers, and to their Prince by humble supplications; which was done, not only by those that were driven from their Houses, but by the other Churches of the Reformed Religion, the cause being common to them all. But alas! they found both his and all other his Ministers ears stopped to their woful crys; neither could they obtain so much as admittance into the presence of His Royal Highness.

Amongst other cunning Artifices used by their malicious Adversaries to im-bitter the spirits of His Highness, and the Dutchess his Mother, against these poor Protestants, this was one; John Rissan, President of the Province of Pignorolio, having for many years born a deadly spleen against the Popish Priest of Fenile, hired one to assassinate him; and then by his Secretary he spread it abroad all over the Country that the Protestants were the Authors of the murder, who yet, Five days before were driven out of Fenile, which report flew far and near, being entertained as an undoubted truth by those Papists who lived far off, it increased also with carriage, though upon the place the Author of this murder was well known; so that by all their reports they were not able to fasten any blemish in the minds of the dead Priests Friends and Kindred, nor to hinder them from apprehending both the Master and his Secretary; by which means the innocence of the Reformed party was so cleared to the world, that the Marquess of Pionessa, in his Letters, wherein he sought all the devices he could to lay something to their charge, never mentions this for fear of blemishing the credit of all the rest.

Shortly after one Berru basely murdered Peter Rövier, Consul of Mean; and then fled to Pignorolio, where he was met by the aforesaid Rissan, who was lately returned from Turin, where he had been imprisoned for the former murder, and now had his liberty no otherwise than upon good security, because the said Berru and some others had taken their Oathes against his Secretary [D. Agot] and himself, for being guilty of the aforementioned Assassination; But after some private conferences had between them, Rissan so wrought upon that wretched Berru, by gifts and promises, that he was persuaded to return back with him to Turin, and there not only to retract his former oath, but to swear that he had been solicited thereto by the two Pastors, Leger and Mechelin, as also by Antonio, and Francis Danna, chief Elders of the Church of S. Giovanni; By means of this devilish retraction and calumny, Rissan and his Secretary were discharged in the very heat of the War between the Papists and Protestants, so that they had the opportunity of forging what lies they pleased against the Protestants, both at Lucerna and Turin, without the least contradiction, which accordingly they did to the purpose; For at Lucerna there were published at the same time two personal Citations against the said Leger, Mechelin, and Danna; and as for Berru, he was also at the same time, as a recompence for his perjury, discharged, and set at liberty, though he had been convicted of two murders, the one the aforementioned, and the other at S. Giovanni, upon one Giovanni Bertot, a Protestant. After this base action, he came to the said Leger, and many other Pastors of the Valleys, and chief Men, and leaning upon his staff, and bemoaning his condition, he protested to them that he could scarce stand upright, by reason of the many blows which he had received from the Papists to force him to forswear himself against the said Leger and the rest; But as he could not in conscience do so wicked an act, so he had withstood them them to the utmost; telling them plainly, who so urged him, that he would rather be torn with wilde Horses than do it; and that they thereupon seeing his constancy, had beaten him most unmercifully, and then cast him out into the open streets, where he had miserably perished, had not a certain Jew pitied him, and took him up, as he was grovelling on the ground, and ready to give up the ghost.

In the mean time the Treaty of Peace being concluded at Pignorolio, Aug. 1655. Master Leger and the rest against whom the Process had been made, as against Criminals, staying a while at Pignorolio, chanced to hear of it, and thereupon went presently to the Prefect Rissan, entreating him to tell them if it were true that Berru had thus accused them; Rissan made them such a doubtful Answer, that they judged it high time to have immediate recourse to the Senator Perrastino, beseeching him to declare to them the truth of the whole matter, and to appoint them a set time and place to make their justification: Hereupon he told them plainly, that Berru had accused them for suborning him to swear falsely against De Agot, and his Master; and withal he shewed them a Copy of the Citation against the said Leger; and the rest of his Complices, which was to Banish them out of the Dukes Dominions, if they did not appear personally at Turin to answer to such Interrogatories as should be proposed to them about that business. Upon this Sieur Leger, by the assistance of David Leger, a Minister, handled the matter so, that the said Berru was shortly after apprehended, as he was lurking in the High Ways, with a purpose to Murther the said Leger upon the first opportunity. This wretch being thus apprehended, used all the devices imaginable to have got out of their Hands; though they assured him, that all that they intended was, only to make him verifie what he had already confessed before a full Assembly of their Ministers and others. Leger being assured that Berru was in safe custody, went and declared the whole matter to the Senator Perichvini, and to Referendano Tarquin, yea, and to Rissan himself, who was on a sudden not a little surprized at it; afterwards he told it to the French Ambassador, and to the Ambassadors of the Evangelical Cantons, and with much ado he got leave to bring the said perjured person to Pignorolio, where he hoped to obtain leave of coming face to face against him in open Justice, importuning all the Dukes Ministers of Justice, and the French and Switzers Ambassadors for their intercession; the last whereof openly protested, that in case of refusal, they would complain that Justice was denied them; yet could they prevail no further, but that there should be a Letter written to Turin about it: From whence, after a while, they had an answer, that nothing could be done in it; and so Leger was fain to content himself, that he and the rest that had been accused were declared as persons altogether innocent, and clearly acquitted from the accusation that Berru had made against them.

Upon this and the like feigned accusations, the Deputies of these poor people and their Supplications were miserably rejected at the Court of Savoy: For when they instantly beseeched the chief Ministers of State at Turin, that they might be admitted into the Dukes presence, there to cast themselves at his feet, the Council for extirpating of Hereticks would not suffer them to have audience of His Highness, and contrary to all equity they usurped the cognisance of this business, which belonged not to them, they being of the adverse party; nay, they were not suffered to come in personally before them to plead their own cause, but were forced to send in their Procurator Gibellino, a Papist, who knowing that Excommunication is the certain punishment of all those that any way favoured the Hereticks, durst not speak a word till he had fallen down on his knees and begged leave of the Arch-Bishop, who was President of that Council; and the conclusion was, that those of the Vallies were commanded to make no more requests to his Royal Highness, unless they would send Deputies with procuration, and power to accept and promise all that should be ordered them; yet they (like the importunate Widow) sent again their Deputies to Turin, with their requests requests, and with order to endeavor to get audience of his Royal Highness; they also, beside other intercessions, instantly requested Madam Royal to have pity on them, and to procure the same for them; they wrote also other Letters to divers Princes of the Blood to mediate for them about the same; but all in vain, for they could get no answer from any of them; and the Marquess of Pionessa slighted their supplications, thirsting violently after the Blood of these poor creatures; yet that he might not openly discover the black design of the Council for extirpating of Hereticks, before the hour of its Execution, he disguised his answers to them in such doubtful terms, that though he gave them but cold comfort, yet he left them not without some glimmering hopes, at least, of a day of audience for the hearing of their complaints, that so during this interval of time, all things might be in a better readiness for the day of slaughter, as you shall hear in the next Chapter.

CHAP. XLIV.

A Narrative of the Bloody cruelties which were exercised against the Protestants of the Vallies of Piemont during the heat of the late Massacre in April, Anno 1655.

U Pon Saturday April 17. 1655. whilst the Deputies of the Protestants were by the subtilties of Pionessa, detained at Turin, as you heard before, there arrived a great Army at St. Giovanni, which was now, with La Torre, and all the lower parts unpeopled, and in a sad and lamentable condition; this Army continued there for some Hours, and in the dusk of the evening fell into La Torre; where they met with none of the Protestants, only about eight or ten persons, not thinking of an Enemy, were seeking up and down for something to satisfy their hunger; but so soon as they came near to the Convent, they were saluted with a volley of shot, which killed Giovanni Combe, and hurt Peter Rostain, whereupon the rest seeing the danger, fled for their lives.

The Protestants defend themselves.

The next day being the Sabbath, the Enemy ranged about through the Communalities of La Torre, and St. Giovanni, plundering and pillaging all before them; and the day after their number being encreased to about Fifteen thousand, they set upon the Protestants in several quarters amongst the little Hills of St. Giovanni, and La Torre. But the poor people being prompted thereto by the Law of Nature, stood upon their own defence, and the Enemy was vigorously opposed on every side; in one place by Captain Fahier, and in other places by the Officers of St. Giovanni, Angrogna, Roccapiata, and their Troops. Tuesday April 20. The Popish Army made three several attempts to take away the Bell of St. Giovanni, and to burn the Church; but those of the poor people in Arms did so courageously resist them, that they were driven to a shameful retreat, with the loss of about Fifty of their men; and had not their Cavalry defended the Plain, they had been utterly routed: But of the Protestants party there were only Two slain, upon whose dead Bodies they basely revenged themselves.

Popish subtil:

Wednesday the 21. which was the fatal day to the Protestants, the Marquess of Pianessa held the Deputies of the Valley of Luterna in parley till noon, and then entertained them with a large Dinner, and sent them away with many fair promises, that there should be no hurt done to any, except to those of St. Giovanni and La Torre, as being the places specified in the Order of Gastaldo; but for the rest, if they would but Quarter a few Troops as a token of their obedience, and that but for a short time, they might be fearless of the least inconvenience. Hereupon the Agents of Angrogna bestirred themselves to persuade their own party from making the least resistance; the same did the Agents of Villaro

Villaro and Bobio: But no sooner were those Troops entred, but they put all to fire and sword, slaying all they met with that had but the likeness of mankind, and that in the most Barbarous manner they could possibly devise: As you may see by this extract of a Letter written by some of those poor Protestants, wherein they thus Write: The Army having gotten footing, became very numerous by the addition of a multitude of the neighboring Inhabitants, who hearing that we were given for a prey to the Plunderers, fell upon us with an impetuous fury: To these were added a great number of Out-laws, Prisoners, and other Offenders, who thought hereby to have saved their Souls, and filled their Purses: We were forced also to receive five or six Regiments of the French Army, besides some Irish (to whom as it was said, our Country was promised) and several other Troops of Highway-men, and Vagabonds, under a pretence of coming into the Vallies only for fresh Quarters.

The multitude being licensed by Pianessa, encouraged by the Monks, and led by our wicked Neighbors, fell upon us with such violence on every side, and in so treacherous a manner, especially in Angrogna, Villaro and Bobio (to whom Pianessa had plighted his troth, that if they would but Quarter one Regiment, they should be secure from all harm) that in a moment of time all was turned into a confused heap, and the Inhabitants constrained after skirmishes that they made in the way, to fly for their lives, together with their Wives and little Children; and that not only the Inhabitants of the Plains, but of the Mountains also, who had otherwise been certainly betrayed and surprized. Yet was not all their diligence sufficient to preserve very many of them from destruction; for in many places they were hemmed in on every side, that there was no way left for their flight, but they were most inhumanely Massacred. In one place they most cruelly tormented One hundred and fifty Women and Children, and afterwards chopped off the Heads of some, and dashed out the Brains of others against the Rocks: Multitudes of Prisoners they took; and such of them from fifteen years of age and upward, who refused to go to Mass, they hanged up some, and nailed the Feet of others to Trees, with their Heads hanging downwards, all which they constantly endured. Master Gross, one of the Pastors, with some of his Family they sent to Turin: They made such havock of all, that there were neither any Cattel or other Provision left in the Valley of Lucerna: Yea, in the Communalities of St. Giovanni, La Torre, &c. a Franciscan Fryer and another Priest set Fire on Houses, and Churches, that they left not one of them unburnt. In these desolations the Mother was bereaved of her sweet Child, the Husband of his dear Wife. Those which were richest amongst us are forced to beg their Bread; yea, they are weltring in their own Blood, and deprived of all outward comforts; and whereas there were some Churches in St. Martino, that were always formerly as a Sanctuary to the persecuted, they are now commanded to quit their dwellings, and every Soul of them presently to depart without any respite, and that under pain of death.

Barbarous cruelty.

The pretence of these strange Massacres and cruelties are, that we are Rebels to the Dukes commands in not performing a pure impossibility by immediate departing from our Habitations in Bubiana, Lucerna, Fenile, Bricheras, La Torre, St. Giovanni, and St. Secondo. As also for our frequent petitioning his Royal Highness to take pity upon us. To conclude, Our beautiful and flourishing Churches are left desolate, and that without remedy, unless the Lord work miraculously for us, &c.

The truth is, the cruelties which were there Executed would exceed the belief of any man, were they not so fully proved, by the formal attestations of eye witnesses, by the woful cries of so many desolate and poor wretches who have been miserably robbed of their Relations, Houses, Lands, and all other comforts; yea, by the formal oath of one of the chief Commanders of the Army that acted these cruelties, signed with his own hand in the presence of two Authentick witnesses, and the voluntary confession of one of the Soldiers, who told some of his Comrades that many times, during the heat of the Massacre, he had surfatted with eating the boiled Brains of the Protestants.

The Declaration of Monsieur du Petit Bourg, first Captain of the Regiment of Granséy, subscribed with his own hand at Pignerol, Nov. 27. 1655. in the presence of two other Commanders.

I Sieur du Petit Bourg being commanded by Prince Thomas to go, and joyn my self with the Marquess of Pianessa, who was then at La Torre; upon my departure I was requested by the Ambassador to speak to the Marquess, and to use my endeavor to accommodate the troubles which were amongst those of the Religion in the Vallies of Piemont, which accordingly I did, entreating him with much earnestness that he would give way thereunto, and I doubted not but I should be able to effect it: But he refused this my request, and that divers times, notwithstanding all the endeavors I could possibly use to perswade him thereto; and instead of the least mitigation, I was witness to many great violences, and extream cruelties exercised by the Bandets, and Soldiers of Piemont upon all sorts, of every Age, Sex, and Condition, whom I saw Massacred, Dismembred, Hanged up, Burnt, and Ravished, together with many horrid confusions, which I beheld with horror and regret: And without any distinction of those that resisted, and such as resisted not, they were used with all sorts of inhumanity, their Houses Burnt, their Goods Plundered; and when Prisoners were brought before the said Marquess, I saw him give order to give them no Quarter at all, saying, His Highness was resolved to have none of the Religion within his Dominions. And whereas in his Declaration he protests that there was no hurt done to any but during the Fight, nor the least outrage committed upon any persons that were not fit to bear Arms: I will maintain that it is not so, having seen with my eyes many persons killed in cold Blood; as also Women, aged Persons, and young Children, miserably Murthered, &c.

The attestation of divers persons of honor, and integrity, who were for the most part eye, and ear witnesses of the ensuing Barbarous cruelties which were exercised upon divers members of the Evangelical Churches in the Vallies of Piemont in the late Massacre 1655.

Women ript up.

Sarah Kastignole des Vignes, about sixty years of age, being overtaken by divers Soldiers, was commanded to say her Prayers, and when she had done, they bad her say Jesus Maria, which the poor Woman refusing, one of the Soldiers thrust a sickle into the lower part of her Belly, and ript her up to the Navel, and then dragged the poor creature upon the ground, being half dead, till another came and cut off her Head; the Daughter in Law of this poor Woman who hid her self in the Snow for two days after without any succor, was an eye witness hereof.

Base cruelty.

Martha Constantine of Giovanni, after that she had seen several others most cruelly put to death, was her self, first Ravished, and afterwards had her Breasts cut off, and part of her Privities by some of the Soldiers, who Fryed them, and set them before some of their Comrades, making them believe they were Tripes, but when they had eaten a good part, they told them what they were, which caused a quarrel amongst them; and they that had eaten them were so sick, that some of them died soon after. This was certified by a Papist to one Andrea Favel of Einachia.

Horrid cruelty.

A man of Thrassaniere being taken Prisoner, received divers stabs in the soles of his Feet, and in his Ears by two of the Soldiers, who afterwards cut off his privy members, and then applied a burning Candle to the wound, Frying it with the Flame thereof, that so the Blood might be stopped, and the torments of that miserable Creature prolonged. Then tore they his Nails off with burning pincers to force him to renounce his Religion: But when nothing would do, they ryed one of his Legs to a Mule, and dragged him thorow the Streets till he was almost dead, and then binding a Cord about his Head, they twisted it with a staff till his Eyes and Brains dropped out, and then they cast his Carcass into the River.

Peter

Peter Simond of Angrogna about eighty years of age, was tyed neck and heels together, and so violently thrown down a fearful Precipice, but by the way, falling upon a cragged branch of a Tree, he there hung in a most languishing condition for divers days together (a most lamentable spectacle to behold) being neither able to help himself, nor capable of receiving help from others, the Precipice being inaccessible.

Esay Garcino of Angrogna, of ninety years old, had first his Body cut and hacked in small pieces, and then his Head chopped off.

The Wife of Daniel Armand of La Torre, had her Body torne and cut in pieces, and the parts of it strowed along the High Way, and hung upon the Hedges.

Captain Pola of Plancalier took two poor Women of La Torre, and with his Fauchin ript up their Bellies, and left them groveling upon the Snow in this sad and lamentable condition till they died.

The Soldiers of Bagnols cut off first the Nose, then the Fingers, and lastly the Hands of a very old, and decrepid Woman, and so left her languishing in this woful condition, not having so much as an Hand to feed her self with, till she died.

They took also many little Children, and tender Infants, and flung them down the steep Rocks, whereby they were dashed to pieces.

Magdalen Bertino of La Torre they stripped stark naked, tied her Head between her Legs, and threw her down one of the Precipices.

Anna Daughter to Giovanni Charbonjere of La Torre had a long Stake thrust into her Privities by some of the Soldiers, who each man in his turn carried her upon their shoulders till they were weary, and then stuck the end of the Stake into the ground, and so left her hanging in the air: A terrible spectacle to every one that passed by.

Giovanni Andrea Michialin of La Torre being taken Prisoner, escaped miraculously, having first seen three of his Children torne in pieces limb from limb before his eyes, and the fourth, being about six Weeks old, snatched out of the Mothers Arms, stripped of its swadling cloaths, and its Brains dashed out against the Rocks.

Jacob Perrin, an Elder of the Church of Villaro, and David his Brother being taken Prisoners in their Beds, were carried to Lucerna, and cast into the Marqueses Prison, where they were most Barbarously and cruelly handled, the Bloody Soldiers stripping off the skin of their Arms and Legs, in long slices like Leathern points, till the flesh was left quite bare: After which they were miserably starved to death in the same Prison, and their Carcasses left to rot there.

Giovanni Pelanchion, a young man about twenty five years old, having been taken Prisoner, made an escape, but being taken again by the Soldiers, they tyed one of his Legs to the Tail of a Mule, and so dragged him through all the Streets of Lucerna; and because the poor wretch sometimes lifted up his Hands and Head, through pain and anguish that he suffered by the grating of his Body against the ragged Flints, the Bloody and merciless villains battered and bruised his Body with Stones and Brickbats, crying, That he was possessed with the Devil which kept him from dying. After which they cut off his privy members, and examined them violently down the poor Creatures mouth, and down his throat to stop his Breath, and at last chopt off his Head, and so drawing him to the Rivers bank, they left him there unburied.

Magdalen the Daughter of Peter Fontana, a beautiful Girl about ten years old, being taken by some of these lecherous Brutes, because her body was incapable of being forced in an ordinary way, they tore her in so inhumane a manner, that afterwards she was found half dead, wallowing in her own Blood.

A poor Woman apprehending her danger, having a sucking Child in the Cradle, took the Child and Cradle upon her Head, and fled: Some of the Soldiers seeing her, pursued; and she perceiving that she was like to be overtaken, left her Cradle in the way, supposing that those Butchers could not have such hearts of Adamant as to hurt her innocent Babe, and so hid her self in the cleft of a Rock not far off: But these Hell-hounds finding the Infant in the Cradle, took it out, and tore it in pieces, and afterwards finding the Mother, they first Ravished her, and then cut off her Head, and left her dead Body upon the Snow.

Jacopo Michelino, one of the chief Elders of the Church of Bobio, being taken Prisoner, had his two Hands tyed to his privy members, and so hung upon a Gate in a shameful posture; But the shame was nothing to the torments, the whole weight of his Body hanging upon so tender a part, which caused most exquisite and almost incredible pain: And this they did to force him to renounce his Religion: But when this prevailed not, they took him down, and carried him away amongst other Prisoners: And afterwards having with incredible constancy endured a World of other cruelties, he at last exchanged this life for a better.

Peter Gros, during the time of his imprisonment, saw two of these poor Protestants of La Sarcena, Hanging in a most hideous manner, meerly by their privy members, and their Hands tyed behind them, till their very Bowels were almost torn out, and so at last they died with horrible pain and anguish.

Paolo Garnier of Roras being taken by these Murtherers, they first violently pulled out his eyes, then cut off his privy members, thrusting his Yard into his mouth, and in this posture they exposed him to publick scorn for several days together; together, afterwards in a most inhumane manner they fled him alive, and then cutting his skin in four parts, they hung it in the Windows of four of the principal Houses of Lucerna.

Daniel Cardon of Roccapiata being taken by some of the Soldiers, they cut off his Head, took out his Brains, and Frying them in a Pan, eat them up; they cut open his Breast also, and were taking out his Heart to Fry and eat that, but that they were frighted by some of the poor peoples Troops that were coming that way.

The late Persecutions in the Kingdom of Castile

to Almighty God that his Children might follow their Father, and did like himself, whereupon the Priests, seeing all their labor lost, assisted the Hangman to end this poor Mans life, and hasted to turn him off the Ladder.

Sieur Paolo Clement, an Elder of the Church of Paisana, was shortly after brought by the Monks and Priests to this same place, and shewed the dead Body of the other, thinking thereby to scare him from his Principles, and profession: But he answered them with an undaunted courage, That they might kill the Body, but could never be able to prejudice the Soul of a true Believer. He told them also, That God would assuredly avenge the innocent Blood that they had spilt: and so having by some ejaculations prepared to resign up his Soul unto God, he desired the Hangman to do his work: Three or Four days after, the Marquess of Pisnessa coming that way, one of the Soldiers discharged a Musquet at his dead Body, whereupon there gushed out a stream of fresh Blood, which the Marquess observing, said to some about him, This Blood cries for vengeance: Afterwards they took both these dead Bodies, and hung them up naked by one Foot near to La Torre, and when any Prisoner of the Protestants passed that way, they forced him or her to go and kiss their Privities, that they might put alike scorn both upon the living and dead: But by reason of the multitude of Bullets that were shot thorow them by the Soldiers, they at last fell to pieces.

Daniel Rambaut of Villaro, having a numerous Family, was taken, and carried to Paisana with divers others of his Neighbors, where he was cast into Prison, and after a while was importunately set upon by the Monks, and Mass Priests, both with promises, and threats, to pronounce Jesus Maria; and when they could not prevail, the Tormentors first cut off his Fingers one by one, and then his Hands, and lastly gave him a deadly wound in the stomack, and then they dragged his Carcass to the Rivers side, and left it to be devoured by Dogs, and wild Beasts.

Daniel Benoch of Villaro was taken by the Soldiers, who cut off his Nose, Ears, and other parts of his Body, till they had slain him, and then they left the mangled pieces upon the Hedges, and Bushes in the same place: Two of his Children were also stifled in the Snow.

Mary the Widow of Daniel Pelanchion of Villaro, being taken by the Soldiers, after they had basely abused her, they almost shot her to death, and then threw her into the River: But this poor Woman being not quite dead, with much pains, and hard shifts, got out of the River again, hoping to be somewhat revived by the warm Sun which she laid her down in: But some of these bloody Villains spying her, they fastened a Rope to her Feet, and dragged her to the Bridge, where they hung her up by the Legs, and so shot her to death, afterwards leaving her stark naked upon the Rock.

Mary the Wife of Daniel Monino was taken by the Soldiers, who having broken her jaws in pieces, they gave her a deep cut in the neck, so that her Head was half off, and so they left her in that languishing condition, till after extreame torments endured for divers days together, she at last yielded up the Ghost.

Jacob Baridono, being taken Prisoner at Villaro, and from thence carried to La Torre, after the Tormentors had sufficiently, and cruelly afflicted him with burning Matches between his Fingers, his Lips, and other parts of his Body, till with intolerable pain he died, they caused his dead Corps to be carried out by two of his Fellow-Prisoners, and by them to be thrown into the River Pelice: But thinking that too honorable a burying place for an Heretick, they forced them to fetch it out again, and to lay it on the Rivers brink, where, after they had exposed the same to all manner of ignominies, it was at last eaten up by Dogs.

Margaret the Wife of Joseph Garniero, having received a shot in one of her Breasts, as she was giving suck to her little Child with the other, was yet so courageous that with many patheticall expressions she exhorted her Husband to endure the Cross with patience, and to hold out to the end, neither did she desire any favour of the Murderers, but only that they would spare the life of her Innocent Babe: which accordinly they did: but withal gave the Mother another shot in her Body whereof she died, and afterwards the Infant being found alive in the dead mothers Arms, was miraculously preserved.

Isiah Mondon having a long time hid himself in the cleft of a Rock, where for many days together he had nothing but a few Leaves of unwholsome Herbs to eat, was at last found out by the Soldiers, and most unmercifully handled by them: From thence they drave him towards the Town of Lucerna, being almost half dead: At last, when the poor creature could march no further, he fell down upon upon his knees, and beseeched them to dispatch him speedily, which accordingly they did; For partly with their Swords, and partly with their Pistols, they put an end to his miserable life, crying out in a scoffing manner, Kill the Barber, kill the Barber, who refuseth to become a Christian.

Giovanni Barrolino and his Wife were cast alive into a Pool, and often plunged, and thrust under the Water with Staves, and Pitchforks, and at last were dispatched with Stones and Brickbats.

Giovanni Salvagiot as he was returning from Bagnol, after the peace was concluded, as he passed by a Chappel, because he put not off his Hat, and made obeisance thereto, was murdered, and his Body left unburied.

Giovanni Gayo, and divers other Men, Women, and Children hid themselves in a Cave, where for a time they continued in safety; But at last were discovered by some of these Blood-hounds, whereupon they fell upon their knees, and begged their lives of them, most of the murderers having been their Neighbors, and familiar acquaintance, and such as had pretended great friendship to them: But the mercies of these Men proved extream cruelty; For the kindest salute they could afford their old acquaintance was with Swords, Musquers, and Pistols; which the poor People perceiving, and not desiring to behold the lamentable misery each of other, they kneeled down in a Ring, and thrust their Heads into Fern, and such like stuff as they had prepared to lie upon, in which posture they were all miserably shot to death, and their dead Bodies afterwards horribly mangled, and cut in pieces.

Jacob Barral and his Wife having been taken Prisoners by the Earl of Saint Secondo, were three or four days after carried forth: And having first cut off the Womans Breasts, they shot them to death.

Antony Guigno went to Periero with a purpose to change his Religion; But it pleased God so to touch his Heart, that he repented of the resolution, and sought to make an escape: But as he was flying some Troops of the Marquels of Salva caught him, and used him most cruelly because he would not yield to go to Mass: And as they carried him Prisoner towards Praly, passing by a Precipice, the poor Man to avoid his Tormentors, leaped down from the Rock, and so was dashed in pieces.

Very many others there were which might here have been inserted, whereof some were drowned, some burnt, some slain with the Sword, some shot to death, some starved, some smothered in the Snow, some pined, some killed with staves, some cut in pieces: But I am weary with reckoning up their Names, and I suppose the Reader also is tired with these cruelties; yet are their Names written in red Letters in the Kalender of Heaven, though their Popish Adversaries would have them written in the dust; and whosoever desires to see more, may find a larger Catalogue in Master Moorlands History of the Persecutions in the Valleys of Piemont.

CHAP. XLV.

A true Narrative of the War in the Valleys of Piemont, between the Popish and Protestant party upon the occasion of the Massacre.

IN the former Chapter you have a faithful Narration of what cruelties were exercised against the Reformed Party in the Valleys of Piemont from the first arrival of the Marquels of Pianessa's Forces at St. Giovanni, which was April 17. 1655. to the 21. of the same: By which time they had made such havoc of these poor people, that there was now only the little Communalty of Roras which was left entire, and untouched: But that they also might in all things be made like unto their suffering Brethren of the other Churches, and that it might appear that the destruction was designed to be universal, the Earl of Christophle upon that very day, being April 21. sent Three hundred Soldiers secretly by the way of Villaro, to surprize them of Roras, and to put them all to the Sword: This Party being got upon a little Hill called Rumer, belonging to Roras, it pleased God that they were met with by some Soldiers belonging to Captain Josbua Gianavel (whom God raised up at that time as a choice Instrument for the preservation of the poor scattered remnant of his people.) These Soldiers being but Seven or Eight of them, yet having been beforehand placed in Ambuscado at a convenient Post to prevent the inrode of the Enemy, they fired upon them, and plyed them so hard, that many of them were killed upon the place, and the rest, supposing by the great number of Bullets that flew about their Ears, that the Men in ambuscado were Six times more in number than indeed they were, they fled back in great disorder, and confusion, which the others perceiving, they fell upon their Rear, and chased them at least three quarters of a League amongst the Rocks, and Woods, doing notable execution upon them in their flight.

Popish subtil-
ty, and perfidiousness.

The Members of this little Church of Roras, to take away all occasions of exceptions, presented their complaints to the Marquess of Pianessa, who, that he might have the better opportunity to deceive, and surprize them, answered, That those of his Soldiers that went to Roras, were but Thieves, Robbers, and Out-laws, that herein had wholly disobeyed his Orders; Adding, That they had done him a singular favor in driving them out of their Countrey, and that he would take a course to prevent their being disturbed for the future: And hereupon he published an Order, whereby he strictly charged his Soldiers, not to give them any further causes of complaints, nor to molest them in any kind hereafter. Yet perfidiously, the very next day he sent a Party of Five hundred chosen Men to put his first Bloody design in execution.

A special Providence.

As these Men were passing over a little Hill of Roras, they were so saluted by Eleven Musqueteers of the Protestants, and Six Men with slings under the conduct of Captain Gianavel, who had divided them into Three Squadrons, that the Enemy was soon put to flight: And this poor handful of despicable Men pursued them for an whole League, slaying a very great number of them, without the loss or hurt of any one of themselves, which shews the admirable Providence of God in preserving, and prospering those that fight his Battels.

The Marquess of Pianessa, though he had failed this Second time, yet was resolved to make a third attempt; And still to deceive them, he made new promises, and protestations that no injury in the world should be offered them, and that in regard of the Intercession of the Earl of Christophle, their Lord and Patron, he would protect, and defend them; yet the very morrow after he sent a party of Seven hundred Men, who first seized upon, and secured all the passes; that none might escape their bloody Hands, and then most barbarously burnt, and destroyed whatsoever they met with thorow all the Communalty of Roras.

Hereupon Seventeen Housekeepers, whose Hearts God had marvellously strengthened, and encouraged for their poor Brethrens preservation, seeing what they must expect, and that nothing but death, and destruction waited for them, unless some admirable providence prevented it: As also calling to mind those singular deliverances which God had vouchsafed to his ancient people of the Jews in their greatest straits; They unanimously resolved to cast themselves with their lives and estates into the Hands of the same God, resting upon his gracious promises, and freely submitting to his good will and pleasure for for the issue of their undertaking. The Captain of this valiant Party was the afore said Gianavel, who marching up with this little Band, suddenly surprized, and dexterously carried away their Court of Guard with their Centinel from off a little Hill where they were placed: At which bold attempt, the Enemy being not a little amazed, withdrew from the place where they were, resolving to march thorow a little meadow, and so to get to Villaro or La Torre: But being not nimble enough, the others met with them at Piampra, and there slew many of them, without the loss of any one of their own, and took from them all the Cattel, and other things which they had plundered from the neighboring places.

Pianessa seeing all his designs thus frustrated, and that his specious promises were but as so many watchwords to bid these poor people to stand upon their guard; He speedily sent to all those of Lucerna, Bubiana, Barges, Bagnol, Famolas, Cavors, and the adjacent places, who were able to bear Arms, to come and joyn with a good part of his own Army, to environ these poor people on every side. But God, who infatuates Mens Counsels as he pleaseth, though the time of their Rendezvous was punctually assigned them, yet they came Two Hours too late; all except the Troop of Bagnol, which was conducted by one Mario, a notorious Persecutor, and an inveterate Enemy to the Reformed Churches: This Mario with his ragged Regiment of Thieves, Outlaws, and a great number of Irish Rebels, assaulted this poor people on the upper and lower part of the Canton of Rumet, who were not about Seventeen in number; yet the Lord was pleased so to encourage them, that they presently gat upon the top of the Mountain, and there after a long skirmish forced their Enemies though full of fury and malice, yet to give back, and to flee as far as the Cliff called Paire Capello; In which fight and pursuit they killed above Sixty of them, and wounded many more, and many of them being laden with plunder, as they fled amongst the Precipices of the Rocks, fell down, and were dashed in pieces: Those of them that were lighter, and nimbler, gat safe to Paire Capello; But when they came there, they found greater difficulties to contest with than before. For being closely pursued and compassed in on every side, they were forced to take the Ropes wherewith they had bound up their plunder, and tying them to shrubs, to slide down the Rocks by them, and to fall into the River that ran below; But by reason of the violence of the torrent, and the great confusion that was amongst them, one falling on the neck of another, and such as could not swim, catching hold of them that could, the greatest part of them were there drowned. Captain Mario also amongst the rest threw himself into the River, and had not several of the Soldiers that could swim excellent well, returned their lives to fetch him out, he had gone with the rest to receive present pay from the Devil.

This Captain Mario, having thus escaped, was carried to Lucerne in his Shirt, without either Hat or Shoes, as a Man at his wits end; And shortly after he fell into a desperate disease, whereof he died: But before his death he oft cried out in a most despairing manner, that he felt a grievous burning in his Bowels, as a just Judgment upon him for having burnt so many innocent Persons, and their Habitations.

The Protestants after this gallant action, being somewhat weary with their hard service, as they were marching back to refresh themselves, they spied another Company of Murderers coming from Villaro, whereupon forgetting their weariness, they placed themselves in Ambuscade: When the Enemy drew near the place, they perceived some of them; but not being able by their colours to discern of what Party they were, they called to them for THE WORD. The Protestants answered not, but beckned to them to come nearer, which they did in a careless posture, supposing them to be Friends; and when they came near, the others suddenly discharged upon them, and slew many of them upon the place, and the rest they pursued near to La Torre, and Villaro. After which signal Victory, Captain Gianavel rallied his Men upon an high ground not far off, and in the very sight of his Enemies, he caused them to kneel down, and with a loud voice to give Thanks unto the Lord for this very great mercy in their deliverance.

Three days after, the Marquess of Pianessa, being highly incensed by this success of the Protestants, sent to the people of Roras, expressly charging them to change their Religion, within the space of Twenty four hours, and that upon pain of death, and of having their Houses burnt to the ground: To which they answered, That they would much rather chuse death, than to obey any such Order. The Marquess vexed at this resolute answer, presently dispatched away Eight thousand Men, besides the Militia Forces of the neighboring Commonalties; who according to his order, were divided into Three Squadrons, the one to set upon the poor people on the side of Villaro, the other upon the Mountains of Bagnol, and the third on that part which looks towards Lucerna; which accordingly they did, not only murdering Man, Woman and Child, but exercising all manner of cruelties upon them, taking much pleasure (like bloody Villains) in torturing those poor Creatures, and in tossing their little Infants from off their Pikes and Halberds, and dashing their Brains against the Rocks, whose cries would have melted an Heart of Adamant, but theirs were harder; The number thus taken and slain was about One hundred twenty six, the rest almost miraculously escaped their bloody Hands.

Having thus shewn their valor upon naked Men, Women and Infants, and being glutted with the prey that they found in the Countrey, they turned their Houses into Ashes; and such as survived, they sent Prisoners to Turin, amongst whom was the Wife and Children of Captain Gianavel, and so they marched back to Lucerna with great joy and acclamations.

Shortly after Pianessa wrote to Captain Gianavel promising him great preferment if he would change his Religion; Otherwise, threatening that his Wife and Children should be burnt: He also promised a great sum of money to any that should bring him the said Gianavel either alive or dead. To this Captain Gianavel presently answered, That there was no torment so violent, nor death so cruel, that he did not much prefer before the abjuration of his Religion; and that all these promises and threats did but the more fortifie him and strengthen his Faith: And for his wife and Children, he told the Marquess that though he had gotten them into his power, yet he could but kill their Bodies; And as for their Souls, he recommended them, together with his own, into the Hands of God, in case it so happened that he should fall into his power.

This Captain Gianavel having gotten together a small party of Men upon part of the Alps called La Pella des Jamies, May 22. went out in the evening to a place about three leagues off, not far from Bubiana, where he first sought to God by prayer, and afterwards being informed of the number and strength of the Enemy, finding them too many to be attachqued by such a handful of Men, he turned towards Lucernetta, where he was furiously assaulted by the Garrison of Lucerna, but he courageously encountered them without the loss of any one Man, only himself was shot into the Leg, by a Soldier that had himself behind a Tree, with a purpose to have slain him; But the Captain perceiving whence the shot came, lame as he was, he made to the place, where he quickly dispatched him for his pains.

Whilst these things were acting, the Irish Rebels in the Marquesses Army, thinking to make themselves Masters of Bubiana, under a pretence of protecting them against the Barbets, the Peasants of the place perceiving their drift, took occasion to quarrel with them, and after drove them out, killing a great number of them.

May the 26. 1655. Captain Gianavel wrote to Captain Fabier and the rest that were retired into Val Lucerna, to meet at a Rendezvous at Angrogna, which accordingly they did, and the day after, they marched together to a place in the the Plain called Gareigliana, thinking to have entered the Town; But they met with a great party of Horse and Foot, yet they disputed it with them a long time, but being overpowered, they were forced to retreat, though they got six yoke of Oxen, and many other small Cattel, and some Prisoners, and that with the loss of one only Man in the retreat.

May 18. They marched to St. Secondo, where, having first kneeled down, and prayed for a blessing upon their undertaking, encouraging one another, they attack'd the place with incredible valor; and the better to secure themselves against their Enemies, who had lodged and fortified themselves in Houses, they got Planks, Barrels, and such other things as they met with to keep off the Bullets, which were poured out upon them out of those Houses, and so quickly made themselves Masters of the Doors of those Houses, to which immediately they set fire, and so forced their entrance, putting all the Soldiers they found to the Sword; and no marvel, For they had been extremely provoked to this rigor by the others cruel usage of their Wives and Children: Besides every room of those Houses was filled with the plundered Goods of the Protestants; yet did they not meddle either with Women or Children.

Then did they let fire on the Town, and plunder'd the Churches, which they found full of their own Goods and Cattle, and carried away seven of their Mass-Bells.

At this time they slew about Four hundred and fifty of their Enemies, and amongst others, a whole Company of Irish Rebels, who chose rather to be burnt than to crave Quarter. Of the Protestants there were only Seven slain, and Six or Seven more slightly wounded, whereof they soon recovered.

Monday, June the Fourth, the Captains Jabier, Laurentio, Gianvel, Gonolot, Benet, and other Officers of the Protestants, went to Anagnina, and having called a Council of War, they concluded the next day to alarm the Enemy at Briqueras, and Saint Giovanni: And accordingly the Captains Laurentio and Jabier went by the way of Roccapiatta, that by the help of the thick Woods wherein they shrouded themselves, they might the better approach Briqueras, and having gotten upon a little Hill near the Town, Captain Laurentio made there a stand to hinder any relief that might be sent them from Saint Secondo, and Captain Jabier marching down, let fire on several Houses and Barns.

At the sight of this fire, they of Briqueras gave notice to those of Cavari, Fenile, Bubiana, Campiglione, and other neighboring places, whereupon the Enemy quickly advanced towards them, and were as soon beaten back again: In the mean time there came a party of about Twenty Horse and stood at Saint Secondo, lest the Reformed party should Salley out that way, really believing that they had a design upon Briqueras: But Captain Jabier marched with his Company by the way of Saint Giovanni, and Captain Laurentio went an higher way, yet both met at the place appointed, where Captain Gianvel was engaged with the Enemies from Luserna, and La Torre, against whom he had defended himself very stoutly: Then did Captain Jabier charge them on the Flank, and Captain Laurentio on the Front, seasonably interposing his Company in that place where the Enemy had thought to have surrounded Captain Gianvel, so that the Popish party was soon routed, leaving One hundred Men behind them, besides many that were wounded, the Reformed party having but one slain upon the place.

June the Second, Three hundred of the Enemies went from La Torre to fetch a Convoy into the Fort of Nivabuc, situate between the Frontiers of Dauphine, and Piemont: But Captain Gianvel being at Malbuc, though he had but Nine Soldiers with him, fell upon them, and fought a great while with them to the great astonishment of his Enemies: But at last was forced to retreat without the loss of a Man, only Four were slightly wounded.

Afterwards

Afterwards Captain Gianavel with a small party marched to La Pella des Guienets, from whence he sent to some that were retired into Villaro, requiring that all those of the Reformed Religion should within Twenty four Hours come out of the said place where Mass was celebrated, and that upon the pain of being dealt with as Enemies; And that such as through weakness had abjured, and would persist in their abjuration, should depart thence upon the same penalty. Hereupon all the Papists fled presently out of Villaro, and the Protestants came in to Captain Gianavel, and such of them as were able to bear Arms followed him chearfully: The rest contributed according to their abilities towards the maintenance of him, and his Troops. Those which through frailty had abjured their Religion went over the Mountain into the Valley of Queires; yet not long after they returned like so many wandering Sheep to the true Shepherd of their Souls, and testifying their repentance, were again received into the Bosom of the Church.

After those of Lucerna were retreated, the Captains Fahier, and Gianavel, with some other Officers, called a Council of War, wherein they resolved to sally out, and if it were possible, to surprise those of La Torre, most of which were Irisb. But the Enemy having timely notice, was so prepared, that they killed some who had passed the Bridge at Angrognia, which so encouraged them that they thought to have enclosed all the small Body of the Protestants, and to have cut them all off: But after many assaults to no purpose, they were forced to retreat to La Torre with the loss of very many of their Soldiers, besides many others that were dangerously wounded.

The next day the Captains, Fahier, and Gianavel went before La Torre, against whom many of the Soldiers came out; But not sallying forth in a full Body, they were all slain upon the place, which their Captains seeing, they thought fit to send out no more: Whereupon the Protestants retreated towards Angrognia, to a place called La Verne, where a few Houses were yet left unburnt.

The next day was spent in the review of their Army, and holding a Council of War, where they resolved to send a party against the Communalty of Crusol, the Inhabitants whereof had made Incursions upon them, and committed many Outrages in the beginning of the Massacre: And accordingly they marched all night, being Four hundred ninety and five Men, and passing by La Torre undiscovered, a little after midnight they arrived at Crusol, where they took Four hundred Head of Cattle, Six hundred Sheep and Goats, with much other booty, and that without the least resistance: For the Inhabitants of Crusol, being terribly affrighted, had cast themselves into the mouth of a most fearful Rock, whence they could not be gotten out; and so the Protestants returned over one of the Alps of Villaro, where, arriving the next day towards evening, they divided the spoil amongst the Soldiers.

Presently after their departure the Enemy from Lucerna, Cavors, Briqueiras, and other places to the number of Eight hundred, having heard of their design against Crusol, marched to their relief: But finding that they were gone too far to be overtaken, they resolved not to lose their labors, and so fell a plundering the poor people (though their Friends) much worse than the Protestants had done, and afterwards falling out amongst themselves about dividing the spoil, they destroyed one another instead of doing hurt to the Reformed party.

The very same day that this enterprize was against Crusol, the Enemy at Saint Secondo advanced to burn the rest of the Houses at Roccapiatta, and being advanced as far as to the little Hill of Angrognia, they thought to have surprized the rest of the Forces left under the command of Captain Laurentio, and Captain Fahiers Brother: But they, having timely intelligence of it, marched presently to the top of the Mountain with one half of the Soldiery, leaving the other half under the Command of Captain Bennet of Saint Germano, who also with

with all possible expedition, took his Post upon the said little Hill with Seventeen of his Men, and placed the rest in Ambuscado. But the Enemies hearts misgiving them, they shamefully retreated, at which time they took one Giovanni Pietro Ragio as he was coming from Pimachis, and binding his Head with a Cord, they strained it with such violence, that they made it sink into his Brains, and so they sent him to Turin, where he ended his days shortly after by a languishing, and miserable death.

Eight days after, Captain Gianavel, having waited Three whole days at Angronia for the coming of Captain Fabier, that with joint Forces they might assault the Town of Lucerna, when he came not, he resolved to assault it himself, and so marching all night, he arrived at Lucerna by break of day. His first work was to cut off the Pipes that conveyed Water into the Town, and brake down the Bridge that no relief might come to them from Bubiana, Barges, and Bagnol: Then did he assault the Town, and quickly defeated Two of the Outguards: But the Regiment of Monsieur de Morolles, and divers others being got into the Town the night before, he was constrained to give over the enterprise, and to retreat, whereas if Captain Fabier had come in time, and joyned with him, probably they had carried the place.

June the Eighth, Captain Gianavel being left alone at Angronia only with his own Company, and some few others, was assaulted early in the morning by the Soldiers of La Torre and others, one part of them getting upon the top of the Mountain, and the other part going the lower passage to possess themselves of the Gate of Angronia by the way of Saint Bartholomew, intending suddenly to fall upon Captain Gianavel and his small Company, having already devoured them in their hopes: But it pleased God that at the sound of the Trumpet, when all should have fallen on, Captain Gianavel soon awaked, and having first sought unto God by prayer, he fell upon the Enemy, and gat the advantage of the place from them, and after a short Dispute, forced them to turn their Backs, though there were at least Two thousand five hundred of them, and all the Captains Company was not above Three hundred, yet did that handful of Men pursue them as far as to the descent of Angronia, into the Woods, and steep places of the Rocks, where they slew a very great number of them.

Captain Gianavel seeing it impossible to think of any further attempt for the present, entreated Captain Fabier to give over for that day, and to refresh himself and his Soldiers: But he being at that time more passionate than prudent, refused his good counsel, and picking out One hundred and fifty choice Men, sweetly took his leave of Captain Gianavel (little thinking that it should be his last) and so marched down into the plain, where he burnt several of their Houses who had formerly burnt, and destroyed so many of the Protestants, bringing away with him a good Booty of Cattle, and other Goods.

This valiant Captain who hitherto had been so successful in all his attempts, thinking in the close of the day to Crown all his former undertakings, as he was now near the execution of his Design; Lo a Squadron of Horse fortified him and his Forty five Men (for at this time he had no more with him), at a Country House, not far from Ossac; and though he and his Men did all that could possibly be expected from them, killing Three Captains, with the Commander in chief of that Squadron, besides many others, yet he at last and Thirty five of his Followers, all lost their lives: And the Enemies in great Triumph, cut off Captain Fabiers Head, and the Heads of his Sons, and carried them to Turin, presenting them to the Duke and his Mother, who rewarded them with Six hundred Ducats for their good service therein.

Captain Fabier deserves to be renowned, especially for his great piety, and zeal for the service and honor of God, and the preservation of his poor afflicted Church and Members: He was of so undaunted a spirit, that the report of death, and the most cruel torments could never fright him. He was bold as a Lion in his enterprises, but meek, and humble as a Lamb, in the midst of his Victories, always lifting up his Hands towards Heaven, from whence he acknowledged all his help to come, and always recited fit and comfortable passages out of the Scriptures ( wherein he was admirably Versed ) for the encouragement of all his Followers, and the strengthening of their Faith upon all occasions. As to his outward parts, and accomplishments, he was a Man of a sound understanding, and good judgment, and above all, of a wonderful active spirit, which had he but used with moderation, he had been hardly to have been paralleled.

A special Providence.

The death of so brave a Commander, and the wound of Captain Glanavel, in that juncture of time did not a little startle the Protestants: But necessity often puts inconsiderable Men upon bold enterprizes; For these poor Men did not despond, nor lose their courage, but assembling shortly after in a Mountain of Angrogna, they descended into the Plain, where twice they were assaulted with violence, the last of which was by a dangerous Ambuscado, where the Enemies were at least Six thousand, and they not above One hundred: But God of his infinite goodness so encouraged their Hearts, and guided their Hands, that they slew very many of their Enemies, and amongst them many principal Officers, whereas the Reformed party lost only one Michael Bertino, a Serjeant of Angrogna, and had but one common Soldier wounded. The Son of the said Bertino seeing his Father fall dead at his Feet, was so far from being discouraged, that he immediately stepped into his Fathers place with these words, Though my Father be dead, yet be of good courage my fellow Soldiers, for God is a Father to us all.

Munday following they had a very sharp dispute at La Torre, and about Tagliaretto, where they killed and wounded a great number of their Enemies, without the loss of any of their own Men. Indeed in this time the Enemies reaped their Corn in the Plains of Saint Giovanni, but they could not carry it away but with the loss of many of their lives.

About the same time there came to the Protestants one Monsieur Andrion, a Major of a Regiment of Horse, with two other Gentlemen that were strangers, who were followed with some Volunteers, whose friendly visit of their poor afflicted Brethren, and their good advice in such a juncture of time, was taken ( as it deserved ) very kindly; and God made it a singular means to uphold the fainting spirits of some weak Brethren, who seeing others come in to the help of the Lord against the Mighty, went on with a great deal more cheerfulness, and alacrity: And these staid with them till the peace was concluded at Pignerol.

July the Eleventh 1655. Sieur John Leger, Pastor of the Church at Saint Giovanni, who deserves to be remembered for the great pains, and many services performed by him in the behalf of the Churches of the Valleys, having notice that the Enemies were of opinion that he was come back from his journey with Arms and Money, and Ammunition, and thereupon presuming that they would suddenly make some notable attempt to prevent what they so much feared, he went to Colonel Andrion, and pressed him to put his design in execution.

The poor people had as yet no standing Army: But the Bands of each Communalty were quartered at a great distance the one from the other; and certainly they had been cut off every Man of them within a few days, had not their Centinels been very watchful, and above all, if Captain Charforan had not on the one side timely discovered the Enemy, and the poor people on the other side been exceedingly heartned to the Battel by the great valor, and singular conduct of the Sieurs Andrion, Michelin, and Leger.

The Enemy was very numerous, having been lately reinforced with many Troops. They encamped themselves within half a League of the Reformed party, and early in the Morning they divided themselves into Four Brigades, Three

Three whereof fell upon the Protestants with a marvelous Resolution in Three several places at once: The Fourth stood still, ready to succor their Friends if there were need. The fight continued at least Four Hours without intermission, and was the sharpest that ever was fought in the open Field: And that which made the Enemies more fierce, was, their hopes to have beaten back the Protestants from their Post called the Castelas, which if they could have effected, they had been certainly Masters of the Valleys Perosa, Saint Martin, and Lucerna: But the poor people having lifted up their Hearts by earnest supplications to the Lord of Hosts (as they used to do upon all such occasions) Major Andriou, and the Two other Captains which he had brought with him, gave forth such orders as were necessary, encouraging their Men exceedingly, so that without budging a Foot, they kept their ground, all save a few, who were either quite tired, or faint for want of Food, or that wanted Powder, or Flints in their Fire-locks: But these, the Sieurs Mechelin and Loget employed in rolling down great Stones upon their Enemies Heads as they came to attack them, which proved very successful, doing much execution upon the Enemy, and causing them to abate much of their fury, and whereas in the beginning of the fight they cryed always, Advance, Advance, ye rebels of Jahier, the Protestants now began to cry as fast, Advance, Advance, ye rebels of Saint Secondo, and withal they ran upon those murderers as so many Lions, and caused them to turn back, and fly towards La Torre and Lucerna as fast as they were able, leaving behind them Fifty five upon the place, and about Forty that were killed in the flight, besides many others who were carried either dead, or dangerously wounded, to Lucerna. Themselves confessed that in this encounter they lost at least Three hundred Men, amongst which were many Officers of a Bavarian Regiment:

When such multitudes of dead, wounded, and dying Men were brought into Lucerna, the Syndick, who was indeed a Papist, but not so superstitious as many others, said to some, Hitherto the wolves devoured the Bar-bets; But now the Bar-bets devour the wolves: Which words being reported to Monsieur Marolles, the Commander in chief in Lucerna, he threatened to imprison him, and to give him the Strappado for them, which so terrified the poor Man, that he presently sickned, and within a few days died.

Two days after this great fight, the Enemy being much enraged for their great loss, spread themselves all over Angrogna, and began to set the Corn on fire, which being seen by the Company of La Torre, who at that time were upon the Mountain of Tagliaretto, they speedily gave notice to those of Saint Giovanni, and Angrogna, who hasted thither, and charged them so fiercely, that they forced them to fly, and to leave most of their Ammunition behind them: And in the mean time Captain Belin assaulted the Town of La Torre, killed the Centinel, and Soldiers upon the works, and gave the Town such an hot Alarm, that most of them fled towards the River of Pessine; and probably if he had had a few more Men with him, he had at that time made himself Master of La Torre.

July the Eighteenth, the General of the Protestants gave Order to fall upon the Town of La Torre, which accordingly was put in execution. Captain Belin gave the first onset, who being followed with many other Officers, and Soldiers, they quickly made a considerable breach in the Garden-wall next to the Convent, which so encouraged the rest, that they fell on with an invincible resolution, and in a short space burnt both the Convent, and most of the Town down to the ground. Those in the Fort finding themselves hardly beset, began to Parley about surrendering of it upon honorable terms: But some Horse coming seasonably to their relief from Lucerna, which the Protestants might have prevented if they had been so careful as they should have been, they were frustrated of attaining their desires.

Besides these, there were divers other Battels fought in divers places, where the Reformed party had considerable advantages against their Enemies; but for brevity sake they are here omitted.

C H A P. XLVI.

A brief account of the Intercessors to the Duke of Savoy in the behalf of these poor People, and the success thereof.

UPon the first publication of that terrible Order of Gastaldo, which was a forerunner of the Massacre, the Protestant Cantons of Switzerland, being their near neighbors, and therefore could soonest take notice of it, wrote their Letters to the Duke of Savoy in the poor peoples behalf. To which the Duke of Savoy shortly after gave a complemental, but cold answer, which was little better than a Plain denial of their request, and mediation.

April the 29. being the Lords day, news of the horrible Massacre was brought to the Council of Zurick, who immediately gave Order for a publick day of Humiliation through all their Territories, as also for making a Collection for their relief; resolving to give notice of this doleful news to their Protestant Friends; and amongst others, they wrote to the States General of the United Provinces, acquainting them with the sad condition of this poor people, intreating them to consider of some expedient for the accommodating their affairs.

May the Fifth, they sent Monsieur Gabriel Weis, Captain General of Bern as their Deputy to the Duke of Savoy, who in very respectful terms requested him to re-establish those who had survived the Massacre in their ancient priviledges, the free exercise of their Religion, and for the enlargement of their Prisoners, delivering him a Letter to the same purpose. The answer which the Duke (or rather his Mother) gave, was, that though they were not obliged to give an account of their actions to any Prince in the world, yet out of respect to the amity which they had compacted with his Masters the Cantons, they had given Order to the Marquess of Pianessa to acquaint them with the truth of those affairs: And shortly after when Major Weis spake with the Marquess, he labored to justify all his proceedings, and to lay the load upon the backs of the poor people, protesting that he never intended to force their Consciences, and that all the reports about such strange cruelties exercised towards them were meer forgeries, &c.

Major Weis replied that the Massacre was so notorious, that it could not be denied; and that their right of habitation in those places was founded upon Justice, being granted to them by the Dukes Predecessors, and purchased by them of the present Duke for Six thousand Ducatoons. The Marquess answered, that all those Grants were upon condition that the Romish Religion should be freely exercised amongst them, which yet they would never suffer. Master Weis still pressing this sad condition, and the necessity of finding an expedient for accommodation, &c. the Marquess desired him to apply himself to the poor people, and to cause them to desist from Hostility, which would be the way to obtain favor from the Duke; and no marvel though he moved this: For about this time (through Gods mighty assistance) these poor people began so to prevail, that their Enemies began to fear what the success might be, and therefore the Marquess labored to get the Sword out of their Hands by such a stratagem as this.

Major Weis went to Perosa, propounding these things to the poor people; who returned humble thanks to the Cantons for what they had already done in their their behalf, and said, that if the Six Evangelical Cantons would engage that the Treaty should be carried on upon honest and honourable terms, they were ready to hearken to it; Otherwise they were resolved never to trust those who had so oft deceived them; and whose Principle was, That Faith is not to be kept with Heretics.

With this answer Master Wick returned, and sued for the enlargement of the Prisoners; or that at least he might be suffered to speak with them. But neither the one nor other would be granted; whereupon he returned to his Masters, and upon his report to them, being discouraged from any further proceedings, they resolved to expect what would be done by other Princes, and States.

May 1655, Letters were brought to Oliver, Lord Protector of England, of this doleful news; whereupon he invited all the people of England to seek the Lord by Humiliation, and Prayer, and withal moved them to a liberal Contribution for the succor of these poor Souls. He sent also Master Samuel Morland as his Envoy to the King of France, and Duke of Savoy to mediate on their behalf. He wrote also to the King of Denmark, to the States of the United Provinces, and to the Evangelical Cantons of the Switzers, requesting all their Mediations in the behalf of these poor people.

May the Twenty sixth 1655, Master Morland set out on his journey, and June the First he came to the King of France at La Ferre, to whom he delivered the Lord Protectors Letters; wherein he solicited his Majesty to improve his power, and interest with the Duke, that the cruel Order of Gustaf might be recalled, and the poor people restored to their ancient liberties, and habitations. The King of France Three days after returned an answer to the Lord Protectors Letters, and Master Morland proceeded in his journey to the Court of Savoy, and arrived at Rivole, where the Court was, June 11. and demanded Audience as the Lord Protectors Envoy, which accordingly was granted: and at his appearing he made a Speech in the behalf of the poor people, and delivered the Lord Protectors Letters.

Madam Royal, the Dukes Mother answered, That she could not but extremely applaud the singular Charity of his Highness the Lord Protector towards their Subjects, whose condition had been presented to him so exceeding sad, and lamentable, as she perceived by Master Morlands discourse it was; yet withal she could not but extremely admire that malice should proceed so far as to clothe their fatherlike chastisements of their rebellious Subjects with so black a character, thereby to render them odious to all their neighboring Princes, and States with whom they desired to keep a good understanding, especially with so great and powerful a Prince as the Lord Protector. Adding that she doubted not but when the truth of all passages should be made known to him, he would rest satisfied with the Dukes proceedings. Yet for his Highness sake they would pardon their rebellious Subjects, and grant them such privileges, and graces, as should shew to the Lord Protector how great a respect they bore both to his Person, and Mediation: And withal Master Morland was requested to go to Turin, where by the Dukes Order he was entertained with all outward demonstrations of civility, and respect imaginable during his abode there.

Master Morland after a while pressed for his dispatch, and had it, and so, according to the Lord Protectors Order, he went to Geneva.

There was Collected in England and Wales towards the relief of these poor Souls, the full Sum of Thirty eight thousand, ninety seven pounds, seven shillings, and three pence, the greatest part whereof was at several times transmitted to them; and what remained, being about Nine thousand pounds, was put out to Interest, that so both the Principal, and the Improvement might be disposed of for their best advantage: And further to shew what effects the Lord Protectors intercession had, I find that presently after, the King of Sweden, the King of Denmark, the States of the United Provinces, the Prince Elector Palatine, the Elector of Brandenburg, the Duke of Wittenberg, and many other Protestant Princes Princes and States did either by their Letters to the Duke of Savoy, or otherwise, declare their deep resentment of the Bloody Massacre; especially the Landgrave of Hesse wrote most zealously in their behalf. They had also many Consolatory Letters written to them from sundry particular Churches, viz. From Frankfurt, Zurich, Hanau, Flushing, Middleburg, &c. and large Contributions according to their respective abilities. Divers Commissioners also were sent from England and Holland to joyn with those of the Evangelical Cantons for the procuring a well-grounded Peace for those poor People: But before they came, the Swiss Ambassador had concluded a Treaty with the French Ambassador; and betwixt them, they had hudled up a Peace, the woful effects whereof these poor People were quickly sensible of; and to this day they labor under heavy burdens laid upon their shoulders by their Popish Taskmasters: They forbid them all manner of traffick for their sustenance: They rob them of their Goods, and Estates: They drive them from their ancient Habitations, and force them to sell their Birth-right for a Mess of Pottage: They banish their Ministers, that the Shepherds being gone, they may the more easily devour them: They ravish their young Women, and Maidens: They murder the innocent as they pass along the High-ways upon their occasions: They continually mock and revile them, and threaten another Massacre, sevenfold more Bloody than the former: Through the malice and subtilty of their Popish Adversaries their Valleys are no other than a Dungeon, to which the Fort of La Torre serves as a Door, whereby at their pleasure they may let in a Troop of Murtherers utterly to destroy and extirpate those innocent People: And notwithstanding all those large supplies that have been sent them from England, and other States, yet so great are the necessities of those poor hungry Creatures, and so grievous are the oppressions of their Popish Adversaries, who lie in wait to bereave them of whatsoever is given them, that some of them are yet ready ever and anon to eat their own flesh for want of Bread: Their miseries are more sad, and grievous than can be expressed: They are dying, even whilst they live: When that which was collected for them is once spent, they must inevitably perish, unless the Lord in whose Hands are the Hearts of Princes, shall incline the Heart of their Prince to pity these his poor, harmless, and faithful Subjects, who are so far from thoughts of Rebellion, that could they but enjoy the freedom of their Consciences in peace, they would be the first that would be ready to sacrifice their lives for the good, and safety of his Royal Highness.

How long Lord, Holy, just, and true, &c. Rev. 6. 10.

If any desire to see a fuller account of these things, together with the Letters and Transactions about them, they may find them fully and faithfully set down by Master Samuel Morland in his History of the Evangelical Churches in the Valleys of Piemont.

CHAR. XLVII

A brief Description of Piemont, and the Valleys thereof.

Piemont is so called, because it is situated à pied montain, or at the Feet of the Alps which separate Italy from France: It's but a little spot of earth, yet very pleasant, and of incredible fruitfulness! It's bounded on the East with Milan, Monferrat, and the Commonwealth of Genoa: On the South is the Mediterranean Sea: On the West and North part, it hath the Alps for a Bulwark, by which it is separated on the West side from Provence, and Dauphiné, and on the North from Savoy; and the Country of Valley. It's almost all covered with high Mountains, and watered with Four great Rivers, viz. Po, Tanaro, Stura, and Dora, besides which, there are about Twenty eight Rivers more great and small, which render it exceeding fruitful in Cattel, Wine, Corn, Hay, Nuts, and many other fruits in great abundance.

The principal Valleys are, on the North part those Two, Aosta, and Susa; on the South side Stura, and Some others: And in the Midland, Lucerna, Angrogna, Roccapiatta, Pramol, Perosa, and Saint Martino. The Valley of Fraxelle hath been, and still is a part of Dauphiné as far as La Capella, which is situated at the lower end thereof, and divides it from Perosa; which was the ordinary passage of the French Armies into Italy.

These Valleys, especially that of Angrogna, Pramol, and Saint Martino are strongly fortified by nature, by reason of their many difficult passages through Rocks and Mountains: As if from the beginning it had been designed by the all-wise God to be as a Cabinet, wherein he would keep some rare Jewels.

Those Valleys of Piemont which have been for some hundreds of years inhabited by the Waldenses, are Lucerna, Perosa, and Saint Martino. Lucerna contains Fifteen Miles in length: The highest Communalities thereof, viz. Bobo, Villanova, and La Torre are for the greatest part Mountains: But Lucerna, Saint Giovanni, Penile, Campiglione, and Garcigliana, though they have both on the North and South side a little of the Mountains, yet they extend themselves into a very good Plain.

Angrogna is but a little Valley on the North side of Lucerna, as also Arvignone and Vallon, which are on the South side of Lucerna wholly within the Mountains: So is also Roccapiatta, and Pramol, which are enclosed between the Valleys of Lucerna and Perosa.

The Communnality of La Torre took its name from an high Tower which stood upon a little Hill near Bourg: But Francis the First, King of France, considering how prejudicial it might be to the affairs and interest of France, and the safety of Pignorole, he caused it to be demolished: But the Duke of Savoy rebuilt it, Anno 1652. which afterwards served as a Slaughter-house of many innocent Souls.

Bricheras, which is joyned to the Valley of Lucerna, is on the East of Angrogna, and Saint Giovanni, and on the South of Roccapiatta, almost all in the Plain.

Perosa, and Saint Martino are on the North of Lucerna, Angrogna, and Roccapiatta, situated in such sort that the Valley of Perosa is at the lower end, and on the East are the Valleys of Saint Martino, and Pragela.

The Valley of Perosa is about Six Miles long; and its distributed, part in the Mountains, and part in the Plains, and very fruitful Hills. At the lower end of it are the Communalities of Porte, Saint Germano, and Villaro: In the middle, Pinachia, and in the higher part that of Perosa, where is the City and Citadel of Perosa, whence the Valley takes its name.

The Valley of Saint Martino is Eight Miles in length, on the West of the Valley of Perosa, included between the Valleys of Lucerna, and Clusone, in the highest part of the Alps, which border upon the Valley of Queyras, containing Eleven Communalities; viz. Rioclarèt, Faet, Rodorigo, Salsa, Macel, Manèglia, Chabrans, Traverses, Bovile, and Saint Martino; which gives the name to this Valley. This indeed is the poorest, yet the strongest of all by reason of its situation.

In these Valleys before the late horrid Massacre 1655. there were Fourteen Churches of the Protestants which composed Two Classes, or Colloques, and those Two Classes, One Synod for their Ecclesiastical Government. The one was the Colloque of Lucerna consisting of the Churches of Saint Giovanni, La Torre, Villaro, Bobi, Rorata, and Angrogna, to which was annexed that of Roccapiatta, which is between the Valley of Lucerna, and Perosa, situated upon those little Hills which separate the Two Valleys.

The other was the Colloque of the Valley of Perosa, and Saint Martino, containing Four Churches in the Valley of Perosa, viz. Villaro, Saint Germano, which made but one Church, Pinachia, La Capella, and Pramob in the Valley of Saint Martino; were Three Churches, viz. Villa Secca, Manèglia, Prasè.

The Church of Saint Giovanni contains within it a very fair Plain, and little Hills, very fruitful, and abounding with Corn, Vines, Chestnuts, Figs, Olives, and other Fruits, but it wants Pastures, and Woods, so that they have not many Cattle, but only some Oxen to till the ground, and to carry their Wine to Turin, and other places to sell. This Church hath annexed unto it Lucerna, Lucernetta, the Vineyards of Lucerna, Fenile, Bubiana, and Bricheras. In the City of Lucerna the third part of the Inhabitants were Protestants. In Lucernetta, and the Vineyard of Lucerna, almost all the Inhabitants professed the Reformed Religion time out of mind.

Fenile is lower on the other side of the River Pelice towards the South, being a more fat and fertile soil than any place in St. Giovanni, in all sorts of Fruit and Grain.

Bubiana, as to the Plain, is like to Fenile, and nearly adjoining to it: But the Protestants have often been driven out of it, so that what they possessed was mostly in the Hills, where they have little Corn, and Wine, but abundance of Chestnuts: So that the Inhabitants, which were about Fifty Families, were generally poor, living by their hard labor, and by their profit which they made of Wood, which they carried to sell to the Towns of Bubiana, and Lucerna.

The Hills of Bricheras, where there have been always Protestant Families, are like those of Saint Giovanni.

The Church of La Torre is the same for situation and quality with that of Saint Giovanni, containing one Plain, where is the Town of La Torre, and Hills adorned with the same kind of Fruits as those of Saint Giovanni.

The Church of Villaro adjoins to that of La Torre, but is a little higher towards Dauphine, containing a little Plain where is the Town, and the Hills adorned with Vines, and Chestnuts.

The

A brief Description of Piedmont.

The Church of Bobia is near to that of Villaro, being a little higher towards the Mountain on the West, but as fertile as that of Villaro; and being environed with many Mountains, and having fat Pastures, the Inhabitants had many Oxen, Kine, and smaller Cattle, together with Milk and Wool in abundance; as also they had many Chestnuts, which being cleansed, and dried, they sold, or exchanged for other Commodities.

The Church of Rorata is a little Valley, situated on the other side of the River Pelice, on the West of Lucerna, being bounded by the Mountains of Villaro; it abounds in Pastures, and is very fruitful, especially in Chestnuts.

The Church of Angrogna is North-West to that of Saint Giovanni, towards Perosa, in a Mountainous Country; but fruitful in Chestnuts, Corn, and Pasture, environed with fruitful Mountains, which yielded good Pastures in the Summer season.

The Church of Roccapiatta contains Four parcels, viz. that of Roccapiatta, St. Bartholomeo, Perustine, and La Inverso delle Porte. In these Three latter there grew abundance of rich Wines, Chestnuts, and other good Fruits. In Roccapiatta they have Corn, Pasture, and Fruits, but no Wine.

The Church of Villaro, and St. Germano is situated in the lowest part of Perosa, about a Mile from Pignorolio: The West and North part of Villaro on this side the River Clusone, belong to the King of France, and St. Germano to the Duke of Savoy on the other side of the said River, which running through the whole length of the said Valley, separates the Kings Territories from those of the Dukes. These two places of Villaro, and St. Germano contain a little Plain on both sides the River, the rest is in Hills, yielding Corn, Wine, and Fruits.

The Church of Pinachia is within the French Dominions, adjoyning on the West part to that of Villaro, and contains a fair, and beautiful Plain, on the North side fenced with pleasant Hills: On the West is the Town, and Fort of Perosa; on the South, the River Clusone, and some Hills, but scarce any Plain at all. It abounds with Corn, Wine, Nuts, Grass, and other Fruits.

The Church of La Capella is on the West of that of Pinachia in the upper end of the Valley of Perosa; on the West it joyns to the Valley of Pragela (which belongs to the King of France): On the East to the Citadel of Perosa: It hath several very fruitful Hills in it. It hath annexed to it Pomare, and Inverso del Perosa, and some other small Villages, called Le Méan, making a little Communalty at the foot of the Valley of Pragela.

The Church of Pramol is situated on a Mountain between the Valleys of Lucerna, and Perosa, at the feet whereof grow a few Vines, and good Fruits: In the highest part is Corn, and much Wood, and Pasture ground.

The Church of Villa Secca is at the lowest part of the Valley of St. Martino; where there is almost no Plain but where the River Germanasco takes its course; The Hills which lie South from the said River are very cold, so that there grow no Vines: But those on the North which lie open to the South Sun are hot, and so have many Vines. In general, its tolerably fruitful in Corn, Fruits, and Pasture.

The Church of Maneglia which is on the West part of Villa Secca, comprehends Three little Communalties, viz. Maneglia, Machel, and Salsa: All are in a Mountainous place, but exceeding fruitful in Corn, Pasture, &c. except only in the highest parts thereof.

The Church of Prali is situated in the uppermost part of the Valley of Saint Martino, and contains Two Communalties, viz. Prali, and Rodoret, bounded on the South with the Alps, and the Valley of Lucerna; On the West by the Valley Queyras in Dauphine; And on the North by the Valley of Pragela: Here is nothing but Hay and Grass.

A brief Description of Piemont.

Generally in all these Churches (except on the tops of the Mountains) there are plenty of Fruits, especially of Chestnuts, and in some places there are vast spaces of Ground yielding almost nothing else: As in the little Hills of Bubiana, and all along the Valley of Lucerna, and in the South parts of the Valley of Perosa: So that the Inhabitants in those places dry, and cleanse great quantities of them, part whereof they keep for their own use, and the rest they sell, or exchange for Corn, and that, quantity for quantity, with the Inhabitants of the Plaine, it being a great part of their food in Piemont. They also dry these Nuts in an Oven, or on a Kilne, and make thereof an excellent sort of Bisquet, which they first string as they do their Beades, and so hang them up in a moist place the better to preserve them. These they frequently make use of instead of Maqueroons, and such Sweet-meats.

A Relation of the Distressed State of the Church of Christ, professing the Protestant Religion in the Great Dukedom of Lithuania;

Presented to the view of all Compassionate Christians.

THE Fatal and Bloody Tragedy, which, with a great deal of Confusion, hath been acted on the Theatre of Europe, near upon Forty years, or upwards, having dashed most potent Kingdoms, Nations, and Provinces, one against another, hath at last (with more severity, because later) reached our Sarmatian Climate, and therein that most flourishing Kingdom of Poland, but especially the Great Dukedom of Lithuania, and the Provinces belonging thereunto; where in it hath so ruined, and destroyed many magnificent, and populous Cities, lesser Towns, and Villages without number; that there are not so much, as any Marks left, where they stood before.

This is now the Twelfth Year, since the highest, and most Righteous Judge of all unrighteous Nations, having banished Peace from our Country, hath, in his fierce anger, called for many perfidious, cruel, swift, and mighty Nations, to execute his Judgments against us. And these, not having been in the least provoked by us, but only thirsting after our Fortunes, and Blood, have washed their cruel Hands therein, and are not satisfied therewith, but to the spoiling of the Goods have added most exquisite torments upon the Bodies of the true Professors of Christianity.

In the Year 1648. when the first Rebellion of the Cossacks broke forth, to whom the Tartarians readily did associate themselves, the Nobility was sought out, with much diligence, by the furious Rebels, to be slaughtered; And all such, as were not of the Greek Religion, were most ignominiously put to death, without any distinction; where were many numerous Congregations of the Reformed Protestants, whose Ministers were not spared also.

And the Cruelty of the furious Cossacks was so barbarous, that the Tartars themselves (though their Associates) would not be guilty of so much innocent Blood; But compassionately did rescue as many, as they could, out of their Hands.

Many had their Skins pulled over their Ears, whilst they were alive. Others had their Hands, and Feet, cut off. Some had their Bowels taken out, alive. Others had their Shin-bones bored thorough. To some they poured melted Lead in at the Wounds, which they made in their Heads, or Bodies. Their Eyes were plucked out: There is no numbering of those that were hanged. And it was accounted a great Mercy, if any had his Head cut off with a Sword, or if they were sent away as perpetual Slaves to the Turk. Poor Parents, and Husbands, were forced to look on, whilst their Wives, and Daughters were ravished.

This was the miserable condition of our Country, and Church, for several Years together, during the Civil Wars. But afterwards, when we all began to hope for better things, there fell a new, and more strange Calamity upon us, when we were almost consumed before. For the perfidious Moscovite, having taking notice of the distraction, and devastation, which by the just Hand of God, befell us; And that the strength of Lithuania was, by continual Intestine Wars, decayed, he presently took an opportunity to invade it; and to that effect, having found out some Pretenses, he came with an Army of Two hundred thousand Men, and associated to himself Sixty thousand of the Rebellious Cossacks; who carried all before them, like a Flood, spoiling, burning, destroying all that they met with, sacking the strong Holds, and Cities, not leaving one Corner in all Lithuania unsearched. Never was greater Tyranny committed in those Parts before. There was no regard of Tears, and Lamentations: No Pity shewed to yielding Persons; all, without discretion, were cut to pieces. The common Multitude were slaughtered out of hand; But the Gentry, and Nobility were carried away; and upon deliberation, were either hanged, or burnt alive. Every Corner being filled with Massacres, made the Blood run, like Streams, through the Streets of Towns, and Cities.

But the condition of the Ministers of Christ was most miserable; For as many, as were taken, were, with most exquisite Torments, put to several kinds of death.

Adrian Chylinsky, a Man most conspicuous both for his old Age, as also for his Piety, and Learning, whereby he deserved eminently of the Church of Christ, being surprized at his own House, had his Hands and Legs tied together, and then rosted alive, leisurely by degrees, there being but some Chips, and Straw, gathered about him. Two of the same Name, a Father, and a Son, called Smolsky, both Ministers of Christ, near Vilna, the chiefest City in Lithuania, had their Heads most cruelly sawed off with a Sickle. Another Minister, in a Town called Holowczyn, whose Name was Slawinski, had a new Torment put upon him: For they cut him by pieces, so long as he lived. Many other Ministers were amongst the high Mountains exposed bound, and naked, to the Snow, and extream cold Air; which made their noble Souls forsake their miserable Tabernacles: And by this kind of death, this last Winter, there were destroyed about Fifteen hundred innocent Souls; who, seeking for shelter, were in their flight over-taken. Those, that were most healthy, or strong, were sent away to be made Slaves; but others were either slay'd alive, or cut into pieces. The number of those, that were thus miserably put to death, as also the several kinds of Torments, which poor innocent Creatures were put to, no History can describe.

In this juncture of Affairs, all the Ministers of Christ were forced to forsake their Dwelling-places. And there is above Forty, of whom it is not known, what kind of death they suffered: But that they are dead, is certain; because they are not found, nor were they carried into Captivity. The Churches, for the most part, as far as the Enemy could reach, were destroyed by Fire: All the Bells were carried away; so that there are but few left in the whole Dukedom. The desolate Fields, and Water only were left, as Witnesses of the insolency of a barbarous Enemy; For all Dwelling-places, and Woods were pulled, and cut down, and burnt to Ashes.

One would think, that the Land had been by this time chastised sufficiently, and that the sharp Rod of our Correction should have been broken: But God was not yet pleased to put a period to our Calamities; For every year our Country had a New Enemy raised upon it, and so that little, which the former had left, the succeeding Enemy devoured: For in the Year 1655. the multitude of our Enemies was augmented, by the coming of the Swede; whose Armies, by reason of the vicinity of these Three Provinces, Borussia, Curland, and Liesland, which they had in their power, have, for the space of Five years, afflicted our Country also. And, without any respect of the Protestant Religion, they used us as Enemies: And, by their coming into the Country, they made us liable to be be more hated by those of the Roman Religion, than before; although after that all the Polish Armies had forsaken their King, and that His Sacred Royal Majesty had withdrawn himself out of his Kingdom, by reason of the power of the Enemies, who pressed all places, and being absent for a very long time in Silesia; yet the Lithuanian Churches, all that time, remained still constant, and faithful to their Gracious King.

All this came upon us, undoubtedly, because of the Sins of our Country; yet the Wrath of God did still burn against us; For, a while after, he did send another Enemy, out of another Corner, to wit, the Prince of Transylvania; in whose Army, besides the Hungarians, and Transylvanians, there were Moldavians, Valachians, Servians, and other Eastern barbarous Nations; who came with great hopes, that they should be enriched with our Fortunes; and Goods.

This brought a new Calamity upon that which remained; For they made havock of all, wasted, and destroyed all without distinction. The Churches, that remained, they robbed; The Houses they rifled, and burnt; The People were driven into Banishment; And those that could not fly, were murdered.

It cannot be sufficiently lamented, much less uttered, what in such long continuance of our troubles, amongst so many Eastern, Western, Northern, and other Enemies, our Native Country, the Church, and every Member thereof, have suffered. The dead, and the unborn, were then accounted blessed: The weaker Sex was reputed as the most Infortunate; For we have seen many Illustrious, and Noble Families so exhausted, and brought to extremity; that they have not had Bread to eat. We have seen Noble Men, and Matrons, Virgins, and Children of great Parentage, mancipated under the pleasure and servitude of the Muscovians, Tartarians, Cossacks, and others; under which both they, and many Ministers of the Gospel to this day do groan heavily.

In consideration of those extremities, which indeed are extraordinary, we cannot but adore the just Judgments of God thus poured upon us by reason of our Sins, and deplore our sad condition: And the more by reason of the small hopes of Restitution, or deliverance from such a Devastation. For, though we are brought very low already, having been made subject to many Waitings, great Terrours, and Troubles, as having had Death before our Eyes continually; yet there is still matter of new Troubles at home, especially to those, that desire to serve God in simplicity, and purity: To this particularly one Calamity followeth another, as the Waves, in a tempestuous Sea, come one upon another.

Our very Neighbors do hate, and persecute the Remnant of us still, with as much eagerness, as our foreign Enemies did: They deprive us of our Churches yet remaining: Those Lands which were given for the maintenance of Ministers, and Schools, they give away, as if they had been their own: Our Ministers are banished; and such as remain, are beaten and misused; the threatnings of our total Exilement are increased. In a word, all the Reformed Protestants are accounted as the Off-scouring of the World, and the original cause of all the troubles, which are hitherto befallen to the Country. Hence it is, that they are hated, abused, threatened more and more: And whatsoever may be found odious amongst Men, all that is put upon them, for to make their calamities the greater.

We do not question, but that all that shall read, or hear of these things, and have the least spark of Christian Charity left in their Hearts; or take to heart the affliction of Joseph, will take Compassion on us being affected with the truth of that Worship, Doctrine, and Godliness which did shine amongst us, even in the midst of our troubles.

For our parts, we have no other recourse, but to the goodness of our God, and the sympathie of the Members of his Church; and therefore following the practice of the Apostles of Christ, and the example of the Churches in the

Palatinate,

Palatinate, Bohemia, and others; which being in the same condition, some few years ago, implored the aid of their Fellow-Members of the Reformed Protestant Church; we do likewise make our recourse to your Goodness and Charity. For we are perswaded, that God hath in these Times made these Kingdoms, and Churches more happy and flourishing, then others; that they might be a place for refuge, and a Port of safety for those, that suffer Ship-wrack for the Name of Jesus elsewhere.

Look therefore, we beseech you, upon us, as Objects of Pity; and for the Love of God, for the sacred bonds of Unity in Christ Jesus, stretch forth your Hands, that the Vineyard of the Lord may not be utterly destroyed. Send suitable comforts to those that are comfortless; strengthens the hands of the feeble; support the weak; supply the wants of the needy with your liberality; not doubting, but that the Lord, who is the rewarder of all good deeds, and who takes all the works of Charity, bestowed upon the Members of his Militant Church, as if they had been bestowed upon himself, will be your sufficient reward, and at the Great day of Accounts will put you in mind of such Works for your eternal comfort. These are the Prayers, and desires of those; who in the Name of all the Lithuanian Churches, have sent their Messenger to you, who solicits this in their Name, as having been an Eye-witness, in many places, of their distressed condition, and partaker of their Evils.

John de Kraino Krainski, Minister of Gods Word, and the Messenger of the Churches,

Of the late Persecution of the Church of Christ in Poland, Anno Christi 1656.

THE All-wise and holy God, whose ways of Providence are always Righteous, though often secret, and unsearchable, hath made it the constant lot, and portion of his people in this world to follow his Son in bearing his Cross, and suffering Persecutions. For they that are born after the flesh, do always persecute them that are born after the spirit. But scarcely have any sort of the Churches Enemies more clearly followed the pernicious way of Cain herein, than hath that Antichristian Faction of Rome, That Mother of Harlots and Abominations; whose Garments are died red with the Blood of Saints, which they have always cruelly shed, and made themselves drunk with. And amongst those chosen and faithful witnesses, the Lord seemeth very signally to have raised up those Christians, who (though dispersed in divers Countries) have been commonly known by the name of Waldenses, who for some Centuries of years have lived amongst their Enemies as Lambs amongst Wolves, to bear their testimonies to the Truths of Christ; against the Apostasies, and Blasphemies of Rome; For which they have been killed all the day long, and accounted as Sheep for the slaughter.

One part of this little flock, and remnant which the Lord hath left, and reserved, are scattered partly in the Valleys of Piemont, of whose Tragical sufferings you have had a faithful account in the precedent Chapter: The other part of this poor, but precious remnant, have been dispersed in the Kingdoms of Bohemia, and Poland, whose sufferings, together with the Lords signal Providences about them, are now to be spoken of, as they have been related to the Lord Protector O. C. and the State here by Two godly Persons delegated by those persecuted Churches, which are now the sad Monuments of their Enemies rage, and of the Lords sparing mercy.

These sometime flourishing Churches were by degrees worn out by the constant underminings, and open outrages of the Antichristian party; Being first driven out of Bohemia into Poland: And then after their taking root, and spreading in Poland into a numerous company, they were forced out of their chiefest Cities there, and at last by the Jesuited and enraged Popish Army, were persecuted in their few hiding places with fire and Sword.

Their Ministers were tortured to death by most exquisite, and unheard of Barbarism, by cutting out of the Tongues of some, pulling out the Eyes, and cruelly mangling the Bodies of others. Yet did not their rage and brutish cruelty reach only to the Ministers, but to private Persons also; yea, even to Women, and to young Children, whose Heads they cut off, and laid them at their dead Mothers Breasts.

Nay their rage brake out, not only against the living (nor one of whom they spared that fell into their Hands) but also against the dead, plucking the Bodies of Honorable Persons, and others out of their graves, tearing them to pieces, and exposing them to publick scorn.

But the chiefest eye-fore, and object of their fury was the City of Lesna, which after plundering and murdering of all whom they found therein, they burned to ashes, and laid it in the rubbish: Only the Lord in mercy having alarm'd the City by the report of their Enemies approach, the greatest part of the Inhabitants (being Three Famous Churches) saved themselves by flight, and are now wandering up and down in Silesia, the Marquisate of Brandenburg, Lusatia, and Hungary, poor, destitute, afflicted, and naked; the relation whereof you have in this ensuing Narrative written in Latin by some of themselves; and called Lesna Excidium.

The History of the destruction of Lesna faithfully related:

Lesna*, a City of Great Poland, almost Thirty Years ago began to be Famous both far and near; But now being suddenly and utterly razed hath nothing left beside the Name and Fame thereof. For the fuller discovery of this business from the beginning, we must briefly relate the original and progress of this Town.

When above Seven hundred Years ago, Mieczislaus, then Duke of Poland, took to Wife the Daughter of Boleslaus Duke of Bohemia, and together with her received the Christian Faith, it happened that among those of the Bohemian Nobility that accompanied him, there was one Peter de Bernstein, whom, because he was a Person endowed with many Vertues, Mieczislaus was willing to detain him in Poland, and to that end bestowed upon him rich possessions, the chief whereof was a Village called Leszyna, (i. e. a Grove of Hasle-trees) upon the very confines of the lower Silesia, being situate Twelve Miles from Wratislavia, Five from Glogaw, and Ten from Posnania. From this place therefore of his residence, Peter de Bernstein taking the rise of his denomination, according to the custom of the Nation, he and all his Posterity were called Leszcynii, and were afterwards admitted to all sorts of Dignities in the Realm; so that of this Family there were never wanting some or other that were Captains, Governors of Castles, Palatines, Marshals, Chancellors, Bishops, or Arch-Bishops, even to this day: And besides this, for their noble management of affairs in several Embassies to the Roman Emperor, they were adorned with the title of Earls of the Empire, which they still enjoy. But Leszcyna it self begun by little and little to change its name, and by contraction was called Lessna, and their neighbor Germans called it Lissa. This Village, something above One hundred of Years ago had the dignity and title of a Market Town granted to it by the Famous King Sigismund, and Tradefmen were invited hither out of the neighboring Silesia, and so the use of the German Tongue was brought in together with them.

As for Religion, it was reformed in Lesna about the same time, by the most illustrious Count Andrew, Palatine of Bernstein, according to the Rites of the Bohemian Confession, which it hath retained to this day, and became as it were the Metropolis of the Churches of that Confession, throughout all the greater Poland. And when, after the Year 1620. a very sharp persecution was raised against the Professors of the Gospel in Bohemia, and not long after the Ministers and Nobility were banished, they were fain to seek refuge in Poland, whom that most pious Noble Man, the Lord Raphael de Lesna, Palatine of Belfe, received under his protection, appointing Lesna, Wlodawa, and Baranovia for their places of refuge. But for as much as the greater part did seat themselves at Lesna because of the nearness thereof, and not long after a far greater company flocked thither thither out of Silesia (for there also the butchery of Souls grew wonderful fierce, in the Years 1628. and 1629.) it came to pass that Lesna, by the addition of many Streets, grew into a large City, having Three Market places, Four Churches, a large School, above Twenty Streets, One thousand six hundred Houses, Two thousand Freemen of the City, and abundance of other company. There was built also a very fair Church for the service of God according to the Rites of the Augustane Confession, which had over it Three Pastors, Learned Men; and a School for the Mother tongue with some School-masters, besides the Free-School, which had a Learned Man of the forementioned Confession appointed over it, by the Title of Prorector.

The Citizens also having ordered themselves according to the best policy they could, there were found out handsome ways for a publick revenue that made no noise, and were little felt, and without any Mans damage or burden, so that they were able for some Years to maintain Workmen for the compassing of the City about with a Bulwark and Trench, and for the building of Gates with Walls and fair Turrets: And lastly, there was built a very fair Court-house in the middle of the Market place of the old City; There was scarce the like in all Great Poland, except at Poznanis. In a word, Civility, Trading, Merchandize (for all things were here bought and sold) and Religion did so flourish here, that this City did not come behind any City in Poland for its admirable pleasantness. All this was matter of joy, not only to those pious Christians that were scattered out of several places for the Gospels sake, and here gathered together under the protection of God, but to others also that came hither from all parts, as strangers: But it galled the Enemies of the Gospel extremely, so that it made them leave no design unassayed for the overthrow of this City of refuge for the godly.

At the first (Anno 1628, and 1629.) they made use of several accusations and slanders to King Sigismund the Third, suggesting to him that it was a confluence of all sorts of Men that were Enemies and Traytors to his Majesty: That it was good to nip them in the Bud, &c. But through the prudence of that great Senator, the Lord of the place, whose wisdom went beyond their envy, and who knew well enough how to counter-work all malicious projects of that kind, all those their Battering-rams were at that time used in vain.

But, Anno 1653. after that the Svedes were broken by the Emperors Army in Germany, and were driven out of Silesia, new plots were hatched at Glogau to send out One or Two of the Emperors Regiments, who should suddenly invade Lesna, sack the Town, and put the Inhabitants to the Sword, or at least scatter them. But it pleased God so to order it, that this plot was discovered by some of themselves Two days before the appointed time, and so vanished into smoak, though the smoak of their devices did not yet cease to rise. For after the death of the most illustrious Prince Palatine of Besse, when his Estate was divided amongst his Sons and Heirs, and the County of Lesna fell to the illustrious Lord Boguslaus, his Third Son, then newly returned from travelling, the Plotters were not wanting so to lie in wait to insnare this candidate of great Wisdom and Vertue, that after they had wearied him for some years with the promises of Honors, (unto which there was no Door of entrance but by entertaining the Roman Catholick Religion) at last they enticed him to profess Popery. But however they heaped many Honors upon him, procuring him some Captainships, afterwards the Generalship of Great Poland, and lastly the Arch-Treasurership of the Realm, yet could they not procure his hatred of the Professors of the Gospel, and the dissipation of his Subjects, which was the thing they hoped for: But he still preserved intire to his Lesna those privileges both Civil and Religious, which his Father, of blessed memory, had promised, offered, or confirmed to them. They attempted therefore this other device: The Bishop of Poznanis ventured to redemand the old Parish Church, because it was of ancient foundation, and pretended that it might not any longer be left to the use of Heretics.

The Lord Treasurer answered, That his Grandfather (Andrew Palatine of Brenstein) had built another Church for the Catholicks (whose number was very small in the Town, scarce ever above Three or Four Citizens) to exercise their Religion in, and endowed it with revenues to that purpose, that the greater number of Citizens might enjoy the greater Church. But all was in vain, though he doubled the maintenance of the Roman Parish Priest: For Anno 1652. they brought the Lord Count before the Tribunal of the Realm, where the cause must needs go against him, the very same Persons being Accusers, Witnesses, and Judges, yet he obtained that this Church should not suddenly be taken away from his Subjects the Inhabitants of old Lesna, until they had built themselves a new one. This building they presently set about with the help of forreign Churches: (according as they were in a capacity to help, things being every where in confusion) But when the Adversaries saw that it went on apace, and that this was like to be bigger than the other (for so great now was the multitude of Citizens of this Confession, that the old Church was not able to contain them) they began again to mutter and threaten, That this might not be endured, that the Hereticks should have a bigger Church than the Catholicks; That they did not build this also for the Catholicks, &c.

At length the irruption of the Swedes into Poland (Anno 1655.) gave them the long wished for occasion of oppressing and rooting out, not only the Lesnians, but also all the Professors of the Gospel (or as they were wont to be called, the Dissenters from the Roman Religion) throughout Poland. For although the Papists themselves had transacted with the Swedes at their coming out of Pomerania (in the agreement of Uscia) and had delivered to them expressly and by Name the chief Cities, Poznan, Kalisch, Fraustat, Meseritz, and Lesna, and the rest, after some weak resistance, had yielded themselves up to the Swedes, yet while the King of Sweden was slowly, and as it proved, dangerously busied in Prussia, they took counsel together for the resuming of their Arms, to fight for the liberty of their Country, and the Catholic Religion (as they call it) to drive the Swedes out of the Country, and to root out all the Dissenters in gross.

That this their purpose might make the quicker progress, and be set on the more strongly, there were Jesuits and Monks sent out every way, to intimate these things to the multitude, and to encourage them to so glorious an undertaking, compelling those that were slow with the Thunderbolt of Excommunication, and promising the relaxation of the pains of Purgatory, and eternal rewards to them that were forward. To this end King Casimir being recalled out of Silesia, they commanded the Nobility to flock to him, and to give the King of Sweden a meeting in his return out of Borussia. The Communalry also they stirred up against the Professors of the Gospel, making themselves their furious Leaders; And such was their success, that in Lower Poland a great number of Families (it is not yet known how many, because the furious tumult still continues) almost within the compass of a moneth (in February and March) were miserably Butchered; Men and Women, young and old being murdered without distinction, all, save such as could escape in the neighboring parts of Hungary, and so save their lives by flight. But the Nobility of the greater Poland, most of them having retired themselves into Silesia, began there to gather themselves into small companies, in the beginning of April, and to break forth; By whose coming, the rest being encouraged, made a great slaughter of the Swedes that were garrison'd in the small Towns, so that General Muller was fain to go forth with an Army of Swedes to restrain them.

As for Lesna, the Hereditary Lord thereof, the Treasurer of the Kingdom, was gone into Borussia to salute the King of Sweden, some way to take care for the safety of his Country: But about the beginning of April he returned to Lesna without seeing him, the King then being full of action, and ranging up and down. This business procured much more envy both to himself and the City, as if he had plotted with the Swedes against his Country, having never been true and faithful either to the Church or his Country: Therefore they breathed out flames, and belched out threats so much the more fiercely both against him and his City. However there were not wanting such as by private messages gave him hope of pardon, if he would but withdraw himself from them; as afterwards he did: But the Enemies prepared themselves to destroy that so populous a City by force (if they could) or else by flames, furnishing themselves with many sorts of weapons for that purpose.

Of this doing although the Inhabitants of Lesna had notice by several messengers, yet a fatal security prevailed with them to think that there was no fear of such an Enemy as was not furnished either with Infantry or Artillery for such a design. Upon Easter day a party of Poles broke into some territories (belonging to an eminent Professor of the Gospel) near Lesna; For whom they made diligent search, but finding that he was from home (for he had retired himself to Lesna for Religion sake) they plundered all his movable Goods, and took his Servant (Martin Maltz, a Bohemian) and hanging a great stone about his neck, threw him into the River that ran by, and so drowned him.

On the Third Holy day in Easter the report was very hot that the Swedes had lost all, and that the King was slain: Upon which account, when the Lord Treasurer did betake himself to Wratistavia, in Silesia, the Citizens of Lesna were something afraid, although the Commanders of the Swedes that were there in Garrison (being Three colours of Horse) did encourage them; As did also the Administrator of the City and County of Lesna, who requiring a new the Oath of fidelity from the Citizens, did promise them to stay with them, and bid them be of good courage. Being lifted up with this hope, and drawn on with the promises of new Auxiliary Forces to come very suddenly to them, they promised themselves all manner of security, so that no Man took any care to get out of the way, or to carry any thing of his Goods to a safer place: yet they kept strong guards night and day, sometimes the third part of the Citizens, and sometimes half being upon duty. The Swedish Horse also ever and anon made excursions to see what the Enemy was a doing, and whether they were near. But they never brought back any other news, but that there were no footsteps or signs of any Enemy appearing: Yea, even that very day in which the Poles came in the afternoon, the Swedes returned with good booty, but not a word of the Enemy.

But about Three days after, upon Thursday, April the 17. an Army of the Polonian Nobility, mixed with a rout of Peasants, shewed themselves unexpectedly out of the Woods, and anon they drew forth into the open Field, and set themselves within sight of the City, about Five or Six Furlongs from the Suburbs. When this was perceived, the Alarm was given, and the Citizens hasten to their Arms, and placed themselves on the Walls; yet not knowing who they were, and with what intent they came, and wondering much, why, according to the custom, they did not send forth a Trumpeter. (For that which they did bruit abroad afterwards, and many perhaps believed, that the Lesnians gave the occasion of hostility by killing their Trumpeter, is just nothing: Heaven and Earth will bear witness that this was devised merely to belour over the hainousness of the fact :) At length they begin their work with firing a Brick kiln, that stood not far from the Suburbs. Then the Swedish Trumpeters (about One hundred and fifty in number) which were already detached and gone out of the City, going a little farther, encountered with the Enemy in little skirmishes, for the space of Two hours, in which many of the Poles and some of the Swedes were slain. But while the Swedes were earnest with the Citizens for some help, as it were to defend the Suburbs from further burning, some were drawn forth (about Seventy of the younger Citizens) who seeing themselves rashly and confusedly among the Horsemen, which when they saw, they feigned a flight, returning towards the Wood: But as soon as they perceived perceived that they had drawn them far enough from the Walls, they wheeled about, some fetching a compass to come behind the Lesnians, and so to get between them and home, and the rest returning straight upon them, fell on in a full Body. The Swedish Horse when they saw this, turned their backs, leaving the Foot to the mercy of the Enemy; But the Poles followed them so close at heels, that Two Colours (about Four hundred Men) passed through the Suburbs to the very Gate, and wanted but little of entering the City it self with them, had not some good confident Fellow, ventured to step in between, and bar the Gate against them, while others of the Citizens sent a shower of Bullets among them, and so beat them back: So the Poles being glad to stop, yea, and retire (just at Sun-set) set fire on the outward parts of the Suburbs, and burnt some Granaries and Wind-mills, thereby making the whole night light to us; while themselves returned through the Wood to Oseczno, which the Germans call Storcknest. The City being thus filled with fear, spent the whole night without sleep; The Men in watching upon the Walls, and the Women in gathering themselves together in the Market places and Church-Yards, and other open places, and there wearying Heaven with Psalms and Prayers to God.

When the morning came, and no Enemy appeared, the Citizens went forth and fetched in the slain to bury them; among whom were found about Forty Citizens; but above a Hundred of the Poles, and among them their chief Commander himself, Cresky, who formerly had taken Pay under the Swedish General Banier, and was accounted more expert than the rest: In the mean time it was hotly reported that the Administrator of the Country and many of his Retinue were wanting and gone; whereupon the courage of the Citizens began to fail, and they went to the Senate, to desire leave to send away their Wives and Children, that if the Enemy should come again they might be the more courageous in defending themselves, not being daunted with the out-crys and tears of the Women. Some dissuaded them with good reasons, saying, That those that should be sent forth under pretence of convoying the rest in safety, would not return again, and so the rest of the Citizens should be left in greater fears; That the Spartans of old were wont to take their Wives and Children to the War with them, that having them in their Eyes, they might fight the more stoutly for their safety. But all was in vain, though the Swedish Commanders also endeavored to hinder the flight of the richer sort, which they could not do, being overcome with the crys of the multitude. There were some Ecclesiasticks also who desired leave to depart for a few days, because that the Antichristian fury was bent chiefly against them: But the Senate left it to their consciences, whether in such a case they could leave the people then when they would most need instruction and comfort; especially if wounded and dying. But the others persisted in their importunity, and there went out before Noon about Three hundred Waggon, which were all that could be got in the City.

After this there followed some quietness, with hopes that the Enemy would return no more, having found by experience how well able the Lesnians were to defend themselves and theirs; and perhaps they had never returned indeed (as it was known afterwards) had they not been encouraged by that flight of the Citizens: For Two days after, the Twenty eighth of April, there was a Letter delivered to the Consul from the Commanders of the Polish Forces, in which they demanded the surrender of the City, and gave them hope of good usage; But if they would not embrace that offer, they then threatened to destroy them with Fire and Sword, having now such an addition of Foot Soldiers, that they were able to take the City by storm. They added moreover that they had received a Letter from the Lord Treasurer, wherein he intreated them to spare his Lesna upon their submission, saying, That he had already given them a command to set open their Gates. If ever there were indeed any such command, it must needs needs have been suppressed by some one, so that the Citizens never know of it; otherwise they would have provided a little better for the safety of themselves and their Goods. But so it must needs be, that our sins (through others treachery) should be brought to punishment.

This message of the Poles to the Senate, did wonderfully daunt the Citizens; For these things were not kept secret, but before the Consul could call together the Senate and the Commanders of the Soldiery, the report thereof had run through the whole City, as also that there was very little Gunpowder left, and they had not wherewithal to defend themselves; so that the Citizens being taken with a pannick fear, cast away their weapons and courage together, and betook themselves to flight; especially when presently after, they who were on the Guard, discovered the Body of the Enemies coming the same way they came before; For they forsaking every Man his station, hastned home, advising their Wives, Children, and Neighbors to flee, themselves leaving their weapons upon the Walls, or at the Gates; or afterwards casting them away in the Fields, that they might not be a burden to them. When the Swedish Soldiers saw the Citizens thus in amaze and running away, they also soon mounted, not to meet the Enemy (as before) but to run away too from the Face of the Enemy.

Then followed the Senate in such a trembling fit of fear, that every one run out at the Gate that was next him, or over the very Forts and Ditches; so that in one hours space, a most populous City was left destitute of Inhabitants: Save a company of sick and aged people, and a few others that could not so suddenly get away, or for some other cause were necessitated to await the issue. But all hastened to those Moorish Woods, by which Poland is parted from Silesia, in such confusion, that when the nearest passes (towards Thorlang and Krosken) were not wide enough, they tumbled by Troops to other passes (Striswik, Brybusch, and Hundsfloch) that were more remote. The Swedish Troops went to Fraustad, and from thence, taking the Garrison along with them, towards Meseritz: But the passage through the Moors was very difficult, in regard that the company crouding one upon another, as if the Enemy were just at their heels, did not only many of them stick in the deep Mud (in vain crying out for help to those that passed by, every one being solicitous only for his own preservation) but were also mired and lost! Here Children lost their Parents, and Parents their Children, Wives their Husbands, and one Friend another: so that they could scarce find one another again; in Two, Three, and Four days time.

The Enemy by a Trumpeter, who was sent to Posnanie Gate enquired what the Citizens meant to do; To whom John Kolechen, a learned Citizen, and well acquainted with many of the Nobility (in confidence whereof, having sent away his Wife he adventured to stay) came forth and answered, That the Gates stood open, the Swedish Enemies were gone, and the rest of the Citizens stood to their courtesie, and desired their favor.

A little after that, came the illustrious Grzymaltonsky with many of the Nobility to the same Gate, and when the aforesaid Kolechen, with another in his company, had gone out to them and scarcely perswaded them that the City was forsaken, and that there was no treachery; they went in, and when they were disposed into the next fair Houses, they were entertained with a noble Supper (which was prepared to sweeten them a little, if it might be) and had plenty of Wine out of Dlugosses Cellar, who was a rich Senator.

At last when they were half Drunk, they set upon Kolechen with threats, and would have made him their Prisoner, but that he escaped wonderfully out of their Hands, and saved himself by flight. But they durst not stay all night in the City, for fear the Swedes and Citizens should set upon them unawares out of some Ambuscado; And so they returned to their own company, and in the morning with many Hundred Waggon they came back, killing all they met, and setting themselves to plunder the City. Here then you might have seen strange examples of barbarous cruelty on the one side, and blockish folly on the other. For though no Man made resistance, yet like mad Dogs they flew upon all that either came out, or were drawn out of the holes wherein they had hid themselves. Of some they pulled out their Eyes; Of some they cut off their Noses and Tongues; Of others they cut off their Hands and Feet; Others they stabbed and slashed, and so butchered them with innumerable wounds, that it could not be known who they were: And (which was more) they spared not his Highness, Prince Frederick, Landgrave of Hassia, though dead, whom they had slain half a year before at Costena, and who was decently Embalmed by the Lessians, and kept laid up in the Chappel of the New Church upon a Scaffold, till he might be transported to his own Country: They first rifled his Coffin, which was handsomely adorned, taking away his silver and gilt Keys, and all the silk that was about it; Then they set upon the Princes Corps, and took away his silk Robe, lined with Ermines, and so left him once again naked, and lying on the ground. But (after the burning of the City, his Body being found in the same place, untouched by the fire) he was clothed again by the ancient Lesnians, and put up in his Coffin, and buried in a certain place, where he is still honorably kept. But that mad rabble shewed abundance of folly in this, that whereas they might have made Lesna their nest (the Swedes having Garri-soned themselves in the strongest places of the Province,) or at least might have gathered together the richest of the plunder; (For there was such abundance of Victuals, Wares, Householdstuff of all sorts, and Treasure that was brought hither from other places, as to a place of safety, that a Thousand Waggons could scarce have carried it away in many days) yet such was their over-eager desire of their destroying this hated City, that the very same day, yea before noon, they set fire to the City and Suburbs in every Street, (for the Waggons which they brought with them were not empty, but loaded with Torches, Pitch, Straw, and such other combustible matter) and so cruelly destroyed that most pleasant City, together with all that abundance of all sorts of things that was in it.

This fire lasted Three whole days, and there were those that took care that nothing should scape it; for when the New Buildings of the New Churches, did not easily take fire, they brought Straw, Pitch, and dry Wood, and put under the Roofs and the inside of the Steeples, and so forced them to take fire: And they came again upon the third day (1. May) and whatsoever was left they set fire to again. They burnt also the very Wind-mills, whereof there were Seventy about the City; and a very pleasant Park of the Countesses, which lay close by the Castle; that every place might be filled with spectacles of cruelty, and at length it might come to be said, En cineres ubi Lesna fuit!

where fairest Lesna stood of old,

Now nought but Ashes we behold!

The Citizens sadly beholding these flames some Miles off, ran thither next day by Troops; whether out of a desire of quenching the fire, (if it were possible) or else to save something out of the flames; (for most through fear had gone away empty handed) but the Enemy came upon them; and although they stoutly defended themselves, and slew many of their Enemies, yet many of themselves were slain; and many others also on the days following, when some Villages that belonged to the County of Lesna, and were inhabited by professors of the Gospel, were in like manner burnt down. There perished in these flames many aged and sick people, that could not get away; besides such abundance of Houses, Household-stuff of all sorts, precious Wares, Corn, (many Thousand Bushels whereof were brought hither) Libraries and other things, that the loss loss would amount to many Tuns of gold; and many Thousands were thereby reduced to meer beggary. But that which was saddest of all, was, that the Church of the faithful, that was here gathered together out of divers places and Countries, to enjoy the pure worship of God, was so utterly overthrown, that it cannot but cry out with Sion of old, when it was raised by the Babylonians; Lament. 1. and 3. O all ye that pass by, behold and see, if there be any sorrow, like unto my sorrow, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger! For he hath sent a fire into my Bones, and it prevaieth against me; He hath made me a desolation, so that I am not able to rise up; my Children are desolate, because the Enemy prevailed. Sion spreadeth forth her Hands, and there is none to comfort her. I called for my Lovers, but they deceived me. Mine Enemies chased me sore, like a Bird, without cause. They have cut off my life in the Dungeon. Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee: Thou saidst, Fear not; it is of the Lords mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not.

It must not be concealed what wonder hapned the first day of the burning of the City about evening, at Czarna (which is the first Town of Silesia, next to Lesna, about Two Miles distant) Some of the Lesnians went out to look upon the sad smoke of their Country; and as they were looking, there fell from the clouds which carried the smoke over Silesia, together with the soot, a Leaf of burnt Paper, which when they took up, they found to be a Leaf of the Bohemian Bible, containing the Sixth, and part of the Seventh Chapters of Matthew; where those words of Christ came first to sight, with what measure ye meet, it shall be measured to you again; with many other of Christs exhortations to trust in the fatherly Providence of God. This Leaf was presented to the Lord of the place; and a Lesnian Physician, who was there by chance, that read and interpreted it, and divers others, can bear witness to the truth hereof; And the Lord of the place laid it up among his rarities! What now should Sion do, but cry out under the cruel oppression of the Enemy, Render unto them a recompence, O Lord, according to the works of their hands, Lament. 3. 64. And indeed God began to revenge his peoples wrongs the fourth day after, when they furiously assaulted Costena, a Town four Miles from Lesna, where they were often repulsed stoutly by the Swedish Garrison; and having suffered a great slaughter (about Five hundred of them being wanting) they were forced to retire in great confusion. The like also they met withal at Kalissia, and other places, being slain and put to flight by the Swedes. Herein it hapned unto them much after the same manner, as it did to Tilly formerly when he had ruined Magdeburg; the God of vengeance manifesting himself the avenger of his people: And now they begin to acknowledg and upbraid one another with their folly; The Nobles, in that they have spoiled their mart and treasury; and the Clergy, in that it is hapned otherwise than they intended. For their purpose was, utterly to ruin the Hetics (as they term them) with their nest; But now that they see the nest spoiled, and the Birds saved, it is much more matter of grief and vexation than of joy to them. For here God performed what he promised of old to Baruch, I will give thee (in the midst of thy Countries ruins) thy life for a prey, Jer. 45. 5. So God gave to Thousands of his Worshippers, who were snatched out of the midst of those ruins, their life for a prey, having set bounds to the fury of the Devil, which he could not pass; as he did of old, when he gave Job into his Hands, as to all that he had, but so, that he should spare his life. Blessed be the Name of the Lord. Truly we have cause to say with David (Psalms 124.) If it had not been the Lord who was on our side, when men rose up against us, then they had swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us; Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our Soul; Then the proud waters had gone over our Soul; Blessed be the Lord, who hath not given us a prey to their teeth: Our Soul is escaped, as a Bird out of the snare of the Fowlers; the snare is broken, and we are escaped; our help is in the Name of the Lord, who made heaven and Earth. Oh the wonderful wonderful providence of our God ! which then saves when he seems to have forsaken, and then makes alive where he seems to have killed. we had been undone, if we had not been undone ; We had been undone in our lives, those furies gathering together soon after, in far greater troops, if we had not been undone in our estates, which were left to them for a prey by our flight (which the fatherly providence of God, fore-seeing greater evils, procured, by sending that fright among us.) Blessed be the Name of the Lord again and again : We notwithstanding, with other afflicted ones, in what Nation soever, whom that proudest Babylonian flood of waters seeks to swallow up, will not cease to cry, How long, O Lord, wilt thou be angry with thy people ? How long shall thy jealousy burn like fire ? O remember not against us former iniquities ; let thy tender mercies speedily prevent us, &c. Psalm 79. And with the Souls of those that were slain for the Word of God, that lie under the Altar of Christs merits, for whose Faith we are killed, How long ( O Lord ) holy and true, dost thou not judg and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth ! Rev. 6. 9, 10.

The Delegates of these poor persecuted Protestant Churches coming over into England, to move for a Contribution towards the relief of their distressed Brethren, Published this ensuing Narrative.

The utmost Fury of Antichrist against the Protestants or Reformed Church of the Bohemian Confession in Poland, set down in a brief (but faithful) Narrative, and according to the truth of the matter.

THE Spoule of Jesus Christ, she who in the Cradle was besprinkled with the Blood of a Protomartyr, hath always brought forth into the World, Men like Abel, or Stephen, that so there might never be wanting some to cry from the earth unto God, and that the wounds of that Rose which lies among the Thorns of Persecution might not be concealed. Every age, and every year in each age, and every moneth and day in each year, hath produced new inundations of Blood unto this day; And yet the little flock of the Lord hath always encreased under Persecutions, one while here, another there, shifting their Seats and Habitations.

While it pleased God by the means of Wickles to kindle the light of the Gospel in Great Britain, John Hus asserted the truth of Jesus Christ in the midst of the thick darkness of Popery in Bohemia, many Thousands being stirred up by God to receive it, who despising all the cruelty of Tyrants, received it with joy, until by Gods assistance they took rooting in the Kingdom, and grew up into flourishing Churches. In a short time after, Antichrist breathing out his fury, the Truth was banished out of Bohemia, and the Confessors being driven out, transplanted the Gospel into Poland; where being favorably entertained by King Sigismund, they in a short time encreased to so great a number, that being little inferior to the Papists, they were able to boast of an equal authority and priviledges with them. Hence it came to pass that the Kings at their Coronations were wont, not only to promise, but solemnly to swear protection to such as disagreed from the Roman Religion, and therefore they proceeded not to open Persecutions, save only in those Cities where the Jesuits had seated themselves in power (to wit) Cracovia, Posen, Lublin, Vilna, &c. where, by their disciples, and by stirring up the common people to fury, the Churches of the Reformed Professors were a good while ago demolished, and divers Ministers cruelly massacred.

Nevertheless the malice of the Enemies being no whit allayed, they were many ways afflicted, first indirectly, afterwards by pretences under colour of Law, until those Churches being worn out by degrees, and overthrowen, were not many years ago reduced to a very inconsiderable number, especially when at in the Reign of the late King, the Enemies being confident they might do any thing, brought things to this pass at length, that there were no more than Twenty one Congregations remaining in the Greater Poland, and those also ready to perish. But among these Twenty one remaining Churches, the chief, and as it were the Mother of them all, was that of Lesna, which was divided into Three Congregations, the Bohemian, the Polonian, and the German. Each of which had their own Pastors, but the Communicants jointly were about Two thousand: Therefore it was that this Church was in the first place exposed to the Enemies malice, and of late designed to the slaughter, as well by reason of its being very much frequented and grown famous, as also because of the Synod there usually celebrated, as likewise there was a famous University and Printing-house, and Books frequently published to the World.

When therefore in the year 1655. the Swedish Army out of Pomerania drew near to the borders of Poland, and the Nobility were summoned to Arms, according to the custom of the Country, it came to pass that the Papists brake forth into many furious expressions, crying out, That the Hereticks had invited the Enemy, and therefore they were first of all to be put to the Sword and extirpated; which reports, though most falsely scattered abroad (for the searcher of the Heart and the Reins knoweth, that we never so much as dreamt of it) yet they easily found credit among the sworn Enemies of the Gospel, who sought nothing more than our ruin. Hereupon they who first consulted to agree with the Swedish Army, being terrified by its power, concluded about the surrender of all Great Poland into the Kings protection, and namely, the Royal Cities of Posen, Calisen, Meserick, &c. to which also Lesna was expressly added: In a little time after they endeavored to cast off the Swedish Yoke, and turned their Arms not against the Swedes, but first against our Evangelical Professors, as conspiring with the Swedes upon the account of Religion, and none of them scrupled to take revenge upon them.

They first of all set upon those of Lesna, with resolution of putting all to the Sword, and destroying that Heretical City by fire, and they had effected both, unless God, by sending some persons before, who by signifying the coming of the Enemy, and with what intent they came, had possessed the Citizens with a Panick fear, so that leaving all their Estates, they every Man fled; And thus within the space of one hour, a most populous City abounding with all manner of wealth, was left without Inhabitants, who in a miserable condition wandered then into the neighboring Woods and Marishes into Silesia. But the Polish Nobility with their Army, entering the City, did what they pleased, slaying a number of decrepit old people, and sick persons that were not able to save themselves by flight; Then the City it self was first plundered, and afterwards so destroyed by fire for Three days together, that no part of it remained beside rubbish and ashes. In what manner they would have handled the Citizens, especially their Pastors, they shewed by their Heroick actions performed in other places, by the most savage slaughtering of divers Ministers of the Church, and other faithful Members of Christ, of both Sexes; For of all that they laid hold on, they gave not One Man quarter, but very cruelly put them to death with most exquisite tortures. They endeavored to force Master Samuel Cardus, Pastor of the Church of Czwertzen, to renounce his Religion, after they had taken him, and miserably handled him with all manner of cruelty; But he, stoutly resisting, they first put out his Eyes, and led him about for a spectacle, then they pulled off his Fingers-ends with Pincers; But he not yet condescending to their mad fury, they found out a new kind of torment, poured molten Lead into his mouth, and at length while he was yet half alive, they clapt his Neck between folding Doors, and violently pulling them together, severed his Head from his Body.

They took John Jacobides, Pastor of the Church of Dembnick, and Alexander wartens his Colleague, and another that was in company with them, as they passed through the Town of Lubin, and hurrying them up and down for divers hours, and grievously handling them after the manner of Tyrants, then last of all all they cut their Throats with a Razor, threw them headlong, while they were yet breathing, into a great Pit, which had been before-hand prepared for these Martyrs, and stiled them by casting down Dung and Dirt upon them. They great while pursued Andrem Oxlinum, a young Man designed for the Ministry, whom, after long seeking, they at last found in the open Field, and in the end, having taken him, they cut off his Head with a Sitch, chopping it into small pieces, and the dead Carcase also they flast in a barbarous manner. The same fate befel Adam Milta, a Citizen of Lesna: But they more grievously handled an old Man of above Seventy years, whose Name was Simon Priten, and many others, whose Names it were too tedious to relate. Of that barbarous execution which they did upon the weaker Sex, there were besides other examples, horrid Trophies of cruelty erected in the said City of Lesna: A pious Matron there, who was the Mother of Three Children, not being able quick enough to leave the City, and being slain in the open Street, they cut off her Hands and Feet, and cutting off her Childrens Heads, they laid Two of them at her Breasts, and the Third by her side. In like manner, another Woman having her Hands and Feet cut off, and her Tongue cut out, being inclosed and bound in a Sack, lived the space of Two days, making most miserable lamentation. Grief forbids us to add more; For they behaved themselves so furiously towards us, that there remains not an example of any One Man saved of all those that happened to fall into their Hands.

The Persecution of the Church in Poland

It is notoriously known how that fury of theirs tyrannized also over the dead; some they dragg'd out of their graves, and cut in pieces, as at Zichlin; others they exposed naked for a publick Spectacle, as at Lesna; of which outrageous action we had an example, even in the dead Body of the most Serene Landgrave of Hassia, which was drawn out of the grave, who was heretofore slain in a most barbarous and tyrannical manner at Roselan, but buried by our Friends at Lesna. The like was acted also upon the Body of the most Noble Arcizevius, heretofore the valiant Admiral of the Hollanders in Brazile, which was likewise dragg'd out of the grave, and being stript of the grave-clothes, was found after the firing of Lesna. There are divers other examples, which the Christian Reader may find in the Book, Entituled, Lesna Excidium, faithfully written, and lately set forth in Print; But they are such examples only as are commonly known; For who is able to relate all things in particular? As burning Men alive, drowning others with Stones tied about their Necks, &c.

Now Lesna being destroyed, the fury of the Enemy proceeded to the Persecutions of others, they in a short time utterly demolished all our Congregations, not only driving away the Pastors, but also either burning or leaving most of the Temples desolate, as at Karmin, Dembnick, Skoschy, Czricuzin, &c. yea and the Auditories themselves were either slain (as in the Town of Skoschy, where there was a very flourishing Church of the Bohemian Exiles; Sixty Persons, both Men and Women were cruelly put to death) or else they were scattered abroad, so that there remained not one place wherein the Worship of God may be celebrated. Lo, this is the most miserable state and condition of our Churches; moreover our Countrymen, to the number of Five thousand, besides Youths and Children, being dispersed in banishment (which hath now befallen most of us the second time) especially throughout Silesia, as also through the March, Lusatia, Hungary, &c. find no comfort, but much misery, and are there exposed to the hatred and envy of Men. We that are Pastors dare not openly Minister to our Auditories with the Word and Sacraments, but only in private Meetings, or in Woods among Fenny places, God only seeing us, who is witness of these calamities, and our comfort in extremities.

Indeed being thus destitute of all things, we lead a wretched life in banishment, being afflicted with hunger and nakedness, and are become next to the most miserable Waldenses, the greatest spectacle of calamity to the Christian world; For so it hath seemed good to that Sovereign Wisdom that governs all things, that we should be inheritors of the Cross and Persecution of those Men from whom we have derived the original of our Doctrine and external Succession: For truly we are the remaining Progeny even of the Waldenses, with whom being raised from the Ashes of blessed Huss, and with whom combining into the same holy Fellowship of the Faith and Afflictions of Christ, we have for Two whole ages and more, been perpetually subject to the like storms of Calamities, until at length we fell into this calamity, greater than ever was known in the memory of our Fathers, and which threatens us with utter destruction, unless God prevent it, this business constrains us to amazement and tears, greater than can be expressed in words, to set forth our affliction and sorrow: If therefore there be any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of Love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any Bowels and Mercies, we desire that this affliction of Joseph may be recommended, especially to all that are of the household of Faith. Let them not suffer those to perish whom the same Faith, and the same Spirit of Christ hath joyned with them in so near a Relation; we beseech them in the Name of Christ, that they would rather make haste to relieve those who are ready to perish, we being assured that we suffer this Persecution upon no other account, than for the confession of the Truth, from those Enemies, who have acted such things as these are against us in times past, and are now at length by Gods permission, pouring out their fury upon us.

that

Delegates and now Exiles for the cause of Christ;*

A BRIEF REPRESENTATION OF THE PROTESTANT CAUSE
 I N
 G E R M A N Y.

In what Case it hath been; since the Peace of Munster; and how it stood in the Year 1657. And how it is now this present Year 1659.

THE Justice of the late Civil Wars in Germany, which were composed at the Peace concluded in Munster and Osnaburg in the year 1648. was grounded upon this; That the Protestants were necessitated to enter into a League or mutual union together, for the maintaining of their rights and privileges in the Empire, against the infections thereof, and manifold disturbances of their profession, which contrary to former agreements at Imperial Dyets, did befall unto them in many places by the Popish and Jesuits practices, whereof they could obtain no redress by any peaceable Treaties: Therefore finding that there was a design formed in the Conclave, and by the House of Austria, to be put in execution, tending by little and little to wear out and deprive them of their liberties; They formed an union among themselves, to stand upon the defence of their rights, and to oppose the power of the House of Austria, by whose means, both in Germany and in Bohemia, the Jesuits did drive on the design of rooting out Protestants. The Head of this union (who by his place was bound to appear in it) was the Elector Palatine: But he being a soft Man, of no experience in War, and beset in his counsels and enterprises with such as did betray him, the cause was soon overthrown; and by his overthrow, the intended Persecution against Protestants to root them out, what by power, and what by policy, was openly carried on by the House of Austria; which moved the King of Denmark Christian the IV. and after him the King of Sweden, to come upon the Stage: The Dane was soon overthrown, but God gave such success unto the Swedes, to the Landgrave of Hessen their associate, and to the French; (who joyued with them to ballance the power of Austria, after the Elector of Saxony had made his Peace at Prague with the Emperor, and deserted the Protestant interest:) That from the death of King Gustavus, they continued the War with various successes till the year 1648. at which time the Swedish being Masters in Bohemia, and the Emperor brought so low, that he saw little hopes to recover his strength without a Peace, he yielded to the conditions which the Protestants and the French stood upon.

The Swedish stood upon their satisfaction, and to keep a foot in the Empire, to be able upon all occasions to secure or help the Protestant party; And the Protestant.

Protestant Princes they stood upon the settling of all things and of themselves in their former rights and possessions, as before the War; And chiefly upon this point the reformed party, and the Landgrave of Hessen, who headed them, stood that thence forward the Reformed Protestants (alias called Calvinists) should have equal freedom and liberty of Conscience, for the exercise of their profession in the Empire, with the Papists and Lutherans. This condition being obtained, and a way determined to give the aggrieved parties in point of damage further satisfaction, Armies were dismissed, a new convention of States was held at Nuremberg, to settle the remaining matters within the Empire, which at Munster and Osnaburg could not well be handled, by reason of the Treaty with foreign States, and afterward a Dyet was called at Ratisbon, to confirm all what formerly had been treated on and concluded, and to put the remainder of grievances in a way to be rectified: To which effect at the dissolution or rather adjournment of the Imperial Dyet at Ratisbon, a Committee of Deputies from all the States of the Empire, of equal number of both parties, (that is, so many of the Protestants as of the Popish party) were named to meet at Franckford, and prepare (by way of disquary of rights) the matters then remaining undecided, that at the next Session of the Dyet, there might be a full decision and determination of them.

But before these Delegates did meet, the Elector of Mentz did broach a new quarrel with the Elector Palatine, tending to abridg him of much of his right, and to make him inconsiderable to the Protestant party; But the King of Sweden, his cousin, (for he is a younger Brothers Son of the House Palatine) and the Landgrave of Hessen his Brother in Law, did appear for him so far, that the Emperor and the Elector of Mentz fearing a new breach on his behalf, did leave him unmolested.

Soon after the compofure of this quarrel, the Committee of Imperial Deputies, met according to the appointment of the last Dyet at Ratisbon, and they have continued at Franckford, debating and disputing one with another concerning their respective rights, in the several cases which remained undetermined. This meeting of Deputies hath agitated matters in the years 1655—56—57. till these new affairs were come into consideration, which the King of Sweden his War with Poland hath occasioned. For from that time that he went into Poland and prospered there, the Deputies, although they did not dissolve their meeting, yet did in a manner alter the course of their treating one with another, as looking much upon the event of that War, till the death of the late Emperor hath altered the Scene, and a Dyet for the election of a new Emperor hath been called.

The King of Sweden's War with Poland, did alarm the Popish party in Germany, and the House of Austria extreamly: And did terrifie the States of the Low-Countries, lest if he should be Master of the Baltick Sea, their Trade should be thenceforward under his power, with whom they had no friendly correspondence, by reason of some reciprocally conceived injuries, for which they could not trust him. This moved those of Holland who are the chief Traders in those Seas, to stir up Enemies against him, and openly to appear for, and correspond with Dantzick to oppose him: And it is known to the Swedish, that they have dealt underhand with the Muscovite, with the Polish King, with the Austrians, and above-board with the King of Denmark, to combine against him; By which means, after that he had conquered Poland, his Forces were distracted, first to oppose the Muscovite in Livonia, who besieged Riga; and afterward to put himself in a defensive posture against the Austrians, who came to the assistance of the King of Poland; and lastly, to retire from Poland into Germany, to oppose the Danish Forces, who had invaded his Territories of Bremen.

Being come into Germany upon this design, he did conquer from the King of Denmark the last Summer, all Holftein and Juland, and although by these conquests he was able to live in his quarters in the Winter; yet his Enemies being round round about him on all hands; and he having neither money, nor convenient places to recruit his Army in; it was expected, that in the spring, the Combination of his Enemies who compassed him about, would have swallowed him up: But God was pleased to appear for him, and direct him in a way to escape and overcome these difficulties: For in January last, he formed his design to assault the other Territories of the Danish King, namely the Islands, which lie between Germany and the Continent of Sweden, and to that effect had prepared his Men to march over into Fuenen, either by a Bridge of Ships if the Sea were not frozen so as to bear; or over the Ice, if it should be strong enough: Having then notice gotten, that towards the latter end of January the Ice did bear, he took of Horse and Foot not above Six or Seven thousand, and therewith did march over the Sea into Fuenen, where the Danish King had placed his chief forces to defend the place. And although some dangerous and dreadful accidents did befall him in that his march over the Sea, yet he went on and fought the Danish Forces, who were more in number than he had with him, which on firm land stood in a readiness to receive him, and beat them, took the chief Commanders Prisoners, and the spoil of the Island, which is one of the richest that belongs to that Kingdom.

The Persecution of the Church in Poland.

Having made himself Master of that Island, he went forward to the next Island over the Sea, called Langland, where he found a Body of Five hundred Men to resist him, but being charged, they were instantly defeated; so he went from thence to the next called Laland, and from thence to Falster, and from Falster to Zeland, the frost still continuing to make a Bridge for him in all these marches. And from the time he came into Fuenen, till he entered Zeland, he spent only Five or Six days. In Zeland (where the King of Denmark was at Copenhagen) Mr. Medows, the publick Minister of the State, sent from hence to reside with the King of Denmark, came to him and desired him to admit the King of Denmark to a Treaty; This he condescended unto, and by the interposition of Mr. Medows, and of the French Ambassador (for he would not admit the Hollands Ambassador to be a Mediator) the peace was concluded about the Twentieth of February, after Twelve days treaty. The conditions, That he restoreth to the King of Denmark all what he had taken from him in Germany, namely, Holstein and Jutland, and the Islands of Fuenen, Langland, Laland, Falster, and Zeland; And in lieu thereof the King of Denmark quits unto him all his rights in the Provinces of Haland and Schonen, and of Bliken, which are the Continent of Sweden, on the North side of the Sound; And doth moreover surrender unto him the Island of Bornholm, and the Lordships of Bahusen, and of Drunthen in Norway, which lie most convenient to cause the Trade of Sweden to flourish. Some other conditions there are, but less considerable.

The Peace being thus concluded and ratified by both Kings, the King of Denmark Feasted the King of Sweden for certain days, and at several times both Kings were together alone for the space of Two or Three hours at a time, whereby it is conceived that they have contracted a nearer and stricter alliance together, than the publick Treatise can mention. This being done, the King of Sweden went into his own Country; and hath convoked the States of his Kingdom at Gottenburg, to dispose of his affairs with their advice, and to take up further resolutions in time to come.

This unexpected and miraculous success of the Swedish Kings enterprise, hath disappointed all the counsels and plots of his Adversaries against him, for which he is obliged to none but unto God alone: And from hence his Friends have just cause to gather, that God hath raised him out of his straits, and redoubled his strength to make further use of him towards the advancement of the common cause of Protestants, in whose behalf he concluded the Peace at Munster, and which he thinks himself in conscience and honor obliged to maintain for the Protestant interest, sanguinem altera pars paciscens, as in a Letter of his to the Emperor he did express himself. So that it seems the Protestant cause in Germany will find in him a Protector of so much courage and resolution, and conduct, as any that could be expected or desired: And it is known to all that know him, that he is earnestly bent to take away the differences, and advance the reconciliation of Protestants within themselves: And that he makes no difference between Lutherans (as they are called) and Calvinists, but makes use of both alike, according to their abilities, as he finds them fitted for employment to foreign affairs: For within the Kingdom of Sweden, no foreigners, and none but Lutherans, are to be admitted to the civil charges of trust; others are employed in military charges, both there and elsewhere, according to their deserts.

But presently after the Elector of Brandenburg was by subtle Artifices withdrawn from the King of Sweden, and joyned with the Emperor, and the King of Poland against him: The King of Denmark was prevailed with to break his late made League, and the States of the United Provinces have joyned with the Dane against him; And God having taken away his great Friend Oliver, Lord Protector, he hath conflicted with many and great difficulties, and yet hitherto God hath upheld him from sinking under them. What the issue will be, time must discover.

CHAP. I.

The Persecution of the British Church till the coming in of the Saxons.

Historians do not agree amongst themselves, neither of the time when, nor of the Persons by whom the Gospel was first planted in Britain. Nicephorus saith, that Simon Zelotes having preached long in the Western parts of the World, came at last into Britain, by whose Ministry many in this Island embraced the Gospel of Jesum Christ, yet was Simon at the length Crucified by the Heathens. Others say, that Paul, the great Doctor of the Gentiles, when he was sent by Festus to Rome, after he had made his defence before the Emperor was dismissed, whereupon he went into Spain, and afterwards into Britain, and preached the Gospel of Christ unto them. Dorotheus, and some others add, that Paul made Aristobolus, of whom he makes mentions Rom. 16. 10. the first Bishop of Britain: who having propagated the Gospel in this Island, at last, with many of his Disciples, suffered Martyrdom in the second year of the Emperor Nero. Others affirm, that Philip the Apostle, being busied in Converting and Baptizing many in France, sent his entire Friend, Joseph of Arimatea with Twelve other of his Disciples into Britain, where they laid the foundation of the Christian Faith, after which divers other Preachers coming hither, they much confirmed and propagated the same.

Tertullian, who lived in the second Century, speaking how the Gospel was spread abroad by the Ministry of the Apostles, amongst other places he reckons up those parts of Britain to be subjected to Christ, which the Romans could never conquer. Origen in his fourth Homily on Ezekiel, hath these words, Britanniam in Christianam convertit religionem; That Britain had embraced the Christian Faith.

King Lucius
the first Christian King.

Idolatry destroyed.

The Scripture
the best rule for Laws.

Anno 180. of theseabouts, (though Authors do not agree of the year exactly,) King Lucius Reigned in Britain, who hearing of the miracles and wonders done by the Christians in divers places, sent letters to Eleutherius Bishop of Rome, desiring to receive the Christian Faith. The good Bishop hearing the request of the King, and glad to embrace the opportunity, sent to him Two Preachers, Eaganus and Damianus, by whose faithful endeavors it pleased God that the King and many of his People were Converted and Baptized: The Temples of Idolatry, and other Monuments of Gentilism were subverted: Thus Religion with true Faith increased, and Superstition with all the rites of Idolatry decreased; many Bishops were ordained and set over the people, and all things settled in good order: After which, this godly King sent again to Eleutherius for the Roman Laws, according to which he desired to govern his people; To which request Eleutherius returned this Answer, That for the Roman and Imperial Laws they might have their defects and faults, but the Law of God could not: Whereupon he advised him to study the Scriptures, and out of them, by the Council of his Realm, to enact Laws for the Government of his Kingdom; For (saith he) you are Gods Vicar in your Kingdom, and therefore it behoves you to unite your People, to call them to the faith and service of Jesus Christ, to cherish and maintain them, to rule and govern them, and to defend them from all such as would do them wrong, &c.

Persecution begins betimes.

This Faith thus received by the Britains, continued and flourished amongst them, by the space of Two hundred and sixteen years, even till the coming of the Pagan Saxons: But all this while the Roman Emperors had not embraced the Christian Faith; whereupon much trouble and persecution was raised up by them and their Agents against the Christian Britains, especially after the death of King Lucius, who dying without issue, the Barons and Nobles could not agree about a Successor, so that whilst they contended and strove who should have the Crown, the Romans stepped in, and took the Crown from them into their own Hands, whereupon ensued great misery, and ruin to the Realm: Sometimes the Idolatrous Romans, sometimes the Christian Britains Reigned, according as Gods Providence ordered the success of their Wars.

Amphibolus.

Albane Converted.

The first remarkable Persecution that I meet with, was under Dioclesian and Maximinian, at which time the rage of the Heathens was so great against the Christians, that in Britany and some other places there are Seventeen thousand Martyrs reckoned up, that suffered for the Name of Christ. In the time of this Persecution there was one of the Clergy called Amphibolus, sought for to be drawn to Prison, who to escape the fury of the Adversaries, hid himself in the House of Albane, a worthy Citizen of Vernlam, [now St. Albans.] This Albane was for the present an Heathen, but observing his Guests, day and night to continue in watching and prayer, it pleased God so to work upon him by this example, that he began to hearken to the godly instructions and exhortations of this Minister, and forsaking his blind Idolatry he became a Christian with his whole heart. At length the Persecutors had intelligence, that Amphibolus lay hid at Albanes House, whereupon Soldiers were appointed to make diligent search for him in that place: Albane hearing of their coming, apparelled himself in his Guests and Masters Clothes, offering himself to the Soldiers, by whom he was bound, and carried before the Judg, who at that time was sacrificing to his Idols: Albane being brought before him, the Judg perceiving the fraud, said said unto him; Forasmuch as thou hadst rather stand among the Rebel and Traitor to our gods, then deliver him up to the Soldiers, that he might undergo due punishment for his blaspheming of our gods; look what torments he should have suffered if he had been taken, the same thou shalt suffer if thou refuse to practise the rites of our Religion: Albane little regarded these threatnings; But being fortified with the spiritual Armor of God, told him plainly to his Face, That he would not obey his Commandment: Then said the Judge, Of what Hou'e and stock art thou? Albane answered, It matters not of what stock I am, but if thou desirest to know my Religion, be it known unto thee that I am a Christian, and that I employ myself in the practice of their holy exercises: Then the Judge demanded his Name? My Parents (said he) named me Albane, and I honor and worship the true and living God that made all things of nothing: The Judge being enraged hereat, said unto him, If thou desirest to prolong thy life, come and sacrifice to our gods; Albane answered, This sacrifice that you offer to the Devil profits you nothing, but rather purchaseth for you eternal pains in Hell fire: The Judge being more incensed hereby, commanded the Tormentors to beat him, thinking that stripes might prevail where words would not; But he shewed himself, not only patient, but joyful in the midst of all his torments; The Judge seeing that neither words nor blows could remove him from his constancy, commanded him to be beheaded. The Executioner observing his fervent Faith and Prayers, fell down before his Feet, casting from him the Sword, desiring rather to be executed for or with him, then to do execution upon him, and so was made a Fellow of that Faith, whereof before he was a Persecutor; The other Officers were astonished, and trembled to behold this strange Providence, but at last one of them took up the Sword, wherewith he cut off the Martyr's Head.

There suffered also about the same time Aaren and Julian, Citizens of Leicester, and many others both Men and Women, in sundry places, who endured most cruel and bitter torments in all parts of their Bodies, and at last, triumphing over all with invincible patience, resigned up their Spirits to Almighty God; Many others to avoid the rage and fury of their merciless Persecutors, fled into Woods, and hid themselves in Mountains, and Dens, and Caves of the Earth, waiting patiently till God should free them by the destruction of their Enemies.

About the same time also Augustus, Bishop of London, who was now grown very old, obtained the Crown of Martyrdom. Yea the rage of the Adversaries ceased not in the slaughter of the Saints, but they sought out the Books of the sacred Scriptures, and burnt them publickly, Churches were subverted, and Christianity was almost extirpated out of the whole land.

But Dioclesian and Maximinian, finding that after all their Bloody butcheries, and the Thousands of innocent Christians slain by them, the Faith of Christ still increased, being tired with shedding of Blood, at last they devided themselves of the Imperial dignity, and Constantian, and after him Constantine the Great, succeeding in the Government of our Britain, the Church here had Peace, and the faithful Christians, which in times of danger had hid themselves in Dens, and Desarts, came forth, and shewed themselves abroad, repairing the Churches formerly demolished and thrown down to the ground, built others anew, attending the service of God in Peace, whereby the Church flourished, and the Gospel was mightily propagated: which blessed Peace, through Gods mercy continued till the Arrian Heresie, which overspread a great part of the Christian world, flew over into our Britain likewise, which caused new storms and fluctuations in the Church: But holy Constantine, by calling seasonably the Nicene Council, somewhat qualified and abated the animosities of some, and the unbridled spirits of others. But shortly after the death of that good Emperor, the Arrian Heresie began to revive, and the Britains which were always naturally given to affect novelties, too greedily embraced it, who raised up the Picts and Scots (two Barbarous and Heathen Nations) to persecute scourge to them and this Kingdom which had been often exhausted of the flower of all her youth, upon several occasions led away by the Roman Emperors in all their Wars, was now unable to defend her self against their violent irruptions: For which cause, for divers years together, the Britains were miserably oppressed, and wasted by those Two Nations; This occasioned them to send their Embassadors to Rome with lamentable complaints, requesting, and begging aid, and assistance of them against these their cruel Enemies: The Romans at last, moved with pity, sent them a Legion of Soldiers, who encountering with the Picts and Scots, overthrew them, slew many, and drove the rest out of the confines of the Britains, and withal advised them to build a Wall from Sea to Sea across the Land, which might keep out these evil Neighbors: This was assented to, and the Wall being finished, the Roman Soldiers returned home again.

As soon as the Picts and Scots heard thereof, they presently in a number of Boats landed on this side the Wall, invaded the borders, over-ran the Country, and bare down all before them.

Then did the Britains send new Embassadors to Rome, who made grievous moan, imploring their aid, beseeching them not to suffer their miserable Country utterly to be wasted, and destroyed by these barbarous Heathens, &c. Hereupon there is a Legion of Soldiers again sent into Britain, who in harvest time coming suddenly upon these destroyers, made a great slaughter of them, and such as escaped, they chased by Sea into their own Country; which being done, they told the Britains plainly, that it was not for their ease to take such long, and tedious journeys for their sakes; that they should expect no more assistance from them, and therefore they exhorted them to arm, and exercise themselves, that of themselves they might be able to resist these their Enemies; and for their further encouragement they assisted them in building a Wall of Stone Eight foot broad, and Twelve foot high, from the East to the West Sea, just where the Emperor Severus had formerly cast up a Trench, all which was done upon the publick and private charges of the Britains. Also by the Sea-side Southwards at the place where their Ships lay at harbor, lest their Enemies should land thereabouts, they built up Bulworks at a competent distance each from other, all which being finished the Romans bid them farewell, intending to return no more.

But God yet intended a further scourge to the Britains; wherefore as soon as the Picts, and Scots understood that the Romans had taken their final farewell, they came in great multitudes to assault the Wall, which for a while was defended with faint Hands, and trembling Hearts by the Britains: But the Scots, with certain grapples that they had devised, pulled some part of it to the ground, and in other parts so assaulted the Britains, that they put them to flight, and in a barbarous manner followed, killed, and destroyed them more cruelly than ever they had done before: whereupon the Britains, being driven out of their Habitations and possessions, fell to robbing and spoiling one another, increasing their outward miseries by their intestine discords, so that the whole Country was brought to that extream poverty that they had no sustenance but what they got by hunting, and killing of wild Beasts.

In the Eighth year of the Reign of Theodosius junior, the Britains sent to Rome again, setting forth their piteous Estate, complaining that the barbarous Enemy drove them upon the Sea, the Sea again upon the Enemy, so that death and destruction attended them on all hands: But the Romans having their Hands full at that time, being scarce able to defend themselves against the barbarous Hunnes under Attila, refused to send them any succor, returning the Embassadors without relief:

The Britains being thus frustrated of their hopes from Rome, and being forced thereto by Famine, they took courage to themselves, and began to seek unto God; and when all Earthly hope failed, so much the more to put their whole trust trust and confidence in God, who useth not to fail those that trust in him; and so from the Hills and Brakes where they lurked, they many times invaded their Enemies, first resisting, and afterwards overthrowing them, which for many years before had lived upon the spoil of their Country. The Picts hereupon began to keep themselves quiet at home, save only that now and then they would make inroads into the land, so that shortly after the land enjoyed great peace and quietness, and the Britains falling to Husbandry, through Gods blessing, the Earth yielded such abundance, that there was never the like plenty of grain seen before: But behold the wickedness of Mans heart! The Britains enjoyed Peace and Plenty, they fell into all manner of loose and licentious living, whereof all sorts of lewd and abominable practices folled, especially cruelty, hatred of the truth, and loving of lies, insomuch that if any Men were more humble and faithful embracers of the truth then others, the other would work them all the despite and mischief that could be, as the common Enemies of their Country: And these sins abounded, not only amongst the Laity but Clergy also, and the chiefest of all sorts gave themselves over to drunkenness, pride, contention, envy, and such other wickedness, utterly casting from them the sweet and easy yoke of Christ. Then did the Lord send a terrible Pestilence amongst them, whereof such multitudes died, that the living were not able to bury the dead, yet for all this they remained so hardned in their sins, that neither their Friends death, nor their own danger could mollifie their obdurate hearts, or work them to a Reformation of their wicked lives, whereupon a more grievous stroke of Gods vengeance fell upon the whole sinful Nation, as in the sequel will be made to appear.

Peace and Plenty.

So the Lord sent a great Pestilence.

A great Pestilence.

CHAP. II.

The Persecution of the British Church under the Heathen Saxons and English.

THe Britains being again infested with their old ill neighbors, they consulted what was best for them to do in such a strait, and instead of turning to God with all their Hearts, and reforming their wicked lives, they, with their King Portigerne, resolved to demand aid of the Saxons, to repel the fury of these Northern Nations, by which foolish counsel the Lord intended to plague this wicked People, as the story following will evidently shew.

Anno 429. The English and Saxons being sent for by the said King into Britain, they landed in Three long Ships, and by the Kings appointment, encountering with the Picts and Scots, they got the Victory, whereof they sent home word to their Countrymen, withal informing them of the fertility of Britain, and of the Cowardliness of the Inhabitants: Hereupon a far greater number of the Saxons, and better furnished for the War, arrived in Britain, and joyning with the former Band, they formed a stronger Army then all the power of the Britains was able to overcome: These therefore by the Britains had a place allowed them to dwell in, upon condition that they should fight for them against their Enemies, receiving wages of the Britains for their pains: The chief Captains of these Saxons were Hengist, and Horsus, and greater companies of those people daily resorting hither, they suddenly enter'd into league with the Picts, whom they had now driven further off, and began to turn their Forces upon the Britains. And first they required more store of Victuals of them, seeking thereby to pick a quarrel with them, and threatening that if they did not presently send them in more store, they would break their amity with them, and spoil the Country about them, and no sooner was it said but they performed it indeed: And thus by the hands of these Pagans, God avenged the quarrel of his Covenant upon upon his wicked people: And this fire of Gods wrath being once kindled, he employed these Idolaters, as once he did the Caldeans against the Jews, to scourge his Apostatizing people, so that the destruction made by them in this land overspread the whole Island, none being able to resist it.

The Saxons sent for.

All Edifices both publick and private were demolished, the Ministers were slain while they were employed in the service of God: The Reverend Bishops, and their flocks were cruelly murdered, without respect to their dignity, neither were there any to inter their slaughtered Bodies: Some being pursued into the Mountains were there murdered; others almost starved with hunger, were fain to creep out of their Caves and Dens, and to buy their food at their Enemies Hands, by whom they were either presently murdered, or deprived of their liberty for ever: Others with heavy Hearts left their Native Country, and fled beyond the Seas: Others being driven from House and Home, wandered up and down in Mountaines, and Woods, and Desert places, exposed to hunger, cold, nakedness, and all sorts of misery, and to fill up the measure of their wretchedness, Two hundred seventy one, or (as some stories say) Four hundred and sixty of the ancientest and chiefeest Barons and Nobles of the land, were trained to Almsbury to meet with the chiefeest of the Saxons about a Treaty of Peace, by whom they were most treacherously, and perfidiously all slain at a place called Stoneheng: By the which Monuments it seems that the Noble Britains were there buried.

Base treachery.

Yet not long after the Britains began to take courage to themselves coming out of their Caves where before they had lien hid, and with one consent humbling themselves before Almighty God for their sins, and calling upon him by fervent Prayer, they chose Ambrosius Aurelianus, a gentle-natured Man, and of the ancient Blood of the Romans to be their Captain. This Ambrosius had a Brittain to his Mother, and was educated in the Christian Religion by Guithline, Bishop of London: Under him the Britains assembling themselves, provoked the Saxons and English to fight, and (through Gods mercy and goodness,) obtained a great Victory over them, and from that day forward they obtained many other Victories against the Saxons.

Repentance.
Ambrosius made King of the Britains.

Uter Pendragon.

At last Ambrosius died of Poison, and his Brother Uter, surnamed Pendragon succeeded him, Anno 497. who fighting against Ofta and Cosa, the Two Chieftains of the Saxons, took them both Prisoners, and brought them to London, there to be kept: But they, breaking Prison, fled into Germany for more aid; In the mean time there daily came over abundance of Saxons in several Companies, with whom the Britains had divers conflicts and bickerings, sometimes winning, sometimes losing, as the Lord in his wise Providence saw fittest to order it.

A great Persecution.

At last came back Ofta and Cosa with a great Army out of Germany, and joyned with the other Saxons against the Britains. Here began the miseries of Britain afresh, whilst the Idolatrous Saxons prevailed in number and strength against the Christian Britains, oppressing the people, demolishing their Churches, murdering their Bishops and Ministers, sparing neither age, sex, nor person, but wasting Christianity almost through the whole land: And, as an aggravation of their miseries, their King Uter was sick, and could not come forth in defence of his Subjects; yet at last being sore grieved with the lamentable destruction of his people, he caused himself in his Bed to be carried into his Camp, where God in mercy gave him a wonderful Victory, Ofta and Cosa being both slain in the Battel; shortly after which Victory Uter died of Poison, as his Brother had done before him.

Ofta, and Cosa
slain.

Anno 516. came in Stuph, and Wigarius, Two other Captains of the Saxons with a new Army, who so violently assaulted the Britains, that they of the Western parts were not able to resist them: Then the Providence of Almighty God raised up for the Britains, King Arthur, the Son of Uter, who obtained Twelve great Victories against the Saxons. Concerning this King Arthur many strange strange stories are reported, which I omit as being most of them fabulous: But without question under his Reign, and some of his Successors the Britains enjoyed much peace and safety.

Yet when they were at peace with others; they again returning to their former sinful courses, fell to War amongst themselves. Notwithstanding, having yet fresh in mind the late calamities which had been so heavy upon them, both Ministers, Peers, and Commons kept themselves somewhat in order: But after their death, the generation which next followed little knowing, and less regarding the storms past in their Fathers days, and having respect only to the present prosperous estate and condition wherein they lived, fell to all manner of abominations: Justice, and Judgment were turned backward, and equity could not enter, and he that refrained from evil made himself a prey: Inasmuch as Gildas, our ancientest Historiographer complains, that they fell into all manner of wickedness, whereunto the nature of Man is inclined, and especially into that which is the overthrow of the best states, viz. The hatred of the truth, and love of lyes, embracing evil instead of good; and receiving the Devil under the notion of an Angel of light: They also, as a further aggravation of their sin, neglected to preach the Gospel of Christ to the English and Saxons which inhabited in the land amongst them: This hastened the wrath of God upon them, so that they were chased out of their Cities, and Towns, and the land fell into the possession of the Saxons, Anno Christi 568. By whom the Christian Ministers of the Britains were wholly driven out.

judgments

A great Persecution.

Theonus Arch-Bishop of London, and Thadeosius Arch-Bishop of York, seeing their Churches wasted, and their people slain, and dispersed, left their seats in Britain, and fled into wales.

The Saxons being thus possessors of the land, divided it into Seven Kingdoms. Yet God left not their cruelty shewed to the Britains, and their usurpation of their land long unpunished: For these Saxon Kings falling out amongst themselves, cruelly devoured each other, one Warring against another till they were neither able to help themselves, nor to resist their Enemies.

The Hierarchy erected.

A just judgment.

The Gospel was first received by King Lucius, Anno Christi 180. from which time it continued in Britain Four hundred and odd years: Then by the Saxons it was almost extinct about Forty four years, from whose first coming into this Kingdom till their compleat conquest of the Britains were Two hundred and forty years. In sum, from Christ to Lucius were One hundred and eighty years. The continuance of the Gospel from Lucius to the entering of the Saxons were Three hundred and two years; The decay of Religion, to the restitution of it by Austin were One hundred and forty three years, whose coming into Britain was Anno Christi 598. And the occasion thereof was this.

Chronological notes.

Pelagius being Bishop of Rome, Gregory seeing some Children in the Market-place of Rome, being carried thither out of England to be sold, and having fair and beautiful Faces, Gregory demanded of what Country they were, and understanding that they came out of England, and were Heathens, he much lamented the case of the land, the Inhabitants being so beautiful, and Angelical, and yet subject to the Prince of darkness; and asking moreover of what Province they were, it was answered, They were of Deira; These People, saith he, are to be delivered de ira Dei, from the wrath of God: And further understanding that their Kings Name was Alle; There, saith he, ought Allelujah to be sung to the living God. He was also strongly pressed in Spirit to go into England and to endeavor the conversion of these Heathens, But Pelagius and the Church at Rome would not permit it at that time: yet Gregory, after Pelagius his death, being chosen Bishop of Rome, and remembering his former intentions, he sent Austin with about Forty Preachers more to undertake this work.

Austin sent into England.

As Austin and his Company was travelling towards England, a sudden fear surprized their Hearts, insomuch that they made a stop, and sent Austin back again to Gregory, desiring to be excused from that difficult, and dangerous enterprise of converting a Heathenish and Barbarous People, whose language they neither understood, nor were able to resist their rudeness: Gregory labored to confirm, and comfort Austin against all discouragements, sending him back again to his Companions, and writing by him to them, to exhort, and persuade them not to desist from so godly an enterprise, telling them how acceptable their labors would be with God, and how advantageous to themselves: And this Letter so prevailed with them, that they came at length to the Isle of Thanet not far from Sandwich in Kent, near unto which place also was the Palace of the King.

A special Providence.

This King was Ethelbert, Fifth King of that Province, who a little before had married a Christian French Woman, to whom he had promised the enjoyment of her Faith and Religion.

to the King.

Austin being thus arrived, he sent some Messengers, with their Interpreters to the King, signifying that he, and his Fellows were come from Rome to bring to him, and his people the glad tidings of salvation; whereby they might eternally Reign in Heaven with the only true God for evermore, if they would hearken to the Gospel which they were ready to preach unto them. The King having heard something before from his Wife of this way, appointed a time, when he would meet with Austin, who at his coming, preached unto him: After which the King told him, That the words which he spake were very fair: Yet, saith he, because to me this way is uncouth, and new, I cannot suddenly depart from my Country Laws wherein I have been so long nurtured; yet since ye are come so far for my sake, you shall not be molested by me, but shall be well intreated, having all things provided for you which are necessary for your comfortable subsistence: we also grant you free leave to Preach to our People, and to Convert as many as you can to the Faith of your Religion.

Many converted.

Then went they to Canterbury, where the King had given them a Mansion for their abode: There they continued Preaching, and Baptizing such as through Gods grace, were converted by their Ministry. The King also at length, having well considered their manner of life, and moved with the miracles that God was pleased to work by them, heard them the more willingly, and at length through their Ministry, and example in their holy lives, he was Converted and Baptized Anno Christi 586. and of his Age 36. By whose example multitudes flocked to their Ministry, and being Baptized were daily added to the Church of Christ. The King forced none to it, but did most esteem and imbrace those of his Subjects that did willingly offer themselves.

ers sent over by Gregory.

Then did Austin send Laurence, one of his company, to Rome to Gregory to acquaint him with the success that God had given them, and to seek for resolution in sundry doubtful, and difficult cases: Gregory much rejoiced at the good news, and returned answers to all his questions: He sent also to the Church of England more coadjutors and helpers, Melitus, Justus, Paulinus, and Ruffianus, with Books, and such other requisites as he judged necessary for the English Church. He writ also to Austin to encourage, and direct him in the prosecution of that great work which he was engaged in. He directed also concerning the Idolatrous Temples, which he advised not to be pulled down, but to be converted to the use of the Christian Congregations. He also warned Austin to take heed that he grew not proud, nor puffed up by reason of those miracles which God was pleased to work by his Hands in converting the People of England, but rather to fear, and tremble, lest being puffed up by the outward works of miracles, he should fall inwardly through the vain glory of his heart, and therefore he advised him to repress such swellings by thinking of his manifold sins against God, for which he had more cause to be humbled, than to be puffed up for the other: Telling him that all the Elect of God cannot work miracles, and yet their their Names are written in the Book of life, and therefore exhorted him not to rejoyce so much for his working miracles, as to labor to see his Name written in the Book of life, and that he should remember that whatsoever miracle it pleased God to work by him, that it was not done for his sake, but for the conversion and salvation of the English Nation, &c.

He also directed another Epistle to King Ethelbert wherein he first praiseth God, then commends and encourageth the King, exhorts him to perseverance in the holy profession of Christ's Faith, and to be fervent and zealous in the same, and in endeavoring the conversion of his people, the destruction of Idolatry, and in Ruling and Governing his Kingdom in all holiness, after the godly example of that most Christian Emperor, Constantine the Great. Lastly, he comforts him with the promises of life, and salvation in the world to come, &c. And finally, intreats him to except of such presents, and gifts as he had sent unto him.

Miletus was especially sent by Gregory to convert the East Saxons in Essex, and it pleased God so to bleis his endeavours, that he converted Sigebert the King, who made him Bishop of London, and who (together with his Uncle Ethelbert) built the Church of Saint Paul in London.

Afterward Austin with the assistance of Miletus, and Justus, sent to, and gathered together all the Britain Bishops, and Doctors, exhorting and charging them that they should assist him in preaching of the Word of God to the English Men, as also to reform some rights amongst themselves, wherein they rather followed the Eastern than the Western Churches. The later the Britain Bishops refused without the assent of all them which used the same customs with themselves.

After this also Austine gathered a second Synod, unto which came Seven Bishops of Britain together with the Sagest Men of that famous Abby of Bangor: But they first asked counfel of an old wise, and holy Man amongst them. Whether they should be obedient to Austin or no? His answer was, If he be the Servant of God, agree to him. But how shall we know that? said they. He answered, If he be meek and humble, by that you may know that he is the Servant of God. But how, say they, shall we know him to be humble, and meek? By this, said he, seeing you are the greater number; if he at your coming into the Synod shall rise up, and salute you courteously, by that you shall see his humility: But if he contemn and despise you, despise you him again.

Being thus instructed they went to the Synod, and at their entrance, Austin, after the Romish manner, keeping his Chair, moved not at all: The Britains offended hereat, after some heat of words, rose up, and departed in great displeasure: Whereupon Austin said, That if they would not have peace with their Brethren, they should have War with their Enemies, and if they refused to joyn with them in preaching of the Gospel to the English, they should suffer death by their Hands.

Surely both parties were much to blame in this business: Austin for his proud carriage, and the Britains for neglecting their duty upon private discontents to joyn with the other by preaching the Gospel, to seek the conversion of the Idolatrous Saxons; and indeed God suffered them not long to go unpunished for it: For shortly after, Ethelbert King of Northumberland being a Pagan, and therefore hating the Britains, went with a great Army against the City of Chester where Brockmail, the Major of that place, raised an Army to defend the Britains.

There was at this time at Bangor in Wales a great Monastery, in which were many godly Monks that lived by the sweat of their brows and labor of their hands, that sort of Men being far unlike to Monks in after ages. Out of this Monastery the Monks went to Chester, to pray for their Friends good success against the Saxons, and Three days they continued in Fasting, and Prayer: Ethelfride the afore said King seeing them so intent on their Prayers, asked what for of Men they were: and being told that they prayed for his Enemies: Then said he, Though they bear no weapons yet they fight against us, and with their Prayers and Preachings they persecute us. Wherefore after he had overcome the Britains, he commanded his Men to fall upon these unarmed Monks, of whom he Martyred at that time Eleven hundred, only Fifty of them escaped with Brocmaile, all the rest were murthered. But God left not their death long unrevenged; For this cruel King was not long after slain in the Field by Christian Edwin that succeeded in the Kingdom.

Austin with his associates continuing to preach to the Saxons, went so far as into Yorkshire, where he Converted and Baptized Ten thousand Persons; and shortly after, finding his end to approach, he appointed Laurentius to be his Successor, and so quietly departed in the Lord, having continued in England about Fifteen years.

King Ethelbert had a Daughter called Ethelburg, whom he married to one Edwin, as yet a Pagan. This Edwin being envied and hated by Ethelfride, of whom mention is made before, was forced to fly to Redwald, King of the East Angles; which Redwald being partly over-awed, and partly corrupted by Bribes of Ethelfride, intended to betray Edwin to him; of which conspiracy (as God would have it) Edwin was informed by a secret Friend, who perswaded him to fly, and save himself; To whom Edwin said, whither shall I fly that have already sought for shelter almost in all the Provinces of the Realm? And if I must needs be slain, I had rather the King should do it, than some other unworthy Person.

A Vision.

Afterwards being by himself alone, and solitary, there appeared one to him, who said, I know well the cause of thy heaviness; what wouldest thou give him that would deliver thee from this fear, and reconcile thee to Redwald again? I would (said Edwin) give him all that ever I could make. And what, said the other, if I make thee a mightier King than any of thy Progenitors? Edwin answered as before. Then said the other, And what if I shew thee a better kind and way of life than ever was shewed to any of thy Ancestors, wilt thou obey and do after my counsel? Yea (said Edwin) with all my heart I will do it. Then the other laying his Hand on his Head said, When this token happeneth unto thee, then remember this time of tribulation, and the promise which thou hast made, and the words which I have said unto thee. And so he vanished out of his sight.

Presently after came his Friend to him, bidding him be of good cheer; For the Heart (said he) of King Redwald which formerly sought thy destruction, now by the Mediation of his Queen is turned; so that he is resolved to keep promise with thee, and to protect thee whatever comes of it. Yea, not long after Redwald raised a great Army, and in Edwins quarrel went against Ethelfride, and gave Battel to him upon the Borders of Mercia: In which Battel Ethelfride was slain, and Edwin was placed quietly in the possession of Northumberland; yet all this while he remained a Pagan, though Ethelburg his Queen, a godly Woman, and Paulinus the Bishop ceased not to stir up, and perswade him to embrace the Christian Faith; But his Nobles and Councillors dissuading him, he was hard to be won. Then did the Lord bring a new affliction upon him, to humble, and bring him home unto himself, the occasion whereof was this.

Ethelfride slain
Edwin made King.

A special Providence.

Quicelinus and Kinegilsus, Kings of the West Saxons, envying and hating Edwin, suborned a Cut-throat privily to murther him, who watching his opportunity when the King had but a few with him, ran at him with an envenomed Sword, but one of his Servants suddenly stepped between the King and the thrust, and so received the Sword thorow his own Body, the King also being somewhat wounded by the Swords point: The murtherer being apprehended, confessed by whom he was set; and the King lay long sick of the poisoned wound before he was healed: But when he was almost well, he raised a great Host to go against the West Saxon Kings, who had so basely sought his destruction, withal, promising unto Jesus Christ, that if he obtained the Victory, he would presently be Baptized;

A Vow.

Baptized; and whereas his Wife was brought to Bed of a Daughter at that time, he caused it to be Baptized, together with Twelve more of his Family. Then went he forth against his Enemies, and thorow the power of Christ, obtained a great and glorious Victory, vanquishing and putting the adverse Army to flight, and so returned home with honor and great joy; yet did the pomp and glory of the world so dazle his Eyes, that he had little mind to perform his Vow of being Baptized, only he heard Paulinus Preach, and gave over his Idolatrous services, but he told him, That he could not suddenly forsake the Religion of his Forefathers, nor be Baptized but upon mature deliberation; and good advice of his Council.

A Victory of Edwin.

Temptation.

About the same time Boniface Bishop of Rome sent to him and his Queen some Presents, and hortatory Letters to forsake his Idolatry, and to imbrace the Christian Faith; yet neither would this prevail with him, insomuch as Paulinus seeing how he was hardned, and would not be perswaded to be Baptized, he poured out his Prayers incessantly before God for his conversion: After which the former Vision shewed to Edwin, was revealed to him; Whereupon Paulinus coming to the King at a fit season, layed his Hand on his Head, asking him, if he knew that Token. The King remembring it well, was so affected, that he was ready to fall down at his Feet: But Paulinus not suffering it, said to him, Behold, O King, you have vanquished your Enemies, you have obtained your Kingdom, now perform your promise; which was to imbrace the Christian Faith, and to be obedient unto our Lord Christ. The King, after consultation with his Nobles, was himself with many other of his Subjects Baptized by Paulinus at York; and presently after all the Idols with their Altars were cast down, and destroyed.

Idolatry destroyed.

Paulinus after this preached and converted many others in Yorkshire, and other neighboring Counties, as far as Lincolnshire, whom he also Baptized into the Christian Faith, and added them to the Church thereby.

Edwin having thus imbraced, and established the Faith of Christ in his Kingdom, was so careful in administration of Justice, and government of his people, that a single Woman loaden with Gold might have travelled from Sea to Sea, and none durst molest her. He also caused Brazen Dishes to be chained by every Fountain in the high-ways for the refreshing of Passengers.

King Edwin's justice.

His Charity.

King Edwin having after his Baptism, lived Six years in great Peace: The Devil enraged at the progress of the Gospel, raised up Cedwalla King of the Britains, and wicked Penda King of the Mercians to make War against him, and God, which doth not always prosper the better cause, suffered them to prevail, so that godly Edwin was slain in the Battel, as Josiah fighting against Pharaoh Necho. After which Cedwalla and Penda with his Idolatrous Mercians raised a great Persecution against Edwin's Christian Subjects, sparing neither age nor sex, but in an inhumane manner butchering all: Insomuch as Edelburg the Queen, and Eufled her Daughter, with Paulinus the Bishop, were fain to fly by water into Kent; yet did Paulinus leave one James a godly Man to Preach to those Northern Countries, who, through Gods grace, Converted and Baptized very many till Peace was again recovered, and the number of the faithful much increasing, the Church recovered its pristine beauty.

A new Persecution.

Flight in Persecution.

Afterwards Oswald the second Son of Ethelfride, succeeded in the Northern Kingdom, which when Cedwalla had notice of, he with King Penda raised a mighty host, thinking to slay Oswald as he had before slain Edwin; But Oswald hearing the approach of his numerous Enemies, betook himself to Prayer unto God which is the giver of Victory, beseeching him meekly to shew his power in protecting and saving his own people from the power of their enraged Enemies: After which, joyning Battel with Cedwalla, and Penda, though their Army far exceeded his for number, yet through Gods mercy, he obtained a great and glorious Victory over them, Cedwalla himself being slain in the fight.

Much

Much is spoken of this Oswald by way of commendation for his fervent zeal in the Christian Religion, for his mercy and charity to the poor, and for his other rare virtues: And for the further propagation of the Gospel amongst his people, he sent into Scotland for a godly Bishop and famous Preacher called Aidanus: And the King being well acquainted with the Scottish language, Aidanus preaching in the Scottish tongue to the Saxons, the King himself interpreted it, not disdainning to expound it to his Nobles, and Subjects in their own language. His tender pitty to the poor was so great, that being upon an Easter-day at Dinner with Aidanus, and served in Silver, one of the Servitors telling him that there were a great number of poor sitting in the street, desiring an Alms of the King: He caused the meat prepared for himself to be sent unto them, taking a Silver Dish also that stood before him, and breaking it in pieces, he distributed it amongst them: Aidanus seeing this, and wondring at it, he took him by the Hand, praying to God that that Hand which was the instrument of such mercy might never rot, which as some Authors say came to pass. Also by the means of this Oswald, Kinigilsus King of the West-Saxons was converted to the Faith of Christ, especially by the godly labors of Berinus, sent over by the Bishop of Rome to preach to the English. After which Berinus, through Gods grace, Converted and Baptized Quicelinus, Brother to Kinigilsus, who was King in Dorsetshire, together with many of their Subjects.

Oswald having Reigned with much prudence and piety, for the space of Nine years, was at last persecuted and slain by wicked Penda, King of the Mercians. But this cruel Persecutor escaped not long the revenging hand of God: For Oswie succeeding his Brother Oswald in the Kingdom, raised an Army, and though he had not the third of Penda's number of Soldiers; yet through Gods mercy, he fought with him, gave them a great overthrow, and slew Penda himself.

Wolferus, Penda's Son succeeded in the Kingdom of South-Mercia on this side Trent, who marrying Ermenilda, Daughter of Ercombert King of Kent, was shortly after Converted and Baptized: After which, having conquered the Isle of White, he gave it to Sigebert King of the East-Angles upon condition that he should imbrace the Christian Faith, and be Baptized; by which means, and by the ministry of Finianus, the East-Angles were many of them Converted and Baptized.

But to return to Oswie, he was affable, courteous, and liberal to his people, and no less fervent in his Religion towards God. Upon a time he had given to Aidanus a princely Horse with rich trappings, and other furniture; and this he did, because Aidanus used to travel on foot from place to place to preach the Gospel, and the King was willing by this means to ease him. As Aidanus was riding by the way upon this stately Horse, a poor Man met him, craving his charity; Aidanus having nothing else to give, alighted from his Horse, and gave it to him, trapped as he was: The King hearing of it, as he was going in with Aidanus to Dinner, said unto him, what meant you, Father, to give away my Horse? Had not I other Horses in my Stable that might have served the Begger well enough, but you must give away that which of purpose I had picked out for your own use? The Bishop seeming somewhat offended, replied, why, O King, do you set more by your Horse than you do by Jesus Christ? The King hearing this, fell down at the Bishops feet; desiring him to forgive him, professing that he would never after blame him for any treasure of his that he should give away: The Bishop seeing the Kings humility, and piety, took him up, cheered him with comfortable words, and presently after was very heavy, and fell a weeping; and being asked the reason of it, he said, I weep because this King cannot live long: This People is not worthy to have such a Prince, as he is, to reign over them; which indeed shortly after came came to pass; For Oswie, King of Bernicia hating him for his goodness, suborned some traiterously to murder him.

At this time the Bishops, and Ministers both of the Britains and English gave themselves wholly to teaching and preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the people, not entangling themselves with the affairs of the world, but both by Life and Doctrine, they were burning and shining lights, and so free from covetousness, that when great possessions were forced upon them, they refused to receive them; yet presently after the Devil cast in a Bone of contention amongst them, about the time for the celebration of Easter, the Britains and Scottish Bishops following the custom of the Eastern Churches, the other of the Western: For the composing of which difference a Synod was called, which yet did not fully put an end to the controversy.

Faithful Pastors.

About this time, wolferus being licensed by Ethelwold the King, preached unto his Nobles and People of South-Sax, and converted them to Christ; presently after which they had plenty of Rain, which had been much wanting for Three years together, which had caused a very great Famine amongst them, in so much as many people being grievously pinched, and tormented with the Famine, used to get sometimes by Forty together, upon the Rocks by the Sea-side, and throw themselves down from thence into the Sea: But now, having imbraced the Gospel, it pleased God to give them Rain, and thereby great plenty, the barren earth becoming very fruitful.

A terrible Famine.

The Blessings of the Gospel.

And thus we have heard how, and by what means the Idolatrous people of the Saxons and English were converted to God; and induced to imbrace the true Faith of Jesus Christ, the South-Saxons with the Isle of Wight, being the last that gave entertainment to the same.

About this time the Church of Rome was degenerated from its pristine purity, and Antichrist was got into his throne: So that the Pope of Rome beginning to Lord it over the Churches of Christ, he sent Theodorus from Italy to England to be Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, together with many Monks of Italy to set up in the English Church Latin service, Masses, Ceremonies, Letanies, with such other Romish trash: This Theodorus played Rex, placing and displacing Bishops, and Ministers at his pleasure; and in a short time Christianity degenerated into Superstition: Kings and Queens that were religiously affected, left their Kingdoms, and turned Monks, and Nuns, and as error overspread the Land, so did impiety and prophaneness: Kings turned Tyrants, and the People wallowed in all manner of wickedness, which sins made way for a great and grievous plague, and scourge to this nation by the coming in of the Heathen Danes, as afterwards we shall hear.

CHAP. III.

Of the union of the Heptarchy under Egbert; and of the invasion by the Danes, and of the Persecution of the English Church under them.

AT this time there were Seven Kings of the Saxons Reigning in several parts of this Kingdom, Anno Christi 795. There was also in the Kingdom of Brightricus, one Egbert, a Noble person of the Royal blood, who being envied, and feared by Brightricus, he sought his death, so that Egbert, to avoid the danger, fled into France, where he remained till the death of Brightricus; after which he returned into his Country of the West-Saxons, where where he behaved himself so prudently, and Nobly, that he obtained that Kingdom: But at his first settlement, Bernulphus King of Mercia, and some other Kings greatly derided and contemned him, making divers jests and scornful rimes of him, which he bore patiently for a time: But when he was well settled in his Kingdom, and was assured of the love and good will of his Subjects, especially God working withal, he assembled his Knights, with whom he went against Bernulphus, and though his Adversary had at least Six against One in his Army, yet through the power of God, which is the giver of Victory, he won the Field, and seized upon the Kingdom which he annexed to his own.

After that he made War upon the Kentish Saxons, overcame them, and enjoyed their Kingdom: The like he did in Northumberland, making these Kings Tributary to him: He won also the City of Chester from the Britains, whereof they had kept possession till that day: After divers other Battels and Victories, he quietly enjoyed the dominion of the whole Land, which till then was called Britain: But he now, assembling his Lords and Peers to Winchester, was by their joynt consents and advice, Crowned King of the whole Realm, whereupon he sent out his commissions straitly charging that all the Saxons should be called English, and the Kingdom England.

About this time the Pagan Danes came over into Northumberland, making horrible destruction wheresoever they came, especially in Holy Island, where they spoiled the Churches, murdered the Ministers, with Men, Women, and Children after a most cruel manner, and so departed. But afterwards in the Thirtieth year of King Egbert, they returned a second time with a great host, spoiling, and laying waste the Isle Shepy in Kent. Egbert hearing hereof, raised an Army, went against them, and fought with them at Carrum: But being overpowered by the Danes, he, with his Knights were fain to forsake the Field: Yet in the next Battel, through Gods mercy, he overthrew, and slew a great multitude of them, driving the rest away into their own Country.

The year following the Danes, presuming upon their former success, returned again into the West of this Land, where, joyning with the Britains, they invaded the Lands of Egbert, making great spoil wherever they came; After which time they were still abiding in one part or other of England till the time of Hardekanute, last King of the Danish Blood, and though they were many times beaten, and driven from one place to another, yet they ever gathered new strength and power, and abode still in the Land, exercising such horrible cruelties and villanies against the Christian English, as were never exercised before by any of the Invaders of this Land, which was a just hand of God upon them for the superstitions practised amongst them. Egbert having Reigned Thirty seven years, died, leaving his Kingdom to Ethelwolph his Son, telling him that he should be happy, if laying aside sluggishness, he would govern his Kingdom with diligence, and industry. Ethelwolph in his Fathers life-time was made Bishop of Winchester, but afterwards, being the only Son of Egbert, he was made King; He was a very devout Man, and a great Friend to the Ministers, giving them the Tithe of all his Goods, and Lands, with liberty and freedom from all service, and civil charges: Afterwards he went to Rome, shewing much obsequiousness and bounty to the Pope, and as he returned back through France, he married the Daughter of Carolus Calvus, with whom he came home into England: He had two Bishops about him which were his chiefest favorites, Adelstan Bishop of Shireborn, a Man very well skilled in civil and temporal affairs, and Swithin Bishop of Winchester, a Man wholly addicted to spiritual and heavenly meditations, and very careful to counsel the King for the good of his Soul. He had been Tutor to the King in his minority, and the King ever after much revered him, and was very willing to hearken to his advice and counsel.

And

The Persecution of the Church in Britain.

Towards the latter end of his Reign there arrived many more Danes in Hampshire in Thirty three Ships, through whose barbarous tyranny and cruelty, abundance of English Blood was shed, in Dorsetshire, Portsmouth, Kent, Essex, London, and divers other places: And in a Battel against them, Ethelwolph was overcome; yet at length it pleased God that he obtained a great Victory over them at Okeley, driving them to their Ships for shelter; But after they had hovered a while upon the Sea, they landed again, committing horrible outrages; The cause of which great affliction an ancient Writer thus lers down.

Invasion by the Danes.

The Danes beaten!

In the Primitive Church of the English, Religion did most clearly shine forth, inasmuch that Kings, Queens, Princes, Ecclesiastical Persons, &c. thirsting after the Kingdom of Heaven, forsook all and followed the Lord; But in process of time Piety decayed, and Impiety succeeded in the room thereof, neither was any thing more odious and hateful than holiness and justice; nor any thing in esteem but Civil war and Bloodshed: whereupon the Lord sent amongst them the cruel Heathen Danes, like swarms of Bees, which neither spared women nor Children, but for the space of about two Hundred and thirty years, destroyed this sinful Land from one Sea to the other, from Man also to Beast: For in their oft invasions of England, they went not about to subdue, conquer and possess it, but to spoil, destroy, and lay it waste; and if at any time they were beaten by the English, it little availed, for that other Navies with greater power were ready suddenly, and unawares to break into other places, and to destroy all before them.

Sin the forerunner of persecution.

But to these he might have added their sin of superstition, and the sin of their Fathers, who falsifying their faith and promise with the Britains, had cruelly murdered their Nobles, wickedly oppressed their Commons; impiously persecuted the innocent Christians, injuriously possessed their Land and Habitations, chasing the ancient native Inhabitants out of their Houses and Country: Besides the cruel murder of the Monks of Bangor, and divers foul slaughters amongst the poor Britains, who sent for them to be their helpers; wherefore Gods just judgment falling upon them, from that time never suffered them to live in quiet from forreign Enemies, till the coming of William the Norman.

A just judgment.

Shortly after King Ethelwolph's Victory over the Danes, he fell sick, and dyed, leaving Four Sons behind him, Ethelbald, Ethelbright, Ethelred, and Allured, all which succeeded each other in the Kingdom.

In the time of the Third Sons Reign [Ethelred] the Danes breaking in on every side, especially about York, committed infinite spoil, the City of York they sacked, and burnt. Ethelred with the help of his Brother Allured fought Nine Battels with them in one year. But the Northumbrians at that time rebelling against King Ethelred, thinking to recover their lost Kingdom, the strength of the English Nation was much weakened hereby, and their divisions gave the Danes great advantage to prevail against them.

Ethelred.

Towards the latter end of Ethelreds Reign, Anno 870. the Danes being possessed of the Northcountry, after a cruel persecution, and much Blood shed in those parts, taking Ship they intended to Sail from thence into the East-Angles, and by the way they met with another great Fleet of Danes under Inguar, and Hubba, who consulting together, united their forces, and so Landed in Norfolk, going on as far as Thetford.

A great persecution.

Edmund the Vice-Roy of that Kingdom hearing of it, raised an Army, and gave them Battel: But Edmund, and his company were forced to forsake the Field; and himself, with some few of his Friends, fled into Framingham Castle: Presently after came a Messenger to him, delivering himself in these words.

Inguar Prince of the Danes, is come most vigorously with innumerable Legions, subduing both by Sea and Land many Nations to him, and being now arrived in these parts, requireth thee to be subject to him, to yield up to him thy hid treasures, and all other the riches of thine Ancestors, and so to Reign under him:

him: which thing if thou refusest to do, he judges thee to be unworthy both of life, and Kingdom. Edmund hearing this proud message of the Pagan, after consultation had with his Friends, returned to the messenger this answer: Go tell thy Lord these words, that Edmund a Christian King, for the love of a temporal life, will not submit himself to a Pagan Duke, unless he before will become a Christian.

The wicked, and crafty Dane receiving this answer, presently with his Army marched towards the King; who again joyned Battel with him: But the King being again worsted, and seeing the miserable slaughter of his men, fled to the Castle of Halesdon, now Saint Edmundsbury, where this blessed man, being on every side environed by his enemies, patiently yielded himself to them, and because he would not be brought to deny Christ, or his truth, they there most cruelly bound him to a Tree, and caused him to be shot to death: After which they smote off his Head, and threw it into a thicket of Bushes.

After the Martyrdom of this holy Man, the Danes having robbed, and spoiled all that Country, they returned to their ships, and after a while landed in Surrey, and making pittiful havock all the way, they at last came to Reading, which Town and Castle they besieged, and after three dayes took them: But shortly after God met with them for all their cruelty; for Inguar, and Hubba proceeding in their journey, were met with, and both of them slain at Englefield. Yet did their Army keep so close together that the English could get no advantage against them. At last King Ethelred, and Allured forced them to fight a Battel, in which the Danes were discomfited, and many of them slain: The rest which escaped fled into a Castle: There the King besieged them, but after a while committed the prosecution of the siege to the Duke of Barkshire, and so departed.

When the Danes understood that the King was gone, they issued suddenly out of the Castle, and taking the Duke unprovided, slew him, together with many of his people; and then joyning with many other Danes that were scattered in other parts, they formed a strong Army. Tidings hereof being brought to King Ethelred it put him into a great heaviness, and to aggravate his sorrow another messenger brought him word of the landing of Osfick King of Denmark, who with a great Host was embattelled at Ashton: Thitherwards therefore did Ethelred, with his Brother Allured, speed themselves with their Army to withstand the Danes: When they came near to the place, the King staying somewhat long at his devotion, his Brother Allured, with the Van of the Army was joyned in Battel with the Danes, whereupon a messenger hastened to the King requesting him to come on with the rest of his Army; But he being imployed in holy Meditation, and Prayer, would not stir a foot till he had ended his service of God: In the mean time the Danes fiercely assaulted Allured, and his Men, and won the Hill of them, and the Christians were in great danger to lose the Field: But the King bringing on the main Battel, (through the grace, and power of God:) quickly recovered the hill from the Infidels, and so discomfited the Danes that he soon put them to flight, and slew the greatest part of them, together with their King Osfick, with five of his Dukes, and the rest fled into Reading.

Yet after this the Danes again resembled their forces, and formed a new Army, and met at Basingstoke, and there gave Battel to the King: and had the better of him.

After Two Months the King raised a fresh Army, and at Merton fought a great Battel with the Danes, but in conclusion the Danes had the honor of the Field, and the King being wounded was forced to fly. After which victories the Danes fell to spoiling of the Country, killing Man, Woman, and Child of the Christians that they met with: They also prophaned the Churches, making stables of them, and putting them to other vile uses.

The King oppressed by his enemies on every side, seeing his Land miserably rably wasted by the Infidels, and his own Knights, and Soldiers consumed by the Wars, and himself lying wounded, he sent his Commissions into Northumberland, Mercia, and the East-Angles, to raise more forces; But they afforded him little comfort; which struck so to the heart of this good King, that shortly after he deceased, having reigned Eight years, and leaving no issue behind him, his Brother Allured succeeded in the Kingdom.

King Ethelred
deceased.

King Allured.
His character.

Amongst all the Saxon-Kings that were before him, there was none comparable to this Allured for excellent, and singular qualities worthy the greatness of a King, whether we look upon his valiant Acts, and incessant Travels which from time to time he sustained against his enemies, during almost the whole time of his Reign, for the safety and preservation of his people, or whether we consider his piety, and excellent virtues, joyned with a publick, and tender care, and zealous study for the peace, and tranquility of his Realm: All which did notably appear by the excellent Laws which he made, and his care for the execution of the same; as also by his own private exercises in the virtuous institution of his life, and by his notable knowledge in good Letters, and a fervent love to, and Princely desire to advance, and propagate the same through his whole Realm; all which Heroical, and excellent properties seldom meet together in one Prince. First therefore to speak of his valiant Acts, and painful Travels which he underwent in defence of his Subjects, against the raging Tyranny of the Danes.

King Allured, or Alfred seeing his Lords and people much wasted, and decayed by reason of the former Wars, he endeavored as well as he could to raise an Army of the remainder, with which, within Two Months after he came to the Kingdom, he encountered with the Danes besides Wilton, where he gave them Battel: But being exceedingly overpowred through the multitude of his Adversaries, he was put to the worse, although not without a great slaughter of the Pagan Army: Whereupon the Danes, seeing how they were weakned, treated with the King, and agreed to depart out of his Kingdom of West-Saxons, and accordingly they removed from Reading to London, where they continued all the Winter following, and in the Spring following they went from London, and drew to Lindsey, robbing and spoiling the Towns, and Villages all the way as they went; From thence they went to Repingdon, where they joyned with Three other Kings of the Danes, and so made a mighty Army; which Army they divided into Two parts: One remaining in Northumberland under their King Halden, the other went to Grantbridge, and there abode.

His valour.

The cruelty of the Danes.

About this time King Allured had a great Fight with Six of the Danish Ships upon the Sea; whereof they took One, the rest fled. At the same time went Rollo the Dane into Normandy, where he was Duke Thirty years, and was converted to the Christian Faith and Baptized.

The Danes beaten at Sea.

The Danish Army that quartered at Grantbridge invaded the West-Saxons again, taking the Castle of Warham: But King Allured presently marched against them with a sufficient Army, which the Danes fearing to encounter with, fought delays till they could send for more aid: The King forced them to crave truce, and to leave sufficient pledges in his Hands, with promise that they would no more return into his Kingdom, and hereupon he let them go: But they, falsifying their promises, in the Night-time secretly took their journey by Sea towards Excester: By the way they lost One hundred and twenty of their small Ships in a Tempest near Sandwich: The Danish Horsemen went by Land, whom King Allured followed, but could not overtake them till they came to Excester: Then did they again treat with him, gave him new pledges, and promised peace, whereupon the King departed.

Perfidiousness.

At Excester the number of the Pagans did daily increase by the access of new forces, so that after a while they returned back into Mercia, keeping a great part of the Land to their own use. Anno 879. The Danes having the Rule of all the North of England, thought soon that Allured should have dominion in the South, whereupon, raising all the Forces that possibly they could, they marched towards Chippinham in West-Sax, with such a numerous Army that the King and his people were altogether unable to resist them: So that many of the English fled over the Sea, others submitted themselves to the Danes, and the rest remained with the King.

The Kings gratitude.

The King seeing his enemies strength, and his own weakness, withdrew himself with a few of his Nobles into a woody Country in Somersetshire, called Etheling, where they had no means of subsistence but what they got by Hunting, and Fishing: The place where they abode was in a great Marsh into which there was no access, but by Boat, and had in it a great Wood called Selwood, and in the middle a little Plain of about Two Acres of ground: At the Kings first coming hither he espied the Cottage of a Swine-herd, to which he repaired unknown, and was there intertained with such poor Fare as the Swineherd, and his Wife could make him; which so pleased the King, that afterward he set the Swineherd to learning, who profiting much therein, the King at last preferred him to a Bishoprick.

Gods goodness to the English.

God at the length pitying the miserable condition of the poor English Men, began to enable them to lift up their Heads again; and their first good success was this.

Halden the Danish King, sailing out of the North with Thirty three Ships landed in Devonshire, where he was set upon by some of King Allureds Men that kept a Garison near to that place, who slew Thirteen hundred of the Danes, and took their Imperial Standard called the Raven: King Allured hearing of this Victory, came abroad out of his fastness, and there repaired to him great numbers of people out of Wiltshire, Somersetshire, and Hampshire, so that he had a competent Army.

The Kings
stragem.

Then did the King attempt a bold adventure: For attiring himself like a Minstrel (being skilful in the Saxon Poems) with his instrument of Musick he went into the Danish Camp, and singing, and playing, he went up and down; taking notice of their sloth, and security, and withal heard much of their counsel: Then returning to his own Men, he acquainted them with all that he had observed: And so privily marching against the Danes, in the Night-time he brake into their Camp, slew a great multitude of them, and chased the rest out of his Coasts.

The Danes
beaten.

His Subjects hearing of his valiant acts, repaired to him out of all parts; with whose assistance, through the help of God, he so overmastered the Danes, that he recovered from them Winchester, and divers other very considerable places: and in conclusion he enforced them to sue for peace, which he concluded upon certain conditions, one of which was that their King should imbrace the Christian Faith, and be Baptized: and that all such other Danes as would not do the like, should depart out of his country.

The Danes im-brace the Christian Faith.

Shortly after, Gutrum the Danish King, with Twenty of his chiefeft Nobles came to Winchester, where they were Baptized into the Christian Faith: After which King Allured, having royally feasted them, gave to this new Christian King East-Anglia, containing Norfolk, Suffolk, and part of Cambridgeshire: and to the other Danes that imbraced the Christian Faith, he gave Northumberland, and such of them as refused to imbrace it, departed the Land, and sailed into France. King Allured enjoying a breathing time from his troubles, fell to repairing his Towns and strong Holds, which were ruined by the Danes; and according to the blindness of those dark times, he erected many religious Houses, wherein, though he shewed his religious mind, yet God was not well pleased therewith, and therefore in the Fifteenth year of his Reign, the Pagan Danes returned from France again, landed in Kent, and went on as far as Rochester, where they besieged that City, and lay long before it: They also built a great Tower of wood against the Gates, but the Citizens destroyed it, and defended the City till King Alfred came to their rescue: At whose approach the

Danes

The Persecution of the Church in Britain.

Danes were so affrighted, that they left their Horses for haste, and fled by night to their Ships: The King immediately sending after them, took Sixteen of their Ships, and slew many of the Danes: Then returned he in Triumph to London, which City he much repaired, and beautified, which formerly had been exceedingly defaced by the Danes.

The Danes beaten.
London repaired.

In the One and twentieth year of King Allureds Reign, the Danes again landed in Four places of his Kingdom, in the North, East, and in Two parts of the West. Allured having intelligence hereof, being at this time in the East, he sent messengers to Ethelred, Duke of Mercia, speedily to raise an Army, and to oppose the Danes which were landed in the West, and himself with such forces as he had ready, went against those in the East, whom he pursued so sharply, that he drove them out from those parts: Then they sailed into Kent, whither the King also hasted with his Men, and drove them from thence likewise.

After this they landed again in the East with one Hundred ships, where they rested in quiet, for that the King now was gone Westward. A fourth Host of them the same year came to Chester, which after a long siege they won: But the countrey presently rising, besieged them so straitly, that at the last they were forced to eat their Horses for hunger: And provisions failing, they treated with the Christians, agreed to leave the Country, and so sailed into Northumberland. Then did King Alfred with his Host hast into the North, but when he came near, the Danes fortifying, and well furnishing all their Garisons, took shipping, and sailed into Sussex, landing at Lewes, from whence they marched towards London, and when they came within Twenty miles of the City, they built a Castle, which the Londoners hearing of, they sent forth some Men at Arms, who joyning with the Countrymen thereabouts, drove the Danes from their work, and beat down the Castle which they were building.

Chester won by the Danes.
Resisted by the English.

Shortly after the King came thither in Person, and to prevent the like danger in time to come, he caused the River Luis to be divided into Three streams, so that whereas before it would bear a Ship to that place, it would now scarce bear a Boat. The Danes being here forced to leave their Ships, and Wives, they fled towards Wales, and upon the Banck of Severne they built them a Castle, thither also the King with his Army pursued them: In the mean time the Londoners took their Ships, and some of them they brought to London, the rest they consumed with fire.

The King's River.

About this time for Three Years together England was visited with Three fore judgments; with the Sword of the Danes, with a pestilence amongst Men, and with a murrain of Beasts: Yet was not the good King dejected, but thankfully took from the hand of God, what he was pleased to inflict, and manfully pursued his enemies.

Gods fore judgments on the English.

In the Twenty eighth Year of the Kings Reign, the Danes divided themselves into several parts, some went into Northumberland, some into Norfolk, some into West-Sax, and others of them sailed into France: But Gods judgments pursued these cruel Persecutors of his people in every place: For many of them were slain in Fight by the English, many more perished by shiprack on the Sea, others were taken, and hanged, and Thirty of their Ships also were taken.

Gods judgment on the Danes.

Shortly after King Allured having Reigned almost Thirty Years, died, having valiantly Atchieved many Noble acts, and personally sustained many great afflictions in the necessary defence of his Realm, and Subjects.

King Allured died.

His godly disposition did shew it self betimes, for when in his younger days he found himself troubled with fleshly lusts, instead of seeking to fulfil them in an unlawful way, as most Kings and Princes use to do, he had recourse unto God by prayer, intreating him to help him against them, and besought him that he would send to him some continual sickness for the quenching of those lusts, that so he might be more fit to attend upon the service of God, and more useful in the Government of his Subjects. And God answered his request, visiting him with one sickness after another till he came to be Forty five Years old, whereby he was restrained from that intemperance which he so much abhorred: He was also a faithful stuard in the managing of his outward estate, distributing all his rents, and riches into two equal portions, whereof he employed one moiety to uses Ecclesiastical, the other to his Civil affaires, which latter part he again divided into three portions, the first to the maintenance of his Family, the second to workmen, and builders which were employed about his Houses, the third to strangers. The former part he divided into four portions, the first he gave to the poor, the second to religious Persons, the third to Oxford for the advance of learning, the Fourth he sent for the relief of foreign Churches. He was as careful, and exact in the expence of his time, dividing the Day, and Night in three parts, spending daily Eight hours, if by Wars, and other great busineses, he were not hindered, in study, and learning, other Eight hours in Prayer and Alms-deeds, and the other Eight in his Meals, and sleep.

His charity.

His care to promote learning.
His careful expence of time.

His good Laws.
His justice.

How studious and careful he was in the Government of his Kingdom, appears by those excellent, and wholesom Laws which were devised, and set forth by him, wherein he was very careful to abolish all theft, and Thieves out of the Realm, and did so far attain his desires, that causing brouches of Gold, or at least of Silver and guilt, to be set up in all Cross-ways, there were none so hardy as to take, or steal away the same: He was also so vigilant in overseeing the doings of his Judges, and Officers, that they durst not pervert justice in any case whatsoever. He was very learned himself and a great promoter of Learning in others, and for this end erected many Grammar-schools, was a great Friend to the Universities, sent for learned Men from several Countries; whom he bountifully rewarded, and would suffer none to have any dignity in his Court except he were learned. He translated the Psalms and many other good Books himself into English: And caused divers others to be translated by other Men. He brought up not only his Sons, but his Daughters also in Learning: Wheresoever he was, or whithersoever he went, he alwaies carried about him David's Psalms, and divers Prayers of his own collecting, whereof he continually read, and made use, whensoever he was at leisure.

His piety, and industry.

King Edward.

His Prowess.

After the death of good King Alfred, his Son Edward, surnamed the Elder, succeeded, Anno Christi 901. He was not to be compared with his Father in learning, but in material prowess, and civil government he was not inferior to him, if he did not exceed him. He subdued Wales and Scotland: He reconquered East-Anglia, and recovered Mercia, and Northumberland out of the Hands of the Danes: By reason of his continual Wars, his Subjects were so hardened, and enured to feats of Arms, that so soon as they heard of the approach of any Enemies, without expecting Command from the King or the presence of their Duke, they would presently assemble, and Encounter with them, in knowledge, and order of War always excelling their Adversaries. In the beginning of King Edward's Reign he had many bickerings with the Danes, and one Clito his Uncles Son, turning Renegado, and was made their Captain, who did much spoil in several parts of the Kingdom, but at last King Edward meeting with him between the two Ditches of Saint Edmund's Lands, a great Battel was fought betwixt them, at last Clito, with many of his Danes, was slain, the rest were constrained to Sue for Peace, which upon certain Conditions, and the payment of a Tribute, was granted to them: But in the Twelfth year of King Edward's Reign; the Danes repenting of their Covenants, and raising a great Army, met with the King in Staffordshire, where two great Battels were fought betwixt them, wherein were slain two of the Danish Kings, two Earles, and many Thousands of the Common Soldiers.

A just Judgment.

The Danes beaten.

The King by these means enjoying Peace, applied himself to Building, and repairing Cities, Towns, and Castles rased by the Danes: as Chester, which City he much enlarged: He also Built a strong Castle at Hereford, another at the mouth of the River of Avon, another at Buckingham, &c. In these Buildings his Sister Elfreda was a great help to him, as also in his Wars against the Danes, against whom she oft fought Valiantly, inasmuch as at one time four of her Life-Guard were slain by her. King Edward had seven Children, his Daughters he brought up at the Needle, and Spinning, his Sons to Study, and learning, that so they might be fitter for Government. After a glorious Reign he ended his days, and left his Kingdom to Ethelstan, or Adlestan.

King Ethelstan
his virtues.

This Ethelstan was a Prince of worthy memory, Valiant and Wise in all his Acts, and nothing inferior to his Father Edward. He was renounced for his civil Government, and had prosperous success in reducing his Realm into a Monarchy. He expelled the Danes, subdued the Scots, and quieted the Britains, both in Wales, and Cornwal: He was once in much danger by reason of a conspiracy, the chief contriver whereof was one Elfredus; But it pleased God that he escaped the danger: And Elfred fled to Rome before the Pope to purge himself by his Oath: But forswearing himself, God inflicted a visible Judgment upon him; for as soon as he had taken his Oath, he presently fell down, and being carried away to the English House, he dyed within three days after. Ethelstan in the second year of his Reign subdued the Danes in Northumberland, and Constantine King of the Scots, whom yet upon his submission, he restored to his Kingdom, saying that it was more Honor to make a King, than to be a King.

Shortly after the Scots again Rebelling, King Ethelstan, assembled his Knights, and marched into Scotland, where he subdued his Enemies, and returned home with Victory, and Honor.

A Danish Prince called Alanus, having fled out of England into Scotland, Married Constantines Daughter, and after a while gathered a Company of Danes, Scots, and others, with whom making a strong Army, he Shipped them, and entred into the mouth of Humber with Six hundred and fifteen Ships. King Ethelstan, and his Brother Edmund hearing of it, presently raised an Army, and marched against them: At a place called Brimford both Armies met, betwixt whom a terrible Battel was fought from Morning till Night, and very many were slain on both sides: But at last, through Gods goodnels, the English got the Victory, and slew Constantine King of the Scots with Five other petty Kings, twelve Dukes, and the greatest part of their Army.

The Scots and Danes beaten.

After this Victory King Ethelstan subdued the Northern Britains, and forced them to pay him yearly Twenty Pounds of Gold, Three hundred Pounds of Silver, Two thousand five hundred Head of Beasts, &c. and presently after he subdued the South Britains.

As yet the Pope of Rome had not usurped power over Princes, and therefore King Ethelstan, as his Predecessors had done, enacted good Laws, not only for the good Government of the Common-wealth, but of the Church also: He enacted a Law that all should pay the Tithe to God for the maintenance of his Ministry: not only for their Goods, but of their Cattel, Corn, and Fruits of the Earth, saying, Let us remember what Jacob said: Of all that thou givest me, I will give thee the Tenth: and what Saint Matthew saith, To him that hath it shall be given, and he shall have abundance, &c. He reigneth about Sixteen years, and died without Issue, his Brother succeeding in the Kingdom.

Edmund the Son of Edward the Elder, being Twenty years Old, began his Reign Anno Christi 940. He expelled the Danes, Scots, Normans, and all Foreign Enemies out of his Kingdom. Such Cities as were in their possession he recovered, and then wholly bent his Study, and endeavor to reform, and maintain the State of the Church. He reigned Six years and an half, and was then slain, leaving Two Sons Edwin and Edgar behind him: But because they were not bad Reign and death.

Edwin began his Reign Anno Christi 955. He was given to the Sin of Uncleanneſs, and many other Vices, for which he was Excommunicated by Odo Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and hated by his Subjects: He reigned Four years, and dyed.

Edgar his Brother being Sixteen years old ſucceeded him, Anno Christi 959. He made Dunſtan Arch-bishop of Canterbury, by whose leading, the King was somewhat inclined to superstition: But otherwise much addicted to all Vertues and Princely deportments: An excellent Justicer, and sharp in punishing Vices both in Magistrates and Subjects, so that there was never less Theft, Bribery, Extortion and Oppression; then in his daies. Such Provinces and Lordships as were not yet under his subjection, he subdued, and united to his Dominion; making a compleat Monarchy of the whole Realm, with all the adjacent Islands. The Wicked he kept under, Rebels he suppressed, the Godly he maintained, the Modest he loved. He was very Religious towards God, and beloved of his Subjects, whom he Governed in much Peace and Quietneſs.

And as he was careful to ſerve God, ſo God bleſſed him with abundance of Peace and Reſt from all Wars, from which he was called Pacificus. He was ſo ſtudious of the welfare of his Subjects, that no year paſſed over his Head, where-in he found not out ſomething that conduced very much to the publick good. He was a great maintainer of Religion and Learning; and whereas other Princes in the miſt of Peace and Plenty, grow uſually diſſolute and looſe in their Lives. He on the contrary ever kept a ſtrict watch over himſelf and others, not ſuffering any of his Nobility, though never ſo great, to violate his Laws with Impunity. He was alſo careful to deſtroy all the Ravenous Wolves out of the Land, cauſing Leolin Prince of wales to yield him yearly by way of Tribute Three hundred Wolves, ſo that within a few years there was ſcarce a Wolfe left in England or wales. He alſo built a great Navy, keeping Three thouſand Six hundred Ships of War to ſcoure the Seas in the Summer. In the Winter time he uſed to Ride over his Land in Progreſs, enquiring diligently how his Laws and Statutes were kept, and to ſee that the Poor were no way oppreſſed by the Mighty: and whereas the Danes had brought in a Wicked cuſtom of exceſſive Drinking into the Land, whereupon Drunkenneſs and many other Vices enſued; this good King to prevent this Wickedneſs, ordained certain Cups with Pins or Nails ſet in them, enacting a Law, that whatever Perſon Drank beyond that Mark at one Draught, ſhould forfeit a certain Penny; whereof one half to the Accuſer, the other to the place where the offence was committed.

In the Thirteenth year of his Reign, he being at Cheſter, Eight Petty Kings came and did their Homage to him, as the King of Scotland, the King of Man, the King of wales, &c. He had alſo divers Vices, which rather belong to Chronologers than to me to Write of. He reigned Sixteen years and then died. Amongſt other his good Laws, he enacted that the Sabbath day ſhould be celebrated from Nine a Clock on Saturday Night, till Munday Morning. After his death, much contention aroſe amongſt his Lords, who ſhould be their King: But at laſt by the perſwaſion of Dunſtan, Edward ſurnamed the Martyr, was choſen, anointed, and Crowned King.

Charity.

This King Edward was a Virtuous and meek Prince, very pittiful and liberal to the Poor. In the Fourth year of his Reign he was Hunting in a Forreſt in the Weſt-Country, and having loſt his Company, he Rode to a place where his Mother Alſrith with her Son Egelred did then live. The Queen-Mother being informed by her Servants that the King was come thither, called one of her men to her, whom ſhe knew to be fit for her purpoſe, acquainting him with her whole intent, and giving him inſtructions for the accompliſhment of the ſame,
after

after which she went towards the King, and received him very courteously, desiring him to tarry that night with her, but he with the like Courtesie, excused himself, requesting only to see his Brother, and to drink a Cup of Bear as he sat on Horseback, and so away: The Bear was brought, and as the King was drinking, this Bloody Villain suborned by the Queen, strook him into the Body with a two-edged Dagger: The King feeling himself wounded, set spurs to his Horse, and rode that way wherein he supposed to meet with his company, but having lost much Blood, he fainted and fell from his Horse, one of his Feet hanging in the stirrup, by reason whereof his Horse drew him up and down the Fields till he died, and being so found, though the manner of his death was not known, yet was he known to be the King, and was buried honorably at Warham, after which he was removed to the Minister of Shaftsbury.

The Kings death.

After the murther of King Edward, the Crown fell to his younger Brother Egelred, Son to King Edgar by this Queen Alfrith. This Egelred Reigned Thirty eight years, but his Reign was full of troubles, and great miseries: So that Chronologers speaking of his Reign, say, that it was in the beginning ungracious, wretched in the middle, and hateful in the end. He was but Ten years old when his Brother was slain, yet did he much mourn and weep for him, which so intraged his Mother, that taking Wax-Candles, which were readiest at hand, therewith she scourged him so sore, that he could never after endure Wax-Candles to be burnt before him. At his Coronation, Dunstan Arch-Bishop of Canterbury said, that seeing he came to the Kingdom by horrid conspiracy, and the murther of his Brother, the Land should not be without the Sword and Bloodshed, till there came a People of an unknown language, which should bring the English into thralldom, neither should this wickedness be cleansed without long vengeance from God upon the Nation for it.

His evil Reign.

Queen Alfrith, who was cruel.

A prediction of misery to the Land.

Shortly after his Coronation, a Cloud was seen hanging over the Land, the one half of it looking like Blood, and the other half like Fire. Not long after the Danes arrived in sundry parts of the Land, first spoiling Southernpton, murdering many of the Inhabitants, and carrying the rest away into miserable captivity. From thence they went into the Isle of Thanet, into Cornwall and Devonshire, then into Sussex, in all which places they made woful spoil. About the same time also a great part of London was consumed with fire. Much variance also fell out between the King and his Subjects, which the Danes hearing of, came and did abundance of harm in divers places of the Land, so that the King with great sums of money was forced to buy Peace of them. Besides which miseries the Lord plagued the Land with the Bloody Flux, and Burning Feavers, whereof multitudes died: The like murrian also was amongst the Bealts, and for lack of a due execution of the Laws, many Thieves, Catchpoles, and other Oppressors swarmed in the Land. About the year 994, the Danes again entred England in sundry parts of it, so that the King knew not to what place he should first go to withstand them; and in conclusion he was said to appease their fury with great sums of money. But when that money was spent, these Pagan Persecutors fell to spoiling of the Land afresh in divers places: They also beseged the City of London; but being driven from thence by the valor of the Citizens, they went into Essex, Kent, Sussex and Hampshire, burning and killing whomsoever they met with, neither had the poor English any to relieve them; The King in the mean time giving up himself to uncleanness, and polling his Subjects, and disinheriting Men of their possessions, enforcing them to redeem them with great sums of money: For he paid yearly great sums of money to the Danes, which was called Dane-gelt, which tributes so increased, that from Ten thousand pounds per annum, which he paid at the first, it was in Five or Six years space brought to Forty thousand pounds per annum. And as an aggravation of the Subjects misery, the Lord plagued them with Famine, so that every one was forced to pluck and steal from others; whence it was, that partly by reason of the spoil made by the Danes, partly by reason of Thieves and Bribers, the Land lay under grievous afflictions: And this was caused in a special manner, by the great divisions and contentions, which were amongst the Nobility, who when they met together in counsel, either agreed upon nothing, or else quickly receded from their agreements, and fell to variance and contentions again.

Oppression.

The Danes thus prevailing, they grew exceeding proud and insolent, causing the English Men to plow, sow, and do all the drudgery, whilst they sat idle at home, having their Wives at their pleasure, and Children and Servants at command; And when the Husbandman came home, he could scarce get any thing; the Dane having all at his will, and feeding himself with the best, when the Owner scarce had his fill of the worst. Thus the common People were miserably oppressed by them, standing in great fear and awe of them, being glad in every thing to please them, calling them Lord Danes.

Lord Danes.

Sin the forerunner of judgments.

Anno 1000. King Egelred by the evil advice of some of his Friends, began a business which brought a new plague upon the English, the Lord thereby justly punishing them for their unjust dispossessing of the Britains of their Land; and that was by this means effected. The King this year married Emma, Daughter to Richard, Duke of Normandy; with which marriage the King was so puffed up, that he sent secret and strict Commissions to the Rulers of every Town in England, that upon St. Brice's day, at an hour appointed, they should suddenly slay all the Danes, which was accordingly effected, but afterwards it turned to the great trouble of the Realm. For news hereof being carried into Denmark,

The Danes murdered.

Revenge of murder.

Swanus the King with a great Host and Navy landed in Cornwal; and by the treason of a Norman, who by the Queens favor was made Earl of Devonshire, the Danes took the City of Exeter, and beat down the Walls; From thence they marched to Wilton, and to Shirbourn, cruelly murdering the Inhabitants, and spoiling the Country. But when Swanus heard that the King was coming against him with a great Army, he retreated to his Navy, set sail, and arrived in Norfolk: There also he miserably wasted the Country, spoiled the City of Norwich, burned the Town of Thetford, and laid all waste before him; yet at last Duke Ussatel met him, beat him, and slew many of his Danes. Then did Swanus return into Denmark, making a great Preparation against the year following to re enter England, which accordingly he did, landing at Sandwich, wofully spoiling all that Country, and as soon as he heard of any Army of the English coming against him, he would suddenly depart; so that when the Kings Army was in one Country, he would presently sail about, and land in another; and when the King prepared to meet them on the Sea, they would either retire home, or with Bribes and Gifts so blind the English Admiral, that the Kings Navy could not meet with them; and thus they wearied the poor English, and in conclusion brought them into extream misery, and enforced the King to buy his Peace with the payment of Thirty thousand pounds to them; after which Swanus returned into Denmark.

Treachery.

A great Persecution.

Treachery.

But this Peace lasted not long, for King Egelred the year after made Edricus Duke of Mercia, who was subtile, fawning, and false to the King and Realm. And soon after Turkillus a Prince of the Danes, landed in Kent with a great Army, where they did much harm, insomuch that the Kentish Men were forced to buy their Peace by great Gifts, whereupon the Danes departed. Notwithstanding which, this grievous Persecution of the Danes, continued in one place of the Kingdom or other; neither did the King ever give them any notable Battel: For when he had prepared an Army wherewith to encounter them, this false Earl Edrick would always dissuade him from it; so that the Danes by robbing and spoiling grew richer and richer, and the English poorer and poorer.

Swanus hearing of the success of his Subjects in England, brake his Covenants formerly made with Egelred; and with a mighty Army and Navy he landed in Northumberland, proclaiming himself King of this whole Land. In those parts by his bloodshed and cruelty he subdued the People, and caused the Nobles and Rulers to swear fealty to him: Then did he pass the River of Trent, subduing and conquering all before him, and forcing the People to give him Pledges, whom he sent Prisoners to his Navy, under the Custody of his Son Canutus. Then did he march into Mercia, killing and slaying all the way as he went: He took also Oxford and Winchester: Then he marched towards London, but hearing that the King was there, he turned into Kent, and besieged Canterbury, which at last he took by Treachery, plundering the Inhabitants, and afterwards setting the City on fire. They killed the Monks, slaying Nine by cruel torments, and only keeping the tenth alive, whom yet they kept in miserable slavery. In all, they slew above Nine thousand Men, Women and Children in that place. From the Bishop they first extorted Three thousand pounds, and then brought him to Greenwich, where they stoned him to death.

Canterbury sacked.

The Arch-Bishop martyred.

King Egelred fearing what might be the issue of this Persecution, sent his Wife Emma, with his Two Sons Alfred and Edward to the Duke of Normandy for their greater safety. The Danes still proceeding in their fury and rage, conquered a great part of West-Saxony, and so returned again to London, which the Citizens hearing of, sent Swamus Pledges and great Gifts, whereupon he left them.

King Egelred was by this means chased in the Isle of Wight, and with small attendance abode there privately a great part of the Winter, and being destitute of all comfort, he sailed into Normandy.

The King driven into Normandy.

Swamus being assured hereof, grew exceeding proud, raised grievous impositions upon the People, and at last required a great sum of money upon St. Edmunds lands: But the Inhabitants being privileged, refused to pay the same, Swamus enraged hereby, marched into those territories, spoiling and laying all waste before him; But his sins being come to the height, the Lord strook this Bloody Persecutor; and the People of the Country falling to Fasting and Prayer, Swamus crying, roaring and yelling amongst his Knights, died miserably.

Gods Judgment on a Persecutor. The Power of Prayer.

Canutus his Son ruled here as King after his Fathers death, but being vexed by Gods judgments on his Father, he granted to the Inhabitants their ancient liberties, and ditched in St. Edmunds lands with a deep and large Ditch, quitting the People from all taxes and tributes, &c.

King Egelred hearing of the death of Swamus, hastened his return into England, upon whose sudden arrival Canutus being unprovided, fled to Sandwich, and there cutting off the Hands and Noses of the Pledges which his Father left with him, sailed into Denmark; yet the next year he returned again with a great Navy, landing in the South Country, whereupon the Kings eldest Son, called Edmund Ironside, raised an Army, appointing Edrick Duke of Mercia to meet him with another; But the false Duke, feigning himself sick, came not according to agreement, by which means the expedition was frustrated: It was afterwards proved that Edrick had promised his Allegiance to Canutus. Hereupon did Canutus enter into West-Saxony, forcing the People to be sworn to him, and to give him Hostages. In the mean time the King fell sick at London, and died.

Cruelty.

Treachery.

King Egelred death.

During his Reign, though he was miserably vexed with his Enemies, yet with the Counsel of his Nobles, he set forth some good Laws for the Government of his Subjects, and having information against one of his Judges called Walgeatun, whom he loved above all others, that he had perverted Justice, he deposed, and deprived him of all his Possessions.

Injustice punished.

Egelred being dead, there was much variance about the Election of his Successor, the Londoners with some of the Lords chose Edward, the eldest Son of Egelred, a valiant and brave young Prince, surnamed Ironside, for their King; But the greatest part of the Nobility adhered to Canutus the Dane: By reason of this division many great Battels were fought between these two Martial Princes, first in Dorsetshire, where Canutus was driven out of the Field: Then at Worcester, where the fight was so sore, that none could tell who had the better;

Great Battels.

This Battel continued all day, and the next morning began again, but the second day Canutus was beaten out of the Field. After this they fought another Battel in Mercia, where Edward, through the treachon of false Edrick, was wounded. After many such Battels, the two Armies again meeting, a Knight of Edwards Party stood upon an high place, and said, we die daily, and none hath the Victory, and when the Knights are dead, the Dukes must either accord or fight alone: Is not this Kingdom sufficient for Two Men, which sometimes sufficed seven? But if neither can't content to take a part, let them fight alone who would rule alone, &c. These words were well allowed of by both Parties, and the place and time was appointed when the Two Kings should try it out in a single Duell in the sight of both Hosts; and when these Two brave Princes met, they assayed each other with sharp Swords, and lusty strokes: But being both wearied, at last Canutus moved for a Reconciliation, which Edward, (honoring the valor of his Enemy,) accepted of, and so they embraced and kissed each other, to the great joy of their Armies, whereupon they agreed to part the Land betwixt them, and ever lived and loved like Brethren.

A Duell between two Kings.

Friendship.

The King murdered.

Yet not long after, as King Edward was easing Nature, a Son of wicked Duke Edricks, being let on by his Father, stabbed him into the Fundament, whereof he shortly after died, having Reigned Two years.

He left behind him Two Sons, Edmund and Edward, whom wicked Edrick took from their Mother, and presented them to Canutus, saying, Ave Rex solus: God bless you our only King.

Gods Providence.

Canutus Reigning thus alone, took these Two Children, and sent them to his Brother Svanus, King of Sweden, to be slain by him: But he abhorring so wicked a fact, sent them to Salomon King of Hungary, where the elder died, and Edward was married to Agatha, the Emperor Henry the Fourth's Daughter.

Base perfidiousness.

A just judgment.

Canutus being thus established King over the whole Land, called a Parliament of his Lords Spiritual and Temporal at London; where he propounded to them, whether in the agreement made betwixt Edward and him, there was any mention made of the succession of Edwards Children, and these flattering Lords against their knowledge and conscience answered, Nay; promising with an Oath, that to the utmost of their power they would resist any claim made by them to the Crown: Hereby they expected great favor from the King; But by the just retribution of God it fell out far otherwise; For Canutus seeing the falshood and perjury of those who were sworn to Edward and his Heirs, and their treachery to their Native Country, ever after disdained and hated them, exiling many, and beheading others, and God plagued others by sudden death. Amongst these, wicked Edrick escaped not his condign reward: For on a time coming to the King, he began to reckon what he had done in his service, and for his sake; as that he had forsaken and betrayed Egelred, and slain King Edward, with many other such deeds: To whom Canutus answered, Thou hast condemned thy self, and worthily thou shalt die, for slaying thy natural Prince, and my sworn Brother; and so commanded him presently to be bound Hand and Foot, and thrown into the Thames, or, as others say, beheaded.

In the mean time Svanus King of Denmark died, and so that Kingdom fell to his Brother Canutus, which Canutus hearing of, presently sailed thither, and after he had taken possession of it, and set things in order there, he returned into England, and married Emma late Wife of Egelred, by whom he had a Son called Hardicanute: After which he assembled a Parliament at Oxford, and agreed that both English and Danes should be ruled by King Edgars Laws, which were judged to be the best and most equal.

Thus the Danes being mixed with the English, began by little and little to embrace the Christian Faith. And Canutus having Reigned Twenty years died, leaving Two Sons, Harold and Hardicanute: The latter was made King of Denmark.

In this time there was one Godwin Earl of Kent, who had done many valiant acts for the Danes against the Norwegians, whereupon he was in great favor with Hardknut. This Godwin was cruel, and of a subtil wit, as he shewed by his dealing with the Two Sons of King Egbert, Alfred and Edward, who coming out of Normandy to visit their Mother Emma, with many Normans in their company, This Godwin, intending by marrying Edward to his Daughter, to set him up to be King, perswaded Hardknut and the Lords, that they should not suffer these Normans within the Realm, and so gat authority to order the matter as himself pleased: Then went he to meet these Princes on Guild-down, where he wretchedly murdered or rather martyred all the innocent Normans, in a most cruel manner, by winding their Guts out of their Bodies: He also put out the Eyes of the elder Brother Alfred, and sent him to the Monastery of Ely, where soon after he was murdered. Emma fearing the treason of Godwin against her other Son Edward, privily sent him back into Normandy: But God not long after revenged the death of these Normans upon the English, when he brought in Duke William to subdue and reign over them.

The English Nobility considering the manifold wrongs, and indignities which they had received from the Danes, resolved that never more should any King of the Danish Blood rule over them: They drove out also all the Danes out of the Land, so that they never came any more: The Lord in mercy looking upon the miseries of the English Nation, and vouchsafing to grant them deliverance from the same.

The Danes from their first landing in England had now miserably wasted, and vexed it for the space of Two hundred fifty five years: But Hardknut dying without issue, the Nobles sent for Edward out of Normandy, who at his coming was Crowned King: He was of a gentle and soft Spirit, abhorring Wars, and Bloodshed: He Governed the Realm with much wisdom, and justice: He was of a godly and blameless Life, full of piety, mercy, and liberality to the poor: He eased his Subjects of the great tribute of Dane-gelt: He subdued the Scots and Welshmen, which began to rebel against him. During his Reign, William Duke of Normandy came into England with a goodly train, was honorably Feasted by the King, and when he departed, the King presented him with great Gifts, and promised, that if he died without issue, he should succeed him in the Kingdom of England.

On a time as Earl Godwin sat at Dinner with the King at Windsor, one of his Sons being the Kings Cup-Bearer, stumbled as he came, and yet recovered again, so that he spilled none of the drink, wherewith Earl Godwin laughed, saying, That one Brother had holpen the other, meaning one Leg had holpen the other. The King hereupon remembring his Brother, slain by Godwin, said, So should my Brother Allured have holpen me, if it had not been for Godwin. Godwin hereupon fearing the Kings anger, took a piece of Bread, and said, So may I safely swallow down this Bread, as I am guiltless of his Blood: But that Bread choked him, and he presently died: God plaguing his perjury hereby.

King Edward in the Thirteenth year of his Reign sent into Hungary, for his Cousin Edward the Son of Edmund Ironside, who with his Wife and Children returned into England, but the year after he died at London, leaving behind him Edgar Adeling, and Margaret, (after married to the King of Scotland,) by whom he had Matilda, afterwards Queen of England. King Edward had some purpose of making this Edgar his Heir, but fearing the inconstancy of the English, and and the pride and malice of Harold, Earl Godwin's Son; he sent solemn Ambassadors to his Cousin William Duke of Normandy, assigning him to be his lawful Heir, and Successor to this Crown.

After this, Harold as he was crossing the Seas, was driven into Normandy, where he swore to Duke William, that after the death of King Edward, he would keep this Land for his behoof, according to the Will of King Edward; and at his return, Harold relates this to the King, who was well pleased with it. This virtuous and blessed King Edward, having Reigned almost Twenty four years died. He enacted many excellent Laws in his life-time, collecting most of them out of all the Laws made by his Predecessors. They were so just, equal, and profitable for the publick good; that afterwards the People would endure to be governed by none other.

After the death of King Edward surnamed the Confessor, some of the Nobles would have set up Edgar Aeling for their King: But Harold contemning the young years of Edgar, and forgetting his Oath to Duke William, by force and might seized upon the Crown, Anno Christi 1066. But Harold Herefager, Son of Canutus King of Denmark, hearing of the death of King Edward, came into England with above Three hundred Ships, who joyning with Tostius Brother of Harold King of England, entered the North parts, and claimed the Crown. Against him the Lords of those parts raised an Army, and gave him Battel, but were beaten by the Danes; whereupon Harold King of England, marched with an Army into the North, fought with the Danes, and had the Victory: He slew also with his own Hands their King and Tostius. Upon this Victory Harold grew proud and insolent, and would not divide the prey amongst his Knights, which procured him much hatred.

In the mean time, William Duke of Normandy sent Ambassadors to him to demand the English Crown, which by Oath he had promised to keep for him: Harold returned answer, That such a foolish promise was not to be kept, especially he being forced thereunto. Then did Duke William gather his Knights, and prepare his Navy, and having shipped his Army, he arrived at Hastings in Sussex, Harold being in the North. Duke William hastened towards London; but when he came thither, he was kept out till he had given security to the Citizens to march through the City without wronging any; which being done, he marched over London Bridge into Sussex, from which he sent to Harold, demanding one of these Three things: First, To deliver up the Crown and Kingdom to him, and to take it back, paying a tribute to him: Or Secondly, To refer the whole business to the Arbitrement of the Pope: Or Thirdly, To try the quarrel in a single Duel betwixt them Two, to prevent further Bloodshed. Harold refused all, and marched against him with his Army. This great Battel was fought in Sussex, in the place where afterwards King William built Battel Abbey. In the beginning of the fight the English kept so close together, that the Normans were like to be beaten; whereupon Duke William made his Men give back as though they fled, and the English followed so fast that they brake their Array: Then the Normans, charging them fiercely, at the last won the Victory; and here by Gods just judgment, Harold, who had formerly so cruelly murdered Alfred, the true Heir of the Crown, with his Normans that attended him, was now himself wounded in the left Eye with an Arrow, whereof he presently died.

He was the last King of the Saxon Blood, which was had reigned in England for the space of five hundred ninety one years.

Although Religion from the first planting of the Gospel in England, did not remain all this while in its Primitive Purity and Perfection, but in Procell of time it grew from better to worse, declining into much superstition: Yet the corruption of those times was not comparable to that which followed, about the Thousandth year after Christ, when Pope Sylvester the Second, a Conjuror, by the help of the Devill obtained the Popedom. The Church being now fled into the Wildernes, and hiding her self there, I shall speak no more of the English Church, which was so corrupted and degenerated from its Pristine Purity, but only of such Persons in our English Nation, as God raised up to oppose the errors and superstitions of those times, and for which they met with Persecution from Antichrist and his Adherents.

St. Bernard who lived about the year 1130, in one place writeth thus: be to this generation, for the sake of the Pharisees which is Hypocrite, if you that may be called Hypocrite which for the attendance cannot, and for the impudence desires not to be hid. All are Friends, and yet Enemies; All are Neighbors; and yet every one seeks his own: The Ministers of Christ, and yet they serve Antichrist. It remaineth therefore that the Antichristian Devil, who walks in the open light, come to deceive the residue, that his heretics persevere in their simplicity, &c. For he is Antichrist, which counterfeits the Christ; he is to be the day, but the midday; and extolles himself above all that is called God, and worshipped, whom the Lord Jesus will slay with the Breath of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming. And in another place he saith, it remaineth that the Man of sin be revealed, the Son of Perdition. And in another place he thus complains to God, O God, thy near Enemies stand near to stand against thee. All Christian People seem to have conspired against thee, &c. Alas, O Lord God, those are the first and chief in Persecutions who stand near to thee and bear the first and chief place in the Church, &c.

John of Salisbury told Pope Hadrian the Fourth plainly, what the world thought of him and his Prelates: That the Roman Church shewed her self, not a Mother, but a Stepmother to all other Churches, For (saith he) in the Scribes and Pharisees, laying insupportable burdens upon Mens shoulders, which themselves would not touch with one Finger, &c. yea the Bishop of Rome himself is grievous to all, and almost intolerable.

And one afterwards complained, that the Church of Rome was come to that state, that it was not worthy to be governed by any, but only by Reprobates.

Robert Grossthead, a learned and godly Bishop of Lincoln, and living Anno 1240. wrote sharply to the Pope, (especially for the evils which he committed in England,) That he was opposite to Christ, a Murderer of Souls, and an Heretick in these his courses, &c. Upon which Letters the Pope was exceedingly moved, threatening to cast down this Bishop into the Piv of all Confusion: But some of his wiser Cardinals pacified him, telling him of this Bishops holiness, learning and reputation: And that the meddling with such an excellent Man, might hasten a departure from their Church: For, said they, the things which he proved are full and manifest. This godly and learned Bishop, after divers conflicts and bickerings with the Pope of Rome, and other labors and travels of life, died at Bugden, Anno Christi 1253. Of whom Matthew Paris thus writes, Out of the prison of this world which he never loved, was taken this holy Bishop of Lincoln, who was an open Reprover of the Pope and King, a Rebuker of the Prelates, a Corrector of the Monks, a Director of the Clergy, a Fautor of Scholars, a Preacher to the People, a diligent Searcher of the Scriptures, a severe Punisher of the incontinent, a Mall to the Wicked, and a Contemner of their doings. When he lay upon his Death-bed, he sent for some of his Clergy, had much good discourse with them, complained of the corruptions which were sprung up in the Church, and inveighed bitterly against the manifold abominations of the Church and Court of Rome, concluding thus ; Well may these old Verses be applied to them ;

Ejus avaritia totius non sufficit orbis, Ejus luxuria meretrix non sufficit omnis.

*Th' whole world cannot suffice their greedy, covetous mind:
Nor all their drabs and naughty packs, their filthy, lusty kind.*

For his thundering against the Romish Church, and for his publick reproving of the covetousness, pride, and manifold Tyrannies of the Pope, he was excommunicated to the Pit of Hell by Innocent the Fourth, and cited to come to his Bloody Court ; But he appealed from the Popes Tyranny to the eternal Tribunal of Jesus Christ, and shortly after died.

John Patrick
Erigena.

Yea before this, there were some found in England, who disavowed the corruptions of the Church of Rome, and underwent persecution for the same. Anno Christi 884. There was one John Patrick Erigena, a Brittain, ordained by King Alfred the first Reader in Oxford, who wrote a Book about the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, which was afterwards condemned by the Pope, and he martyred for it.

Some branded in the Face.

Anno Christi 960. There were some Divines at Oxford branded in the Face, and banished, for saying that the Church of Rome was the Whore of Babylon ; Monckery, a stinking Carrion ; their Vows, Nurses of Sodomy ; Purgatory, Masses, &c. inventions of the Devil.

Arnold Mar-

Anno Christi 1126. There was one Arnold, an English Preacher at Oxford, who was cruelly butchered for preaching against Prelates pride, and Priests wicked lives.

Thirty Wal-denses come into England.

About the year 1160. in the Reign of King Henry the Second, there came above Thirty of the waldenses into England, one Gerard being their Minister, acknowledged to be a learned Man by the Monk of Newbury, who writes the story : These people laboring to win Disciples unto Christ, were quickly smelt out by the Popish Clergy, and great complaints were made against them to the King ; who thereupon assembled a Council of Bishops at Oxford, before whom these godly persons were convented, and Gerard their Minister spoke for them all, saying, We are Christians, holding and reverencing the Doctrine of the Apostles : Being examined in order, (saith the Monk) of the Articles of the Holy Faith, they held right things, but they would not admit of Salt, Spittle, and Exorcisms in Baptism and the Eucharist, nor of binding with the stole in Marriage, &c. And being urged with arguments, they answered that they believed as they were taught by Gods Word, but would not dispute of their Faith : Being admonished to repent, and to return to the Unity of the Church, they despised that Council, they scorned threats also, saying, Blessed are they which suffer Persecution for Righteousness sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. Then did the Bishops excommunicate them, and so delivered them over to be corporally punished by the King, who caused the Character of Heretical Infamy to be burnt in their Foreheads, and Gerard their Minister suffered the disgrace of double burning, one in his Forehead, the other about his Chin ; Then were their Clothes cut off to their Girdlesteads, and with flashing Whips they were publicly whipped through Oxford ; They singing all the while, Blessed are ye when Men hate you, and despitefully use you, &c. The King further commanded, that none should presume to receive them to House, nor to cherish them with any comfort, whereby they miserably perished with hunger and cold, none affording any comfort to them.

For which he was much hated, and Persecuted.

Anno Christi 1255. Sebald, Arch-Bishop of York, earnestly contended against the Tyranny of the Romish Court: He said, that the Pope was permitted by God for the great hurt of many: He wrote to the Pope to abstain from his accustomed Tyranny, and to follow the Humility of his Holy Predecessors, and after Peter's example, to Feed the Flock, not to Pill, Waste, and Destroy them: The Pope contemned his Counsel, and Persecuted them for it.

Anno Christi 1351. Nicholas Orum, Doctor of Oxford, Preached at Rome before Pope Urban the Fifth, and his Cardinals, wherein he discovered and condemned the Papacy, and foretold their destruction: He wrote the Epistle from Lucifer to the Clergy, thanking them for sending so many Souls to Hell: He placed his Daughters, Pride, Avarice, Luxury, Fraud, and especially Simony to them, as to their proper Husbands.

William Wickam.

Anno Christi 1379. William Wickam, Bishop of Winchester, who built a Colledge in Oxford, another at Winchester, was a great Enemy to the Romish Locusts, and professed, that notwithstanding all the good works which he had done, yet that he trusted in the merits of Christ alone for Salvation.

Henry Parker.

Anno Christi 1470. Henry Parker, Fellow of All Souls, preached at Pauls Cross against the Pride and Ambition of the Prelates, and at the request of some good People, published his Doctrine to the great disgrace of the Prelates, for which he was cast into Prison, where he lay long, and endured much want.

The Progress of the Gospel, though persecuted.

Thus we have seen in some particulars, how God raised up in those dark times some worthy instruments, who with the hazard of their estates, honors, liberty and lives, publickly oppos'd the corruptions which were crept into the Church, and expos'd themselves to the greatest dangers for the Vindication of the Truth. Neither were these Men alone and singular in their opinions; For, through Gods mercy, their Doctrine was readily embraced by many, so that in the Reign of King Henry the Second, about the year 1174, many of them were persecuted, and some Burnt. But this true Doctrine was more generally received in King Edward the Third his time, when as the Ministry of Wickliffe in Oxford found a good liking, and general applause amongst his Hearers, yea, it had the approbation of the whole University: and when Bulls came thick from Rome against him and his Doctrine, the whole University gave a testimony in favor of him under their Seal, in the Congregation-house: Yea he had many great Favorers amongst the Nobility, Citizens of London, and others: and his Doctrine took such deep root in the Hearts of many, that it could never be extirpated by all the means, which for many years after his death were used by Popes, Princes, Prelates, and their Officers, who from time to time, even till Luthers time, persecuted and endeavored to suppress the same: Amongst which number of the persecuted, these were some, Utrid Bolton and John Ashwerby, Fellows of Oriel Colledge, both much troubled and persecuted for preaching and promoting Wickliffe's Doctrine, Anno Christi 1380.

Utrid Bolton and John Ashwerby.

John

John Aylton Fellow of Merton Colledge was persecuted, and at last condemned to perpetual imprisonment for the same, Anno Christi 1382.

Walter Brute of Merton Colledge was persecuted by the Bishop of Hereford Anno Christi 1390.

Peter Pateshal, who had faithfully preached this Doctrine at London, and in the Court, was forced by persecution to fly into Bohemia for refuge about the same time.

Henry Crump Doctor of Divinity in Oxford, was first an Adversary to, but afterwards convinced, and converted by Wickliffe's Doctrine, preached it boldly, for which he was persecuted by the Bishops, who forced him to fly into Ireland, yet there also was he long imprisoned by a Bishop about the year 1392.

King Henry the Fourth, though otherwise a good and valiant Prince, yet coming to the Crown by Usurpation, desired to uphold himself by the favor of the Pope and his Clergy, who had oft complained of the increase of Lollards in King Richard the Second his time, but could prevail no further than to have their Books burnt, and their persons imprisoned, but the final determination, what should be done with them, was ever reserved to the King and his Counsel. But now King Henry, to engratiate himself with the Clergy, suffered his fiery zeal to burn up to a fiery persecution, enacting a Law that Lollards should be burnt at the discretion of the Bishops, whereupon divers suffered Martyrdom, as

William Sawtree, a Divine of Oxford, and Parson of St. Siths Church in London, was imprisoned, degraded, and at last Burnt by Thomas Arundel Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Anno Christi 1400. This William Sawtree desired that his Cause might be heard by the Parliament then sitting, for the commodity of the whole Realm: But the Bishops smelling out the matter, obtained that it might be wholly referred unto them, who convening him before them, examined him upon Eight Articles, the last whereof was about Transubstantiation: To which he answered, that after the words of Consecration there remaineth very Bread, the same Bread which it was before the words were spoken; Whereupon the Arch-Bishop condemned him by the mouth of Robert Hall his Chancellor, after which they got a Warrant from the King, directed to the Major and Sheriffs of London for his burning.

William Swinderby of Kings Colledge in Oxford, having for a good while taught the Truth at Leicester, was at last apprehended and compelled to recant: But after a while, repenting and receiving new strength from God, he renewed his Doctrine, and was Burnt in Smithfield, Anno Christi 1401.

William Thorp Fellow of Queens Colledge in Oxford, was apprehended for the same, examined, imprisoned, and there at last secretly put to death by Arundel Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Anno Christi 1407.

Lawrence Redman, David Sawtre, William James, Thomas Brightwel, William Haulam, Radulph Greenburst, and John Schut were all grievously persecuted by the Popish party, Anno 1420.

Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, was persecuted, condemned, and Burnt in Saint Gile's Fields, Anno Christi 1417. Of whom see more in my Second Part in his Life.

John Purvey, a learned Man, that wrote a commentary on the Revelation, wherein he proved the Pope to be Antichrist, and Whore of Babylon: He complained that many before him, who had impugned the Romish errors, had been imprisoned, killed, and their Books burnt, and that none were suffered to preach, but such as would swear obedience to the Pope: For which he was imprisoned, and secretly made away there, by the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Anno Christi 1421.

William White, Fellow of Wickam Colledge, for his preaching of the Truth was taken, and compelled by the Arch-Bishop to recant, Anno Christi 1424. But quickly repenting, and publicly confessing his weakness and inconstancy, with great lamentation, and renewing his former Doctrin, was at last taken, and condemned to the fire by the Bishop of Normich, Anno Christi 1428.

Richard Wiche.

Richard Wiche, Fellow of Wickam Colledge, was Burnt the same year for the like Profession.

Peter Clarke
Martyr.

Anno Christi 1433. Peter Clarke, a Divine of Oxford, defended publicly in the Schools the Doctrin of Wickliffe, for which he was so persecuted, that he was forced to flie into Bohemia: From thence he went into France, and was chosen Preacher to certain Christians at Melda; and in process of time Sixty two of his Congregation were surpris'd, bound in Carts, and sent to Paris: Where Fourteen of them were Burnt, the rest tormented, and put to other deaths, or banished: Mr. Clarke, with his Host, Steven Mangris, in whose House he used to preach, had first their Tongues cut out, then were hanged, and afterwards Burnt. See this Story in my former Part, in the Persecutions of the Church in France.

Peter Paine.

Peter Paine or Peacock, Fellow of All Souls in Oxford, for his constant preaching against the Roman Antichrist, was forced to flie into Bohemia to avoid the danger: From thence he with others, was sent to the Council of Basil, where he defended his Doctrin stoutly and learnedly Fifty days together, Anno Christi 1438.

Roger Oweley.
Martyr.
Lady Elinor
Cobham.

Roger Oweley, a Divine of Oxford, and Chaplain to the Lady Elinor Cobham, the Duke of Glocesters Wife, wrote learnedly against the superstitions that were then in practice: And for attempting something with the said Lady against the Papacy, he with some of his Friends were hanged and quartered at London, and the Lady banished into the Isle of Man, Anno Christi 1442.

Humphrey Duke of Glocester
Martyr.
See more of him afterwards.

Humphrey Duke of Glocester, Son of Henry the Fourth, Brother to the Fifth, and Uncle to the Sixth, having been educated in Baliol Colledge in Oxford, was a great FAVORER of Preachers of the purer Religion: For which the Bishops and their Creatures hated him deadly, by whose means he was taken in the Night in Bury-Abbey, cast into Prison, and there murdered, Anno Christi 1447.

Philip Norise.

A true Ministry in England from the first planting of the Gospel here.

Thus we have seen in sundry passages of this story, and in many particular instances that from the first planting of the Gospel in this Kingdom, which was presently after Christ's time, to the time of Luther, God preserved a true Church, a true Ministry, and true ordinances amongst the people of this Land, in despite of the Devil, and all his instruments; and though many times the Saints of God were fain to hide themselves and underwent grievous persecutions for the cause of Christ, yet God still preserved a seed alive, who when the storm was over, appeared again: And when corruptions and Antichristianity had overspread the greatest part of the Christian world, God from time to time raised up some in this Nation to bear witness against the same, who loved not their Lives to the death, that they might be found faithful to Christ, and his Truth: And therefore Doctor Field in his Book of the Church, Book 3. Chap. 6. and 8. had good reason to say thus: Although we do acknowledge Wick-

Luther also in his Book against the Anabaptists saith, That under the Papacy there was much good; yea all Christian good, and it came thence to us: As true Scriptures; true Sacraments; a true Ministry; a true Catechism, wherein is the Lords Prayer, Ten Commandments, and Articles of the Christian Faith, &c.

CHAP. V.

The continuation of the Persecution of the English Church under the Papacy.

WE have heard in the former Chapter how God raised up sundry faithful Ministers of Jesus Christ in several ages to oppose the superstitions, and errors brought into our Church by the Pope and his adherents, for which they suffered great persecutions: Now let us see how many Lay-men also as well as Ministers embraced the truth, and suffered Martyrdom for the same.

Anno 1409. there was one John Badby, a Taylor, convented before Thomas Arundel, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, for the crime of Heresie, as they stiled the truth in those daies, and for holding divers Articles repugnant to the determination of the Church of Rome; witnesses were examined against him, after which the Arch-Bishop asked him whether he would renounce, and forsake his opinions: To which he answered, that he would not, but that he would adhere to his answer formerly given in: Hereupon he was shut up a close Prisoner, the Arch-Bishop himself keeping the Key of his Chamber; and a few daies after he was brought again before the Arch-Bishop, and his assistants sitting in Pauls Church London, who condemned him for an open and obstinate Heretick, delivering him over to the secular power: Presently after came the Kings writ for his execution, by vertue whereof, John Badby still persevering in the truth, was brought into Smithfield, put into an empty Barrel, bound with Iron chains, fastned to a stake, having dry Wood put about him: The young Prince, the Kings eldest Son, being present, much pittied the Man, perswading him to have respect to his life, and when intreaties prevailed not, he added menaces, but nothing would shake the constancy of this faithful Martyr: Then did the Prior of Saint Bartholomews in Smithfield bring him with all solemnity solemnity the Sacrament, demanding of him how he believed in it: He answered, that it was hallowed Bread, but not Christ's Body: Then was Fire put to him, and when he felt the Fire he cryed unto God for mercy: whereupon the Prince thinking that he recanted, caused the Fire to be quenched, then asked him if he would forsake his Heresie, promising that if he would do it, he should have riches enough, and a yearly stipend out of the Kings treasury to his full content: But this valiant Champion of Christ inflamed with the love of Christ, and thirsting after Heavenly treasures, refused those great promises; whereupon Fire being again put to him, he endured the torments with invincible courage, and so in the flames resigned up his spirit unto God.

death

The Persecuting Bishops, studying how to suppress the truth of the Gospel, made their addressees to the King, with many flattering preences, and obtained by his means an Act of Parliament, called The Statute ex officio, whereby it was ordained, that if any preached, maintained, or taught openly or privily, or writ any Book contrary to the Catholick Faith, and determination of the holy Church, or that should favor any such Preacher, or that should conceal any such Book, and not deliver it up within Forty days, &c. that being lawfully convicted thereof before the Ordinary or his Commissaries, they may imprison him in any of their own Prisons, and there keep him so long as in their discretion they shall think fit: As also that they may charge him with such a fine of money to the Kings use, as they shall think competent, according to the quality of his offence, and if he refuse to recant and abjure his Heretical opinions and practices, or relapse after Recantation, that he shall be delivered over to the secular power, who are required openly to Burn him before all the People, &c.

The Arch-Bishop also set forth cruel, Blasphemous and wicked Constitutions about the same time, against the true Professors of the Gospel: notwithstanding all which, the number and courage of the Faithful was so far from being vanquished, that they multiplied and increased daily, especially in London, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, Herefordshire, Shropshire, and in divers other places; yet amongst so many, some there were that did shrink and revolt by reason of the severity of the Law: Others feared no danger nor death, so they might be found faithful witnesses to the cause and truth of Christ: Amongst which was Master William Thorpe, first imprisoned in Shrewsbury, afterwards removed to the Castle of Saltwood, from whence he was brought before the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, who charged him for going about many years together, to teach and disperse his Heretical opinions, whereupon he required him to kneel down, and to swear upon a Book to submit to his correction, and to stand to his award: Thorpe answered, since you count me for an Heretick, I beseech you give me leave here to make a Confession of my Faith before you: Which the Arch-Bishop assenting to, he made a large and notable Confession of his Faith, after which he added: To the rule and ordinances of Gods Laws I meekly, gladly and willingly submit me with all my heart, and whosoever shall by the same convince me of any error, I am ready and willing to recant. Then the Arch-Bishop said, I will that thou presently swear to me to forsake all the opinions which the Sect of the Lollards hold, and that thou shalt neither favor any Man or Woman that holds any of the aforesaid opinions, and that thou shalt publish their names, and make them known to the Bishop of the Diocese, where they live, &c. To this Master Thorpe answered, Sir, I may not do this, for it would be the doom of my conscience, if I should be the cause of the death of so many Men and Women, which are now in the way of salvation, who would justly charge me to be a Traitor both to God and them, &c. and therefore from this wickedness keep me and all Christian People Almighty God, now and for ever, for his holy names sake. The Arch-Bishop swore and raged exceedingly at this answer, and cast him into prison, where he either died of sickness, or was made away by the Arch-Bishops procurement. The like end hapned to John Asheton, another follower of Wickliffe's Doctrin, who was committed to perpetual imprisonment, Anno Christi 1381.

John

John Purvey, with Herford, a Doctor of Divinity, were grievously tormented in the prison of Walswood, and afterwards forced to recant at Pauls Cross, by Arundel Arch-Bishop of Canterbury: But Purvey afterwards recovering himself by Gods grace, was again imprisoned under Henry Chicheley Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Anno Christi 1421.

Frier Walden called this Master Purvey the Library of the Lollards; and the Glosser upon Wickliffe; He was a very learned Man.

King Henry the Fourth being dead, his Son Henry the Fifth succeeded, who called a Parliament. But when the Bishops perceived that the Gospellers had so many Friends in and about London, they caused the King to adjourn it to Leicester, where they procured a Law that the Wickliffists should be punished as guilty of high Treason, and therefore should be both hanged and burnt.

At this time Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, suffered Martyrdom, the Story whereof read in my second part, in the Life of the Lord Cobham.

Anno Christi 1413. which was the first year of the Reign of King Henry the Fifth, Sir Roger Aston, Mr. John Brown, and Mr. John Beverly, were persecuted and put to death in St. Giles in the Fields for the truth, together with divers others, to the number of Thirty six, all which were hanged with fire made under them, whereby they dyed a double death.

These godly persons, Mr. Beverly being their Preacher, in those dangerous times, used to meet in the night in St. Giles his Fields, to pray and hear the word preached: Which the Bishops having some notice of, they informed the King of a dangerous Conspiracy which these persons intended, as to rebel against the King, to seize upon the City of London, &c. whereupon the King going with many armed Men at midnight, only found these Thirty six persons, all which were executed as before: Yet the number was greater, some escaping by flight; amongst whom was William Murle, of Dunstable, Maultster, who being afterwards apprehended, was drawn, hanged and burnt. Within few days after their execution, Thomas Arundel the Arch-Bishop was so stricken by God in his tongue, that he could neither swallow any food, nor speak for divers days before his death, whereby he dyed in much misery. Concerning whose manner of death, one makes these Observations.

This Man was he that made an Ecclesiastical Law, that the Scriptures (which are Gods Tongue) should not speak, by forbidding Wickliffs Translation of them; and therefore God justly made him dumb.

This Man was he that stopped the Mouths, and tied the Tongues of Gods faithful Preachers, who are Gods mouth and tongue to his People; and therefore God plagued his mouth and tongue.

This Man was he that spake proud, threatening, taunting and blasphemous words against Gods truth, and his people, and had swelling thoughts for their destruction; and God made his tongue to swell to his own destruction.

This Man (as much as in him lay) brought a Famine, not out of Bread, but of hearing the Word, and now is he justly famished himself to death. Who can chuse but admire the exceeding Justice of Gods requital?

Anno Christi 1415. there was one John Claydon of London, Coriari, that was brought before Henry Chicheley Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, upon the suspicion of Heresie, and upon his examination, he confessed, that for the same cause he had been formerly imprisoned by the Bishop of London, by the space of two years in Conway Castle, and that at another time he had been Three years in the Fleet for the same, as also that he had divers English Books, which at several times he heard read to him, and wherein he took great delight, &c. After this, his Books being examined, were condemned as Heretical to be burnt in the fire, and sentence of condemnation was passed upon him by the Arch-Bishop, and he was delivered to the secular power, by whom he was carried into Smithfield, and there burnt, Anno Christi 1415. With him also was burnt Richard Turning a Baker, for the same cause.

A wicked
Constitution.

About the same time John Husse was burnt at Constance, and the Gospel began to spread much in England, which caused the Prelates to bestir themselves with might and main to suppress it: And at a Convocation held at London, Anno Christi 1416. the Arch-Bishop made a Constitution, which he sent abroad to all his Bishops and Suffragans, requiring them at least twice every year, to make diligent enquiry after all such persons as were suspected of Heresie, and that in every place where any such were suspected to dwell, they should cause three honest Men, to take their Oaths upon the Evangelists; that if they knew or heard of any Conventicles, or if any persons in life and conversation, differing from other Catholick Men, or that held any Heresies or errors, or that were suspected to have any such English Books, or to harbor or entertaine any such person, &c. that they make Certificate in writing of all such persons, with the circumstances whereby they are suspected, to the Suffragans, Commissaries, &c. who were required to send forth Process against them and upon Conviction, either to deliver them over to the secular power, or to commit them to perpetual imprisonment, as the quality of the cause should require. Hereupon many were apprehended, viz. John Taylor, of the parish of Michaels in the Quern, William James, Master of Arts, John Dwerse, John Jourdelay, Master Roberts, Parson of Heggerley in Lincolnshire, William Henry of Tenderden, John Gall, a Minister in London, Richard Monk Vicar of Chesham in Lincolnshire, Bartholomew Cornemunger, Nicholas Hooper, Thomas Granter Minister, Edward Frith Butler to the Lord Cobham, most of which were kept in close imprisonment. Also Master Benedict Ulleman, a Citizen of London, was apprehended, for scattering some papers, wherein the truth was asserted against Popery, for which he was hanged, drawn and beheaded upon Michaelmas day.

Mr. Ulleman
Martyr.

John Barton.

Also during this Convocation, there was brought before the Bishops John Barton a Minister, who was accused by the Bishop of Lincoln, for that he had stood excommunicated six or seven years for Heresie, and for that upon Summons he would not appear, nor seek to be reconciled, for which he was committed to prison, till they had further leisure to proceed against him.

Robert Chappel.

His fall.

Also Robert Chappel, another Minister, sometimes Chaplain to the Lord Cobham, was brought before them, against whom it was objected, that he had been excommunicated Three or four years, and yet to the contempt of the Keys, he continued to preach, and sought not to be reconciled: Chappel fearing the issue, abjured his former opinions as Heretical, promising never to hold the same again: Then was he enjoined by the Arch-Bishop to do penance, and to make a publick Recantation at Pauls Cross: The like abjuration was obtruded upon many others.

Radulph Mungin.

A great persecution.

There was also one Radulph Mungin, a Minister, brought before the Arch-Bishop, and charged with divers Heretical opinions, and because he could by no means be induced to recant the same, he was by the Arch-Bishop condemned to perpetual imprisonment: Many others were driven to forsake their Houses and Families, and to retire themselves into private places, to preserve themselves from the rage of these bloody Persecutors.

King Henry
the Sixth.

William Taylor.

King Henry the Fifth being dead, his Son Henry the Sixth succeeded him, being not a year old when his Father died, in the first year of whose reign, William Taylor, a Minister, was convented before Chichely Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and charged with sundry Articles, which they counted Heretical: He drew forth a writing, and tendred it to the Arch-Bishop to justify his opinions to be true: This paper being given to some of the Doctors that were present, was examined by them, and concluded to be erroneous and Heretical, whereupon he was condemned to suffer perpetual imprisonment, and yet through favor they promised to release him, if he would put in sufficient security, and swear that he would never hold, nor favor such opinions afterwards, and so he was committed to the Custody of the Bishop of Worcester, who had authority to release him upon the conditions aforesaid: But during his abode with this Bishop, there passed some some writings betwixt him, and one Thomas Smith, a Priest of Brissen, about the Question of worshipping the Saints, by occasion whereof he was again brought before the Convocation, Anno Christi 1422. and his writings being shewed to him, he refused to revoke the same, for which he was condemned of Heresie, and presently after a Writ came from the King, De Heretico comburendo, and so he being committed to the secular power, was carried into Smithfield, where he was burnt, dying a faithful Martyr of Jesus Christ.

His Martyrdom.

About this time Henry Chicheley, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, wrote to Pope Martin, that the Wickliffs in England were grown to be so many, that they could not be suppressed without an Army.

Anno Christi 1422. This Arch-Bishop held a Synod, wherein was brought before him one Henry Webb, who was accused for preaching up and down without a Licence, for which he was condemned to be whipt stark naked in the procession, in the Cathedrals of Pauls in London, Worcester and Bath, which was accordingly executed.

Henry Webb whipt.

Also about the same time John Florence, a Turrier, dwelling at Skebbin in the Diocess of Normich, was convented before the Bishops Chanceller, and charged with holding sundry Heretical opinions, for which he was enjoined Three Sabbath days in the Cathedral Church of Normich, to be whipt before all the people; the like also to be done to him in his own Parish Church Three other Sabbath days.

John Florence cruelly whipt.

Between the year 1428. and 1431. there were about the number of One hundred and twenty Men and Women in Norfolk and Suffolk, brought and examined before the Bishop of that Diocess, for the profession of the Christian Faith, some of which escaped more easily, but most of them were cruelly handled, and some of them burnt.

One hundred and twenty persons.

Anno 1424. There was one William White a Minister, and a follower of Wickliffe Doctrine, a Learned and Godly Man, that spent his time in reading, writing and preaching, for which he was apprehended and carried before the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, before whom for a time he stoutly and valiantly defended the truth; but at last, through the cruel menaces of his Adversaries, and his own weakness, he began to be faint; yet after a while, through Gods grace, he became more stout and strong in Jesus Christ than he was before, confessing his former weakness, and heartily repenting of the same: And thereupon he wholly Employed himself in preaching to, and converting the people unto the true Doctrine of Christ, for which he was again at last apprehended, and carried before the Bishop of Normich, by whom he was convicted, condemned, and burnt, Anno Christi 1428. When he was at the Stake, he began to speak to the people, to exhort and confirm them in the truth, but one of the Bishops Servants smote him on the mouth, and forced him to hold his peace, and so with much meekness and patience he received his Crown of Martyrdom. This Master White having married a Wife, she being a good Woman, and following the footsteps of her Husband, went about, doing privately all the good that possibly she could, for which she was persecuted, and suffered grievous things from the same Bishop of Normich.

His Wife persecuted.

About the same time there was a Godly Minister, and another ancient Man, called Father Abraham, burnt at Colchester for the truth.

Two burnt at Colchester.

There was also one Thomas Pie and John Mendam, examined before the Bishop of Normich, by whom they were censured to be openly whipt Six Sabbath days in their Parish Church, and Three Market days about the Market-place of Harleston, carrying in their Hands a Taper of a pound weight, &c. Many others were served in the like sort.

means he could be brought to recant them, he was condemned and burnt hard-by the Tower of London.

Master Nicholas.

Also the same year Master Nicholas, a Canon of Ely, was forced to endure Three whippings about the Cloister of the Cathedral Church in Norwich, and was afterwards kept in prison, for turning his Face from the High Altar, and reproving those that did reverence to the Sacrament.

Thomas Bagley.

Anno Christi 1431. Thomas Bagley, a Minister, being a valiant Disciple of Christ, and adhering to the Doctrine of Wickliffe, was condemned at London by the Bishops, degraded and burnt in Smithfield.

Richard White Martyr.

Anno Christi 1439. One Richard White or Wiche, a Minister, was apprehended and examined, and when he would not be drawn from his opinions, he was condemned to be burnt at the Tower-hill for Heresie: At the place of execution he foretold that the Postern of the Tower should sink, which shortly after came to pass, and so in the flames he resigned up his Spirit unto God: The people much admired him for an holy Man.

A Prophecy.

Humphrey Duke of Gloucester.

His Character.

Anno 1447. The Duke of Gloucester, who was Son to King Henry the Fourth, Brother to King Henry the Fifth, and Uncle to King Henry the Sixth, was chosen Protector in his Nephews minority. He was of a meek and gentle disposition, a lover of the Commonwealth, a supporter of the poor Commons, wise, discreet, studious, a lover of Religion, a Friend to virtue, and an enemy to pride, especially in the Clergy, which made him to be much hated of them, and in the end brought him to an immature death. His learning was rare and memorable, and his discreet wisdom no less exemplary, whereof take this instance: The King in his minority, being under the Government of this good Duke, was to go to St. Albanes, against which time a Beggar with his Wife, were suborned to come thither by the Bishops, where he begged up and down Five or Six days before the Kings coming, saying, that he was born blind, and never saw in all his life, and that he was warned in a Dream to come from Barwick, where he had always lived, to St. Albane, from whom he should receive his sight; But having been at his Shrine he yet remained blind, and therefore he would go and seek him at some other place. But when the King was come, and the Town full of his Retinue, this blind Beggar going again to the Saints Shrine, had his sight restored to him: This miracle was much observed by the Popish Clergy, and a Te Deum solemnly sung, and nothing was talked of in the Town but this miracle: Duke Humphrey hearing of it, sent for the Beggar, and shewed himself joyful for the recovery of his sight, exhorted the Man to humility, and to thankfulness to God for restoring his sight, &c. and then looking upon his eyes, asked him if he had never seen any thing in his life before? The Beggar and his Wife both answered, No; I believe you, said the Duke, For I think you cannot see well now; Yes, said the Beggar, I thank God and his holy Martyr, I can now see as well as any Man: What colour then, said the Duke, is my Gown? The Beggar told him, as also the several colour of other Mens Gowns, naming all the colours to the Duke; whereupon the Duke bid him be gone like a Traitor, For if he had ben blind always, how knew he so readily the Names of all colours; but this more exasperated the Prelates against him.

Popish Imposture discovered.

Amongst his Enemies Henry Beauford, Cardinal, and Bishop of Winchester was the chief, who drawing to his side William de la Pool, Duke of Suffolk, and the Duke of Buckingham, they conspired with the Queen to deprive him both of honor and life: For which end a Parliament was summoned to be kept at Bury, far from the Citizens of London, who much loved the Duke of Gloucester, and when the Lords and Commons were met, and amongst them the Duke, neither thinking harm to others, nor suspecting danger to himself; the second day after the Parliament began, the Lord Beaumont, then High Constable of England, accompanied with the Duke of Buckingham and some others arrested the Duke of Gloucester, and put him into Ward, which caused much murmuring amongst the people, and the next night after he was found dead in his Bed, being,

He is arrested and murdered.

as it was commonly reported, smothered between Two Feather-Beds, having prudently Governed this Realm for the space of Twenty five years : But Gods judgments followed all the Contrivers and Actors of this murther : The Queen, who thought hereby to preserve the Honor of her Husband, and her own state, on the contrary lost her Husband, and he lost his Kingdom, and the Kingdom lost Anjou, Normandy, Aquitaine, and all they held in France, except Calice: The year after the Cardinal, the chief Contriver of the Dukes martyrdom, was stricken by God with an incurable disease, who hearing that he must needs die, murmured and grudged exceedingly, that having so much riches he must yet leave all, saying, That if the whole Realm would purchase his life, he was able either by his policy to get it, or by his money to buy it : Therefore, saith he, Fie, will not death be bribed? will money do nothing? &c. The Duke of Suffolke also did not long escape unpunished ; For in a Parliament he was accused as a Traitor to the Kingdom, a Murtherer of the Duke of Glocester, and a Robber of the Kings Treasure : For which the King at last was forced to banish him for Five years, thinking that in that space the peoples hatred of him would be allayed : The Duke took shipping in Suffolke, intending to go into France, but being presently encountred by a Man of War belonging to the Tower, was taken and carried into Dover-Road, where on a side of a Ship-Boat one struck off his Head, Anno 1450. and thus God suffered not the innocent Blood of that good Duke of Glocester to go unpunished.

Gods judgment on Persecutors.

Death not to be bribed.

Not long before the Dukes death, he had complained to the King his Nephew, of sundry injuries which the Cardinal of Winchester had done, not only to him, but to the King and whole Kingdom, which he put into writing in Twenty four Articles, and presented them to the King ; King Henry committed the examination hereof to his Council, who (being for the most part Clergy-men,) the business was shuffled up, and the Duke entrapped, as we heard before : Also to aggravate his affliction, they caused his religious Dutcheſs, the Lady Elinor Cobham of witchcraft and treason, as if to advance her Husband to the Crown, she had practised by forcerery and enchantment to destroy the Kings Person : And hereupon they enjoyned her in a disgraceful manner to go through Cheapside with a Taper in her Hand, and to do Penance in three publick places of the City, and afterwards to be committed to perpetual imprisonment in the Isle of Man, under the custody of Sir John Stanley Knight.

The Dutcheſs accused.

During the life-time of the Duke of Glocester, there was one Rainold Peacock, who publickly in the Universities disputed against Annas Peter-pence, and other the jurisdictions of the See of Rome, freely declaring his judgment about the same, and was protected therein by the said Duke ; But after the Dukes death he was persecuted by the Prelates and their instruments. He was a very learned Man, translated much of the Scriptures into English, and wrote many Books : The Duke made him first his Chaplain, then Bishop of St. Asaph, and afterwards Bishop of Chichester ; The Arch-Bishop summoned him to appear before him ; when he came, the Arch-Bishop with divers other Bishops, labored by all means either to reduce him or destroy him ; many terrible menaces and threatnings they gave him, many fair and flattering promises they made to him, so that at the last they drew a Recantation from him ; yet afterwards, through Gods mercy, he recovered and repented of his Recantation, for which he was cast into Prison, and at length was condemned for an Heretick, and as the report went, was privily in Prison made away.

It is observed, that from the time of King Richard the Second, in every Kings Reign that succeeded him, there was some good Man or other that suffered martyrdom by burning at a Stake.

King Henry the Sixth being deposed and murdered, King Edward the fourth succeeded him, in whose time there was one John Goose, of Huffe, Anno 1473 that was called before the Bishops, and accused for Heresie, by whom also he was condemned, and delivered to the Sheriff of London to be burnt : The Sheriff being a charitable Man took him home to his House, laboring much with him to recant his Heresies, and thereby to deliver himself from death: Husse answered that for his Religion he was at a pass, and neither could, nor would recant the same, But desired the Sheriff to give him some meat, for that he was fore an Hungry: The Sheriff commanded meat to be brought him, whereof he did eat heartily, saying to the standers by, I eat now a good and competent Dinner, for I shall pass a little sharp shower ere I come to Supper: When he had dined he gave thanks, and required that he might forthwith be led to the place of execution, where in the flames he meekly resigned up his Spirit unto God.

Anno Christi 1494. There was one Joane Boughton Widow, Mother to the Lady Young, being about Eighty yeares old, that was accused for Heresie in holding many of Wickliffs opinions: She was so stout, and constant a defender of the truth, that all the Doctors in London could not turn her from one of her opinions, and when they told her that she should be burnt for her obstinacy, and Heresie, she set light by all there threats, and when she was in the flames she cryed unto God to receive her soul into his holy Hands, and so quietly yielded up the Ghost.

Anno Christi 1498. There was a godly Man, and faithful Martyr of Christ burnt in Norfolk called Babram: And the year after another old godly Man was burnt in Smithfield.

Anno Christi 1506. There was one William Tilsworth convented before Doctor Smith Bishop of Lincoln, by whom he was condemned for Heresie, and burnt in the Town of Amersham: At his burning his onely Daughter, a faithful Woman, and married to one Clarke, was compelled with her own Hands to set fire to her dear Father: And at the same time John Clarke her Husband with many others did penance, bearing Fagots, many others were burnt in the Cheek with an hot Iron, bearing the marks of our Lord Jesus Christ about with them.

Presently after there was one Father Roberts, a Milner of Missenden, burnt at Buckingham for the testimony of the truth: At the time of whose burning, above Twenty persons were compelled to bear Fagots, and to do Penance.

About Two yeares after Thomas Bernard, an Husbandman, and James Melton, a laborer, were both burnt at one fire for the truth at Amersham.

Anno Christi 1506. There was also in Amersham one Thomas Chase, a Man of a godly, honest, and sober behavior, and one that could not abide Idolatry, and superstition; for which being maligned by some wicked Men, he was brought before the Bishop at Wooburne, who propounded many questions to him, which he intermixed with many taunts, jeers, and reproaches; Chase answered him stoutly defending the truth, and opposing Idolatry for which he was by the Bishop put into his Prison called, The little ease: There he lay cruelly bound in Chains, Jives, and Manacles, and almost pined with hunger. The Bishop also sent his Chaplains often to him with checks, taunts, rebukes, and threatenings, floutings, and mockings, all which the Godly Martyr bore with invincible patience, and constancy, remembring often that of his Saviour: Blessed are they that suffer persecution for Righteousnes sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. When the Bishop saw that by his cruelty he could prevail nothing against him, but that rather he was more fervent, and zealous in defending the truth, and that he patiently bore all his wickedness; He consulted privily to put him to death for fear of an uproar amongst the people, and accordingly shortly after he caused him to be cruelly strangled, and pressed to death in the Prison, who called most heartily upon God to receive his Spirit: The Bishop causing it to be bruited abroad that he had hanged himself in Prison.

Anno Christi 1507. There was one Thomas Norris, who for the profession of the Gospel was condemned by the Bishop and burnt at Norwich: Not long after there was in Salisbury, one Laurence Guest, who for denying the Sacrament of the Altar, &c. was convented before the Bishop: He had good Friends, and therefore therefore the Bishop was loath to burn him, but kept him Two years in Prison: This Lawrence had a Wife, and Seven Children; and therefore the Bishop, hoping to overcome him by fatherly affection to his Children, when he was fastened to the Stake, his Wife, and Seven Children were brought to him: But, through Gods grace, Religion overcoming nature in him, he remained constant, and unmoveable, and when his Wife began to exhort him to favor himself: He desired her not to be a block in his way, for that he was in a good course running towards the mark of his Salvation: And fire being put to him, he renounced his Wife, and Children to follow Christ, and in the midst of the flames resigned up his Spirit unto God.

His Martyrdom.

A Woman Martyr.

About the same time there was at Chipping Sadbury, a Godly Woman convented before the Chancellor, who was Doctor Whittington, before whom she made a resolute, and good confession of her Faith, not shrinking for any of his terrible threats, so that at last he condemned her to be burnt. Against the day of her execution multitudes of people flocked together to Sadbury, and amongst the rest, Doctor Whittington came to see her executed. This faithful Woman, and true Servant of Jesus Christ nothing daunted with the sight of the Stake, nor shrinking at the torments of the fire, quietly slept in the Lord: At the same time there was a Butcher in another place of the Town slaying a Bull, which Bull was fast bound with a Rope ready to be knocked on the Head; The Butcher missing his stroke, the Bull brake loose just as the people were coming from the execution of the holy Martyr: The people seeing him coming, severed themselves and made a lane for him to pass through: The Bull went on without hurting Man, Woman or Child, till he came to the place where the Chancellor was, against whom he ran very furiously, and with his Horns hitting him on the Belly, ran him quite thorough; and tearing out his Guts with his Horns, he trailed them about the street, to the great astonishment of the people that beheld it.

Gods Judgment on a Persecutor.

Under the Reign of King Henry the Seventh, there were divers godly persons in Coventry persecuted, and forced to abjure: And King Henry the Seventh being dead, and his Son Henry the Eighth succeeding, there was one Richard Fitz-James Bishop of London, who convented before him many poor people, charging them with holding many Heretical opinions, for which they were excommunicated and imprisoned, and at last compelled to recant, and for further penance were enjoined to wear a Fagot painted on their sleeves all their life after. This was Anno Christi 1510.

Henry the Eighth.

About the same time there were some others, who having through frailty been forced to recant, being afterwards pricked in conscience for it, and overcome by the manifest truth of Gods most sacred Word, became as earnest and zealous Professors of Christ as ever they were before, and for the same Profession were the second time apprehended, examined, condemned, and at last cruelly burnt; Amongst whom were William Sweetings, and John Bruster, who were both burnt together in Smithfield, Anno Christi 1511. The crimes wherewith they were charged, were for denying the real presence of Christ in the Sacrament; For reading forbidden Books; and for keeping company with persons suspected for Heresie.

Recovery after falls.

William Sweetings, John Bruster.

About the same time William Carder was convented before Arch-Bishop Warham, and his Chancellor, Cuthbert Tonstal, and they brought such witnesses against him as were before abjured, whom they knew, that for fear of being reputed relapsed, durst not but disclose whatsoever they knew of him, by whose testimony they condemned him to be burnt.

William Carder.

Agnes Grebyll also was convented before them, against whom they put in Twelve Articles, which she denying put them upon the proof: Then they called for John Grebyll her Husband, and Christopher and John Grebyll her Two Sons, who had been before abjured, causing them to depose, the one against his Wife, the other against their natural Mother; yea, afterwards they caused these Two young young Men to give in evidence against their own Father also: The Woman was so grieved hereat, that she repented the time that ever she bare these Children of her Body; and so she was condemned to be burnt. Her Husband with Two others were brought in to testify against Robert Harrison, upon whose testimony he also was condemned, and so these Three persons were all burnt, May 2. 1511. Ex Registro Cantuar.

Mr. Stile burnt with the Revelations.

Shortly after Mr. Stile was condemned, and with him a Book of the Revelations, which he had in English; when he was carried into Smithfield, and saw the Book tied together with him to the Stake, he cried out, O Blessed Apocalyps, how happy am I, that I shall be burnt with thee, and so they were both burnt together.

Blasphemy.

About the same time Five other persons were accused in this manner. We object to you, that divers times, especially upon a certain night, three years ago, in Robert Durdants House of Yvercourt near Stanes, you erroneously and damnably read in a great Book of Heresie, all that same night certain Chapters of the Evangelists in English, containing in them divers erroneous and damnable opinions, and conclusions of Heresie. *Ex Registro Episc. John Brown.

There was one John Brown passing from London in a Gravesend Barge, in which Barge there was a Priest, and Brown sat hard by him: whereupon the Priest said to him, Dost thou not know who I am? Thou sittest too near me: Brown answered, No Sir, I know not who you are. I tell thee, said he, I am a Priest: what Sir, said Brown, are you a Parson, or a Vicar, or a Ladies Chaplain? I am, said the other, A Soul-Priest, and sing for a Soul; I pray you Sir, said Brown, where find you the Soul when you go to Mass? I know not, said the Priest. And where do you leave it when you have done Mass? I cannot tell, said the Priest. Brown replied, If you neither know where the Soul is when you begin, nor where you leave it when you have done, how then do you save a Soul? Go thy ways, said the Priest, thou art an Heretick, and I will be even with thee: And accordingly when they came to Land, the Priest taking two others with him that were present in the Boat, went and complained to Arch-Bishop Warham, who sent a Warrant presently to apprehend Brown; when the Messenger came, Brown was carrying in Dinner at his Wives Churching, and being apprehended, the Messenger bound his Feet under his Horse-belly, and carried him away to the Arch-Bishop, neither his Wife or Friends knowing whither he went, nor what they would do with him: The Arch-Bishop cast him into Prison, where he lay about Six weeks: Then was he carried to Ashford where his habitation was, and there set in the Stocks all night, his Wife hearing of it, came and sat by him all night, to whom he shewed how cruelly he had been handled by the Arch-Bishop, telling her, that he could not set his Feet to the ground, for they had burnt them to the Bones, to make him to deny Christ, which said he, I durst not do, lest my Lord Christ should deny me hereafter, therefore good wife, continue as thou hast begun, and bring up my Children vermouthly, and in the fear of God; And so the next day this godly Martyr was burnt, calling upon God, and saying, Into thy hands I commend my Spirit; Thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth. This was Anno Christi 1517.

and cruelty.

Richard Hune.

Anno Christi 1514. There was one Richard Hune, Merchant-tailor of London, who had a Child at Nurse in Middlesex: The Child dying there, the Parson demanded a bearing sheet for a mortuary: Hune pleaded that it was not due, the Child being but Five weeks old: The Priest hereupon cited him into the Spiritual Court; Hune advising with his learned Council, was directed to bring a Writ of Præmunire against the Priest and his Abettors, which accordingly he did: But the Popish Clergy being much netled at these proceedings, and fearing that it would tend to their great prejudice, they make a diligent enquiry after Hunes life and carriage, and at last frame Articles against him, wherein they charge him with Heresie, for which, by Fitz-James, Bishop of London, he was cast into Lollards Tower, and none of his Friends were suffered to come to him. At last he was

was carried before the Bishop at Fulham, and thereby Horsey the Bishops Chancellor, was accused of Hereſie; After examination, the Biſhop ſent him back to Lollards Tower, and Horsey within Two nights after, ſuborned ſome wicked Cut-throats, who going in the night into Priſon, took Hune and hanged him, blazing abroad that Hune had deſperately hanged himſelf: The Citizens of London, ſuſpecting that he was murdered, cauſed the Corohor to ſit upon him, but whileſt the Jury was buſie about their Office, the Biſhop proceeds ex officio againſt the dead body in caſe of Hereſie, ſuppoſing thereby that the Jury durſt not but find him guilty of his own death, and after the Cauſe heard, the Sentence definitive was pronounced againſt the dead body, and it was delivered over to the ſecular power, and the next day after publickly burnt in Smithfield.

Notwithſtanding theſe proceedings of the Biſhop, the Jury went on, and made diligent enquiry after the manner of his death, and the Cauſe was oft heard before the Privy Council, the King himſelf being ſometimes preſent, and at laſt the Bishops Chancellor, and Two other Officers were found guilty of the murder, and an Indictment was drawn up againſt them, but by Cardinal Woolſes means the Indictment at the Sefſions was caſt out; yet though the Chancellor by this means eſcaped the puniſhment of the Law, his Conſcience ſo tetrified him with the inward guilt of murder, that he went to Exceſter, and durſt not ſhow his Face in London again afterwards.

A great Perſe-

About this time there were multitudes of good Men and Women perſecuted for the truth, and at laſt through weakneſs were forced to recant, yet ſome there were whom the Lord reduced again, and made more ſtrong in the profeſſion of his truth, and conſtant unto the death: Of which number was John Stilmann, who was apprehended and brought before Fitz-James, Biſhop of London, Anno 1518. who after examination ſent him to Lollards Tower: After a while he was brought forth before Dr. Hed, the Bishops Vicar General, and being charged for relapſing into Hereſie after his former Recantation, he denied it not, but boldly profeſſed that he would adhere to the truth, even to the loſs of his life: Hereupon he was condemned and delivered the ſame day to the Sheriffs of London, by whom he was carried into Smithfield, and there openly burnt, Anno Chriſti 1518.

About the ſame time Thomas Man was apprehended and brought before the Biſhop of London, and afterwards was examined alſo by Dr. Hed in the Conſistory, where he was charged with fundry Articles, moſt whereof he granted to be true, the reſt he denied: Then did Dr. Hed pronounce Sentence of condemnation againſt him, delivering him over to the Sheriffs of London, by whom he was immediately carried into Smithfield, and there burnt. Amongſt other things, he was accused for going up and down into divers places, and Countries of England, to diſperſe and teach his errors: And himſelf confeſſed that he went Weſtward, where he found a great company of well-diſpoſed perſons, being of the ſame judgment with him about the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and eſpecially at Newbury, where was a glorious and ſweet Society of faithful perſons, who had continued in Peace Fifteen years together, till they were betrayed by a falſe Brother, whereby Six or Seven ſcore were forced to abjure, and ſome others of them were burnt: From thence he confeſſed that he went to Amersham, where he found a godly and great Company, who had continued in that Doctrine and the truth Twenty three years. Againſt theſe a great perſecution was raiſed by William Smith, Biſhop of Lincoln, Anno 1507. at which time many of them were abjured; He alſo confeſſed that he had been an inſtrument under God, to turn Seven hundred perſons to his Religion and Doctrine, for the which he thanked God.

Anno Christi 1518. Christopher Shoemaker of Missenden, was accused for reading part of the Gospel to John Say, and teaching him that the substance of Bread remained after Consecration: Against Pilgrimages, and worshipping of Saints, &c. for which he was condemned and burnt at Newbury. Yea before the name of Luther was heard of, there were multitudes of Men and Women in England, which professed the truth, and disavowed the superstitions of Popery; whereupon arose a great persecution in Buckinghamshire, Amersham; Uxbridge; Henley, Newbury, in the Diocese of Lincoln, in Essex, Colchester, Suffolk, Norfolk, and in divers other places.

After the death of Smith, Longland succeeded in the Bishoprick of Lincoln; who was a cruel Persecutor of the poor Saints of Christ: Those that first were accused before him, were Robert Bartlet, and Richard his Brother; Their crime was, for that having abjured under Smith, they were now returned again to their former opinions; and that they used to meet in the House of one Thomas Harding, whose Wife seeing Robert Bartlet come in, said, that she was glad that he was converted to the grace of Christ, requiring him that he should never forsake that which he was called to; for if he did, there was no sacrifice left for him. Also seeing Richard Bartlet coming, she said, I hope he will be a good Man, but he hath so much mind of buying and selling, and taking of Farms, that it takes off his mind from all goodness; Upon this information Robert and Richard were examined upon their Oathes before the Bishop, and at last were forced to confess, that Robert had read to Richard a Portion of Scripture, and that one William Tillyworth had told them, that the Images of Saints were but stocks and stones: And that Thomas Mastal had taught them, that the real presence of Christ was not in the Sacrament: And that Richard had learned some part of the Epistle of James by heart, &c. Robert Bartlet acknowledged likewise, that his Wife was of the same opinions with himself, and that if she had not been so, he would not have married her: He also confessed that he had taught his Sister not to worship Images, and had taught her part of the Epistle of St. James: He also detected many others that used to meet together to read and confer about the Word of God, &c. Then was Agnes Wells, Sister to Robert, examined upon sundry captious Interrogatories, which she refused at first to answer to, but at last was compelled to detect her self, and many others. By reason of this cruel Inquisition, multitudes of persons, both Men and Women, living in and about Amersham, were brought before the bloody Bishop, and their greatest crimes were, for reading some portions of Scripture in English; yet did the Bishop put them to their Oathes, and compel Parents to accuse their Children, and Children their Parents; Brothers to accuse their Sisters, and Sisters their Brothers; yea, Husbands to accuse their Wives, and Wives to accuse their Husbands: And the Bishop perceiving that the number of these Hereticks was very great, and that their opinions did daily disperse more and more, that it was almost past his power to redress it, he therefore had recourse to King Henry the Eighth, who was yet young, requesting his aid for the suppressing of these men: Hereupon the King sent Letters to the Sheriffs, Bailiffs, and other Officers, to be aiding and assisting to the Bishop in this matter: And so the Bishop, being armed with the Kings authority, and incited by his own cruel disposition, neglected no time, but sitting upon his Tribunal-Seat, called before him, not only such against whom he had proof, but many others that were never so little suspected or noted to incline towards those opinions, whom he caused to abjure, and enjoined them most rigorous penance: The others that had relapsed, though he had promised them favor upon their detection of others, yet without all pity he read the Sentence of condemnation against them, and delivered them over to the secular power by whom they were burnt. And at the burning of one of them, called John Screvener, his own Children were compelled to set fire to their Father.

Hitherto the Christian world had lain for the most part in miserable darkness: But it pleased God, that about this time the Art of Printing was found out out, which incontinently furnished the Church with the instruments of learning and knowledg, which were good Books, which till now lay hid and unknown, and then followed the grace of God, which stirred up good wits to discern the light, by which darkness was discovered: Truth began to be distinguished from Error, and Religion from Superstition: God also raised up divers excellent Men, that being furnished with the help of good letters, defended strenuously the cause of Learning against Barbarism, and of Truth against Error, of which number were Piccu, and Franciscus Mirandula: Laurentius Valla: Franciscus Petrarcha: Doctor Wesalinus: Revelinus: Grocinnus: Doctor Collet: Rhenanus: Erasmus, &c. who by their learned Writings, and laborious Travels opened a Window of light unto the World, thereby making way for others that came after: And immediately, according to Gods gracious appointment, came Martin Luther, and his Followers, by whose Ministry it pleased the Lord to work a more full reformation of his Church.

A persecution in Coventry.

Anno Christi 1519. there were divers persons apprehended in Coventry, viz. Mistris Smith, Robert Hatcher, Archer, Hawkins, Bond, Wrigsham, and Langsdale, for teaching their Children and Servants the Lords Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and the Belief in the English Tongue, whereupon they were put into Prison, and some into Dungeons under ground: From thence, after a while, they were sent to Mackstock-Abbey: And in the mean time their Children were examined by the Warden of the Gray-Friers in Coventry concerning their Belief, and what Heresies their Fathers had taught them, charging them upon pain of death not to meddle any more with the Lords Prayer, &c. in English. Shortly after those good people were brought back to Coventry, where they were condemned to be burnt: Onely Mistris Smith was dismissed for the present, and because it was dark-night, Morton the Summoner would needs go home with her; But as he led her by the arm, he heard the rustling of a paper in her sleeve, whereupon taking out the paper he found that it was the Lords Prayer, the ten Commandments, and the Creed in English: Then said he, Ah Sirra, come, as good now as another time, and so he brought her back again to the Bishop, who immediately condemned her, and so they were all six burnt together in the little Park.

Six burned.

Robert Silkeb.

Popish cruelty.

There was also one Robert Silkeb, who at the apprehension of the other ran away: But Two years after being taken, and carried to Coventry, he was presently condemned, and burnt the next day. When these persons were thus Martyred, the Sheriffs presently went to their Houses, seizing upon all their goods, not leaving their Wives, and Children any thing to subsist on.

Thomas Harding.

Anno Christi 1523. there was one Thomas Harding living at Chesham in Buckingham-Shire, who on Easter-day, when other people went to Church to commit Idolatry, he went into the woods; there solitarily to worship the true, and living God, in spirit, and in truth; and whil't he was reading an English Book of Prayers, one spied him, who immediately ran to the officers to informe them what he had seen: Hereupon some ran to his House to search for Books; and searching very narrowly under the boards of a floore, they found some portions of the holy Scriptures in English: Then was this godly Father with his Books carried before Bishop Longland, who with his Chaplains mocked, and derided him.

Thomas Harding seeing their uncivil behavior, said little, but comforted himself in the Lord: Then was he sent to the Bishops prison called the Little-Ease, where he lay with hunger, and pain enough, till the Bishop called him to judgment, and condemned him to be burnt, appointing one Rowland Messenger, Vicar of great wickam to see execution done: This Vicar, with a rabble like himself, carried him to Chesham; where all that night he continued in prayer, and holy meditations, and the next morning was carried with Bills, and Staves to the place of execution; many followed him, whereof some bewailed his death, others rejoiced at it: When he was tyed to the Stake, he desired the people to pray for him, and forgiving his enemies, and persecutors, he commended his spirit into the Hands of God, and so took his death very patiently, lifting up his Hands to Heaven, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit: When fire was set to him, one threw a Billit at him wherewith he dashed out his Braines, being above sixty years old.

His Martyrdom.

Anno Christi 1528. John Rainmund a Dutchman was abjured in London, for causing Fifteen Hundred of Tyndals New Testaments to be printed at Antwerp, and for bringing Five Hundred of them over into England.

Anno Christi 1529. Sigar Nicholson, Stationer in Cambridge, was hung up by the privy members, for having in his House some of Luthers, and other prohibited Books, and not presenting them to the Ordinary.

Sigar Nicholson
(for Popish cruelty)

Also Paul Luther, a Gray-frier was abjured, for saying in his Sermon, that it was pittie that so many Images were suffered in Churches, &c. and that there was no need to go on pilgrimages: And that if a Man were near drowning, of any other danger, he should call only upon God, for the Saints in Heaven can neither hear, nor help us.

The same year William Tracy, Esquire, of Todington in Gloucestershire, dying, made a most Christian Testament, but because he would have no Funeral Pomp, Mass, &c. But trusted in God alone through Christ, the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury shewed the said Will in the Convocation-house, when his Son brought it to be proved, whereupon he was adjudged to be taken out of his Grave, and burnt, which was performed Two years after his death.

Mr. Tracy's body burnt after death.

Anno Christi 1530. Thomas Hitten, a godly Minister at Maidstone in Kent, was convented before Arch-Bishop Warham, and Fisher Bishop of Rocheſter, and accused of Heresie, wherenpon he was kept long in prison, and cruelly tormented by them, and when by no means they could prevail to turn him from the truth, he was at last by them condemned, delivered over to the secular power, and burnt at Maidstone.

Thomas Hitten
Martyr.

Anno 1532. Thomas Bilney, Jeffery Lome, Garret Barnes, and some others, were cruelly persecuted by Cardinal woolsey, and at last forced to abjure; But of Mr. Bilneys recovery, troubles and martyrdom; See his Life in my first Part.

Master Bilney

There was also at the same time one Thomas Arthur a Minister, brought before the Cardinal, and divers other Bishops, where he was accused for exhorting his people, to pray for those which were in prison for the truth. Item that he told his people, that if he were persecuted for preaching the Gospel of Christ, yet there were Seven thousand more that would preach it: Therefore, saith he, good people, think not that if these Tyrants and Persecutors put a Man to death, the preaching of the Gospel is therefore to be forsaken. As also that he said, that every Christian is a Priest, to offer up spiritual sacrifice unto God, &c. For these and such other things he was forced to recant, and submit himself to their correction. About the same time the Bishops procured of the King a Proclamation, for the abolishing of divers Books printed beyond Sea, and sent over into England: As also for the punishing of all such, as preached any thing against the dignity and ordinances of the Church of Rome, whereupon ensued a great persecution, and much trouble to the poor innocent flock of Christ.

A great persecution.

Anno Christi 1532. Richard Bayfield, a Monk of Berry, was converted by Doctor Barnes, and much edified by Two godly Citizens of London, Brickmakers, and Wardens of their Company, Master Maxwel, and Master Stacy, who by their holy conversation, and private instructions were the instruments of the conversion, and edification of very many Men, and Women: The occasion of Master Bayfields conversion was this: Doctor Barnes used oft to resort to the Abbey of Richard Bayfield.

He is whipt. Berry to one Doctor Ruffam, who had been his fellow-student at Louane: At this time Bayfield was chamberlain of the House to provide lodging for strangers: He delighted much in Doctor Barnes his talk, and of the two Citizens above named: And at last Doctor Barnes gave him a New Testament in Latine, and the Citizens gave him one in English of Tindals translation, with some other good Books: Bayfield for Two years space so studied these Books, and profited thereby, that for the same he was cast into the Abby-prison, and there cruelly whipt with a gag in his mouth, and then set in the stocks, where he continued in torments Nine months before Doctor Barnes could get him out, which he procured by Doctor Ruffames means, and so Bayfield was committed to Doctor Barnes to go with him to Cambridg: There he profited so much in learning that he never returned to his Abbey again, but went to London to Maxwel, and Stacy, who kept him privately a while, and then conveyed him beyond Sea, Doctor Barnes being then prisoner in the Fleet for the truth of Christ.

His flight. Bayfield joyning with Master Tindal, and Master Frith, profited exceedingly in the knowledge of the truth, and carrying over much substance with him, was very helpful to them, he sold also all their Books, and the Germans Books for them, both in France, and England; At last coming to London to one Master Smiths in Aldermanbury, he was betrayed, and from thence dogged to his Warehouse, where his Books lay in Mark-lane, and there apprehended, and committed to Lollards Tower, from whence afterwards he was removed to the Bishops Coal-house, and there more cruelly handled than he had been in Lollards Tower: For he was tyed both by the neck, and middle, and Legs, standing upright by the Wall: He was also tormented to enforce him to accuse thole that had bought his Books of him: But he would accuse none, and stood to the confession of his Faith even to the end, though he was put to his Tryal in the Consistory, and urged to abjure, which he utterly refused, and in disputation put them to great shame. And being asked for what intent he brought thole books into the Realm, he answered: To the intent that the Gospel of Christ might be promoted, and God the more glorified amongst Christians, confessing further that he had sold, and dispersed many of these Books to sundry persons in the Kingdome, and to divers in the Diocels of London. At last they proceeded to his sentence, at which time he boldly said unto them: The life of you of the spirituality is so evil, that ye be the Hereticks; and ye do not only live evilly your selves, but maintain the like in others: Ye also hinder that it may be known how Men ought to live, &c. Then was he condemned for an Heretick, and degraded, and so delivered over to the secular power. When the Bishop of London had degraded him, he smote him so hard on his Breast with his Crosiers staff, that he struck him down backwards in a swoond, and broke his Head: But when he came to himself again, he praised God that he was delivered from the malignant Church of Antichrist, and that he was come into the true Church of Jesus Christ, militant here on earth, and trusted anon to be in Heaven with Jesus Christ, and the Church triumphant for ever: And so by the Sheriffs he was carried to Newgate, where he continued about an hour in prayer, and so went to the fire with a joyful, and courageous heart: Much cruelty was shewed in his burning, for that for lack of fire he continued half an hour alive: And when his left Arme was burnt, he rubbed it with his right Hand, and it fell from his Body: He continued in Prayer to the end without moving.

Popish cruelty. About the same time John Tewksbury, Leatherfeller of London was convicted before Cuthbert Tonsal Bishop of London, and accused for having Tindals Testament, and the Bible written, and some other good Books: Before them he made a good confession of his Faith, yet at last through their subtil dealing, and humane frailty, he was drawn to abjure, and was enjoyed a severe penance: But it pleased God ere long to recall him to the truth by seeing the courage, and constancy of Bayfield at the time of his burning: And so after two years he was again called before Sir Thomas Moore, and the Bishop of London, where he had many Articles laid in against him, to which he answered very resolutely, and Christian-like; and for which he was condemned; and delivered over to the secular power, and so by the Sheriffs was carryed into Smithfield, and there burnt.

Edward Freefe, borne in Tork, and there prentice with a painter, being of a pregnant wit, and working with his Master in Bearfe Abbey; the Abbate liking him bought out his time of his Master, and would have made him a Monk: But the Boy not liking that kind of life, ran away, and went to Colchester, where he used painting, married a Wife, and lived like an honest Man, and after a time he was hired to paint some clothes for an Inn; And in the upper part of those clothes, he wrote certain sentences of Scripture; whereupon he was suspected for an Heretick, apprehended and carried to the Bishop of London at Fulham: There he was cruelly imprisoned with some others of Essex, viz. one Johnston, and his Wife: Wylie, and his Wife: Father Bates, &c. These were all fed with Bread made of Saw-dust, and so straitly lookt to that their Wives and Friends could not come at them. After they had thus remained in misery, the Painter upon the suit of his Wife was removed to Lollards Tower: But whilst the Woman was thus petitioning for her Husbands remove, being desirous to see him, she being great with Child pressed towards the place where he was; whereupon the Bishops Porter, kickt her on the belly with his foot, so that the Child presently died, and the Woman not long after.

These Persons were set in the stocks a long time: Then loosed, but with Horselocks on their Legs, and other Irons; The Painter would be often writing on the Wall with Chalk, or a Coal, which caused them to manacle his Hands together till his flesh grew higher than his Irons: At last the King was petitioned to for his release, and after long suit he was brought again before the Bishop, but was kept Three days without meet before he came to his answer, by reason of which, and other cruel usage he was distracted, so that he never came to his wits, to his dying day.

Not long after, his Brother Valentine Freefe, and his Wife gave their lives at one Stake in Tork for the Testimony of Iesus Christ.

Master James Bainham, whose Father was a Knight in Glocestershire, was carefully educated by his Parents both in Learning, and Religion, so that he was well skilled both in the Latin, and Greek Tongues: Afterwards he applied himself to the study of the Law: He was of a virtuous disposition; and godly conversation; much addicted unto Prayer, and a diligent reader of the holy Scriptures: A great maintainer of the godly, liberal to Scholars, a visiter of Prisoners, very merciful to his Clients; ready to give counsel to Widows, Fatherless; and afflicted without money, or reward: At last he was suspected, and complained of to Sir Thomas Moore, then Chancellor of England, and being by a Warrant from him arrested in the middle Temple, he was carried before him to Chelsey, where he continued a free Prisoner for a while: Sir Thomas Moore in the mean time laboring both by frowns, and flattery to withdraw him from the truth; but when that prevailed not, he caused him to be bound and whipt at a Tree in his Garden, and then sent him to the Tower: And after a while, Sir Thomas Moore being present, he caused him to be cruelly rackt till he was lamed, because he would not accuse his acquaintance of the Temple, nor discover where his Books lay: Then was his Wife imprisoned, and his goods confiscated.

A while after he was carried before Stokefly, Bishop of London, and examined upon sundry Articles; to which he made a clear, and stout answer, not declining from the truth in any particular. The next day he was brought before the Bishop again, and demanded whether he would still persist in what he had formerly said, or whether he would return again to the Catholick Church? Adding moreover many fair, inticing, and alluring words, saying, the time was yet that he might be received to favor, The bosom of his Mother being open for him; whereas if he continued stubborn, there was no remedy. Bainham hereupon began to waver between desire of life, and fear of death, and therefore said, that he was willing to submit himself in those things wherein he had offended; yet were his answers such, that the Bishop before he would release him, would make farther tryal of him, and therefore committed him to the Counter, and not long after he was again brought forth into the Bishops Consistory, and by his Chancellor was asked whether he would stand to his former answers, protesting that he intended not to receive him into the unity of the holy Church, except he returned faithfully, and unfeignedly to the Catholick Faith? To which Bainham answered, that he unfeignedly doth believe in the holy Church, and holdeth the Catholick Faith; Then did the Chancellor offer him a form of abjurations in these words, I voluntarily as a true penitent Person return from my Heresies, and utterly abjure them, &c. But Bainham answered, that he knew not the Articles contained in that abjuration to be Heresie, and therefore he saw no reason to abjure them: Hereupon the Chancellor began to read his definitive Sentence, but stopped in the midd't saying, that he would reserve the rest till he saw his time, and so sent him back to Prison. And Five days after he was again sent for into the Consistory, and the Chancellor again demanded of him, whether he would yet abjure, and submit himself? Bainham was contented, and so laying his Hand on the Book he read his abjuration; but when he had done, he said, that because there were many words in the abjuration which were difficult, and obscure, he protested that by his Oath, he intended not to go from such defence, which he might have had before his Oath: This so vexed the Chancellor that he took the definitive Sentence in his hand, saying, Take your Oath, and kiss the Book, or I will do mine office against you: Then did Bainham kiss the Book, and subscribed his abjuration; and the Chancellor fined him Twenty pound to the King; enjoyning him penance to go before the Crosse in procession, to bear a Faggot, &c. after which he was to return to Prison again, and there to abide the Bishops determination: And after a while he was dismissed, and returned home. But it pleased God within a moneth after to shew him his sin, so that he greatly bewailed his abjuration, and could never be quiet in his mind and conscience, till he had uttered his fall to all his acquaintance, and asked God and all the world forgiveness before the Congregation of the faithful, which met privately in a Ware-house in Bow-lane: Also the Sabbath following he went to St. Austines Church, with an English New Testament in his Hand, and standing up there in his Pew, before all the people, declared openly, with abundance of tears, that he had denied God, and prayed all the people to forgive him, and to be warned by his fall, that they do not the like; For, said he, if I should not return again to the truth, this word of God (holding up the New Testament) would damn me, both Body and Soul, in the day of judgment; and therefore he intreated them all rather to die presently, than to do as he had done: For he would not feel such an Hell in his Conscience again for all the good in the world: Besides, he also wrote Letters to the Bishop and to others, for which he was presently after apprehended, and committed to the Tower of London, and shortly after he was brought before Foxford, Vicar general to the Bishop of London, who read to him his Articles contained in his abjuration, and shewed him a Book, which Bainham confessed to be his own writing, saying, That what was contained in it was good: He also shewed him the Letter which he wrote to the Bishop, which he also owned, &c.

After all their proceedings, when he remained constant in the truth, the Sentence definitive was read against him, and he was delivered to Sir Richard Gresham, Gresham, Sheriff of London, by whom he was sent to Newgate, and afterwards being carried into Smithfield he was there burnt, April the last Anno Christi 1532.

His Martyrdom.

During his imprisonment he was cruelly handled; For about a Fortnight he lay in the Bishops Coat-house, in the stocks with irons upon his Legs: Then was he carried to the Lord Chancellors, and there chained to a Post Two nights; Then was he carried to Fulham, where he was cruelly handled for a week together, Then to the Tower, where for a Fortnight together he was scourged with Whips, to enforce him to recant his opinions. As he was at the stake to be burnt, in the midst of the flames which had half consumed his Arms, and his Legs, he spake these words: O ye Papists! behold, ye look for miracles, and here now you may see a miracle: For in this fire I feel no more pain than if I were in a Bed of down, but it is to me a Bed of Roses.

A miracle, I will be with thee in the fire! John Bone. Trapped.

About the same time there was one John Bent, a Tailor burnt at the Devil's in Wiltshire for the truth: As also one Trapnel was burnt at Brodford in the same County.

Anno Christi 1532. There was an Idol named the Rood of Dover-Court, unto which multitudes of people went on Pilgrimage: Whereupon divers godly persons of Dedham, were much troubled in their consciences to see God so dishonored, and his glory to be given to an Idol, wherefore they were stirred up by Gods Spirit, in a Frosty Moonshine-night to go from Dedham Ten Miles to the place where the Idol stood: And when they came thither, they found the Church doors open, the Popish Clergy having spread a rumour, that such was the power of this Rood, that no Man could shut the Church doors where it stood: Then did they take the Idol from his shrine, and carried it a quarter of a Mile off, where, striking fire, they burnt the Idol to ashes, and so returned. For this Three of them, viz. Robert King, Robert Debnam, and Nicholas Marsh, were indicted of Felony, and condemned to be hanged in chains, which was afterwards executed.

About the same time there were many Images cast down, and destroyed in sundry places, especially in Essex, in Cogshal, Surlbury, &c.

Images thrown down.

Next ensued the Persecution, apprehension, examination, and condemnation of Master John Frith, of which you may read the story in my First part in the Life of John Frith, with whom also there was burnt one Andrew Hewet, a young Man of about Twenty four years old, a Prentice to a Tailor in Watling-street: This Hewet, on an Holy day going up Fleet-street met with one William Holt, servant to the Kings Tailor: This Holt being a dissembling knave, and suspecting Hewet to be one that favored the Gospel, after a little conference with him, left him, but withal watched whither he went, and seeing him go into an honest Booksellers house about Fleet-Bridge, he took some Officers, and went, and searched the House, and finding Hewet there, he carried him to the Bishops House, where he was cast into irons: And after he had lain there a good while, by the means of an honest Man he had a file conveyed to him, with which he filed off his irons, and when he saw his time, he gat out of the gate: But not knowing where to hide himself, he went into Smithfield, and there met with one Withers, an Hypocritical knave, who understanding how he had escaped, and that he knew not whether to go, willed him to go with him, promising to provide for his safety, and accordingly kept him a while in the Country, and then brought him to London, and left him in Hosier-lane for the space of Two days, after which he brought

THE LIFE OF THOMAS BENET.

About the same time there was one Thomas Benet, born in Cambridge, and Master of Art in that University, a Man very well learned, and of a godly life; who was very familiar with Master Bilney that famous Martyr of Christ: This Benet, the more he increased in the knowledge of God, and his holy Word, the more he abhorred the Idolatry and corruptions of the times, and therefore fearing to continue in his own Country, he went into Devonshire, Anno Christi 1524.

and first dwelt in Torrington, where for the maintenance of himself, Wife, and Children, he taught a School; but that Town not affording him a subsistence, at the years end he removed to Exeter, where also he taught Children, and so maintained his Family thereby: He was very courteous, quiet, meek, and of an holy conversation: He greatly delighted to hear Sermons, and was very attentive to them; what time he could spare from his School, he employed in the study of the Scriptures, having no converse with any but with such as he understood to be favorers of the Gospel, and zealous for the truth: And understanding that one William Strowd of Newnam, Esquire, was committed to the Bishop's Prison in Exeter, upon suspicion of Heresie, he sent consolatory Letters to him, and lest his letters should be suspected by this Gentleman, he discovered himself to him, with the cause of his coming into that Countrey, and amongst other passages he had this, Because I would not be an whoremonger, or unclean Person, I married a Wife, with whom, through Gods mercy, I have lain hid His zeal in Devonshire from the Tyranny of the Antichristian party these six years: Thus increasing in knowledge, and sanctity, and seeing daily the glory of God to be Blasphemed, Idolatry to be embraced, and maintained, and the false usurped power of the Bishop of Rome to be so extolled, he was so grieved in spirit, and troubled in conscience, that he could not be at quiet, till he had uttered his mind therein; But first he began to deal privately with some of his Friends, to whom he plainly discovered how abominably God was dishonored, his Word contemned, his People, whom he had dearly purchased, were by blind kinds carried head-long to eternal damnation, and that therefore he could no longer endure, but must, and would utter their abominations, and for his own part, for the testimony of his conscience, and in defence of Gods true Religion, would yield himself willingly; as near as God would give him grace, to die, and shed his Blood in this quarrel: Alledging that his death would be more profitable to the Church of God, for the edification of his People, than his life could be.

His Friends being overcome by his arguments, told him that they would pray for him, that he might be strong in the cause of God, and continue a faithful faithful Soldier to the end. Then did he give order for the disposal of his Books, and shortly after he wrote his judgment in certain papers, which privately he set up upon the doors of the Cathedral Church, in which he wrote, The Pope is Antichrist, and we ought to worship God, and not the Saints. Upon the finding of these Papers there was much ado, and great searching after the Heretick, that should set them up: The Major and Aldermen busying themselves therein, but especially the Bishop, and his Doctors, were stung like as with wasps; And to quench this fire, some of them were daily imployed to confute this Heresie in publick: Thomas Benet the Sabbath following went to the Cathedral Church, and accidentally sat down by Two Men that were most busie of all others in searching after Hereticks: These Men looking on Benet, said each to other, This Fellow is of all others likeliest to set up these Papers, and it were good that he were examined; yet when they beheld his sober carriage, his attention to the Sermon, and his diligent looking on his Latin Testament, they were so astonished that they had no power to speak to him, but went their ways, and left him reading on his Book.

Gods Providence.

He is cursed with Bell, Book, and Candle.

The Canons and Priests being much troubled how to find out the Author of those Bills, resolved to Curse him whatsoever he were with Bell, Book and Candle, which they proceeded to after this manner.

One of the Priests cloathed all in white, went up into the Pulpit, divers Fryers stood round about, and the Cross was held up with divers Wax Tapers lighted about it; Then the Priest began to preach on the Text in Josua: There is an accursed thing amongst you; which Sermon he thus concluded. That the foul and abominable Heretick which hath put up these Blasphemous Bills, was for that his Blasphemy damnably accursed, and therefore he besought God, our Lady, Saint Peter the Patron of the Church, with all the holy company of Martyrs, Confessors, and Virgins, that it might be known what Heretick had put up those Blasphemous Bills, that so Gods people might avoid the vengeance.

The manner of these Cursings was very terrible to the Spectators, who were miserably deluded with such Superstitions.

Then said the Priest, By the Authority of God, the Father Almighty, and the blessed Virgin Mary, of Saint Peter, and Saint Paul, and of the holy Saints, we excommunicate, we utterly curse, and ban, commit and deliver to the Devil of Hell, him or her, whatsoever he, or she be, that have in spite of God and Saint Peter, whose Church this is, in spite of all holy Saints, and in spite of our most holy Father the Pope, Gods Vicar here on earth, and in spite of our reverend Father in God John, our Diocesan, and the worshipful Canons, &c. which serve God daily in this Church, fixed up such Cursed and Heretical Bills full of Blasphemy upon this, and other holy Churches Doors. Excommunicated plainly be he, or she, and delivered over to the Devil as perpetual Malefactors, and Schismatics: Accursed let them be, and given over Body, and Soul to the Devil: Cursed be they in Cities, and in Towns, in Fields, in ways, in Paths, in Houses, out of Houses, and in all other places, standing, lying, or rising, walking, running, waking, sleeping, eating, drinking, and whatsoever thing they do besides. we separate him, or her from the Threshold, and from all the good Prayers of the Church, from the participation of the holy Mass, from all Sacraments, Chappels, and Altars; from holy Bread, and holy water, from all the Merits of Gods Priests, and Religious Men, and from all their Cloisters, from all pardons, priviledges, grants, and immunities, which all the holy Fathers, Popes of Rome, have granted to them: And we give them over utterly to the power of the Fiend, and let us quench their Souls if they be dead this night in the pains of Hell-fire, as this Candle is now quenched, and put out, (and therewith he put out one of the Candles) And let us pray God if they be alive, that their Eyes may be put out as this Candle-light is, (and therewith he put out another Candle) And let us pray to God, our Lady, Saint Peter, and Saint Paul, and all holy Saints, that all the senses of their Bodies may fail them, and that they may may have no feeling, as now the light of this Candle is gone, (and therewith he put out another Candle) except they come now and openly confess their Blasphemy, and by repentance, as much as in them lies, make satisfaction to God, our Lady, Saint Peter, and the worshipful Company of this Church, and as the Staff of this holy Cross now falls down, so may they except they repent, and so the Staff fell down.

Upon this dreadful Curse what a noise, and terrible fear was there amongst the People.

Master Benet seeing all this foppery, laughed heartily at it, yet as privately as he could, but some there were that espied him, whereupon they asked him how he could laugh at such dreadful Curses? Benet answered: My Friends, who can forbear seeing such merry conceits, and interludes played by the Priests? This caused them to cry out, Here is the Heretick, here is the Heretick, hold him fast, hold him fast: Hereupon there was a great noise, and clapping of Hands, and yet they were uncertain whether he were the Heretick or no: So that they suffered him quietly to depart home to his own House. But he, being not able to digest the lyes there preached, caused his Boy early in a morning to set up new Bills upon the Church-yard Gates, which whilest he was doing, one that went early to hear a Mass, found the Boy at the Gates, and charged him with setting up those Bills, wherefore pulling down the Bill he carried both it, and the Boy before the Major of the City, and thereby Master Benet being discovered, was presently sent for, and violently haled to Prison: On the next day the Cannons began to examine him, to whom he confessed, that it was he that had put up the Bills, and that if it were to do, he would do it again: For, said he, there is nothing in them but the very truth. Couldst not thou, said they, have spoken so much with thy Mouth, as well to have set up those Bills? No, said he, I put them up that many might read them, and thereby know what abominable Blasphemers you are, and that your Pope is Antichrist, even that Bear out of the wood that destroy the Church of Christ, &c. But if I had spoken so much I should presently have been clapt up in Prison, and so the truth had been concealed, &c.

The next day they sent him to the Bishop, who clapped him up in his own Prison, kept him in the Stocks, loaded him with Irons, and shewed him as much favor as a Dog should have had: Then associating to himself some others, he examined him: But he answered in such sort, and so learnedly proved and defended his assertions, that he confounded, and put to silence his Adversaries, causing them much to admire him: Then did they rife his House, shamefully abused his Wife, charging her with divers enormities: But she, like a good Woman took all patiently, and was willing to bear the Cross with her Husband.

Some of the Fryers did greatly torment their Brains to find out how they might turn him from his opinions: But through Gods mercy, Benet was at a point, not to deny Christ before Men, so that at last they declared that never was their such an obstinate Heretick, Yet did they for divers days continually assault him, so that being weary of their Company, he said, I take God to record that my life is not dear to me, I am content to depart from it, for I am weary of it, seeing your detestable doings to the utter destruction of Christs Flock, so that I desire death that I may no longer see your detestable Idolatries, and Superstitions, or be subject to Antichrist your Pope, &c. Away from me, I pray you, and vex my Soul no longer; you shall not prevail against me, &c. If I should bear, and follow you, everlasting death should be my portion, A just reward for all them that love a temporal before eternal life: Away therefore from me, for your company likes me not.

During his imprisonment his Wife provided food for him, and when she lamented, he comforted her, and gave her many good, and godly exhortations, intreating her not to move him in any thing to comply with his Adversaries.

His condemnation.

When the Canons and Priests perceived that they could nothing prevail, neither by their flatteries, nor threatnings, they proceeded to judgment, drawing out their bloody Sentence against him, and condemned him to be burnt, delivering him to Sir Thomas Denis, Sheriff of Devonshire, Anno Christi 1531. The holy Martyr rejoiced that his end approached so near, and as a Sheep before the Shearer, yielded himself with all humility, and cheerfulness to take up the Cross of Christ, and being brought to the place of his execution, he made his humble confession, and prayer to Almighty God, requesting all the people to do the like for him, whom he exhorted with such gravity, and sobriety, above all things to seek the honor of God, and the saving knowledge of him, as also to leave the devices, and fancies of Mens brains, in the service of God, that all the hearers and spectators were stricken with great admiration, so that most of the people, and the Scribe himself that wrote the Sentence of his condemnation, confessed that he was Gods faithful Servant, and a good Man.

He is tempted

Yet Two Gentlemen, [Master Thomas Carew, and Master John Barnhouse,] labored first by fair promises, and enticing words, and then by grievous threatnings to draw him to a recantation, and to pray to our Lady, and the Saints, to whom he meekly answered, saying, No, no, it is God only upon whom we must call, and we have no other Advocate with the Father but Jesus Christ alone, who died for us, and now sits at the right hand of his Father to plead our cause; By him must we offer, and make our Prayers to God, if we desire that they should find acceptance at the Throne of Grace: Barnhouse was so enraged hereat, that he took a Furze-bush upon a Pike, and having set it on fire held it to his Face, saying, Ah whoreson Heretick, pray to our Lady, or by Gods wounds I will make thee do it: To whom Master Benet answered with an humble, and meek Spirit, Alas Sir, trouble me not, and holding up his Hands he said, Father forgive them; Then was the fire kindled, and this holy Martyr lifting up his Hands and Eyes to Heaven, said, Lord Jesus receive my Spirit; and so continuing in prayer, he never moved his Body, but with admirable patience endured the violence of the fire till his life was ended. The Popish party were so violent at his burning, that well was he, or she that could get a stick, or bush to throw into the fire.

About this time the Popish Clergy were so active, and vigilant in suppressing the light of the Gospel that began then to break forth, that scarce a Man or Woman could make the least shew, in imbracing, or entertaining the same, but presently they were seized on, and either burnt at a Stake, or grievously persecuted, and molested till they were forced to abjure, as very many were in the Diocese of London, by Bishop Stokesly, and in most other Diocesses in the Kingdom. And indeed the malice, and cruelty of the Prelates, and their Officers grew so intolerable, that the commons, shortly after assembled in Parliament, did by their Speaker, accompanied with divers Knights, and burgesses, complain thereof to the King, humbly desiring him to take such order, and redress in that case, as to his Highnesses wisdom might seem most convenient, &c. And the Lords divine providence did not fail in this time of need; For he saw that the pride, and cruelty of the Popish Clergy was grown intolerable; He heard the sighes, groans, and bitter afflictions of his oppressed flock, that truth was adulterated, Religion prophaned, the Glory of his Son defaced, and his poor Church lamentably wasted, wherefore by a strange and wondrous way and means, he wrought salvation for his people, by the Kings divorcement from the Lady Catherine of Spain, and by his marrying with the Lady Anne Bullen, during whose time I find no great Persecution, nor any to be forced to abjuration in the Church of England.

Also in the Parliament which began, Anno Christi 1533. upon the aforementioned petition of the Commons to the King, it was at length by the Kings consent enacted, that all the laws, decrees, ordinances, and constitutions made made, or established by the pretended authority of the Bishops of Rome, to advance their worldly Glory, should be null; That whosoever did speak against the same should not therefore stand in any danger, or be impeachable for Heresie. As also that all Constitutions, Ordinances, and Canons, either Provincial, or Synodal made here by the Bishops, and Clergy in their Convocation, being onerous to the King, and his Subjects, and in any wise repugnant to the Laws, and Statutes of this Realm, should be committed to the examination of Thirty two Persons to be chosen out of the Two Houses of Parliament, and by them either to be confirmed, or abrogated at their discretion, &c.

But as the Kings marriage with the Lady Anne Bullen brought great joy to all good and goodly Men, so it much grieved and incensed the Popish party, whereupon some Monks, and Fryers divulged amongst the common people that they had a revelation from God, and his Saints, that he was highly displeased with the Kings divorcement from the Lady Catherine, and they further declared, that God had revealed to a Nun, named Elizabeth Barton, whom they called The holy Maid of Kent, that if the King persisted in his divorce, he should not continue King for a month to an end, &c.

This Nun by her dissimulation before the people, shewed marvelous alteration of her visage, and other parts of her Body, lying as if she had been in a trance, and then, as if she had been inspired by God, would speak much by way of reproofing sin, and reproaching the Gospel, which she called Heresie: As also she uttered many things to the dishonor of the King and Queen, and to the establishing Idolatry, Pilgrimages, &c. But Doctor Crammer, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, the Lord Cromwell, and Master Hugh Latimer, by their prudence, and diligence found out all the knavery, so that the Nun and some of her associates were condemned, and executed. Anno Christi 1533.

The holy maid of Kent hangs, &c.

About this time there was one Pevier, or Pevier, the Town-Clerk of London, and a great Enemy to Gods truth, who could not indure that the Gospel should be translated into English, and in the presence of divers he swore a great Oath, that if he thought the King would set forth the Scripture in English, and so suffer them to be read to the people, he would cut his own Throat, rather than live to see that day: But he broke promise, faith mine Author; For instead of cutting his Throat, he hanged himself with an Halter with judgment for his impiety.

Pevier hangs himself.

About the same time Doctor Foxford, Chancellor to the Bishop of London, [Stokefly] a cruel Persecutor of Gods Saints, who had condemned, and forced to abjure those before spoken of, as he was sitting in his Chair, his Belly burst, and his Guts fell out before him.

Gods Judgment on Foxford.

Anno Christi 1534. The King summoned a Parliament, wherein the usurped power of the Pope was abolished out of this Kingdom, and the King was declared the supreme Head of the Church, and invested with power to reform, and redress all errors, Heresies, and abuses in the same. The University of Cambridge also in the Regent-house unanimously declared against the usurped power of the Bishop of Rome, the like did many Bishops in the Realm: Yet the body of Popery still continued in the Land, so that Anno Christi 1536. that faithful Martyr of God, William Tindal, was betrayed, arraigned, and condemned, and gave his life for the Testimony of the truth, the Story whereof you may read in my First Part of the Marrow of Ecclesiastical History in the Life of Master Tindal.

The Power of the Pope abolished.

Master William Tindal.

The same year followed the death, and Martyrdom of that good Queen Anne Bullen, who had now been married to the King about Three years: She was a Woman of rare and singular gifts of mind, well instructed in the true Religion, with a fervent desire to advance, and propagate the same; she was of a gentle, and modest behaviour towards all; and so humble, that she was not only willing to be admonished, but required her Chaplains freely, and plainly to tell her of whatsoever was amiss. She was very bountiful to the poor, inſomuch that the Alms which she gave in Three quarters of a year, amounted to the Sum of Fourteen or Fifteen thousand pounds; besides a great Sum of money, which she intended to have ſent into Four parts of the Kingdom, to make a ſtock for poor Artificers, and Workmen. She was a zealous defender of Chriſts Goſpel, and by her means it was, that Maſter Hugh Latimer was made Biſhop of Worceſter, and Doctor Shaxton (a good Man,) was advanced to another Biſhoprick. What her Faith was appears by this example.

The Kings ignorance reformed by the Queen.

King Henry, being with her at Woodſtock, was much afraid of an old blind prophecy, by reaſon whereof, neither he, nor other Kings before durſt hunt in that Park, nor enter into the City of Oxford: But at laſt, through the Chriſtian, and faithful counſel of this Queen, he was ſo animated, and encouraged againſt thoſe fooliſh feares, that he both hunted in the Park, and went to Oxford without receiving any harm thereby. She was a ſtrong Bulwark to the reformed Religion, and to the profeſſors thereof, which cauſed her to be much hated by her Popiſh malicious Adverſaries, who ceaſed not till they had wrought her out of the affections of the King, by ſiniſter ſuggeſtions, and falſe tales, and had brought in another Lady, upon whom the King caſting his Eye, and affecting change, he reſolved to be rid of Queen Anne, by whom he had the Lady Elizabeth, afterwards our glorious Queen of England. For which end the King and Queen being at Greenwich to ſee a Juſts, ſuddenly in the miſt of the ſport, the King roſe up, and with a few Perſons went to weſtmiſter, and the next day after, Queen Anne, with the Lord Rochford her Brother, and ſome others were carried to the Tower, and within leſs than Three weeks after, ſhe was beheaded, the cauſe whereof was ſcarce ever ſince known.

Popiſh ſubtilty.

Her Martyrdom.

At the time of her death, ſhe ſpake to this purpoſe; Good Chriſtian People, I come hither to die, being adjudged thereunto, and therefore I will ſpeak nothing againſt it: I come not hither to accuſe any Man, nor to ſpeak any thing of that whereof I am accuſed, and for which I am condemned; I pray God to ſave the King, and to ſend that he may Reign long over you, &c. And if any Perſon will meddle with my cauſe, I require them to judg the beſt: And thus I take my leave of the world, and of you all, and I heartily deſire you all to pray for me. Oh Lord, have mercy upon me: To thee, O God, I commend my Soul, and ſo kneeling down, ſhe ſaid, To Chriſt I commend my Soul; Jeſus, receive my Soul. Which ſhe repeated divers times, till her Head was ſtricken off. The third day after, the King was married to the Lady Jane Seymour.

It pleaſed God that about this time the Lord Cromwel grew in favor with the King, by whole advice many things were reformed in the Church: whereof you may ſee more in my Second Part, in the Life of the Lord Cromwel.

Images abolished.

Anno Chriſti 1538. The Kings injunctions were publiſhed, whereby all ſuch Images, and Pictures as were abuſed with Pilgrimages, or Idolatrous offerings to them, were commanded to be aboliſhed: By vertue whereof many notable Idols were deſtroyed, as the Image of our Lady at Walſingham, Ipfwich, Worceſter, Willeſdon, of Thomas Becket, with many others, which by ſecret Engines were made to open, and ſhut their Eyes, to roull them about, &c. whereby the people had been long deceived.

An Heretic burned.

At the ſame time there was one Frier Foreſt, who was convicted of treaſon, for holding divers damnable Hereſies which he reſuſing to revoke, was condemned to be hanged on a Gallows under the Arms, and by fire made under him, to be burnt to death. But when he ſaw that he muſt die, he caught hold on the Ladder, and would not let it go, and ſhewed very much impatience, and terror at his death, ending his life very unquietly, and ungodly.

Abbeys, and Monaſteries demolished.

The ſame year followed the ruin, and demolishing of Abbeys, and Religious Houſes by the ſpecial motion of the Lord Cromwel.

THE LIFE OF
Mr. JOHN LAMBERT.

Presently after followed the trouble, and Martyrdom of John Lambert, that faithful Servant, and valiant Champion of Jesus Christ, of whom the Story followeth.

John Lambert was born, and brought up in Norfolk, and was first converted by Master Bilney. He studied in the University of Cambridge, and having sufficiently profited in the knowledge of the Latin and Greek Tongues, he translated divers Books into English out of both those Languages, and at last when persecution grew hot, he went beyond the Seas, to Master Tindal, and Master Frish, with whom he abode above a year, and was Preacher to the English Merchants at Antwerp, till by the malice of Sir Thomas Moore, and the cunning craft of one Barlow, he was carried from Antwerp to London, and being brought before Arch-Bishop Warham, he was charged with Forty five Articles, whereunto he returned an excellent, and learned answer in writing, which you have at large in the Book of Martyrs, Volum. 2. page 396. &c. This was Anno Christi 1532. But shortly after Warham dying, Doctor Cranmer was made Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and partly by his means, and partly by the help of Queen Anne Bullen, Master Lambert was delivered out of Prison, and so returning to London, about the Sticks he set up a School, wherein he taught the Latin and Greek Tongues: And seeing that Ministers could not be allowed at that time to marry, he left his Ministry, and wholly betook himself to his School, intending to marry: And thus he continued a Schoolmaster with great commendation, and approbation, and to the great benefit of youth till Anno 1538. At which time being present at a Sermon in Peters Church, there preached one Doctor Taylor, a Man that was a favorer of the truth. After Sermon Master Lambert took his time, and went to the Preacher, desiring to be satisfied in divers things, especially about the manner of Christ's presence in the Sacrament: Doctor Taylor told him that he had other business for the present, but wished him to write his mind, and to come to him at another time: Master Lambert went his way, and having written his mind, repaired to him at another time: For the confirmation of his opinion he had quoted Scriptures, set down reasons, and brought the opinion of the Doctors: Taylor willing to satisfy Master Lambert, advised with divers, but especially with one Doctor Barnes, who favored the Gospel, and was an earnest Preacher, yet liked not Master Lambert's opinion in this point, whereupon he perswaded Master Lambert to put up this matter to Arch-Bishop Cranmer: And thus the matter which at first was but a private conference, became now a publick business: And Master Lambert was sent for by the Arch-Bishop into the publick Court, and forced to defend defend his cause openly : For the Arch-Bishop as yet favored not the Doctrine of the Sacrament, and the rumor of this disputation was presently spread abroad all over the Kings Court.

Stephen Gardiners subtilty.

At this time Stephen Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester was one of the Kings Council, who was of a cruel nature, and withall subtil, and Politick, ever watching an opportunity to hinder the progress of the Gospel : And upon this occasion he went straight unto the King, telling him how much hatred he had procured to himself, by abolishing the Bishop of Romes Authority ; by the demolishing Monasteries, and by the divorce of Queen Katherine, so that he was reported to be a favorer of new Sects, and opinions : But now the time served for his taking off all these aspersions, and clearing himself, if he would vigorously proceed against John Lambert for his Heresies, &c. The King willingly hearkened to this Counsel, and thereupon presently sent out a general commission, commanding all his Nobles and Bishops to come with all speed to London to assist him against Hereticks, and Heresies, which the King himself would sit in judgment upon : And thus all things being prepared, a day was set for Master Lamberts appearance, a great concourse of Nobles was there, and all the Scaffolds filled with spectators : By and by the faithful Servant of Christ Master Lambert, was brought from Prison with a guard of Armed Men, as a Lamb to fight against many Lions, and placed over against the Kings Seat, so that now they tarried but for the Kings coming, who at last came as the Judge of that controversy ; on his right hand sat the Bishops, and behind all the famous Lawyers, and on the left hand the Peers of the Realm, &c. which was enough to have daunted the innocent Servant of Christ, but especially the Kings looks, his cruel countenance, and brows bent in a severe manner : Who turning himself to his Counsellors, called forth Doctor Day, Bishop of Exceter, commanding him to declare to the people the cause of this great assembly ; The sum of the Bishops Oration was, that though the King had abolished the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, yet he would not have any thing that he intended therewith to extinguish Religion, or to give liberty to Hereticks to disturb the Churches peace : As also that they should not expect any disputation upon the Heretical Doctrine ; His purpose being only by the industry of himself, and the Bishops to refute the Heresies of this Man present, and of all like unto him, and openly to condemn them in the presence of them all.

His second imprisonment.

His Trial.

The Bishop having ended his Oration, the King stood up, and with bent brows looking upon Master Lambert, he demand of him what was his Name : The meek Lamb kneeling down, said, My Name is John Nicholson, though ordinarily I am called Lambert ; and so after divers questions and answers, the King bad him go to the matter, and declare his opinion about the Sacrament of the Altar : Then Master Lambert gave God thanks, who had inclined the Heart of the King, that himself disdained not to hear, and understand the cause of Religion : The rather, because it oft-times fell out, that through the cruelty of the Bishops, divers innocent Men in several places were privily murdered, and put to death without the Kings knowledg, &c. Then the King with an angry voice interrupted him, saying, I came not hither to hear mine own praises, therefore briefly go to the matter without any more circumstances. Master Lambert being troubled at the Kings angry words, paused a while, considering whither he might turn himself in this extremity : The King being more incensed hereby, said, why standest thou still? Answer what thy judgment is about the Sacrament of the Altar? Master Lambert first quoted out Saint Augustines judgment, and then plainly denied it to be the Body of Christ : Then the King commanded Arch-Bishop Cranmer to confute his assertion : The Arch-Bishop made a short preface, and then disputed very modestly with Master Lambert ; who answered him very acutely and learnedly, so that the King seemed greatly to be moved therewith, and the Arch-Bishop was intangled, and the people amazed : But Stephen Gardiner filled with all malice, without the the Kings command interposed, and urged his argument, which Lambert easily wiped off, though he was interrupted, and taunted for his labor: Then Stonstal, Bishop of Duresme took his course, and after him Stokesly Bishop of Lincoln;

To both whom, Master Lambert answered so, that both King and Bishops raged exceedingly, so that he was forced to silence. After which, other Bishops, being Ten in all, pressed him with their arguments; so Master Lambert, afflicted with taunts, amazed with the Majesty of the place, the King being present, and tired with standing, having continued Five Hours together, and seeing no hope of prevailing by Speech, resolved to hold his peace: And when they began to light up Torches, the King said to him, what sayest thou after all this pains taken with thee? wilt thou live, or die? what sayest thou? Thou hast yet free choise.
Master Lambert answered, I submit my self wholly to the will of your Majesty;
The King replied, Commit thy self into the hands of God, not of me. Master Lambert answered, I commend my Soul into the hands of God, but my Body I wholly submit to your clemency; Then said the King, If you commit your self to my judgment, you must die, for I will be no Patron to Hereticks; and so turning to the Lord Cromwel, he bad him read the Sentence of condemnation against him. Cromwel was

His condemnation.

Upon the day which was appointed for this holy Martyr to suffer, he was brought out of Prison by Eight a Clock in the morning, to the Lord Cromwells Houle, and so carried to a private Chamber, where Cromwel desired forgiveness of him, for that which he had done. And when the hour of death came, Master Lambert found much joy, and comfort in his Soul, and coming out of the Chamber into the Hall, he saluted the Gentlemen, and sat down to breakfast with them, after which he was presently carried to the place of execution, which was Smithfield, where he was very cruelly handled: For when his Legs were burned to the stumps, the wretched Tormentors withdrew the fire from him, leaving but a small fire, and coals under him: Then Two of them thrust their Halberts into his sides, wherewith they lifted him up as far as the Chain would permit. Then Master Lambert lifting up his Hands, his Fingers ends flaming with fire, said, None but Christ, None but Christ, and so being let down again, he fell into the fire, where he sweetly ended his life.

Lord Cromwel

His Martyrdom.

The same year Robert Packington, Mercer, and Citizen of London, used every day at Five of the Clock in the morning, Summer and Winter, to go to prayers at Mercers Chapel, and one morning being a very great mist, he was pistolled as he crossed the street thitherward; yet the Murtherer was long concealed till Doctor Incent, Dean of Pauls, lying on his Death-bed, confessed that he had hired an Italian, for Forty Crowns to do that wicked deed; and the reason of it was, because this Master Packington being a Burges of Parliament at that time, was known to be a stout Man, one that could speak well, and would be heard: And in that Parliament he had spoken plainly against their wickedness, which had procured him this hatred.

Murdered.

Also the same year there was one Master Collins a Lawyer, burnt for an Heretick in Smithfield. Also in Suffolke there was one Puttedew, who coming to Church, and telling the Priest, that after he had drunk up all the Wine alone, he blessed the People with the empty Cup, was presently apprehended for it, and shortly after burnt for an Heretick.

As also William Leiston, a Monk of Aie in the same County, was burnt at Peck.

Not long before, one Peck was burnt at Ipswich, and when by reaſon of the flame round about him, he was all over as black as a Coal, there was one Doct<sup>r</sup> Reading, with other Doct<sup>r</sup>s ſtanding by, and Reading having a long Wand in his hand, ſtrook Peck on the ſhoulder, ſaying, Recant, and believe that the Sacrament of the Altar is the very Body of Chriſt, fleſh, blood, and bones, and ſo I will preſently abſolve thee: To whom Peck answered, I deſie both it, and thee, and ſo ſpat Blood at him; whereupon the Doct<sup>r</sup> ſaid, To as many as ſhall caſt a ſtick, to the burning of this Heretick, My Lord Biſhop of Norwich grants Forty days pardon; which ſaid, Baron Curſon, Sir John Audley, with many others roſe from their ſeats, and with their ſwords cut down Boughs, and threw them into the fire: The like did all the multitude that was there preſent.

Popiſh ignorance.

Wicked Injunctions.

As God of his great goodneſs had raiſed up Cromwel to be a Friend, and Patron to the Goſpel: So Satan ſtirred up Gardiner, Biſhop of Wincheſter, by all ſubtil, and crafty devices to impede, and hinder the ſame, whereupon he ſo wrought with the King; that Anno Chriſti 1539. he ſet forth injunctions, that none ſhould bring over any Engliſh Books, nor ſell, give, utter, nor publiſh them: That none ſhould here print any Books, but ſuch as were licenſed: That none ſhould print, publiſh, nor ſell any Book of the Scriptures, not firſt peruſed, and licenſed: That no Sacramentaries, or others ſhould ſell Books, maintaining their opinions, but that ſuch Perſons, and Books ſhould preſently be detected, and diſcovered: That none ſhould reaſon, diſpute, or argue about the Sacrament of the Altar: That all Ceremonies formerly uſed in the Church, as holy Water, Proceſſions, creeping on Good-Friday to the Croſs, &c. ſhould be obſerved till it pleaſed the King to alter, or abrogate the ſame: That all Priests that had married Wives, or intended ſo to do, ſhould be deprived from all ſpiritual promotions, &c. and all theſe upon very grievous, and ſevere penalties.

By theſe means the courſe of the Goſpel began again to decline; but preſently after it pleaſed God opportunely to ſtir up the Lord Cromwel to be an inſtrument of advancing the Goſpel, which he had done much more, had not the peſtilent Biſhops by contrary practices craftily undermined him, and ſupplanted his virtuous proceedings.

Lord Cromwells piety.

Stephen Gardiners ſubtility.

About this time, Anno Chriſti 1540. the Lord Cromwel for the better eſta- bliſhing ſincere Religion, in this Realm, deviſed to effect a Marriage between the King, and the Lady Anne of Cleve, whoſe Siſter was married to the Duke of Saxony, a Proteſtant Prince, by which marriage it was ſuppoſed there would be eſta bliſhed a perpetual peace and amity between this Kingdom, and the Proteſtant Princes of Germany, which would much ſtrengthen the Proteſtant party againſt the Tyranny of the Pope and his adherents. But preſently after the marriage, Stephen Gardiner, who was now crept into favor with the King, ſug- geſted to him ſome occaſions of diſtaſt againſt the Duke of Saxony, and ſome apprehenſions of fear by reaſon of that odium which he had pulled upon himſelf, by rejecting the Pope, and demolishing Abbeyes, and Monasteries, whereby (as he told him) he had made the Pope, the Emperor, the King of France, and the King of Scotland, his Enemies, but eſpecially his own Subjects who were much diſtaſted with the innovations in Religion, &c. and that the only way to heal all, was to ſhew himſelf ſharp, and ſevere againſt the new Sectaries.

The Six Articles.

This occaſioned the King to condemn Maſter Lambert; To publiſh the aforenamed injunctions, and as if he yet had not done enough, he ſummoned a Parliament, and Convocation, in both which he cauſed theſe Six Articles to be enacted. Firſt, that the Bread, and Wine in the Sacrament after the words of conſecration, were really turned into the Body and Blood of Chriſt, &c. Secondly,

Secondly, that the Communion in both kinds is not necessary ad salutem, to salvation, &c. Thirdly, that Priests may not marry. Fourthly, that vows of chastity ought to be observed by the Laws of God. Fifthly, that private Masses ought to be continued. Sixthly, that Auricular confession is expedient and necessary to be retained, and frequented in the Church of God.

These Articles being consented unto, and concluded by King and Parliament, the crafty Bishops caused farther to be enacted, that whosoever denied Transubstantiation, or whosoever should be aiders, comforters, counsellors, consenters, and abettors therein, should be adjudged Hereticks; That every such offender should have, and suffer judgment, execution, pains, and pain of death by way of burning, without any abjuration, benefit of Clergy, or Sanctuary, &c. and should farther forfeit to his Majesty, all his honors, manors, lands, revenues, goods and chattels, &c. as in the cases of high treason. And for all such as did preach, teach, uphold, maintain or defend any thing contrary to the Five last Articles, should be adjudged as Felons, and lose both life and goods, as in the case of felony, &c.

Yet when these Articles were in debate in the Parliament-house, Doctor Cranmer Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, like a constant Patron of Gods cause, took upon him the earnest defence of the truth, three days together disputing against these Articles, and in his disputations he behaved himself with such humble modesty; Protesting that the cause was not his, but the cause of Almighty God, that the King could take no offence at the same. Wherefore the King, who always bore him special favor, well liking his zealous defence, only willed him to depart out of the Parliament-house into the Council-chamber for a time till the Act should be passed; which he notwithstanding with humble protestation refused to do. But notwithstanding all his opposition, the Act was passed, and the King considering the constant zeal of the Arch-Bishop, and weighing the many authorities, and reasons which were brought against those Articles: He sent the Lord Cromwel, the two Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, with all the Lords of the Parliament to dine with the Arch-Bishop at Lambeth: where they told him that it was the Kings pleasure that they all should in his Highness behalf, cherish, comfort and animate him as one that in the Parliament had declared himself very learned, and also discreet and wise, and therefore they willed him not to be discouraged at any thing that had passed contrary to his judgment, and allegations; the Arch-Bishop humbly thanked, First the King for his singular good affection towards him, and then the Lords for their pains; Adding, that he hoped that hereafter his allegations and authorities should take place to Gods glory, and the benefit of the Realm.

Not long after followed the apprehension and Martyrdom of the Lord Cromwel, Earl of Essex, concerning which see his Life in my Second Part of the Marrow of Eccles. History.

Lord Cromwells
Martyrdom.

This Lord Cromwel in his life-time had been a great stay and prop to the the Church of England, and had much protected the professors of the Gospel, but after his death, there ensued a miserable slaughter of godly Men, and Women: For Winchester having now obtained his purpose, raised great troubles in the Lords Vineyard, and his malicious mind: admitting no delays, he assaulted Three godly Ministers, Master Robert Barnes, Thomas Garret, and William Jerom.

THE LIFE OF
Dr. B A R N E S.

Doctor Barnes after he came from the University of Lovain, went to Cambridg, where he was elected Prior of the Augustine Fryers. At this time the knowledg of good Letters was scarcely entred into the University; whereupon Doctor Barnes began to read in his own Houle, Terence, Plautus, and Cicero, so that by his great pains and industry, he caused the House to flourish with Learning, and divers began to be eminent for their Scholarship, amongst whom was Master Coverdal. After this foundation laid, he began openly to read upon Pauls Epistles, and that he might advance Christ, and his holy Word, he turned their unfavoury problems, and former fruitless disputations to better Subjects about the holy Scriptures, whereby in short space he made many good Divines: The same order he also observed when he disputed in the University Schools. Thus by his reading, disputations, and preaching he became famous and mighty in the Scriptures, always preaching against Bishops, and Hypocrites, yet saw not the remainders of Idolatry which himself practised, till good Master Bilney, and some others converted him wholly unto Christ. Then preaching publickly in Cambridg, he was accused of Heresie by Two Fellows of Kings-hall. This stirred up some godly, and learned Men of Pembrook-hall, and other Colleges often to meet together at an House in the Town, which in derision was by their Adversaries called Germany.

Contention in Cambridg.

Doctor Barnes his Adversaries accused him in the Regent-house; and Articles being put in against him, he promised to return an answer to them, which accordingly he did at the next Convocation: Then did Doctor Nottaris move Doctor Barnes to make a recantation, which he refused to do. Thus in Cambridg did this difference continue, one preaching against another for about a quarter of a year, at the end whereof a Pursuivant at Arms was sent down from London, who, for the terror of others arrested Doctor Barnes in the Convocation-house, intending also to search for Luthers Books in all their studies that were suspected to favor his Doctrine: But Doctor Farman of Queens College sent word immediately to all their Chambers, so that when the Pursuivant came, the Books were all conveyed away.

Doctor Barnes brought to Cardinal Wol-
sey.

The godly Scholars met together that night, and drew-up an answer for Doctor Barnes, which they gave him, and when he came to London, he was presently carryed before Cardinal wolsey, where after long attendance, he was at last admitted into his Chamber, and caused to kneel upon his Knees: Then said the Cardinal to him, what Master Doctor, had you not sufficient scope in the Scriptures to Preach on, but you must meddle with my Golden Shooes, my Polaxes, my Pillars, my Golden Cushion, my Crosses, did these so offend offend you that you must make us ridiculum caput amongst the people: Surely that Sermon was fitter for a Stage than a Pulpit, &c. Doctor Barnes answered, that he spake nothing but the truth out of the Scriptures, according to his Conscience, and the ancient Fathers, and withal delivering him Six Sheets of writing to corroborate his sayings. The Cardinal said, we perceive then that you intend to stand to your Articles, and to shew your learning: Yes, said Barnes, that I do, by Gods grace, and your Lordships favor: Then said the Cardinal, Such as you, bear us little favor. But whether do you think it better for us to have all this Royalty for the terror of the wicked, or to sell all, and give it to the Poor? Barnes answered, I think it is necessary to be sold, and given to the Poor: For this is not comely for your calling, &c. Then the Cardinal said, what say you, Master Doctor? do you not know that I am Legatus de latere? and that I have power to dispense in all matters of Religion? Barnes answered, that he knew it: Then said the Cardinal, will you be ruled by me? &c. Barnes answered, he would stick to the holy Scriptures, according to that simple Talent that God had lent him. This angered the Cardinal, so that he would have sent him presently to the Tower; But at the request of Two Doctors, he was returned that night to the Sergeant at Arms, and the next day was carried to the Chapter-house at Westminster.

When he came thither, there were Five Stilliard Men in question for Lollardy, and for bringing over some of Luthers Books, but as soon as they saw Doctor Barnes, they caused him to stand aside whil'st they examined the Doctor, after which they committed him, with the Stilliard Men, all close Prisoners to the Fleet. Afterwards he was again carried before them, and after many threats and scorns, they asked him whether he would abjure or burn? But he being in great Agony resolved for the present rather to burn than to abjure: Yet afterwards by the crafty, and subtle dealing of some pretended Friends, he was drawn from his steadfastness, and brought to abjure, and to do a disgraceful Penance in Pauls Church, together with the Stilliard Men: Yet neither then would they dismiss him, but kept him Prisoner, first in the Fleet, afterwards in Austin-Friers in London, and at last they sent him to Austin-Friers in Northampton, sending down after him a Writ for his burning, which he, having notice of from a Friend, privily made an escape, and getting on a Beggars cloathis, he went to London; and so by Sea to Antwerp, and from thence he travelled to Wittenberg, where he fell hard to his study, and wrote his Book called Acta Romanorum Pontificum: And his supplication to King Henry the Eighth, wherein he gives an account of all the subtil, malicious, and injurious dealings of the Popish party with him, in this manner.

His frailty

His escape

His supplication to the King

IN the year of our Lord 1525. (saith he) and the 24. of December, at the request of the Parish, I preached a Sermon in Saint Edwards Church in Cambridge, out of which Sermon mine Adversaries gathered some Articles against me, which when I knew of, I offered to preach again the next Sabbath, and to clear my self: But Doctor Ridley, and Doctor Preston (Chaplains and Kitchmen to the Bishop of London) prevailed with the Vice-Chancellor to inhibit me, yet could I never learn any reasonable cause why, but that he said, it should be for my profit to hold my peace: with this I was satisfied till the aforesaid Doctors, and one Master Tyll drew up Articles against me, and presented them to the Vice-Chancellor, who sending for me, asked me what I said to them: I answered, that they were none of mine, only some Words and Sentences in them I had spoken, but what should make for me, that was left out, for which I referred my self to the Auditory: The Vice-Chancellor replied, that I must take heed what I denied, for if they brought witness against me, I must die. I answered, that such witness should be false, for I never spake them: To which he replied, that I could not prove a Negative, and were the witness true or false, I must suffer for it, if they came in, for that was the Law: To which I answered, that that was a piteous case, case, for by that Law they might condemn Christ himself: He replied, that I should consider what I did, for the matter was so hainous, that I could be admitted in Law no Counsel: Then said I, God help me which knoweth all things. This was in the Schools, the Doors shut fast; none present on my party, but of my Adversaries, Doctor Ridly, Doctor Preston, Doctor Watson, and a Doctor of Law; with Master Fooke, and Master Tyrell, who was appointed to present these Articles against me.

Articles against him

The Vice-Chancellor when he could get no more of me, asked me what I would do? I answered, that he should hear their complaint, and I would make such an answer as God should put into my mind. Then did Master Tyrell present a Roll in which were certain Articles (as he said) gathered out of my Sermon, of which some were contentious, some seditious, some slanderous, and some Heretical: Then said I, Good Master Tyrell, will you present any of these Articles as Heretical? But the Vice-Chancellor moved me to submit my self, whereto I said, Whatsoever I have spoken against Gods Word, or the exposition of the holy Doctors, I will be content therewith to be reformed, and to submit my self: The other Doctors were not satisfied with this, unless I would add, or if I have offended the Laws of the Church: At this I stopped, and said, that it was too large, for I knew not what they meant by the Laws of the Church: It was sufficient for me to submit to Gods Word, and the exposition of the holy Doctors: But when they would not be satisfied, I yielded that I would agree to all Laws that were not against Gods Word, nor St. Augustine, Jerom, &c.

This was all that was done the first day; For by this time was the whole Body of the University gathered together, who knocked at the Doors, and said that they would hear my examination, seeing the cause was publick, and a matter of learning that concerned the whole University, and therefore these few Persons should not take upon them only, and privately to hear and determine such causes; and when the Vice-Chancellor could not satisfy them, he said, We must for the present give over this matter, for the University is in a tumult, and so we departed.

But Two or Three days after, I was called into Clare-hall to the Vice-Chancellors Chamber, where were also the aforesaid Doctors gathered against me; There did they intreat me with flattering words to submit to Master Vice-Chancellors counsel; whereupon I required to be indifferently heard by him, together with my Adversaries, and then if I had said any thing against the truth, I would submit: They replied, that it was for my good that he did sit in judgment, for if witnesses should come in against me (as certainly they would) I were a lost Man: To which I answered, that such must needs be false witnesses, for many learned Men heard my Sermon, who would certainly testify the truth: They replied, that if Three came in against me, Twenty three would not help me, for that was the Law, &c. After they had a while conferred together privately, the Vice-Chancellor came to me, and told me that on his Conscience they were all my Friends, and intended to save both my Name and Fame, which yet they could not do, except I followed their counsel: After a while upon their much urging, I said, Right Worshipful Masters, I trust ye be all my good Friends, and have so much charity in you, as that you will not cast me away except you find me obstinate, which I trust you shall not do. For I never intended to speak any thing against *Christ*s truth; yet seeing the Law is so dangerous as you have shewed me, I had rather put my self upon your charity, than to stand to the danger of it: And therefore to these Articles, I thus answer, that here are many Words and Sentences which I did speak, and therefore I submit my self to you, intreating your favor not to take me in the worst sense: Then after they had given me my Oath to stand to their judgment, the Vice-Chancellor, as he said, absolved me ab excommunicatione juris.

Their treachery with him.

But herein they dealt treacherously; For unknown to me, that had a Notary that wrote down all these passages, whereas they pretended to deal with me as Friends, and as private Persons, yet afterwards they made use of all, and put it into the Court as a witness against me, when I was brought before the Bishops.

Whilest these businesses were transacting, the Body of the University gathered together, and sent up certain Masters and Batchelors of Divinity to the Vice-Chancellor, requiring that they might be admitted to hear my examination, forasmuch as they heard my Sermon. Answer was made that there was no such matter in handling, but that they only conferred with me Friendly, and gave me advice for my profit; yet to satisfie them, I was dismissed for the present.

About a moneth after Doctor Watson and Doctor Preston, by the advice of the Vice-Chancellor, drew up a Recantation of every Article by it self, wherein they would have me confels whatsoever was alleadged against me, because (as they said) some men had understood me so: And herein they construed every thing in an evill sense, so that there was never an Article but it was either Heretical, Seditious, Contentious, Blasphemous, or piis auribus offensivus: I had a Friend that privately wrote out this Recantation, which when I had gotten, I sent for to my Chamber Master Stafford, Master Bilney, and six or eight more of the learnedest Men that were in Cambridg, whose counsel I asked about this matter: They answered, that seeing this Recantation was false, and uncharitable, I could not with a good Conscience agree to it; whereupon the Vice-Chancellor, and Doctors called me again, and would have me read this Recantation the Sabbath after publikely in the Church, where I had made my Sermon, without saying more or less than what was written; yea, and that I should promise, that if I were afterwards convented by the higher powers, I should be content to suffer all pain and punishment that they should lay upon me: I refused to agree thereto, telling them that it was neither agreeable to learning, equity, nor charity, seeing I neither spake nor thought these things, but they were only false collections made by malicious persons out of my sayings contrary to my meaning: Upon this they were divided amongst themselves, some saying that I was bound by my Oath to submit hereto, others saying that my Oath bound me not, because contrary to their promise, they had dealt so uncharitably with me, so that at last they gave me eight days time to return my answer what I would do.

In the mean time Master Tyrrill posted to London, and procured Cardinal Wolsey to send down a Serjeant at Arms, who arrested me in the University, and carried me away to London, and the Wednesday night after, I was carried before the Cardinal, who read over my Articles, and asked me divers questions about the same, after which I told him that these Articles were uncharitably gathered out of my Sermon: He asked me how I would purge my self from the suspicion of Heresie: I answered, that I would bring Twenty honest, learned Men that should be my Compurgators. He said, Can you bring Six or Ten Doctors of Divinity? I told him that was impossible, for there were but Two that heard my Sermon, and they belonged to Bishops, and therefore probably would not testifie for me. Then said he, You must be burned, therefore consider with your self whether you will stand to a course of Law, or submit your self to my Grace. But having been formerly circumvented by submitting to the Vice-Chancellor, I resolved to be no more so hasty in doing the like again: After some other discourse he told me that I was a Fool, and perceived not how good he was to me, and therefore he appointed Fifteen or Sixteen Bishops and Doctors to hear, and examine me the next day. At which time the Bishop of Bath told me that I was defamed for Heresie, which I denied, and desired to know mine accusers. Nay, said he, we proceed after another form of Law, &c. They asked me also divers other questions not at all pertaining to my Articles, and after I had answered them, they laid their Heads together to find out other captious questions, and thus they continued with me Three days together, at the end whereof there was a great long Roll, or Recantation offered me, and I was commanded to read it, and not to speak one word more or less before the people than what was contained in that Roll; For if I did, they would handle me well enough: Then I desired that I might first see what was contained in it; But this would be by no means granted: Then I desired to know whether they laid Heresie to my charge in it; They answered, Yea; Then I desired to know what it was, for I had taught no other but what Saint Augustine, Jerome, and other Doctors of the holy Church had taught before me; They said, If Augustine, Jerome, &c. were present, they should stand to the determination of the Church; I replied, that they were so far approved, that if any Church should determine against them, I should suspect it: But they still urged me to give a positive answer whether I would read the Recantation or no? Then said I, My Lords, I beseech you for Christs sake, deal charitably with me, remembering what Paul saith, Your power is given for edification, not for destruction. Tell us, say they, whether you will read the Roll or not; this is the third and last time of asking? I replied, I will not read it unless I may first see it, do with me as you shall please. When they had consulted together, they told me I should have one to read it to me; And so appointed a Notary to go aside, and read it to me. In the beginning of it, it was said, that whereas certain Articles were gathered out of my Sermon, whereof some were Scandalous, some Seditious, some Foolish, and some Heretical: I asked him, Which be Heretical? He answered, It belongs not to me, I can make you no answer: Hereupon I replied, Shall I be condemned for an Heretick, and not be shewed my Heresie? Read no farther: Then returning to the Bishops, I kneeled down, and desired them for the Passion of Christs sake to shew me which Article they condemned for Heresie, &c. But they answered, that I should read the Roll, or else be burnt: Then said I, Jesus, have mercy on me, I will never read it: Upon this the other Doctors cried out upon me on all sides, saying, Remember your self, cast not away your self after this manner: To read the Roll is but a very small matter; you will be never the worse Man, and you shall see that my Lord Cardinal will be good and gracious to you, and we will all speak for you. So that I supposed in very deed, that they would have required no more of me but to read the Roll, that I might not seem to have the Victory over them; which thing I regarded not, and having this opinion of them, and being overcome by their good, and flattering words, I consented to read it; But then the Bishop of Bath said, It was too late; others said the contrary: At last, all the people were called in (who were very many, and hitherto had been kept out) to hear me read it: Then was I commanded to sign it, and make a Cross on it: Then to kneel before the Bishop, and to desire Absolution: But he refused to grant it; unless I would swear to perform the Penance which should be enjoined me: And when, relying upon their charity, I had done all this, they sent me back to Prison that night, and the next day being Sabbath, I should do Penance openly at Pauls: And to make the world believe that I was a notorious Heretick, the Cardinal came with all his pomp, and pride, and all the Bishops and Abbots about the City, almost Thirty in number, the more to advance their cause, and disgrace me: Then did the Bishop of Rocheſter preach a Sermon against Lutherans, as if I had been convicted for one: And yet after all this I must return to Prison, and there remain till my Lord Cardinals further pleasure, which pleasure I did abide first and last Two years and Three quarters, and yet could not be delivered: And whereas I sent to the Bishop of London certain worshipful Men of the City, who proffered to be bound for me, and much importuned him for my liberty, he dealt so with them, that when they came home, there was not any of them that durst so much as give me a bit of Bread to relieve me in my necessity, nor yet speak one word to me.

His long imprisonment.

Immediately after this the Bishop caused me to be sent to Northampton, there to remain in perpetual Prison. Thus, most gracious Prince, have they handled me your poor Orator. I beseech your Highness to be good, and gracious to me, and to judge if this be charitable dealing, thus to condemn me for an Heretick, and and never to shew me the cause why: But by violent Tyranny to compell me to do, and to confesse even what they please, or else I must be put to death: And if yet there be any of them that will come forth, and prove Heresie against me, I will submit to suffer any punishment that your Grace shall adjudge me to. The Lord Iesus Christ preserve your Noble Grace evermore. Amen.

Doctor Barnes whilest he was at Wittenberg repented much of his former back-sliding, and grew more strong in Christ. He was greatly esteemed by Luther, Melancthon, Pomerane, Iustus Jonas, &c. As also by the Duke of Saxony, and the King of Denmark, who sent him with some Lubeckers upon an Embassage to our King Henry, at which time he lay at the Stilyard. His repentance.

Sir Thomas Moore being then Lord Chancellor would faine have entrapped him, but the King would not suffer it, and so he departed again to Lubeck without restraint, Cromwel being yet alive, and his great Friend: After this he went again to Wittenberg, where he remained to set forwards his works in print, and King Henry having marryed the Lady Anne Bullen, he returned into England, and was a painful, and faithful Preacher in the City of London all her time: After that he was sent Ambassador by the King to the Duke of Cleve about a marriage between the King and the Lady Anne of Cleve, and was well approved for his pains therein, and in all his other doings, till Stephen Gardiner returned out of France, after which time neither Religion, nor the Queen, nor Cromwel, nor the preachers of the truth prospered. For this Stephen Gardiner never rested till he had caused the King to be divorced from the Lady Anne of Cleve, whereupon he began his Bloody broils. His return to England.

And first he began with Doctor Barnes, against whom he presumed the King to have dislike, because he had been an instrument in promoting his marriage with the Lady Anne of Cleve, and this occasion fell out fitly for his turn. Lent was now at hand; and Doctor Barnes, Master Hierom, Vicar of Stepney, and Master Thomas Garret were appointed to preach at Pauls Cross; Gardiner hearing of it, sent his Chaplain to the Bishop of London, desiring to have a day before them to preach there: This was easily assented to, and Gardiner preached upon the Gospel appointed for the day, which was about the temptations of Christ, wherein he inveighed against the new way (as he called it,) and the preachers of it, comparing them to the Divil in his temptations, &c.

Presently after came Doctor Barnes his turn, who preached upon the same text, and was as vehement on the contrary in setting forth the true Doctrine of Christ, as Winchester had been in laboring to impugn the truth, and to draw Men to error, from sincerity to Hypocrisie, from Religion to superstition, from Christ to Antichrist, and in the process of his Sermon he compared himself and Gardiner to Two fighting Cocks, but (said he) the Garden-Cock wants good Spurs: Adding that if he had answered him no better in the Schools than he had done in the Pulpit, he would have given him Six stripes, Gardiner was so nettled with this Sermon that he presently went to the King, complaining how he, being a Prelate of the Realm, had been failed on at Pauls Cross: This so incensed the King, that sending for Barnes, and taking him into his private Closet, before the Earl of Southampton and some others, he highly rebuked him, and after much debate, he appointed him to confer with Winchester: But after a while Doctor Barnes waxed weary of the Bishops House, and so withdrew himself: This being complained of with many aggravations to the King, he was greatly incensed against Barnes, enjoying him, and his Two companions to preach Two recantation Sermons at the Spittle, where Stephen Gardiner also was present to hear them. His Sermon at Pauls Cross.

When Doctor Barnes came up, contrary to most Mens expectation, he boldly asserted the truth: And the like did Hierom, and Garret after him: So that the Lord Major after the Sermon was ended, asked Winchester, whether from thence he should send Barnes to the Tower? But Winchester had rather that it should be the Kings doing, and therefore by himself and his Agents he so incensed the King, that they were all Three presently sent to the Tower, where they continued from Easter till July, and then Two days after the death of the Lord Cromwel, Process was made against them by the Kings counsel in Parliament, and within a few days after these Three servants of God, not coming to any answer, nor knowing the cause of their condemnation, and without any publike hearing were carried from the Tower to Smithfield, where at the stake Doctor Barnes, to clear himself from the imputation of Heresie, made a large, and excellent confession of his Faith, and afterwards he asked the Sheriff if he had any Articles against him for which he was condemned? The Sheriff answered, No: Then said he, Is there any man else that knows wherefore I die? To which no man answered. Then said he, I am condemned to die, and as I hear, by an Act of Parliament, but wherefore I cannot tell: But it seems for Heresie, because I am to be burned: As for such as have been the occasion of it, I pray God to forgive them, as I would be forgiven my self, &c. I have been reported to have been a Preacher of sedition, and disobedience to the King; but I profess to you, that you are all bound by the Law of God, to obey your Prince with all Humility, &c. and that not only for fear of vengeance, but for conscience sake. Yea, if the king should command you to do any thing against Gods word, and you have power by force to resist him, yet you may not do it. Then did he request the Sheriff to have him commended to the King, and to request him for Gods sake, to give at least, part of the Abbey lands for the comfort and relief of the poor: To see that Matrimony be had in more reverence, and that Men for light occasions do not put away their Wives, nor live in fornication, &c. To punish that abominable swearing that was so rife, and which otherwise would pull down vengeance: To set forwards Christs true Religion, and to perfect that Reformation which he had begun, &c. Then did he desire all Men to forgive him if he had any way offended them, and to bear him witness that he abhorred all false Doctrins against the word of God, and that he dyed in the Faith of Jesus Christ, by whom he doubted not to be saved: And so intreating them to pray for him, he prepared himself patiently to take his death, and resigned up his spirit into the Hands of God.

Master Thomas Garret Minister of Honey-lane in London, having gotten sundry good Books out of Germany, with Tindals New Testaments went to Oxford to sell them amongst divers godly students there: But Cardinal Woolsey having intelligence hereof by his spies, First made search in London for him, and afterwards sent down to Oxford to search for him: But Master Garret by some Friends had private notice beforehand, and therefore by the advice of his Friends he was sent towards Dorsetshire there to remain till he could convey himself beyond Sea: By the way as he went he was surprized with a great fear, and could have no rest in his spirit till he returned to Oxford, which accordingly he did, and the same night after his coming, he was by the privy search apprehended, and delivered to the Commissary, who kept him prisoner in his Chamber: But when the Commissary with all his company were gone to Evensong: Garret putting back the bolt of the lock, escaped, intending to go into Wales, and from thence to convey himself into Germany: But by the way (great search being made after him) he was again apprehended, and together with many other young students was enforced to do penance: Afterwards shifting from place to place, he escaped their tyranny, till at last he was again apprehended, and finally burnt with Doctor Barnes in Smithfield, where he holily, and constantly endured Martyrdom.

The Third that was burnt with them was Master William Hierom, Vicar of Stepney, who was a diligent preacher of Gods word, and one that labored to root out of the Hearts of his Hearers their superstitious practices, &c. And being called to preach at Pauls Cross he there maintained justification by Faith, for

for which he was convented before the King, imprisoned in the Tower, and at last burned with the other Two in Smithfield, where he comfortably slept in the Lord. His Martyrdom.

At the same time Three others were burned in Smithfield for Popery, which raised a great doubt in the common people about Religion, not knowing which side to follow, and this was occasioned by reason of the discord in the Privie Counsel, one part being Protestants, and the other part Papists, and as one part called for the execution of Papists, so did the other of Protestants. Some burnt for Popery.

Yea by reason of the Six Articles such a number were apprehended in London, Calce, and other places, that all the prisons in London were too little to hold them, and many of them were imprisoned in Halls. A great Persecution.

Anno Christi 1541. there was one John Porter, who was cruelly handled for reading upon a Bible in Pauls Church, which in the dayes of the Lord Cromwel had been set there by Bonner Bishop of London: Whereof see more in my Second part, in the Life of the Lord Cromwel. John Porter.

This with Five other Bibles being set up in that Church, divers well-disposed people used much to resort thither to read, and have them read, amongst whom this John Porter used sometimes to be occupied to the edifying both of himself, and others. He, by diligent reading of the Scriptures, and hearing the Sermons of those which set forth the truth of the Gospel, grew very expert: So that very many resorted to hear him read, the rather because he had a very audible voice: This at last so vexed Bonner, and his Chaplains, that he sent for Porter and rebuked him very sharply for his reading. Porter, answered that he trusted he had no way offended contrary to the Law thereby. Bonner charged him for making expositions upon the text, and for gathering multitudes about him to raise tumults: This Porter denied, yet did Bonner send him to Newgate, where he was miserably loaden with Irons both Hands, and Legs, with a great Collar of Iron about his Neck, whereby he was fastened to the wall in the Dungeon: After a while he sent for a Kinsman of his, who by bribing the Keeper, obtained that he was put amongst the Thieves, and Murtherers: But Porter hearing, and seeing their wickedness, and Blasphemy, exhorted them to amendment of life, giving them such instructions as himself had learned out of the holy Scriptures. For this he was complained of, and carried down into the lowest Dungeon, where he was so cruelly oppressed with Bolts, and Irons, that within few days after he was found dead. Murthered in prison.

About the same time John Longland Bishop of Lincoln, burned Two godly Men upon one day; one Thomas Bernard for teaching the Lords Prayer in English, the other, James Morton for keeping the Epistle of James translated into English in his Houfe. Also one Master Barber, Master of Arts in Oxford, a godly, and learned Man, that disputed stoutly, and accurately against the Doctrine of Transubstantiation; through the iniquity of the times was at last brought to a recantation, after which he never prospered, but wore away with grief and sorrow till he died. Thomas Bernard.
James Morton.
Master Barber recanting wore away with sorrow.

Anno Christi 1544. There was in London one Robert Testwood, who was famous for his skill in Musick, whereupon the Musicians in Windfor-Colledge, desired Doctor Sampson their Dean, that he might have a place amongst them; But some of the Canons hearing that Testwood smelled of the new learning, (as they called it) opposed his coming: Yet at last, through the importunity of the former, a place being void, he was seat for, and after Four or Five days Trial, his voice and skill were so liked, that he was settled amongst them, and was in good esteem both with the Dean, and Canons a good while: But when they perceived by his discourse at their Tables that he was a Lutheran, they began to mislike him, and one day being at Dinner with Doctor Rawson, there was one Master Ely present, who took occasion to rail against Lay-men for studying of the Scriptures: Testwood could not bear it, but replied that he thought it no Robert Testwood.

hurt for them to study, and know the Scriptures: And after, falling into further discourse about the Supremacy of the Pope, Testwood in his heat of arguing affirmed that every King in his own Dominion ought to be the Head of the Church under Christ: This so netled Ely, that he flung from the Table; and though Testwood assayed to pacifie him, yet he could not prevail, Ely laboring to incense all the House against him: But whilst he was seeking to destroy Testwood, the Act of Parliament came forth to abolish the supremacy of the Pope, and to make the King Head of the Church, by which means Testwood for the present escaped.

His zeal,

But not long after, Testwood walking in the Church, and seeing the Pilgrimes come by flocks from Devonshire, and Cornwal with Candles and Images to offer to King Henry of Windsor, his Spirit was moved at that great Idolatry, whereupon he went to them, and in a gentle manner exhorted them to leave that false worshipping of dumb creatures, and learn to worship the true, and everliving God aright, shewing them how God plagued his people for going a whoring after such stocks, and stones, and would plague them, and their posterities if they would not leave it: This, through Gods mercy, prevailed so far with some of them, that they said they would never go on pilgrimage more. Then going further, he saw another company licking, and kissing a white Lady of Alabaſter that stood behind the High Altar, wiping their hands upon it, and then stroking their own Heads and Faces, which so stirred up his zeal, that with a Key which he had in his Hand, he strook off a piece of the Images Nose, saying, See good people, what it is, nothing but a piece of earth that cannot help it self, how then will you have it help you? For Gods sake be no more thus deluded, and so he went home to his House.

He defaceth an Idol.

The rumour hereof presently was spread abroad, and many came to see it, and amongst the rest, one Symonds, a Lawyer, who seeing the Nose on the ground took it up, saying, It should one day be a dear Nose to Testwood.

Demetrius like,

Many were greatly offended with Testwood, the Canons for his speaking against their profit, the Wax-chandlers for hindring their Market, &c. Yea some of the Canons Men threatned to kill him: Hereupon Testwood kept his House, minding to send a relation of the whole business to the Lord Cromwel, his especial Friend. The Canons hearing of his intent, sent their Verger to him to request him to come to Church, but he refused in regard of the danger: Then did they send for a Justice of Peace, who being come, and hearing the matter, was very loath to meddle with it: But at the Canons request, he at last went to Testwood, and upon his faithful promise for his security, he prevailed with him to go to Church: By the way one of the Canons Men drew his dagger at Testwood, but the Justice of Peace secured him: And after debate in the Chapter-House the business was so pacified, that Testwood might quietly come, and go to Church as formerly.

His danger.

After a while upon Relique-Sunday (as they called it) wherein every one was to carry a Relique in procession, Testwood, amongst others had Beckets Rochet proffered him, But he pushed it from him, saying, If they gave it him, he would wipe his tail with it: some other jests he put upon them, which much angered them.

Doctor Sampson, the Dean, being dead, and one Master Francklen succeeding him, one of the Canons in despite of Testwood, and his Sect, set up a Paper on the Church-door in commendation of our Lady, ascribing to her, Redemption, Justification, Salvation, &c. Testwood seeing this paper, plucked it down: The next morning such another was set up, and Testwood coming a little before the Dean, plucked it down again: Whereupon the Dean asked him, how he durst be so bold to pluck it down in his presence? Testwood answered, that he marvelled much more that he would suffer such a Blasphemous Paper to be set up, adding, that he would justify what he had done. This boldness so offended them all, that they said he was an Heretick, and would lose a fagot one day for this geer. Yet notwithstanding all the threats of his enemies he lived in peace, till after the death of the Lord Cromwel, and till Winchester had so far insinuated into the Kings affections, that he wholly ruled the roost; at which time Testwood being sick in Bed, was fetched out, and cast into Prison, together with Antony Person, John Marbeck, and Henry Filmer, and after a while they were all brought forth to judgement before Doctor Capon, Bishop of Salisbury, and some others: Testwoods indictment was, for that when the Priest lifted up the Sacrament, he said: What, wilt thou lift it up so high? what, yet higher: take heed that thou let him not fall: As also for that at such times he used to look down on his Book, or another way, that he might not see the Sacrament: Whereupon he said, I beseech you, my Lord, whereon did he look that marked me so well? Marry, quoth the Kings Attourney, he could not be better occupied than to mark such Hereticks that so despised the blessed Sacrament.

His imprisonment.
Antony Person,
John Marbeck,
Henry Filmer.

The Jury that went upon these Men was packed for the purpose, and therefore quickly brought in their verdict that they were all guilty. Then the prisoners being carried away, prepared themselves to die on the morrow, comforting one another in the death, and passion of their Master Christ, who had led the way before them, trusting that the same Lord who had enabled them to suffer so far for his sake, would not now withdraw his strength from them, but enable them with stedfast Faith, and power to overcome those fiery torments through his free mercy, and goodness: And so they spent the greatest part of the night in prayer, both for themselves and their Persecutors, who through blind zeal had done they knew not what: yea such heavenly talk was amongst them that night, that they which watched them, whereof the Sheriff was one, with divers Gentlemen more, were constrained to shed great plenty of tears: In the morning came a pardon for Marbeck.

Their condemnation.

They prepared themselves for death.

Marbeck pardoned.

When the other three were to go to execution, Anthony Person seeing many People in the Prison, said the Lords Prayer, and so taking their leave of Marbeck, praising God for his deliverance, and praying for his increase in godliness, they desired his hearty prayers, kissed him, and so went out of the prison. As they passed through the streets they desired all the faithful to pray for them, to stand fast in the truth of the Gospel, and not to be moved at their afflictions, it being the happiest thing that ever befel them. When they came to the place of execution, which was under Windsor-Castle, Person with a cheerful countenance embraced the stake, and kissing it, said, Now welcome mine own sweet wife, for this day shall thou, and I be married together, in the love and peace of God. When they were all bound to the stake, Filmer said, Be merry, my Brethren, and lift up your Hearts unto God; For after this sharp Breakfast, I trust we shall have a good Dinner in the Kingdom of Christ, our Lord and Redeemer. Testwood lifting up his Hands and Eyes unto Heaven, prayed to the Lord above to receive his spirit. Person pulling some straw unto him, laid some of it upon the top of his Head, saying, This is Gods Hat, now I am dressed like a true Souldier of Christ by whose merits only I trust this day to enter into his joy. And so they yielded up their spirits into the hands of their Heavenly Father, with such humility, and stedfastness, that many which saw their patient suffering, confessed that they could have found in their Hearts to have dyed with them.

Their courage and constancy.

Note.

Their Martyrdom.

A while after King Henry seeing the Sheriff of Barkshire, and Sir Henry Foster together on Horse-back in Guildford-Park, he asked them how his Laws were Executed at Windsor: Then they beseeching his Grace of pardon, told him plainly that in all their lives they never sat on a matter which went so much against their consciences, as did the death of Person, Testwood, and Filmer, delivering to him a pitiful tale of the casting away of these Three Men: The King turning his Horse-head, rode away saying, Alas poor innocents! After which he withdrew his favor from the Bishop of Winchester, and caused Doctor London and Simonds, to be apprehended and examined before the Council, where it was proved to their Faces that they were both perjured, and thereupon they were adjudged to ride about Windsor, with their Faces towards the Horsetail, and to stand upon the Pillory, at Windsor, Reading, and Newberry, with papers on their Heads for accusing the aforesaid Martyrs falsely, and for perjury : This was written by John Marbeck, that should have been one of them.

Rome pro-
faneness.

About the same time there was one Adam Damlip, formerly Chaplain to Fisber, Bishop of Rocheſter, after whose death he travelled through France, Germany, and Italy, in which journey he conferred with many learned Men about the controversies in Religion, and at the last he went to Rome, where he thought to find much strictness in life, and sincerity in Religion, but instead thereof he met with such Blaspheming of God, contempt of the truth of Christ, looseness in life, and such abundance of all abominations, and filthiness, that in his Heart he abhorred to stay there any longer, though he was much solicited thereto by Cardinal Pool, who offered him good preferment. In his return homeward he came to Calice, and waiting there for passage into England, he fell into acquaintance, and conference with some honest Men, who finding him Learned, and well-affected to the truth, earnestly solicited him to stay there a while, and to preach Two or Three days, that he might do good to the people, and refresh himself after his tedious Travels. This he consented to, if he might have the license of those in Authority thereunto. Hereupon these honest Men brought him to the Lord Lisle, the Kings Deputy for the Town, and Marches of Calice, acquainting him what conference had passed between them : Which known, the Lord Lisle instantly desired him to stay there, and to preach Three or Four days, or longer at his pleasure, promising that he should have both his own, and the Commissaries license to authorize him therein. After he had preached Three or Four times, he was so liked both for his learning, utterance, and sincere Doctrine, that he had not only the approbation of the common people, and Souldiers, but the Lord Deputy, and most of the Counsel gave him much praise, and thanks for the same. The Lord Deputy also proffered him his table in his House, if he pleased to stay, and accept of it, and to accommodate him with whatsoever he lacked, if it could be had for money, either for Books, or any other things, if he would stay, and preach to them so long as it should seem good to him : Master Damlip heartily thanked his Lordship for his kind, and liberal offer : but refused to accept of the same, only desiring him to appoint him some quiet place in the Town, where he might have the opportunity of applying himself to his studies without disturbance, promising that he would Twice every day preach unto them, according to that Talent which God had lent him.

The Lord Deputy much rejoiced hereat, and sending for an honest Man [William Stevens] requested him to receive Master Damlip into his House, promising to pay him with the most whatsoever he should demand, as also to send him every meal one of the best dishes from his own Mess. Master Damlip desired his Lordship to forbear that kindness, telling him that a spare diet was most convenient for students : Yet this Noble Lord would not be restrained, but that very meal he sent it. Thus for the space of above Twenty days together he preached every morning learnedly, plainly, and holily about the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, enveighing against, and confuting the Popish errors about it : His opinions he confirmed by Scripture, and ancient Fathers : Exhorting the people to turn from Popery, declaring what a zealous Papist he had been, and how God wrought upon him by seeing the abominable wickedness which was universally practised in Rome, shewing, that if gain, or ambition could have prevailed with him, he might have been entertained by Cardinal Pool : But durst not do it out of conscience, being convinced of the truth by the holy Scriptures : His Auditory encreasing daily, he was forced to preach in a larger place. And at last he spake against the Picture of the Resurrection, which was in Saint Nicolas Church, shewing that it was but a delusion set up by the French before Calice was English, whereupon there came a Commission from the King to the Lord Deputy, and some other Commissioners to search whether there were Three Hosts lying upon a Marble-stone besprinkled with Blood, as was commonly believed. Upon search no such thing was found, but Three white Counters instead thereof, which they had painted like Hosts, and with them a Bone that is in a Sheeps Tail, which the next day Master Damlip shewed to the people out of the Pulpit, and by the Lord Deputy they were sent unto the King.

And against

Popish impos-
tures.

The Devil envying the progress of the Gospel, stirred up the Prior of the White-Friers, to bark against Master Damlip, and privately to write letters against him to the Clergy in England, so that a while after he was sent for to appear before the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury: There he met with Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, and some others, before these he constantly affirmed, and defended the Doctrine that he had taught, answering, and confuting all their objections so that his Adversaries marvelled at it, insomuch as some of them said plainly, that the Scriptures knew no such term as Transubstantiation, yet did Winchester threaten him with fire, and fagot, if he persevered in defence of what he had spoken: Master Damlip answered, that the next day he would deliver to them in writing, what he had affirmed, and what he would stand to: That night Doctor Cranmer sent him word that if he appeared any more, he could not escape burning, whereupon the next day he sent them Four sheets learnedly written in Latine, containing a confession of his Faith, together with a defence of his opinion by testimonies of Scripture, ancient Fathers, &c. And then stept aside into the West-Country, and there lived obscurely whilst Gods people in Calice suffered great persecution: For the King being informed that there was great dissension in Calice by reason of diversity of opinions which might endanger the loss of it, at the motion of the Lord Cromwel he sent over Two godly and learned Divines, who in effect preached the same Doctrine that Damlip had done, and so quieted the people, that they left the Town in peace. After their departure one William Smith, Minister of one of the Churches, began to preach, and earnestly to inveigh against Papistry, exhorting Men obediently to hear the word, and no longer to oppose, or contemn the same. Some of the Council perswaded him, that he should not be so violent, but to wait with patience till God should change their hearts, &c. To whom he answered in the Pulpit: Some saith he, advise me that I should not be so earnest against the contemnners of Gods word, &c. But let all such take heed, For I fear that God for their contemning of his word will not long bear with them, but make some of them that they shall not have an Head left upon their shoulders to bear up their caps withal; which afterwards also came to pass.

Persecution in Calice.

Master Damlip
zeal.

A Prediction.

Thus Master Smith continued in the diligent employment of his Talent, till the Devil raised up some of his instruments to persecute him, and other godly Christians which were all sent over into England: They wrote letters to the privy Counsel, suggesting, that by the means of Damlip they were infected with horrible Heresies, and errors: of these persons thus accused, Thomas Brook, Ralph Hare, James Cock, and James Barber were first sent for over, and committed to prison at Westminster, afterwards they were brought before the Bishops: grievous letters were written against them from Calice, by their Adversaries, so that if God had not mightily preserved them, they had all certainly perished.

Persecution renewed in Calice.

Ralph Hare, though so unlearned that he could scarce read, yet through Gods grace was very zealous, and so holy, and inoffensive in his Life, that none of his Adversaries could accuse him for the same: He was charged for speaking against Auricular confession, holy Bread, holy water, &c. as also for

for that he would not swear an Oath, nor use any pastime, but used to be in a corner by himself looking on his Book when others were at play. This the Commissioners charging him withal, he said: My good Lords, I take God to record that I would not willingly maintain any Error, or Heresie: wherefore I beseech you, let my accusers come before me Face to Face, for if they charge me with that which I have spoken, I will not deny it: And if it be truth, I will stand to it: If an Error, I will with all my heart utterly forsake it; I mean if it be against Gods holy word, for the Lord is my witness I daily pray to God that I may know the truth, and shun Errors, and I hope God will preserve me from them: The Bishop of Winchester replied, I perceive now that thou art a naughty fellow. Alas! my Lord, said Hare, what evil have I spoken? The Bishop answered, Marry Sir, you said the Lord, the Lord, and that is Symbolum Hæreticorum: what is that my Lord, said Hare: For Gods sake tell me? Thou art naught, thou art naught, said the Bishop: This made Hare to tremble, which Winchester perceiving said, By my troth I pittie thee: For in good faith I think thou art a good simple Man, and wouldst mean well enough if thou hadst not bad Schoolmasters, &c. Therefore I advise thee to submit thy self to us, it is best for thee so to do. Hare falling upon his Knees, said, That he submitted himself to them: Then did they give him his Oath to be obedient to all Ecclesiastical Laws: Which done, they enjoined him to abjure, and bear a Fagot: He hearing this harsh Sentence, cryed out that he was rigorously dealt withal, having nothing proved to his face against him: But the Bishop told him, he must either do that penance or be burnt.

His weakness.

He is enjoined Penance.

Thomas Brook.

Then was Thomas Brook called for, who was charged by letters from Calice, that he was a seditious fellow; that he had contributed towards maintaining of Damlip, and that he with some others had gathered money towards his entertainment. Brook proved this charge false. Then were some other witnesses produced, who testified that he should say, That that which the Priest held up at Mass was not the natural Body of Jesus Christ, &c. Brook denied the charge, yet confessed that he had some private talk with one of the witnesses, wherein he shewed him the right use of the Sacrament: After some further debate he was dismissed for the present.

Master Smith.
John Butler.

During these Mens troubles at London, Master Smith, and John Butler, were under examination at Calice, and charged for denying the real presence of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar, and presently they were sent for over by a Pursuivant into England, and there brought into the Starr-Chamber, and charged with Sedition, and Heresie, after which they were committed to the Fleet. The next day they were sent for, to come before divers Bishops, and first Butler was charged for speaking unreverently of the Sacrament of the Altar.

Gods judgments on persecutors.

Then did he require to have his charge in writing, and he would return his answer to it: But this would not be granted. After him was Master Smith called for, and charged with the like great crimes, as the other had been, as also for preaching against our Blessed Lady, and against praying to Saints, &c. But it pleased God that one of the witnesses that came against him, shortly after desperately drowned himself.

John Butler Commissary of Calice, being again called before them, was charged for suffering Master Damlip so long to preach there, and not punishing him for the same: His answer was, that he was so countenanced by the Lord Deputy and all the Council, and approved by them, that he could do no otherwise then he did: And so after long attendance, he was at last put out of his office, and so dismissed. Yet afterwards both he, and divers others were enjoined penance by bearing Fagots, &c.

Not long after, the King was again informed, that there were such divisions in his Town of Calice by reason of diversity of opinions, that it was in great danger of being lost to the French. This so incensed the King, that he he presently sent over Commissioners, to examine the business, and amongst the Commissioners, there was one Doctor Curry, who at his coming thither preached a Sermon to exhort all Men to charity; But whilst he had nothing but charity in his Mouth, there was such burning charity in his Heart, that if God had not wonderfully prevented, there had been an Hundred persons burnt, or hanged in that place; But through Gods good providence, the mischief returned upon the Heads of the contrivers of it; For Four of the chief accusers of the Brethren were sent over into England, whereof Two viz. Clement Philpot, and Sir Edmund, a Curat, were hanged, drawn, and quartered at Lambeth: But of all those that were accused, not one of them lost one hair of his Head.

Gods judgement on Persecutors.

A Miracle of mercy.

Amongst those honest Men that were at this time persecuted, was one William Stevens, whose crime was for favoring, and entertaining Master Damsip, whereunto he answered, that what he had done, was at the earnest request, and command of the Lord Deputy, yet was he sent over into England, and made Prisoner in the Tower: The Lord Deputy was also shortly after sent for over, and imprisoned in the same place, who there continued till he died: But the wicked Lady his Wife, a great Enemy to the truth, immediately after her Husbands apprehension, fell distracted, and so continued for many years.

William Stevens and the Lord Life persecuted.

Gods judgement on Persecutors.

Another that was troubled, was Thomas Brook, who was imprisoned; And a simple Man, one George Bradway, was grievously threatened with horrible punishments if he would not accuse him, which at last through fear he did; but within a day, or two after was so terrified in Conscience for it, that he attempted to cut his own throat, and being prevented of that, he fell mad: Twelve other honest Men were also imprisoned; But the good Lord Cromwell hearing of it, wrote immediately to the Commissioners in the Kings Name, requiring that that errand Traitor, and Heretick Brook, with his other Companions, should with their Accusers be immediately sent over into England: The Commissioners durst not refuse, but loading them with Chains, sent them over: As soon as the Lord Cromwell heard that they were arrived, he sent for them to his House, and smiling upon them, said, Go your ways to the Fleet, and submit yourselves Prisoners there, and be of good cheer, for if God give me life, you shall shortly go home with as much honesty, as ye came with shame.

Gods judgement on Persecutors.

The Lord Cromwells care of the godly Saints.

But it pleased God that shortly after, this good Lord was accused, and lost his Head at Tower-hill, so that these poor Men had great cause to fear, if they had not altogether depended upon the merciful providence of their Heavenly Father, but he so comforted them in their deep troubles, and miseries, that as their afflictions abounded, so their joys and consolations abounded much more: For when all hope was past, the Lord Audley, Chancellor of England, sent for them, and without further examination, discharged them of their imprisonment. Thus these godly Men, upon their release, gave most hearty thanks unto God for his mighty and merciful deliverance of them, and departed indeed in a poor estate, but not in so miserable a condition as those Eight Counsellors of Calice, their Adversaries, were within a little space after, who falling under the Kings displeasure, were some clapt up in Prison, and others of them died most desperate deaths. Amongst whom, one Rockwood came to an horrible end, who at his last breath staring, and raging, cried that he was utterly damned: And being willed to ask God mercy, he brayed, and cried out, All too late; For I have maliciously sought the death of many godly Men, and though I so thought of them, yet I did what in me lay to bring them to an evil death; Therefore, All too late, all too late: These words he had formerly used in scorn against those honest Men when they were sent bound into England, in Chains.

A great Persecution.

Anno Christi 1541. King Henry sent out a Commission for the apprehension of such as offended against the Six Articles, and when the Commissioners first sat at Mercers Chappel, being such as were chosen on purpose, they enquired not only of such as offended against the Six Articles, but of such as came seldom to Church, or that took not the holy Bread, or holy Water, &c. so that they indicted above Five hundred persons, most of which had either died in Prison, or fried a Fagot in Smithfield, but that the King, (being informed by the Lord Audley, that they were indicted of malice) granted them his pardon.

Richard Mekins.

About the same time one Richard Mekins, a Boy of Fifteen years old, was accused for speaking well of Doctor Barnes, and some unreverent words of the Sacrament of the Altar, and when the first Jury would not find the Indictment against him, they were soundly rattled by the Bishop of London, and another Jury was impanelled that found it, and so the poor Boy was burned in Smithfield.

Master Damlip imprisoned.

Master Damlip, who formerly made an escape into the West-Country, after he had taught a School there about a year, or two, was again apprehended, brought to London, and by Winchester imprisoned in the Marshalsey about Two years more: There he behaved himself so honestly, and blamelessly, that he was beloved of all the House, but especially of the Keeper himself, [Master Massy] who suffered him to have the liberty of the House, whereby he did much good amongst the common Prisoners, rebuking them for their wickedness, and keeping them in such order, and awe, that the Keeper had a great treasure of him: There was also one Marbeck, Prisoner for Religion, that received much comfort by him: But Master Damlip, considering how he lay there, and could not imploy his Talent to Gods glory as he desired, resolved to write a Latin Epistle to the Bishop of Winchester, earnestly desiring to come to his trial: For, said he to Marbeck, I know the worst, I can but lose my present life, which I had rather do than lie here so useles.

His Zeal.

Having prepared his Epistle, he delivered it to the Keeper, intreating him to present it to the Bishop of Winchester: The Keeper performed his request, and coming home late at night, the Prisoners, who had staid supper for his coming, seeing him look so sad, deemed something to be amiss: At last, casting his Eyes upon Damlip, he said, I can tell thee tidings: This next day thou, and I must go to Calice; and withal pulled out a piece of Wax, with a Label hanging at it: When Master Damlip saw it, he said, well, well, I now know what is the matter, I shall die at Calice: Nay, said the Keeper, I trust it is not so: Yes, yes, said Master Damlip, I know it is so, and I praise God for his goodness therein: At supper all were very heavy but Master Damlip, who eat his meat as well as ever he did in all his life, so that some asked him, how he could eat his meat so well, knowing that he was to die so soon after? To whom he answered, Alh Masters, do you think that I have been Gods Prisoner so long in the Marshalsey, and have not yet learned to die? Yes, yes, and I doubt not but God will strengthen me therein: The next day the Keeper carried him to Calice, and committed him to Prison, and the Saturday following, he was hanged, drawn and quartered.

His Courage.

His Martyrdom.

Before his death, being told that his quarters should be set up in Four places: And where then shall my Head be, said he: Upon the Lanthorn Gate, answered the other. Then, said he, I need not provide for my Burial.

At his execution Sir Richard Ellerker, Knight-Marshal, would not suffer him to declare his Faith, or the cause which he died for, but said to the Executioner, Have done, dispatch the Knave: For I will not away till I see the Traitors Heart out: But shortly after, in a skirmish between the French and English, Ellerker was slain, and by the French was stripped stark naked, had his privy members cut off, and his Heart cut out of his Body, being thereby made a terrible example to all bloody, and merciless Persecutors.

William

William Stevens mentioned before, as Prisoner in the Tower, and the other Thirteen honest Men, were all pardoned by the King, and sent home again to Calice.

A poor Laborer at Calice that had been a hearer of Master Damlip, in some Company said, that he would never believe that the Priest could make the Lords Body at his pleasure; whereupon he was accused, and condemned by one Harvey, Commissary there, who with opprobrious words railed upon him, calling him Heretick, and saying, that he should die a vile death: The poor Man answered, That he was no Heretick, but one that held the true Faith of Christ, And said he, whereas thou sayest that I shall die a vile death, thou thy self shalt die a vile death, and that shortly: The poor Man was burnt, and Harvey within half a year after, was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Calice for Treason.

Dad a Martyr.

Not long after there was one Dod, who coming out of Germany to Calice, was there apprehended, together with some Protestant Books which he brought with him, and upon examination, remaining bold, and constant in the truth, he was condemned and burnt.

There was also in the same place one William Button, a Soldier and Servant to the King, who being of a pleasant Wit, used to jeer the Priests when he met with them, and on a time a Fryer bringing pardons from Rome, whereby for Four Pence a piece, he could deliver any Soul out of Purgatory; Button went to him, and asked him, If the holy Father the Pope could deliver Souls out of Purgatory? The Fryer answered, That there was no doubt of it: why then (said Button) doth he not of charity deliver all the Souls out of it? For this he was accused to the Commissary, who railed upon him, calling him Heretick, and enjoining him to carry a Fagot, and caused his Wages to be taken from him: But Button repairing to the King, and acquainting him with the whole business; the King restored him to his place, and mended his Wages.

William Button persecuted.

Anno Christi 1546. There was a Minister called Saxie, who was hanged in the Porters Lodg of Stephen Gardiner, as was thought not without his privacy.

Master Saxie murdered.

Also one Henry with his Servant were burnt at Colchester.

Two Martyrs at Colchester.

Also one Kerby, and Roger Clark were apprehended at Ipswich, and carried before the Lord Wentworth, and other Commissioners; whilst these Two Men were in the Jailors House, there came in one Master Robert Wingfield, and said to Kerby, Remember the Fire is hot, and therefore take no more upon thee, than thou shalt be able to go through with: The terror is great, the pain will be extream, and life is sweet; Therefore it's better for thee to accept of mercy whilst it may be had, than to shrink afterwards, &c. Kerby answered, Ab Master Wingfield, be at my burning, and you shall say, there stands a Christian Soldier in the Fire: I know that Fire, water, the Sword, and all other things are in the hands of God; and he will suffer no more to be laid upon us than he will give us strength to bear. If thou bee'st at that pass, said Master Wingfield, I will leave thee; For I promise thee I am not so strong that I am able to burn; And so he bade him Farewel.

Kerby and Clark Martyrs.

Faith.

When Kerby, and Clark were at the Judgment-Seat, they lifted up their Eyes and Hands to Heaven, making their Prayers privately unto God, for a space. Then were Articles read against them, and it was demanded of them, Whether they believed that after the words of Consecration used by the Priest, the Bread was not turned into the very Body and Blood of Christ, as he was born of the Virgin Mary? They answered, That they did not believe it, but that the Sacrament was instituted by Christ, to put us in remembrance of his precious death, and bloodshedding for the remission of sins, &c. Then was there much means used both by fair means and threatnings, to procure them to alter their opinions: But they continued faithful and constant, choosing rather to die, then to live. Then was Sentence given upon them both, Kerby to be Constant.

A Prediction.

burned in the same Town of Ipswich; and Clark to be burnt at Bury: Sentence being passed by the Lord Wentworth, Kerby reverently holding up his Hands, and bowing himself, said, Praised be Almighty God: The Lord Wentworth whispering to one that sat by him, Kerby said, Speak out my Lord, and if you have done any thing against your Conscience, ask God mercy, and we for our parts do freely forgive you, &c. The Lord Wentworth blushing, said, I did speak nothing of you, nor have I done any thing but what the Law requires; and so they were sent away: At their departure, Clark with a vehement voice said, Fight for your God; For he hath not long to continue: The next morning Kerby was brought forth into the Market place, where all things were ready for his burning: Then did he put off his Cloaths to his Shirt, and so was fastened to the Stake. Many were the Spectators, and amongst the rest, the Lord Wentworth, and most of the Justices in the Country. Kerby stood trimmed up with Fagots, Broom, and Straw, as if he should be married with new Garments, nothing changing his Countenance; But with a meek Spirit glorified God: Then did a Monk of Bury begin to preach, and as often as he alledged Scriptures, and applied them rightly; Kerby told the people, that he said true, and bad them believe him: But when he did otherwise, he told him again: You say not truly, Believe him not, good People. Sermon being ended, the Monk said to him, Thou good Man, dost thou not believe that the Sacrament of the Altar is the very Flesh, and Blood of Christ? Kerby answered, I do not believe it: Then, said he, What dost thou believe? I believe, said Kerby, that Christ instituted his last Supper as a memorial of his death and passion, &c. Yet it is Bread, and more than Bread; For that it is consecrated to an holy use: This made the Monk hold his peace, Then did Kerby say, Te Deum, his Belief, and other Prayers in English: After which he said, I have done, Execute your office, good Master Sheriff: Then was fire put to him, in which he called upon God with a loud voice so long as his remembrance continued, and so ended his life, the People shouting and praising God for his constancy.

Kerby's Martyrdom.Roger Clark's zeal.

His cruel Martyrdom.

Mistress Anne Askew.

Her boldness.

Popish ignorance.

Roger Clark of Mendelsbam being carried to Bury, went barefoot to the place of his execution: By the way he met with the Procession, but would neither move his Cap, nor bow his knee to it; yea with vehement words he rebuked their Idolatry and Superstition: At the place of execution, he said the Magnificat in English, making a Paraphrase upon the same, shewing how the Virgin Mary, though she might have rejoiced in her holiness as well as another, yet humbled herself to her Saviour. When the Fire was set to him, he suffered intolerable pains, the Wood being green that it would not burn; at last he was choaked with smoak: And one pushing him on the Head with a Fagot-stick, he shrunk down into the Fire, and resigned up his Spirit unto God.

About the same time Mistress Anne Askew, born of worshipful Parents, and one that did attend upon Queen Katherine Parre, was apprehended for her Religion, and examined before one Christopher Dave, an Inquisitor, who asked her if she did not believe the Sacrament of the Altar to be the real Body of Christ? To this question she refused to answer. Then he told her, that she was accused for reading that God dwelt not in Temples made with Hands: Thereupon she shewed him the Seventh, and Seventeenth Chapters of the Acts for it: Then he asked her, how she understood those Texts? She answered, that she would not cast Pearls before Swine. Then he charged her for saying, that she had rather read Five Lines in her Bible, than hear a Mass: She said, The reason was, because one did greatly edifie her, and the other did not. After divers other questions, he carried her before the Lord Major of London, who asked her the same questions, and she gave the same answers as before. Then the Bishops Chancellor rebuked her for meddling with the Scriptures, saying, That Paul had forbidden Women to speak, or talk of the Scriptures:

after the rising of Martin Luther.

Scriptures : To whom she answered, that she knew Pauls meaning as well as he, 1 Cor. 14. viz. That Women ought not to speak in the Congregation by way of teaching : Hereupon the Lord Major commanded her to Prison : She asked, if Sureties would not serve turn : But he shortly told her, that he would take none. Being thus sent to the Counter, she was kept a close Prisoner for Eleven days ; and a Priest was sent to her to examine her, who after divers ensnating questions, to which she answered warily, and wisely, asked her, if she would be thriven : She answered, that if Doctor Crome, Sir Guillam, or Huntington, might come to her, she was contented, because she knew them to be wise Men : The Priest replied, I would not have you think but that I, or any other that comes to you, is as honest as they.

Her imprisonment.

Shortly after a Kinsman of hers [ Master Britain ] used great means to bail her, and going to Bonner Bishop of London about it, he told him that he would send for her, and examine her, wishing Master Britain to perswade her to utter to him the very bottom of her Heart, swearing by his fidelity, that none should take any advantage by her confession, or lay it to her charge to her prejudice : The like he himself perswaded her to, when she came before him : And then left his Arch-Deacon to talk with her, who asked her wherefore she was in trouble : She bad him ask her Accusers, for she knew not. Then he took her Book out of her Hand, and bade her beware, for such Books as that had brought her into trouble, adding, that he that made that Book was an Heretick, and burnt in Smithfield, meaning John Frish. She asked him, if he were not ashamed to judg of the Book, before he knew what it was, adding, that such rash judgment was an apparent token of a slender Wit. Then she opened the Book and shewed it to him, whereupon he said that he could find no fault with it, but thought it had been another.

Bonner's liberty.

Her Counsel.

The Bishop again perswaded Master Britain to exhort her to speak her mind freely to him ; And after a while, coming to her, he bad her hearken to the counsel of her Friends, ensuring her that she need not fear to speak any thing, For that neither he, nor any other should take any advantage of her words, &c. She replied, that she had nothing to say, For she thanked God, her Conscience was not burthened with any thing : This angered the Bishop, whereupon he said, Then you force me to charge you with what you have been heard to say ; You said, That he that receiveth the Sacrament at the Hands of an ill Priest, receiveth the Devil, and not God. This she denied, but told him that she said, That the wickedness of the Priest should not hurt her, but in Spirit and Faith, she received no less than the Body and Blood of Christ.

After many other captious questions, he shewed her a Paper wherein she had written a confession of her Faith, bidding her to set her Hand to it ; whereupon she writ thus. I Anne Askew do believe all things contained in the Faith of the Catholick Church, and not otherwise. This made the Bishop to sling away in great fury. Master Britain, and some others followed him, intreating him to be a good Lord to her ; yet he sent her again to Prison, where she lay some days : But at the last, by the importunity of her Friends, he took of them a recognisance for her forth coming, and so she was delivered.

Some time after she was again apprehended, and carried before the Kings Council, where having a question proposed to her by Master Kine : She answered, That my Lord Chancellor knew her mind already about that. Then some told her, that it was the Kings pleasure that she should open her mind to them : She answered them plainly, that she would not do it, except the King pleased himself to hear her. They told her, that it was not meet that the King should be troubled with her : She replied, that Solomon the wisest of Kings, was pleased to hear Two common Women. Then the Lord Chancellor asked her opinion about the Sacrament : She answered, that that she believed that so oft as she received the Bread in remembrance of Christs death, she received therewith the fruits of his most glorious Passion: The Bishop of Winchester bad her answer directly: She answered, she would not sing the Lords song in a strange Land: The Bishop told her she was a Parrat; To which she replied, that she was willing not only to receive rebukes from him, but whatsoever should follow besides, and that gladly: After much other debate, she was imprisoned till the next day; At which time they asked her again, what she said to the Sacrament: She answered, that she had said what she could say: Then the Bishop of Winchester, with some others, earnestly perswaded her to confess the Sacrament, to be the Flesh, Blood, and Bone of Christ: She told Two of them, that it was a great shame for them to counsel her contrary to their own knowledg: After much other arguing, wherein she answered them acutely and holily, they dismissed her: The Sabbath following she was very sick and like to die, whereupon she desired to speak with Mr. Latimer, but it would not be permitted: But in the extremity of her sickness they sent her to Newgate.

After a while she was brought to her trial in Guild-hall, where she was required to recant, or else she was condemned by the Law for an Heretick: She answered, that she was no Heretick, nor deserved death by the Law of God: Then they asked her, if she would deny the Sacrament to be Christs Body and Blood: She said, Yea; For Christ that was born of the blessed Virgin is now in Heaven, and will come from thence at the latter day, &c. That which you call your god, is but a piece of Bread, and after a time will grow mouldy, and turn to nothing that's good: Therefore it cannot be God. Then they wished her to thrive her self to a Priest: She said, She would confess her faults to God; for she was sure that he would hear her with favor: Hereupon she was condemned.

After her condemnation she wrote a confession of her Faith and sent it to the King, to this purpose.

I Anne Askew, of good Memory, though God hath given me the Bread of Adversity, and the Water of trouble, yet not so much as my sins have deserved, desire this to be known to your Grace, that forasmuch as I am by the Law condemned for an evil-doer, here I take Heaven and Earth to record that I shall die in my innocency: And as I ever said, so I shall continue to the end, that I utterly abhor, and detest all Heresies; And as concerning the Lords Supper, I believe so much as Christ hath said therein, which he confirmed with his most blessed Blood: I believe so much as he willed me to follow, and believe so much as the Catholick Church of him doth teach; For I will not forsake the Commandment of his holy Lips. But look what God hath charged me with his Mouth, that have I shut up in my heart: And thus for lack of Learning I briefly end.

Anne Askew.

A few days after she was sent for from Newgate before the Bishop of London, and Master Rich, who with flattering words endeavored to withdraw her from God: Then one Nicholas Shakston, an Apostate, counselled her to recant; To whom she said, that it had been good for him if he had never been born: From thence she was sent to the Tower, whither came to her Master Rich and another of the Council, charging her upon her obedience, to discover what Men or Women she knew to be of her Sect, which she refused: Then they asked her of divers great Ladies: She said, if she should charge them of any thing, she was not able to prove it; Then they asked her, how she was maintained in Prison: She answered, that it was by means of her Maid, who as she went abroad made her moan in the Streets, and the Apprentices gave her money; Then they said that divers Ladies and Gentlewomen gave her money; She answered, that one brought her Ten Shillings, saying, that the Lady Hereford sent sent it her, another brought her Five Shillings, and said, that the Lady Deny sent it her, but she knew not whether they said true or no: Then they put her to the Rack because she confessed no Ladies, nor Gentlewomen that were of her opinion: There they kept her a great while, because she lay still, and did not cry: The manner of it was thus, They led her down into a Dungeon, where the Rack was, and the Lieutenant of the Tower bad the Jailor pinch her on the Rack, which being done, he was about to take her out: But wrisley the Chancellor, bad the Lieutenant to Rack her again; But he, tending her weakness, refused: Whereupon the Chancellor threatened to complain of him to the King: And himself and Mr. Rich, throwing off their Gowns, played the Tormentors themselves, first asking her whether she was with Child: she answered, that they need not spare for that, but do their wills upon her, and so quietly and patiently praying unto God, she abode their tyranny till her Bones and Joynts were all plucked asunder: Then the Lieutenant caused her to be loosed, whereupon she fell into a swoon: And when she had recovered again, she sat on the bare floor above two hours, reasoning with the Lord Chancellor, who with many flattering words perswaded her to leave her opinion; But, saith she, my Lord God, I thank his everlasting goodness, gave me grace to persevere, and I hope will do to the end. Then was she carried to an House and laid in a Bed, with as weary and painful Bones as ever patient Job had: Then the Lord Chancellor sent her word, that if she would leave her opinion she should want nothing; otherwise she should be sent to Newgate, and presently burned: She returned him answer, That she would rather die then deny her Faith; when she was returned to Newgate, she there wrote a confession of her Faith which she concluded with this Prayer, O Lord, I have more Enemies now then there be hairs on my Head: yet Lord, let them never overcome me with vain words, but fight, Lord, thou in my stead, for on thee cast I my care; with all the spite they can imagine, they fall upon me which am thy poor Creature; yet, sweet Lord, let me not set by them which are against me; For in thee is my whole delight. And, Lord, I heartily desire of thee, that thou wilt of thy merciful goodness, forgive them that violence which they do and have done unto me. Open thou also their blind Hearts, that they may hereafter do that thing in thy sight which is acceptable before thee, and to set forth thy truth aright, without the vain fancies of sinful Men: So be it, O Lord, so be it.

She is racked cruelly.

Popish cruelty.

Her patience.

Her Constancy.

The day for her execution being come, she was carried in a Chair into Smithfield, being unable to go by reason of her former cruel Racking: There she was tied by the middle, with a Chain to the Stake to hold up her Body: Then did Dr. Shaxton preach a Sermon, and when he delivered the truth she confirmed it, but when he spake that which was false, she said, now he misseeth and speaks without Book. The Sermon being ended, wrisley the Lord Chancellor, who was there present, sent her letters, offering her the Kings pardon if she would recant, but she refusing to look upon them, said, that she came not hither to deny her Lord and Master. Then fire being put to her, being compassed with flames, as a blessed sacrifice unto God, she slept in the Lord, Anno Christi 1546.

Her Martyrdom.

There was burned at the same time with her Nicholas Belerrian, a Minister of Shropshire; John Adams a Tailor, And John Lactels, a Gentleman, one of the Kings Servants, who beholding her invincible constancy, and being stirred up by her exhortations were more emboldned in their sufferings.

About the same time one Rogers was condemned, and burned in Norfolk for the Six Articles.

Rogers.

The same year the King being come from Balleine, information was given to him, that his Queen Katherine Parre was much given to reading, and studying the holy Scriptures; And that she had entertained divers godly, and learned Men to instruct her in the same, with whom also she had frequent conferences about spiritual matters: As also that ordinarily, especially in Lent every afternoon one of her Chaplains preached to her, and her Ladies and and Gentle-women, and to others that pleased to hear : In which Sermons they oft touched such abuses as were rise in the Church : At first the King seemed to like well of it, which made her the more bold, sometimes freely to debate with the King about points of Religion ; often beseeching him that as he had, to the glory of God and his own Eternal Fame begun a good work in banishing the Popes Supremacy, so he would perfect what he had begun, thoroughly cleansing the Church of the dregs of Popery, whereof much remained yet behind. The King though he was grown very teasty, and froward, yet out of his singular affections to her, was content to hear her : For never did Maid more seek to please her Mistriess, then she did with all painful endeavor apply her self, by all vertuous means in all things to please his humour. She was also very beautiful, vertuous, and of a comely personage, which greatly delighted the King : But some subtle and malicious instruments of Satan, fearing what might be the issue of it, sought by all means to imbitter the King against her : These were the Bishop of Winchester, Wrisly the Lord Chancellor, and others of the Council and privy Chamber, hoping that if they could but take away her, that was the only Patroness of the Professors of the truth, they might by fire and sword without controul destroy the small remainder of Gods poor Flock.

The King growing sickly and froward, left of his accustomed manner of visiting the Queen : And therefore she, when she understood that it was a fit season, would visit him of her own accord, at which times she would earnestly solicit him, zealously to proceed in the Reformation of the Church.

Gardiners flattery.

Gardiners malice and subtilty.

Winchester being present at one of these times, and perceiving the King not to be very well pleased with her ; when she was gone, he maliciously endeavored to stir up the Kings indignation against her, suggesting that the Queen did much forget her self to hold an Argument with his Majesty, and that it was not fit for any of his Subjects to reason so malepertly with him, who was the learnedst Prince in Christendom. He suggested also, that the Religion held by the Queen, did not only disallow and dissolve the Politick Government of Princes, but taught the People, that all things ought to be in common : so that he durst boldly affirm, that the greatest Subject in the land, speaking such words as she did, and defending such arguments, had with indifferent Justice by law deserved death : yet he pretended, that he durst not, without Warrant from his Majesty, speak his knowledge of the Queen, left by her and her faction he should be destroyed : But if his Majesty would become their Patron, he with others of his faithful Councillors, could in a short time disclose such treason, cloaked with the veile of Heresie, that his Majesty should easily perceive how dangerous it was to nourish such a Serpent in his bosom, &c. And so with heavy countenance and whisperings he held his peace.

The King provoked against
the Queen.

This much stirred up the Kings displeasure against the Queen ; The rather being jealous and mistrustful of his estate ; yea he was so far irritated by Winchester and his Consorts, that he gave them Warrant and Command to draw up Articles against her, which would touch her life : Having thus obtained their end, they departed.

The Popish design against the Queen.

Their next work was to suborn witnesses to accuse and betray her, and to find out what Books she had in her Closet, which were forbidden by law : They thought it best also to begin with those Ladies which were most familiar with her and of her Blood, as the lady Margaret, Countess of Pembroke, Sister to the Queen, the Lady Jane, and the Lady Terwit, who for their vertuous dispositions were much in favor with her, whose Closets and Coffers should also have been searched : The Queen her self also being apprehended, should by Barge be conveyed to the Tower. The King being made privy to this device by Winchester and Wrisly, he politickly seemed to approve it, that he might see how far the malice of the Bishop would carry him, and thus the day, time and place for the apprehensions of these persons was concluded of.

The Kings Policy.

The

The King at this time lay at Whitehall, and by reason of his distemper seldom stirred abroad, and the time approaching for the apprehension of the Queen; she, poor Lady, suspected nothing of it, and therefore used after her accustomed manner, when she came to the King, still to deal with him about Religion as formerly she had done: But one night after she had taken her leave of him, the King imparted the whole design to Doctor Wendy, his Physician, pretending that he intended not any longer to be troubled with such a Doctress as she was, and withal, enjoyning him upon his life not to utter it to any creature living: But behold the Providence of God! For as the Lord would have it, the Bill of Articles drawn up against the Queen, and subscribed by the Kings own Hand, fell from the Bosom of one of these Counsellors, which being found by a godly Person, was immediately carried to the Queen, who reading the Articles, and knowing the Kings Hand, was surprized with such a sudden fear, that she fell a wailing, making such pitious moan as was lamentable to see. The King hearing that she was in peril of her life, sent his Physicians to her: And Dr. Wendy, knowing the cause better then the other, began secretly to break with her about the Articles, telling her that he knew well of them, though he stood in danger of his life by revealing them, yet to quiet his conscience he could not but give her warning of them, beseeching her somewhat to conform herself to the Kings mind, not doubting, but that by her humble submission she should find him favorable to her: Shortly after, the King hearing of her dangerous condition, came to her; To him therefore she uttered her grief, fearing, as she said, lest his Majesty had taken displeasure against her, &c. whereupon he, like a loving Husband with sweet and comfortable words somewhat eased her perplexed mind, so that she began to recover, and thereupon the King departed. After this the Queen commanded her Ladies to convey away all their Books which were against the Law: And so taking a fit season in an evening she went to visit the King, who was conferring with some of his Bedchamber; When he saw her, he entertained her very curteously, and of himself began to commune with her about Religion, seeming desirous to be resolved by the Queen of certain doubts, which he proposed to her: She perceiving his drift, with mild and reverend countenance answered him thus: Your Majesty knows right well, neither am I ignorant what weaknesses attend our Sex, and therefore we are inferiour, and subject to Man our Head, whence all our directions must proceed. God hath made Man in his own likeness, endued him with more excellent gifts, &c. But he hath made woman of Man, by whom she is to be governed, and directed, &c. Seeing therefore God hath appointed such a natural difference, and your Majesty is so excellent in wisdom, and I a poor silly woman, so much inferiour to you, why should your Majesty propose such difficult cases to me? Yea, when I have said what I can, I must, and will refer my self to your Majesties wisdom, as to my supream Head, and governor next unto God, by whom I must be directed. Not so by Saint Mary, said the King, you are become a Doctor, Kate, to instruct us, not to be instructed, and directed by us. If your Majesty, said she, take it so, you are much mistaken: For I have alwaies been of opinion, that it was very unseemly for a woman to take upon her the office of an instructor, but rather to learn of her Husband, and to be taught by him.

And what have I formerly discoursed of with your Majesties leave, wherein some seeming difference hath appeared; I have not done it so much to maintain my opinion, as to minister talk, that your Majesty might with the less grief pass over the painful time of your infirmities: As also that by your Majesties learned discourse I might reap some profit, wherein I have not missed my aim, alwaies referring my self to your Majesty, as by ordinance of nature it is convenient for me to do.

Is it so, sweet Heart, said the King? Did your Arguments tend to no worse end? Then are we now as perfect Friends as ever we were heretofore: Then taking her in his Arms, and kissing her, he said, It doth me more good to hear these words of thy mouth, than if I had heard of a Hundred thousand pounds that had

Her Adversaries knew nothing of this, and therefore were providing for her apprehension, which was to be the very next day, at which time they intended to carry her to the Tower. The day, and almost the hour being come, the King intending to take the Air, went into the Garden, whither the Queen also went to him, being sent for by him: At which time the King disposed himself to be as merry with her as ever he was in all his life before: When suddenly in the midst of their mirth, in came the Lord Chancellor with forty of the Kings Guard at his heels, whom the King sternly beholding, went to him and upon private conference together, the King called him Knave, arrant Beast, and Fool, withal commanding him out of his presence. The King, after his departure, returned to the Queen, who perceiving him to be much chafed, with sweet words endeavored to qualifie his displeasure, saying that though she knew not what just cause his Majesty had to be offended with the Lord Chancellor, yet she besought him, if the cause were not very hainous, that for her sake he would pass it by. Ab poor Soul, said the King, little do'st thou know how ill he deserves this grace at thy hands: On my word, sweet Heart, he hath been towards thee an arrant Knave, and so let him go. The Queen in few words made a charitable reply to this, and so they parted: By this it appears how by the merciful Providence of God, she escaped the dangerous snares of her Bloody Persecutors, and Enemies, which if God had not prevented had wrought her Ruine.

Sir George Blage condemned.

About the same time there was one Sir George Blage, of the Kings privy Chamber, against whom they suborned false witnesses to accuse him for speaking against the Mass: Whereupon Wrisly, Lord Chancellor, sent him to Newgate, and the next day he was arraigned, and condemned at Guild-hall, and within a day or two after should have been burned in Smithfield: This being heard amongst those of the privy Chamber, they were whispering amongst themselves, which the King could never abide, and therefore asked them the cause of it? They told him the whole story, making suit to him for his pardon, the Earl of Bedford much promoting the same: The King being much offended that they should come so near him as into his privy Chamber without his knowledg and consent, sent for Wrisly, commanding him presently to draw up his pardon himself, whereby he was set at liberty. Sir George afterwards coming into the Kings presence: The King said to him, Ab my Pig (for so he used to call him.) Yea, said he, If your Majesty had not been better to me than your Bishops were, your Pig had been roasted before this time.

He is pardoned by the King.

Stephen Gardiners rage against the truth.

Presently after, Winchester, and his complices, set forth a cruel Proclamation in the Kings name for the abolishing of the Scripture, and all other such English Books as gave any light to the setting forth of the truth. This being obtained, they much rejoyced at it, thinking that now they had for ever suppressed the Gospel, so that it should never rise again: And to strike the greater terror into Mens minds, they made a diligent search after the professors of the truth, took the names of many, of whom some were driven away, some apprehended, and laid up in prison, so that they made no question of attaining their wicked ends: But the Lord who had a care both of his truth, and people in the midst of these subtil devises, took away King Henry within Four moneths after the said Proclamation, whereby all their hopes were laid in the dust.

CHAP. VII.

The Persecution of the Duke of Summerſet, in the Reign of King Edward the Sixth.

King Henry the Eighth being dead, his only Son Prince Edward, our Engliſh Joſiah, ſucceeded him; under whom the Proteſtant Religion was eſtabliſhed, Popery, and Superſtition aboliſhed, and the Church, and people of God enjoyed peace. Only the Duke of Summerſet, a godly Man, (by the malice of ſome of the Nobility, who were either Popiſhly addiſted, or that ſought to raiſe themſelves upon his ruine,) met with great troubles, and Perſecution, the ſtory whereof followeth. King Edward had Three Uncles by his Mothers ſide, Edward, Thomas, and Henry Seymer, whereof the eldeſt [Edward] was made Protector of the King and Realm: and the Second [Thomas] was made Lord high Admiral of England. Theſe Two Brethren, ſo long as they continued firmly knit together in the bonds of Brotherly love, preſerved both themſelves, the King, and Kingdom from danger. But the ſubtil old ſerpent envying their felicity, and the progreſs of the Goſpel thereby, by ſlanderous, and envenomed Tongues ſowed betwixt them, Firſt matter of diſcord, then of ſuſpition, and laſtly of extream hatred: The Dutcheſs of Summerſet blowing the coals of contention between them: yet was this breach, by the mediation of Friends, for a time healed: But within a ſhort ſpace after, through the inſtigation of ſome that were back Friends to the Goſpel, it brake out again to the trouble of the Realm, and their own deſtruction: And firſt, the Lord Admiral, was attainted, and condemned for treaſon, and loſt his Head at the Tower-hill, March the Twentieth 1549. Preſently after inſurrections aroſe in the Kingdom, whereupon the Earl of Bedford, Lord privy Seal, was ſent into the Weſtern parts, and the Lord Dudley, Earl of warwick, was ſent with an Army into Norfolk, where with much difficulty, he appeaſed the Rebels, and ſo returned.

The benefit of unity,

After his return great conſultations were held by him, and ſome other Lords at London, againſt the Lord Protector, who was with the King at Hampton Court: Whereupon the Protector wrote to the Lord Ruſſel in the Weſt, giving him notice of their conſpiracy againſt the King and him, and of the falſe, and forged crimes which they laid to his charge, and which they ſcattered abroad to his diſhonor, and therefore he required him to haſten with all the forces that he could make, to windſor, for the defence of the King and him.

The Lords conſpire againſt the Protector,

To this meſſage the Lord Ruſſel returned answer, That he much lamented this diſiſion, and looked upon it as a great judgment of God upon the Realm, and that he would haſten with his forces towards windſor; yet humbly beſeeched his Lordſhip, that the King might not be put into any fear, nor that their private quarrels might endanger the peace of the Kingdom.

From Hampton Court the King ſent Secretary Peters to the Lords at London, but inſtead of answering the Kings meſſage, they detained the Secretary, whereupon the Lord Proteſtor wrote to them that he wondered that they had ſtayed the Secretary, and not vouchſafed to return an answer to his Maſteſty, neither by him, nor by any other. That he was ſorry to ſee their doings bent with violence to bring the King, and him to thoſe extremities of uſing Arms for their own juſt defence : Yet aſſuring them that if any reaſonable conditions and offers would take place, he would be ready, for preventing the effuſion of Chriſtian Blood, to accept of them : Profeſſing that he preferred the Kings welfare, and the tranquillity of the Realm, before his own Life.

A Proclamation againſt
him.

This reaſonable propoſal of the Lord Proteſtor, was little regarded by thoſe unreaſonable Lords, who ſtill reſolved to proceed in their purpoſe : And for this end, they called upon the Lord Major, and Aldermen to keep a good watch by night, and a good ward by day for their ſafety : Then they demanded of them Five Hundred Men to fetch the Lord Proteſtor from Windsor from the King, but that was denied them without the conſent of the Common Council : whereupon the Lords going to the Lord Majors Houſe, and ſending for the Sheriffs, drew up a Proclamation againſt the Lord Proteſtor, wherein they charged him with many, and grievous crimes : This coming to his eares, a letter was ſent from Windsor, Signed by the King and Lord Proteſtor, to the Lord Major, and Common Council, requiring them to ſend Ten thouſand well appointed Men out of the City to Windsor for their ſafety.

The Lords had a preſent notice of this letter, whereupon they alſo wrote to the Common Council, not only for a ſufficient guard to fortiſie the City : But requiring them not to obey any Proclamations or Injunctions that ſhould come to them from Windsor.

Good counſel of a Citizen.

The Lord Major, Aldermen, and Common Council receiving theſe Two letters at the ſame time, were in a great ſtrait what to do. The Recorder moved that they would aſſiſt the Lords : But a ſtout and wiſe Citizen, [Maſter George Stadlow] ſtanding up, minded them of the miſchief, and miſeries which beſet the City, for aſſiſting the Lords in the time of the Barons Warrs, though (as was pretended) juſtly undertaken : And therefore gave his advice, that the Kings command ſhould be obeyed, and that the Lords ſhould be moved to joyn with them in a Petition to the King, that it would pleaſe his Highneſſe to hear ſuch complaints againſt the government of the Lord Proteſtor as might be juſtly alledged, and proved, whereby he doubted not of a good iſſue, &c. The effect of this motion was, that the Lords ſent Sir Philip Hobbs to accuſe the Proteſtor to the King, whereupon he was made a Priſoner in a Port of Windsor Caſtle : The next day the Lords repaired to the King, and the day following they brought away the Proteſtor priſoner through the City to the Tower : Shortly after the Lords went to the Tower, where they charged him with ſundry Articles, maliciously purpoſing his ruine, but God in mercy was pleaſed to fruſtrate their expectation ; the King ſo laboring for his Uncle, that Three days after he was released out of the Tower, and the Proclamation was called in, whereby he had been proclaimed a Traytor. And thus he was reſtored, though not to his Office, yet to his liberty, which he enjoyed two years after. At the end whereof his malicious Adverſaries ſo far prevailed, that he was again caſt into the Tower, and ſhortly after brought forth to his arraignment, and was carried through the City with the Ax before him, with many Bills, and Halberts. In weſtminſter Hall before the Lords which were his Judges, he was charged with Treason and Felony. The Lawyers without modeſty, or honeſty, according to their uſual cuſtome in the like caſes, uſed many unſeemly ſpeeches, vile taunts, and deſpiteful rebukes againſt him : All which he patiently, and quietly underwent, neither inwardly fretting, nor returning evil language to them again, but like a lamb, imitating the example of his Saviour, he meekly took all things at their Hands : His prudence alſo, and temperance was no leſſe ſeen in his answers to the Articles objected against him. His Peeres, after consultation, passed this Sentence: That they acquitted him from the charge of treason, but found him guilty of Felony.

He is condemned for Felony.

The people hearing the Lords say not guilty, shouted exceedingly for joy, thereby shewing their great affections to him.

But the people were greatly deceived; For the innocent Duke was condemned to die for Felony, and so was returned to the Tower again: The Felony that he was charged withal, was for seeking the death (as was pretended) of the Duke of Northumberland.

As he passed back through the City, great exclamations were again made by the people, some rejoycing for that he was acquitted, others lamenting for that he was condemned to die. In the Tower he continued for some days, till a Writ for his Execution came from the King and Council, whereupon he was delivered to the Sheriffs, and with a great Guard of Soldiers was carried to the Scaffold on the Tower-hill. The good Duke nothing changed either his voice, or countenance, but kneeling on his Knees, and lifting up his Hands, he commended himself to God; His Prayers being ended, he stood up, and with an unappaled spirit, and alacrity he thus spake.

His execution.

Dearly Beloved Friends, I am brought hither to suffer death, though I never offended against the King in word or deed, but have always been as true and faithful to this Realm as any Man hath been. Yet seeing by the Law I am condemned to die, I acknowledge my self as well as any others to be subject thereto: wherefore to testifie my subjection to the laws I am come hither to die, whereunto I willingly offer my self, with most hearty thanks unto God who hath given me this time of repentance, who by sudden death might have taken away my life, so that I neither should have acknowledged him nor my self. Something I must mind you of touching the reformed Religion, which so long as I was in authority I alwayes diligently set forth, and furthered to my power: neither do I repent of it, but rejoyce in it, seeing that it cometh so near to the order of the Primitive Church: This I look upon as a great mercy both to you, and me: Most heartily exhorting you all, that you will embrace it with all thankfulness, and set forth the same in your lives; which if you neglect to do without all doubt, great mischiefs will fall upon you. As he spake these words, suddenly a terrible noise was heard which affrighted all Men: To some it seemed as the noise of a great tempest, to others as the crack of Gun-powder blown up, to others as a great company of Horsemen rushing upon them: This so astonished the people, that though they saw nothing, yet they all ran away, some into Ditches, others into Houses; some were so terrified that they fell grovelling to the ground: The very Soldiers fell down, crying, Jesus, save us, Jesus, save us: Such as tarried, through fear knew not where they were. In this confusion some of the people spied Sir Anthony Brown riding to the Scaffold, whereupon they conceited that the King had sent the Duke his Uncle a pardon: This occasioned great rejoycing, and casting up of caps, crying, A pardon, a pardon is come; God save the King. In the midst of all this hurly burly, the good Duke stood still, in the same place with a modest, and grave countenance, making a signe to the people with his hand to be quiet. And at length silence being obtained, he thus spake unto them:

His excellent Speech.

A remarkable providence.

Dearly Beloved friends, there is no such matter as you expect, or believe: It seemeth otherwise good to God, whose will we must all obey, wherefore I Pray you be quiet, and contented with my death which I willingly suffer: and so let us joyn in prayer to the Lord for the preservation of the Kings Majesty, to whom I have been a faithful Subject, and have diligently sought the peace, and welfare both of him, and the Kingdom. The people cried out, and said it was true; Then the Duke proceeded: I wish continual health to his Majesty with all felicity, and prosperous success: Then the people cried, Amen: Moreover, (said the Duke) I wish to all his Counsellors the grace, and favor of God, that they may rule in all things uprightly, and justly, and I exhort you all to be obedient to them in the Lord, &c. Also, if in those great transactions which I have been imployed in, I have offended or injured any Man, I most humbly ask forgiveness: But especially of Almighty God, whom through all my life, I have most grievously offended; And all that have offended me I do wish my whole heart freely forgive them: And once again I beseech you that by your tumult you do not trouble me: For though the spirit be willing, yet the flesh is frail, and weak. I desire you also to bear me witness that I here die in the true faith of Jesus Christ. Then kneeling down he again prayed: Then shaking all upon the Scaffold by the Hand, he bad them farewell, gave the Executioner some money, and so prepared himself for the stroke. When all things were ready, lifting up his eyes to heaven, and covering his face with his Handkerchief, he lay down without shewing any manner of trouble or fear, neither did his countenance change, and so crying, Lord Jesus, save me, the Third time that he repeated it, his Head was severed from his shoulders, and so he quietly slept in the Lord, Anno Christi 1552.
and

CHAP. VIII.

King Edward the Sixth being dead, the Lady Jane Grey was proclaimed Queen, of whom you may read the story in my second Part: The Lady Mary hearing of it, presently sent to the Lords of the Council, commanding, and requiring them presently to proclaim her Queen, which if they refused to do, she threatened by force of Armes to recover her right. The Lords returned answer, that the Lady Jane was invested, and possessed of the Crown by just right, and title, both by the ancient Laws of the Land, and by letters Patents signed, and sealed by the late King before his death. And therefore they declared that they would adhere unto her, and to none other; requesting the Lady Mary that she would surcease by any pretence to molest the peace of the Realm, promising that if she carried herself as a dutiful Subject they would be ready to do her any service, &c.

The Lady Mary having received this answer, speedily departed farther from the City: Which the Council hearing of, and knowing her stout and unquiet disposition, presently raised an Army, whereof they made the Duke of Northumberland General, and with which he departed from London: Mary in the mean time withdrew herself into Suffolk, and Norfolk, gathering such aid of the Commons as she could; keeping herself in Feringham Castle: To whom Suffolk-Men first resorted, who being alwayes forward in promoting the Gospel, promised her their aid, and help, provided that she would attempt no alteration in Religion established by her Brother. To this she easily agreed, with such protestations that none could suspect her: With this power of the godly party she vanquished her enemies, yet afterwards when these very Men made supplication to her Grace to perform her promise: She answered, Forasmuch as you being members desire to rule your Head, you shall one day find that members must obey, not seek to rule; Yea one of the chief of them [Master Dobb] she caused, to the terror of others to be set in the Pillory sundry times: Divers others that presented supplications to the same purpose she caused to be committed to prison.

Queen Mary gets the Crown by the help of Protestants.

Her persecutions.

The Duke of Northumberland making but short marches, the Lady Mary, by his lingring, encreased her power, so that the Council at London understanding that the Commons flocked much to her, and that some of the Nobility inclined that way, they presently proclaimed her Queen.

The Duke of Northumberland in the mean time being deserted by his Soldiers, was left at Cambridge almost alone: Where being arrested, he was brought to London, and committed prisoner to the Tower for treason, and after a Month lost his Head at Tower-hill. After his condemnation he was promised his life if he would turn Papist, and bear Mass, which he consented to, denying in words the true Religion which he had formerly embraced, and professed; yea, he exhorted the people to return to the Catholick Religion, which the Papists much rejoyced at, and yet his life was not spared:

The Duke of Northumberland and his Apostasy.

Queen Mary being thus possessed of the Kingdom, presently began to discover her disaffection to Religion by displacing all the Orthodox Bishops, as Poynet, Ridley, Scory, Hooper, Coverdal, and by releasing out of the Tower Stephen Gardiner, making him Bishop of Winchester, and Lord Chancellor of England; Bonner, making him Bishop of London, &c. Master Hooper was committed to the Fleet; and Doctor Ridley going to visit the Queen, was sent back upon a lame halting Horse to the Tower of London. Then did the Queen summon a Parliament, and sent forth a Proclamation, wherein she declared that she could not dissemble her Religion which she had been brought up in from her infancy, and which she was minded to observe and maintain, wishing that all her Subjects would quietly imbrace the same. She declared also, that whereas some evil-disposed Persons (as she called them) did take upon them to preach the word of God according to their own brain, &c. She therefore straitly charged, and commanded them, that they should not henceforth preach, read, or interpret any Scriptures or other points of Doctrine concerning Religion, nor print any Books, &c. without her Graces special license for the same, upon pain of incurring her Highness indignation, and displeasure: Requiring all Officers to see to the due execution of her pleasure herein, and if any one should wilfully transgress the same, to apprehend, and commit them to the next Jail without bail, or mainprize, till farther order should be taken for their punishment to the example of others. The Aldermen of London were also required to send for all the Ministers in every Ward, and to command them not only to forbear preaching themselves; but not to suffer any other to preach, read, or open the Scriptures, in their Churches, unless they were licensed by the Queen.

Anno Christi 1553. one William Rutler was committed to prison for speaking against a Popish Sermon preached by Bourne at Pauls-Cross: and one Humphrey Palden was committed to the Counter for the same: Also Master Bradford, Master Vernon, and Master Beacon, Preachers, were committed to the Tower, Master Rogers was commanded to keep himself prisoner in his own House without conferring with any: Then was Master Coverdal Bishop of Exeter, and Master Hooper Bishop of Worcester sent for up to attend the Council: John Melvin [a Scotchman] a godly Preacher, was sent to Newgate.

Master Hooper appearing was committed to the Fleet. A Pursuivant was sent for Master Hugh Latimer: Master Simonds Preacher in St. Michaels, and Master Hugh Sanders Pastor of the same in Coventry, were also sent for. Master Latimer appearing, was committed to the Tower: And so was Doctor Cranmer Arch-Bishop of Canterbury; Then Master Horne Dean of Durham was sent for.

Shortly after the Parliament began, where Master Harley Bishop of Hereford was deposed for that he was married, and refused to come to Mass. Sir James Hales Justice of the Common Pleas, though he had ventured his life for Queen Mary in refusing to subscribe to her disinheriting by King Edwards will, yet for giving the Statutes in charge against the Popes Supremacy, &c. At the Sessions, was cast into prison, and there so cruelly handled, and terrified with the torments, which, they said, were in preparing for Hereticks, that partly by the flattery of the Bishops, partly by their threats, he was drawn to recant, after which he fell into such terrors of conscience, that he attempted to have slain himself with a Pen-knife, if by the special providence of God he had not been prevented: After which (his wounds that he had given himself being healed) he was delivered out of prison, and went home to his own House; yet neither there could he have any inward peace, so that setting his House in order, he drowned himself in a River not far from his House.

At the same time also there was a Convocation, wherein the Prolocutor [Doctor Weston] presented a Bill to be signed for the natural presence of Christ in the Sacrament, which was refused by Master Philips Dean of Rocheſter, Master Haddon Dean of Exeter, Master Philpot Arch-Deacon of Wincheſter, Master Cheney Arch-Deacon of Hereford, Master Elmar Arch-Deacon of Stow, and one more. Master Philpot also, and Master Cheney maintained a learned diſputation for divers dayes againſt the real preſence: Whereupon, by command from the Queen, Biſhop Bonner diſſolved the Convocation.

The Major of Coventry ſent up Baldwin Clarke, John Careleſſe, Thomas Wilcocks, and Richard Aſtlin for oppoſing Idolatry, who were committed to priſon: Beſides the good Biſhops that were imprifoned, there were alſo many Arch-Deacons, Deans, and all other Beneficed Men that were married, and conſtantly adhered to their profeſſion, caſt out of their places, and Popiſh Priests put into the ſame. Shortly after Arch-Biſhop Cranmer was arreigned for Treason at Guild-Hall, but was acquitted of that charge, only he was ſtill kept priſoner for Hereſie.

Anno Chriſti 1554. Doctor Crome for preaching without liſenſe on Chriſtmas-day was committed to the Fleet: Alſo Maſter Thomas Wotton Eſquire, for matters of Religion was made cloſe priſoner there.

About this time the motion of Marriage went on between Philip King of Spain, and Queen Mary, which was ill relented by ſome of the Nobility, and of the Commons: Amongſt whom, Sir Thomas Wyatt in Kent raiſed ſome forces to oppoſe it, fearing that hereby the Kingdom would be miſerably inflaved to foreigners, and the Popiſh Religion eſtabliſhed: The Duke of Suffolk alſo went into Warwickſhire, and Leceſterſhire to raiſe forces to oppoſe it: The Queen hereupon ſent the Duke of Norfolk againſt Wyat, who was forſaken by his Men when he came to Rocheſter, and ſo returned back to London. The Earl of Huntington was ſent into Warwickſhire, who entring Coventry before the Duke of Suffolk, diſappointed him: So that the Duke being in great diſtreſs, committed himſelf to a ſervant of his that dwelt in Aſtley Park, who like a falſe Traitor diſcovered him, and ſo he was carried to the Tower of London: Wyat in the mean time marched towards London, whereupon the Queen went to Guild-hall, and ſtirred up the Citizens againſt him. Wyat came with his Army into Southmark, and finding that he could not enter that way, he went about by Kingſton, and ſo marched as far as Ludgate into the City, But finding the gate ſhut againſt him, he returned, and at Temple-bar being reſiſted; he yielded himſelf up to Sir Clement Parſon, and being committed to the Tower, was afterwards beheaded at Tower-hill; Then was the Lady Jane beheaded, whoſe ſtory you may read in my ſecond Part, in her Life.

Anno Chriſti 1554. Bonner ſent abroad his Injunctions to all the Miniſters in his Dioceſs, requiring them to return the names of all ſuch as the Lent following reſuſed to come to Auricular confeſſion. The Queen alſo ſent certain Articles to Bonner, to be put in execution for reviving the Eccleſiaſtical Laws made by King Henry the eighth; for reſtoring of the Popes Supremacy: For puniſhing Hereſies, eſpecially in the clergy: For depriving all Miniſters that were married, and divorcing them from their Wives: For proceſſions to be ſaid in Latine: For the reſtoring Popiſh ceremonies, &c. The like command ſhe ſent alſo to the Lord Major.

Many godly Engliſh fled to Freeſland, Cleveland, Germany, Basel, Zurich, Geneva, and other places, where through Gods mercy, they were all provided for, and entertained with great favor, to the number of Eight Hundred perſons at the leaſt. Duke of Suffolk executed.

About the same time Henry Lord Gray, Duke of Suffolk being condemned was brought forth to execution. Doctor Weston would needs follow him up to the Scaffold, but he twice put him down with his Hand. The Duke spake to the people saying: I have offended the Queen, and her Laws, and therefore am condemned to die, and am willing to die, beseeching you all to be my witness that I die in the true Faith of Christ, trusting to be saved by his merits only, and by no other trumpery: Christ died for me, and for all that truly repent of their sins, and stedfastly trust in him: And I do repent, desiring you all to pray for me, that when breath departs out of my Body, he will be pleased to receive my Soul: Then he desired all Men to forgive him: And Doctor Weston told the people that the Queen had forgiven him: To whom they answered, such forgiveness God send thee. Then the Duke kneeling down prayed unto God, concluding, Into thy hands, O Lord, do I commend my spirit. Then prepared he himself for the stroke of death, and tying an Handkerchief before his Face, he kneeled down, saying over the Lords Prayer, and laying down his Head, said, Christ, have mercy upon me, and so he quietly and comfortably slept in the Lord.

Divers Housholders, Servants, and Apprentices, were committed to Prison for having, and selling some good Books that were sent over by the Preachers that were fled into Germany.

Bishop Bonner going his Visitation, commanded all the Sentences of Scripture that were painted on the Church-walls, to be abolished, and blotted out.

Visitors also were appointed for the Two Universities, to bring in their Popish trash amongst them, whereby many godly persons of their own accord forsook their fellowships, others were thrust out, and raw, and unworthy persons put into their places, to the great hindrance of Learning, and Religion.

It was reported that Queen Mary was quick with Child, whereupon, by publick order thanks were given in all Churches for the same, and afterwards many prayers were made that it might be a Male-child, beautiful, comely, witty, valiant, &c.

About the same time all the godly Ministers that were in prison, in, and about London, were sent for before the Bishop of Winchester, who asked them whether they would recant, and enjoy the Queens pardon, or else stand to that which they had taught: They all answered, that they would stand to that which they had taught: Whereupon they were made close prisoners that none might speak with them. Amongst these there was one Master James George, that died in prison, whom they buried in the Fields. Presently after, Master Hooper, Rogers, Taylor, and Bradford, were brought before the Bishop of Winchester, and other Commissioners, by whom they were excommunicated, and Master Hooper, and Master Rogers were condemned: Of whom see their stories in my first part. The next day Doctor Taylor, Doctor Cromie, Doctor Ferrar, Master Bradford, and Master Sanders, were brought before them: Where Doctor Taylor, Master Bradford, and Master Sanders were condemned: Of whom likewise see the stories in my first part.

Commissions also, and Inquisitors were sent abroad into all parts of the Realm, whereby a great number of godly people, especially in Kent, Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk, were apprehended, brought to London, and imprisoned, most of which either died in prison, and were buried in dunghils, or were consumed to ashes in the flames.

Also

Also William Pigot, Thomas Hawks, John Laurence, and William Hunter, were brought before the Bishops for the same cause of Religion: But when Stephen Gardiner perceived that all his threats, and cruel devices would not serve turn to dishearten Men from adhering to the truth, he gave over the business as utterly discouraged, meddling no more with condemnations, but referred the whole doing thereof to Bishop Bonner, who bestirring himself in that trust, presently called before him the persons above named, and read the sentence of death upon them. Also Doctor Ferrar was sent down to his Bishoprick of Saint David's in Wales, there to be condemned, and executed.

The King of Denmark wrote Two Letters to Queen Mary, in the behalf of Master Coverdal, by whose intercession the Queen at last let him go to him.

Thomas Tomkins before named was a Weaver by profession: A Man of a very humble, and holy conversation, that would begin all his business with prayer: And so charitable, that if any came to borrow money of him, he would shew them all in his purse, and bid them take it; and when they brought it home, he would bid them keep it longer till they were better able to repay it. Bonner kept this Man in prison half a Year, and sometimes beat him cruelly about the Face, and plucked off a piece of his Beard, yet he bore it patiently: And when the Bishop could by no other means prevail to remove him from the truth, having Doctor Harfsfield, and some others with him, he sent for Tomkins, and endeavored to draw him to recant, which Tomkins denying, the Bishop having a wax Taper by him, took Tomkins by the Fingers, and held his Hand over the flame, and burnt it cruelly: Afterwards Tomkins reported to a Friend, that whilest his Hand was burning, he was so ravished in Spirit that he felt no pain; so that he never shrunk till the Veins shrunk, and the Sinews brake, and the Water spurt into Doctor Harfsfield's Face, who was so moved with pitty, that he requested the Bishop to give over, saying, That had he tried him enough. After this he was brought into the Bishops Consistory, and examined whether he did believe that Christ's Body was really in the Sacrament: To which he answered, that he believed the Sacrament only to be a remembrance thereof, and that the very Body, and Blood of Christ is only in Heaven, and no where else. Then being asked whether he would recant his errors: He answered, that seeing God had revealed his truth to him, he would continue therein to his death: Hereupon the Bishop read his sentence of condemnation, and delivered him to the Sheriffs, who carried him to Newgate, and from thence into Smithfield, where he sealed the Truth with his Blood, and quietly slept in the Lord, Anno Christi 1555.

Then William Hunter, a godly young man of Nineteen Years old, born of godly Parents, who instructed him in the truth, and was by them placed Apprentice in London, was commanded to go to Mass, and receive the Sacrament, which he refused to do, whereupon he was threatened to be complained of to the Bishop: Hunter therefore taking leave of his Master, went to his Parents at Burntwood, with whom he remained about Six weeks. Then one day going into the Chappel there, and finding a Bible upon the Desk, he began to read therein. Presently after came in a Summoner who said to him: What dost thou meddling with the Bible? Canst thou understand what thou readest, and canst thou expound the Scripture? Hunter answered, I take not upon me to expound the Scripture, but finding the Bible here, I read in it to my comfort. The Summoner replied, It was never a merry World since the Bible came forth in English. Hunter said, Say not so for Gods sake: For the Gods Book, out of which every one that hath grace may learn how he ought to please God, and therefore I pray God that we may have the blessed Bible amongst us continually. The Summoner replied, I perceive your mind well enough, you are one of those that do not like the Queens Laws, but you and many more must turn over a new Leaf or you will broil for it: Hunter answered, Pray God give me grace that I may believe his word, and confess his name what ever comes of it. Confess his name, said the Summoner? No, no, you will all go to the Devil, and confess his name. Then did the Summoner go forth, and fetched a Priest, Vicar of that place, out of an Alehouse, who finding William Hunter reading, reviled, and rebuked him for it, and afterwards asked him what he said to the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, whether the Bread, and Wine were not transubstantiated into Christs Body? Hunter answered, that he found no such thing in Scripture, and told him that he understood Christs words like the carnal Caper-naits who thought that Christ would have given them his flesh to feed on, wherefore he said to them, The words that I speak, they are Spirit, and Life: Ah, quoth the Vicar, now I have found you out, now I see thou art an Heretick, &c. Hunter replied, Whereas you make question of my Faith, would we Two were fast tied to a stake, to prove whether of us should stick closest to our Faith, &c. Then the Vicar departed, threatening to complain of William Hunter: Whereupon he went home, and took leave of his Father, and fled from the danger: Presently after Master Brown sent for old Hunter, and enquired for his Son, he told him he knew not where he was: Yet did Brown threaten to cast him into prison, if he did not bring forth his Son: The old Man therefore rode after him to look him, and after Two dayes met with him, telling him what had happened: Yet, said he, go thy wayes, and I will return home again, and say that I cannot find thee. No said William, I will go home with you, and save you harmless whatever comes of it. As soon as he came back, he was apprehended by a Constable, and carried before Master Brown, who reasoned much with him about the Sacrament of the Altar, and being extreemly enraged at his bold, and judicious answers, he immediately sent him up to London to Bishop Bonner. Then the Bishop understanding the business, began very mildly with him, and asked him what he thought of the Sacrament of the Altar, whether Christs Body was not present, the same that was born of the Virgin Mary? Hunter told him that what he had said before, he would not recant for all the good in the World: After some other conference the Bishop caused his Men to set him in the Stocks, in his Gatehouse, where he lay Two dayes, and had nothing but a Cruft of brown Bread, and a Cup of cold Water. At the Twodayes end the Bishop came to him, and finding the Bread and Water still by him, he bad his Men to let him out, and to let him break his Fast with them: But they reviled him, calling him Heretick, and saying, that he should not come into their company: Hunter answered, that he was as loth to be in their company, as they in his.

Presently after the Bishop sent for him, and asked him if he would recant? Hunter answered, that he would never recant that which he had confessed before Men concerning his Faith in Christ. Then the Bishop committed him to prison, and commanded the Jailor to put as many Irons upon him as he could: Threatning to burn him, whereupon Hunter said, God strengthen me in his truth: And so he was carried away, the Bishop allowing him but a half-penny a day, to live on.

He remained thus in prison Three quarters of a year, and was Six times before the Bishop, the last of them he asked him whether he would recant, and whether he believed Christs Body to be present in the Sacrament? Hunter answered, That he believed, that when he received the holy Communion rightly, and worthily, he fed upon Christ spiritually by Faith in his Soul, and was made partaker of all the benefits which Christ had brought to all faithful Believers, through his precious Death, Passion, and Resurrection. Hereupon the Bishop read the sentence of condemnation, appointing that he should go back to Newgate, and from thence to Burntwood, to be burned. After which he said to him, if thou wilt recant I will make thee a Freeman of London, and give thee Forty pounds in money to set up thy occupation withal, or I will make thee Steward of my House: For I see thou hast wit enough, and therefore I will prefer thee, if thou wilt recant? Hunter answered, I thank you for your offers, but if you cannot persuade my Heart by Scripture arguments, I will not turn from God for the love of the world: For I count all earthly things but Dung, and Dross, in respect of the love of Christ: Then said the Bishop, If thou diest in this Mind, thou art condemned for ever: Hunter replied, God judgeth righteously, and justifies those, whom Men condemn unjustly. Thus was he sent to Newgate, and after a Moneth to Burntwood.

Testimony.

Whilest he was at Burntwood, his Father, and Mother came to him, desiring heartily of God that he might continue constant to the end, in that good way which he had begun: His Mother added, that she was happy that she had born such a Child, which could find in his Heart to lose his life for Christ's sake. William answered, For the little pain which I shall suffer, which is but for a moment, Christ hath promised me a Crown of joy. Then his Mother kneeling down, said, I pray God strengthen thee, my Son, to the end. I think thee as well bestowed as any Child that ever I bore. Whilest he remained there, many of his acquaintance came to him, whom he exhorted to come out of the abomination of Popery, and Idolatry. Three dayes after Master Brocker, the Sheriff, prepared all things for his burning; and in the mean time the Sheriffs Son came to him, and took him in his Arms, saying, William, Be not afraid of these Men that are present with Bills, and Bows, to carry you to the place of execution: William answered, I thank God I am not afraid: For I have already cast my account what it will cost me: With that the Sheriffs Son could speak no more for weeping. And so Hunter went on cheerfully: His Father met him by the way, saying, God be with thee, my Son. William answered, God be with you, good Father, and be of good comfort: For I hope we shall meet again where we shall be merry. At the Stake he kneeled down, and read the Fifty one Psalm. Then said the Sheriff, Here is a Letter from the Queen, if thou wilt recant, thou shalt live, otherwise thou shalt be burnt: No, quoth William, I will not recant, and so he went to the Stake, and was fastened to it: Then he said to the people, Good people, pray for me whilest you see me alive, and I will pray for you. Master Brown standing by, said, I will pray no more for thee, than I will pray for a Dog. William answered: Sir, now you have that which you sought for, I pray God it be not laid to your charge in the last day, But I forgive you: Brown said, I ask no forgiveness of thee: William replied, If God forgive you not, I shall require my Blood at your Hands: And further said, Son of God, shine upon me, and whereas it was dark till then, the Sun immediately shone out of a thick Cloud, so full in his Face, that he was forced to turn his Head aside. Then a Priest brought a Book to him, to whom he said, Away thou false Prophet. Beware of them good people, and turn from their abominations, lest ye partake of their plagues: Then said the Priest, Look how thou burnest here, so shalt thou burn in Hell: William answered, Thou liest thou false Prophet, Away thou false Prophet, away.

Fire being kindled, he lift up his Hands to Heaven, saying, Lord, Lord, Lord, receive my spirit, and so he ended his life in the flames.

About the same time Master Higbed, and Master Causon, Two Essex Gentlemen, being zealous in the service of God, were complained of to Bishop Bonner, who ordered them to be imprisoned in Culchester, together with a Servant of Master Thomas Causon's, in Christian godliness nothing inferiour to his Master: But the Bishop perceiving that these Gentlemen were of great esteem in their Country, for fear of a tumult, he, with Master Fucknam, and some others others went thither himself to see if he could reclaim them: And much diligence he used, both by terrors, and threatnings, as also by large promises, and flatteries, to reduce them to the Catholick Church: But when nothing would prevail to remove them from the truth, he returned to London, and carried them prisoners with him, committing them to strait imprisonment, Where he attempted fundry ways both by himself, and his Chaplains to draw them to revoke their opinions: But when he could not effect it, he brought them into the open Consistory, demanding of them if they would recant? To which they answered negatively: Then he proposed fundry Articles to them, to which they answered in writing: This answer satisfied not the Bishop, and therefore he sent for Master Causton to him, perswading him to recant: Causton answered, You go about to catch us in Snares, and Gins, but look what measure you meet unto us, expect that God should measure the same to you again. Then did the Bishop perswade Master Higbed to abjure: To whom he answered, I will not abjure: Do what you can, you shall do no more than God will permit you to do, &c.

Their condemnation.

After this the Bishop again attempted sometimes with fair promises, other sometimes with threatnings to divert them from the truth, and when he could by no means prevail, he read the sentence of death against them, after which they were delivered to the Sheriffs, and by them were carried to Newgate, where they remained in great consolation for Fourteen dayes, at the end whereof being bound fast in a Cart, they were carried and delivered to the Sheriff of Essex, who carried them to their own Parishes, viz. Master Higbed to Horneden on the Hill, and Master Causton to Railly, where they sealed their Faith with their Blood in the Fire to the glory of God and great rejoycing of the godly.

John Laurence.

Also about the same time William Pigot, Stephen Knight, and John Laurence were examined before Bonner, who asked them what their opinion was about the Sacrament of the Altar? They answered subscribing their Hands to it, that in it there is not under the forms of Bread, and Wine the very substance of the Body, and Blood of Christ, which was only in Heaven, and no where else: Then did the Bishop perswade them to recant, and deny their profession, which they refused to do. He added many fair flatteries, and cruel threatnings, which not prevailing, he condemned them, and so sent them to Newgate: There they remained together with great joy till they were carried down into Essex to be burnt.

Their Martyrdom.

William Pigot was burned at Braintree, Stephen Knight at Mauldon, who at the Stake kneeled down, and prayed thus.

Christ preferred before all.

O Lord Jesus Christ, for the love of whom I willingly leave this life, and rather desire the bitter death of thy Cross, with the loss of all earthly Goods, then to obey Men in breaking thy holy Commandments: Thou seest, O Lord, that whereas I might live in worldly wealth, if I would worship a false God: I did rather choose the torment of my Body, and loss of my life, counting all things but Dung, and Dross that I might win thee: For whose sake death is dearer to me than Thousands of Gold, and Silver: Such love (O Lord) thou hast laid up in my Breast that I hunger for thee, as the wounded Deer desires the soil: Send thy holy comforter, O Lord, to aid, strengthen, and comfort this weak piece of earth, which of itself hath no strength. Thou rememberest, O Lord, that I am but dust, and able to do nothing of my self that is good, and therefore as of thine accustomed goodness, and love thou hast invited me to this banquet, and accounted me worthy to drink of thine own cup amongst thine elect: Even so give me strength, O Lord, against this element of the fire, which though terrible to sight, yet let it be sweet, and pleasant to my mind, that by the strength of thy Spirit I may pass through the rage of it into thy bosome, &c. O Heavenly Father, forgive me my sins, as I forgive all the world. O sweet Son of God, My Saviour, spread thy wings over me: O blessed holy Ghost, through whose blessed conduct

Also John Laurence was sent up to Colchester, whose Legs being lame with Irons, and his Body weak with cruel usage, he was carried in a Chair to the Stake, where being constant in the Faith he was consumed in the fire. At his burning many young Children cried out: Lord strengthen thy servant, and keep thy promise, Lord, strengthen thy servant, and keep thy promise.

Doctor Robert Ferrar, Bishop of Saint Davids in Wales, who was preferred to that Bishoprick by the good Duke of Summerset in the dayes of King Edward the Sixth, met with much opposition by some covetous Canons of the Church of Carmarthen, by whose instigation sundry Articles were exhibited against him to the King and Council; whereupon he was sent for up, and required to give in his answer to those Articles to Doctor Wotton and Sir John Mason, which accordingly he did: Yet the Duke of Summerset being shortly after beheaded, by whom he had been promoted to the Bishoprick, and the good Bishop finding few friends to support him against those that hunted for his Bishoprick, he was detained in custody under sureties all the dayes of King Edward: And in the beginning of Queen Maryes Reign he was examined of his Faith and Doctrin before the Bishop of Winchester: Who told him that the Queen and Parliament had altered Religion, and therefore required him to imbrace the same: To which he answered, that he had taken an Oath never to consent, or agree that the Bishop of Rome should have any jurisdiction in this Realm: Winchester called him froward Fellow, and false Knave, and so returned him to Prison again. Afterwards he was examined before Henry Morgan pretended Bishop of Saint Davids, who Ministred sundry Articles to him, requiring him to subscribe thereunto, which he refused: Then he exhorted him to recant, which he also refused; whereupon he read the sentence of condemnation against him: Then was he degraded, and delivered to the secular power, by whom he was carried to Carmarthen, there to be burned.

Doctor Ferrar

His imprisonment

A little before his execution there came to him one Richard Jones, a Knights Son, who much lamented the painfulness of the death that he was to suffer: To whom Doctor Ferrar answered, that if he saw him once to stir in the pains of his burning, that then he should give no credit to the Doctrin which he had taught: And accordingly what he said, that he performed, standing so patiently in the midst of the flames, that he never moved, holding up his stumps, till one with a Staff dashed him on the Head, throwing him down into the fire, where quietly he resigned up his spirit unto God.

His Martyrdom

About the same time there was one Rawlins White, a Fisher-man in Wales, of the Town of Cardiff, who when God raised up the light of the Gospel in the dayes of King Edward the Sixth, this Rawlins began to millike his former superstitious courses, and became a diligent hearer and searcher out of the truth: And because himself was ignorant, and illiterate, he set his Son to School to learn to read English, which when he had attained to, he caused him every night to read to him a portion of the Holy Scriptures, and sometimes some other good Books: By these helps, and conference with others he attained to such a measure of knowledge, that he was able to instruct others, and thereupon he used sometimes to go from place to place to instruct such as he found most tractable: So that he became an instrument of much good in that Country: He never used to go without his little Boy to read to him; God gave him also an excellent memory, whereby he could quote Scriptures very readily.

Rawlins White

When Queen Mary came to the Crown, and had altered Religion, he was not so open as formerly he had been: But would sometimes privately call his trustiest Friends together, and with earnest prayer, and great lamentation for the sins of the Land, passed away the time with them.

But the enemies of the truth growing violent, Rawlins looked every day when when he should be dragged to prison: Hereupon some of his dearest Friends perswaded him to retire himself into some place where he was not known: he was nothing moved with these fleshly perswasions, thanking them for their good will, but told them plainly that he had learned, that if he denied Christ here, Christ would deny him at the last day: And therefore, said he, I will by his gracious assistance confess, and bear witness of him before Men, that I may find him in everlasting life. Yet his Friends continued to importunate him much for his departure, but he was resolute, and so continued till he was apprehended upon suspicion of Heresie, and carried before the Bishop of Landasse.

His constancy.

The Bishop and his Chaplains often set upon him to remove him from his faith, but could not prevail: He had many opportunities of escaping, but would not make use of them: At last he was removed to the Castle of Cardiffe, where he remained prisoner for a year. When his Friends resorted to him, he used to spend the time in prayer, and exhortation, admonishing them to beware of false Prophets, that come in sheeps clothing.

His courage.

At last the Bishop sent for him, and assayed both by flatteries, and threatenings, to remove him from his steadfastness; But Rawlins remaining resolute, he appointed a time for his condemnation: which being come, the Bishop sent for him, and told him that it was well known that he held many Heretical opinions, and that he had seduced many others, &c. Rawlins answered boldly: My Lord, I thank God I am a Christian Man, I hold no opinions contrary to the word of God; if I do, I desire to be reformed by Scripture. After much debate, the Bishop told him that if he would not recant, he must proceed to condemn him: Proceed, said Rawlins, according to your law, but for an Heretick you shall never condemn me: Then said the Bishop, Before we proceed any farther, let us pray unto God that he would send some spark of grace upon him: It may be God will turn his heart. Now, said Rawlins, you deal well, and if your request be according to the will of God, anathat you pray as you ought, no doubt but God will hear you: Therefore do you pray to your God, and I will pray to my God: For I know God will hear my prayer and perform my desire: By and by the Bishop and his company went to prayer, and Rawlins prayed by himself, and when they had done, the Bishop said to Rawlins, How is it with thee now? wilt thou revoke thy opinions? No surely, said he, Rawlins you left me, and Rawlins you find me, and by Gods grace Rawlins I will continue. If your Petitions had been good, God would have heard you, but you worship a false God, and you pray not as ye ought, and therefore God heareth you not, but God hath heard my requests, and I trust will strengthen me to the end. Then the Bishop being angry, reprov'd him sharply, and afterwards went to Mass: Whereupon Rawlins said, Good people, if there be any Brethren amongst you, or but one Brother, bear witness at the day of judgment, that I bow not the Knee to this Idol. After Mass the Bishop seeing that nothing would prevail, proceeded to condemn him. After which the Bishop sent him to Cardiff to be put into a dark Dungeon: There Rawlins passed away his time in prayer, and singing of Psalms.

His Martyrdom.

The night before he was to be burned they sent him word of it: Whereupon he sent to his Wife for his wedding Garment, meaning his Shirt, which he received next morning with great joy: When he was had forth to execution, he was guarded with Bills, and Staves: Whereupon he said, Alas! what needs all this ado? By Gods grace I will not start away: But I heartily give thanks to God who hath made me worthy to abide all this for his Names sake. At the Stake he found his Wife, and Children drowned in tears, which on the sudden drew some tears from him, but presently recollecting himself, he said, Ah flesh! sayest thou me so? wouldest thou fain prevail? I tell thee do what thou canst, by Gods grace, thou shalt not have the victory: Then falling down to the ground he kissed it, and said, Earth to earth, and dust to dust, thou art my Mother, and to thee I shall return. Then went he chearfully to be bound to the Stake: And seeing a Friend, he said to him: I feel a great fighting between the flesh, and the spirit, and the flesh would very fain have his swinge:

under the Reign of Queen Mary.

swinge: Therefore when you see me any thing tempted, pray you hold up your Finger, and I trust I shall remember my self. When he was fastened with the Chain, he gave God thanks with a loud voice, and then said to the Smith, I pray you good Friend, knock it in fast, for it may be the flesh will strive mightily: But, God of thy great mercy give me strength, and patience to abide the extremity. Then did he pull the Reeds, and Straw about him with such a chearful countenance, that all wondred at him. Then stood up a Priest to preach to the people, and Rawlins attended till he spake about Transubstantiation, which he went about to confirm by Scripture, alledging that Text: This is my Body: whereupon Rawlins said, Come hither, good People, and hear that false Prophet no longer: And to him he said, Ah thou naughty Hypocrite, dost thou presume to alledge Scripture to prove thy false Doctrin? Look what follows, Do this in remembrance of me: This put the Priest to silence: Then was fire kindled, and Rawlins bathed his Hands in the flame, till the sinews thrunk, and the fat dropped out: And all the while he cried out, O Lord, receive my soul; O Lord, receive my Spirit: And thus he abode quietly, and patiently, till his Spirit returned to God that gave it. It was further observed of him, that whereas formerly through infirmity of age he went stooping, with a sad countenance, and feeble Body: When he went to his death, he went bolt upright, with a fresh, and chearful countenance, shewing much courage, and vigour, both in speech, and behavior.

About the same time the Queen restored all the Lands that were in her possession, to the Abbeyes, and Monasteries: And a Bull came from the Pope, requiring that all others should do the like: But none were found that would either obey the Pope, or imitate the Queen therein.

There was about the same time a Popish Priest called Nightingal, Parson of Cronstal, near Canterbury, who boasted in the Pulpit, that he had been with Cardinal Poole, who had made him as clean from his sins, as he was at the Font-stone: Boasting also of the Popes Bull that was come into England. But whilest the words were in his mouth, he fell down out of the Pulpit, and never stirred more.

died in Prison.

In the same moneth, John Alcock, a goodly Man died in Prison, and was buried in the Fields: Also Letters were sent to the Sheriff of Kent, to apprehend Thomas Woodgate, William Mainard, and one Harwich, for preaching up and down that Country.

Other Letters were sent to Two Knights to examine Master Flower, why he wore about his Neck written, Deum time, Idolum fuge: Fear God, Fly Idolatry; and whomsoever else they knew to wear the like. Praying them to speak to Bishop Bonner, that they might speedily be proceeded against, according to Law.

George Marsh, born at Deane in Lancashire, was well educated in Learning, and Religion by his Parents: Afterwards he married a Wife, by whom he had some Children: But his Wife dying, he left his Children well disposed of, and went to Cambridge, where he studied, and much encreased in learning and godliness, and at last was made a Minister, and served as Curate under Master Laurence Sanders: Afterwards he preached in Lancashire, where he earnestly set forth Gods true Religion, and beat down Antichristianism. At length he was apprehended, and kept close Prisoner by Cotes, Bishop of Chester; for about Four moneths space, being not permitted to have the relief, and comfort of his Friends. Then the Bishop sending for him, asked him about the Sacrament of the Altar: Master Marsh utterly denied Transubstantiation, allowed not the abuse of the Mass, nor the Sacrament in one kind: The Bishop labored to draw him from his opinions, but all in vain, so he returned him to Prison again.

Many resorted to him in Prison, laboring to divert him from the truth, but the Lord upheld him in his integrity, giving him a mouth, and wisdom, which all his Adversaries were not able to resist: The Bishop had divers conferences with him, giving him many taunts, reviling speeches, and odious names. At last he was brought forth to his condemnation, before the Bishop and some others: There they objected many things against him, as seducing the People, holding Heretical opinions, &c. To which he answered, That he utterly abhorred all kind of Heresie, desiring all the People present to bear him witness thereof: Professing that he held nothing but the truth, which had been established in King Edwards days, in which pure Religion, and Doctrin, he would by Gods grace, stand, live, and die. Then the Bishop began to read the definitive Sentence: But stopping in the midst, he asked him if he would have the Queens mercy in time: He answered, That he did gladly desire the same, but yet he durst not deny his Saviour Christ for fear of being deprived of his everlasting mercy, and of gaining to himself everlasting death. Many Priests, and ignorant People, called hard upon him to recant, and save his life: To whom he answered, I would as faine live as you, if in so doing I should not deny my Master Christ, and thereby cause him to deny me before his Father in Heaven. Then the Bishop finished his Sentence of condemnation; After which he said, Now I will no more pray for thee, than I will pray for a Dog: yet said Master Marsh, I will pray for your Lordship, and so he was delivered to the Sheriffs of the City of Chester, who imprisoned him closely, so that he had no relief, or comfort from any worldly creature, only some few Citizens in the Evening at a hole in the Wall would call to him, and ask him how he did? To whom he used to answer very chearfully, that he did well, and thanked God most highly, that he vouchsafed of his mercy, to appoint him to be a witness of his truth, and to suffer for the same, wherein he did most joyce, beseeching him to give him grace not to faint under the Cross, but patiently to bear the same to his glory, and comfort of his Church. When the time came that he should suffer, the Sheriffs, accompanied with many Billmen, fetched him out of the Dungeon: All the way he went with a Book in his Hand, whereon he looked, so that the people said, This Man goeth not to his death, as a Thief, or as one that deserveth to die: At the place of execution, one shewed him a Pardon, if he would recant; hereupon Master Marsh said, That he would gladly accept of the same, but seeing it tended to pluck him from God, he would not accept of it upon that condition: Then he began to exhort the people to stick to Christ; whereupon one of the Sheriffs said, George Marsh, we must have no sermoning here: Then kneeled he down, and made his prayers, and so stripping himself to his Shirt, he was fastened to the Stake: The fire being unskillfully made, and the Wind driving the flame to and fro, he suffered much extremity in his death, which yet he abode very patiently. Having been thus long tormented without moving, his flesh broiling, and puffed up inso much that all the People thought he had been dead, he suddenly spread abroad his Arms saying, Father of Heaven, have mercy upon me. And so he yielded up his Spirit into the Hands of God.

William Flower.

William Flower, was born in Cambridgeshire, brought up in learning till he was admitted into a Monastery in Ely: There he remained till he was made a Priest, and often sung Mass: But some injunctions coming out from King Henry the eighth, he left the Monastery, and went to the place of his nativity, where he used to sing Mass, and taught a School, and after his serving in some other places, he went to Tewksbury, where he married a Wife, and betook himself to the practice of Physick, and Chirurgery; At last he settled at Lambeth, and on Easter day in the Morning he crossed the Water to Margarets in Westminster, where he found a Priest giving the Sacrament to the People: But Master Flower, being much troubled in Spirit to see his superstition, went to him, and wounded him with his Wood-knife in several places: For this being apprehended, and carried before Bonner, he confessed that he did not well therein, and therefore submitted willingly to punishment: By the Bishop he was sent to Newgate, where one Robert Smith, a Prisoner, questioned with him concerning his Fact at westminster: Asking him, Whether he had formerly known the Priest, and whether he did not bear him ill will: To which he answered, That he had never seen him before, nor did not owe him any evil will. Then said Smith, Do you think you did well, or after the rule of the Gospel? Flower answered, I confess all flesh to be subject to the power of God, whom he maketh his Ministers to do his will, as Moses, Aaron, Phineas, Jehu, Zimri, &c. Planting in them zeal for his honor against all order, and respect of Flesh, and Blood: For his ways are past finding out: By whose Spirit I have given my Flesh unto such order as it shall please him to appoint, in death, which before I did the act, I looked for.

Smith. Do you think that I, or another may do the like by your example?

Flower. No verily, neither do I know whether I could do it again, if it were to do: For I once went to Pauls with a purpose to do it, yet could not: I was now compelled by the spirit to go thither, being fully content to die for the Lord, and therefore gave over my flesh most willingly without all fear, I praise God, and I beseech you judge the best of the Spirit, condemne not Gods doings: For I cannot express with my mouth the great mercies that God hath shewed on me in this thing, which I repent not.

Smith. Do you not believe that you shall die, and that with extremity for this fact?

Flower. Yea, before I did the fact I adjudged my Body to die for the same: Therefore I carried about me in writing mine opinion of God, of the holy Scriptures, &c. That if I had been presently slain, they might have seen the Faith and Hope, which, I praise God, is laid up safe within my Breast: Being assured of everlasting life through Christ my Lord, what death soever I die.

Smith. I bless God for that good estate which I find you in: I beseech him for his Mercies sake to spread his wings over you, and as you have been zealous for him to the loss of this life, so that he will give you his holy Spirit to conduct you through death to a better life, which I think will be shortly.

Flower. I hunger for the same, knowing that they can but kill the Body, which I am sure shall receive everlasting life again: Therefore I pray you, and all that fear God, to pray for me, &c.

After this Bonner sent for him, and Proposed many Articles to him, to which he made a stout, and godly answer: Then did the Bishop much press him to return to the unity of the Popish Church, promising to forgive what was past, and to bestow many favors upon him: To whom Flower answered, That he thanked him for his kindness: And whereas it was in his power to kill or not to kill his Body, he was content that he should do what he pleased therein, yet over his Soul he had no such power, which, faith he; Is in the hands of God, not of Man, to save, or destroy, but for his opinions he neither would, or could go from them, and therefore desired that the Law might proceed against him. Then the Bishop proceeded to the Sentence of condemnation, and committed him to the secular power: By them he was carried into Saint Margarets Churchyard. At the Stake he made a confession of his Faith, and Prayed fervently. Afterwards one exhorted him to recant, or else he would be damned: To whom he answered, Sir, I beseech you for Gods sake be contented: For I have been of this Faith from the beginning, and I trust that the living God will give me his holy Spirit to continue therein unto the end. Then he desired all to forgive him, as he forgave all the world: Then his Hand that did the Fact was cut off, he not so much as shrinking at the same. After which was fire set to him, and he Three times repeated, O Son of God have mercy upon me; O Son of God, receive my Soul; and so he resigned up his Spirit unto God.

Martyrdom.

Master John Cardmaker, a godly Minister, who in King Edwards days was a Preacher in Pauls Church, with whose Doctrin the Papiests were so angry, that in the time of his preaching they used to cut, and slash his Gown with their Knives: This Man being apprehended in the beginning of Queen Maries Reign,

Master Card-maker.

Mr. Barlow. with Master Barlow, Bishop of Bath, they were both cast into Prison. And after a while they were brought before the Bishop of Winchester, and other Commissioners, where they had divers things objected against them; To which they answered so learnedly, and cautiously that the Lord Chancellor [Gardiner] allowed of their Answers, yet returned them to Prison; whence after a while, Master Barlow was dismissed, and went into voluntary Exile, where he constantly bore witness to the truth of the Gospel.

His voluntary Exile.

Master Cardmaker's Martyrdom.

Master Cardmaker during his imprisonment was often baited by the Papists, who by reasonings, persuadings, and threatnings sought to withdraw him from the truth, but all in vain; whereupon Bishop Bonner called him before him, objecting many things against him, especially about the Doctrine of Transubstantiation; To which he gave sound, and godly answers: And when the Bishop could not draw him to a recantation, he passed the Sentence of condemnation upon him, delivering him over to the Sheriffs of London, by whom he was carried into Smithfield. There the Sheriffs talked a great while in private with him, so that the People which heard that Master Cardmaker would recant, seeing this his carriage, were much sadned at it. The discourse being ended, Master Cardmaker withdrew himself, and was long in private Prayer: After which he stripped himself to his Shirt, and went with a bold courage to the Stake, and kissed it, and so was bound to it. The People hereby being delivered from their fears, cried out with joy, saying, God be praised: The Lord strengthen thee Cardmaker; The Lord Jesus receive thy Spirit: And so fire being put to him, he finished his life, and went to receive his everlasting Crown of glory.

John Warne.

At the same time there was a Citizen burnt with him, called John Warne, who denied the real presence of Christ in the Sacrament, &c. For which he was brought before Bonner, who labored much to withdraw him from the truth: But Warne answered, That he would not depart from his received profession, unless he were thereunto persuaded by the holy Scriptures: For this he was condemned, and burnt with Master Cardmaker, where he finished his course with much constancy, and joy.

John Symphon.

Their courage, and Martyrdom.

At this time came a Letter from the King and Queen to Bonner, complaining that Hereticks were not so reformed as they should be, and therefore they exhorted him to be more diligent, either in reclaiming them, or proceeding against them according to Law: This easily prevailed with him, who was propense enough before to cruelty; whereupon he first began with John Symphon, and John Ardely, both of Wigborow in Essex, whom he called before him, objected divers things against them, especially for denying Transubstantiation, exhorted them to recant, &c. But John Ardely answered, My Lord, neither you nor any of your Religion is of the Catholick Church; For you have a false Faith, which will deceive you in the end. You have shed much innocent Blood, and still go on to do the same: If every Hair of my Head were a Man, I would willingly suffer death for the opinion I am in: Then did the Bishop proceed to condemn them both, and so delivered them to the secular power, who carried them down into Essex; where, upon one day, they both finished their course with joy.

Thomas Hawks.

Thomas Hawks, born in Essex, was brought up a Courtier, and was tall, comely, and endued with such excellent qualities, as made him to be much beloved: But that which was most commendable, was his fervent study, and singular love to true Religion, and Godliness. This Master Hawks following the Court, entered into service of the Earl of Oxford, where he was much esteemed, and beloved of all, all King Edwards days: But in Queen Maries Reign, Religion growing odious, he left the Court, and retired to his own House, where he might more freely exercise himself in the study, and practice of Godliness. Whilest he thus remained at home, he had a Son born, whom he would not suffer to be Baptized after the Popish manner: This his Adversaries taking notice of, apprehended him, and carried him before the Earl of Oxford. The Earl not willing willing to meddle with him, sent him to London to Bishop Bonner: The Bishop understanding the cause, asked him why he would not have his Child Baptized? He answered, Because he was commanded to do nothing contrary to the Word of God; as the Papists did, using Oil, Spittle, Cream, Salt, &c. After much other conference, the Bishop left him for a while, and then one of the Bishops Kinsmen, called Master Darbishire said to him, You are too curious, you will have nothing but your little pretty Gods Book. To which Hawks answered, Sir, Is not that sufficient for Salvation? Yes, said the other, but not for our Instruction. Hawks replied, God send me the Salvation, and you the Instruction. Then the Bishop again asked him, If he would be content to have his Child Baptized, and he should not know of it? To which he answered, That if he would have done so, he needed not have come to him, for he had the same Counsel given him before. why, said the Bishop, do you not think that the Queen, and I can command it to be done in despite of your teeth? Hawks answered, I question not what the Queen, and you can do: But you shall never have my consent to it. Afterwards the Bishop said to him, Hawks, I would be glad to do thee good, thou knowest that I am thy Pastor, and must answer for thy Soul if I teach thee not well. To which Hawks answered, what I have said, I will stand to; There is no removing me from it. well, said the Bishop, what saist thou? The Scripture saith, I am the Bread of life, and the Bread that I will give is my flesh, &c. Do you believe this? Yes, said Hawks, I believe what the Scriptures say. well, said the Bishop, let us go to Evensong. But Hawks refused to be present with them, saying, that he would not pray in that place, and that he thought himself best at ease when he was furthest from them, and so walked into the Court. Afterwards the Bishop again examined him about the Sacrament of the Altar: To which he answered, That he knew not what it was: But, said the Bishop, we will make you know it: A Fagot will make you do it. A point for your Fagot, said Master Hawks; what God thinks fit to be done, you shall do, and no more. Much other conference he had with the Bishop and his Chaplains, in all which he answered them very judiciously, and resolutely, so that he was committed to Prison.

Papists Blaspemy.

At last he was brought forth to condemnation, where great means was used to draw him to recant; But he still answered that he would never go from the belief which he was in, so long as he lived: Then the Bishop read his Sentence of condemnation, and delivered him over to the Lord Rich, who carried him to Coxshall in Essex: By the way he used much exhortation to his Friends, who were much confirmed in the truth by his example and constancy: Yet being very fearful of the torments of the fire, they intreated him that in the midst of the flame, he would shew them some token if he could, that the fire was not so intolerable, but a Man might therein keep his mind quiet, and patient: This he assented to, and promised that if the rage of the pain were tolerable he would lift up his Hands above his Head before he gave up the Ghost. At the Stake he mildly, and patiently addressed himself to the fire, and after his fervent prayers made to God, fire was put to him: In it he continued long, and when his Speech was taken away by the flame, his Skin drawn all together, and his Fingers consumed with the fire, so that all Men thought that he had been dead, contrary to their expectation, he being mindful of his promise, suddenly lift up his Hands burning of a light fire, and with great joy clapped them Three times together, whereupon there was such shouting amongst the People, especially by those that knew the meaning of it, as the like hath scarce been heard, and so the blessed Martyr presently sinking down into the fire, gave up his Spirit unto God. Anno Christi. 1555.

before the Lord Rich, and other Justices; where he was accused for not coming to Church, to hear Mass, but resorting to Conventicles in corners, and disobeying the Laws. To this watts answered, If I have offended the Law I am here subject to it; And after further examination, they sent him up to Bishop Bonner, who examined him about the Sacrament of the Altar, &c. watts answered, That he believed Christs Body to be in Heaven, and no where else; and that he would never believe that it was in the Sacrament: That he believed the Mass to be abominable Idolatry, &c. The Bishop advised him not to cast away himself, or at least, not wilfully to cast away his Soul, by adhering to such Heresies: To which watts answered, My Lord I am weary to live in such Idolatry, as you would have me to live in. Other flatteries, and endeavors were used to draw him to a recantation, but they could not prevail; whereupon at last he was brought forth to be condemned: At which time the Articles were read against him, and he was required to deny his Profession: But he said, God keep me from the Doctrine that you would have me to imbrace; and I beseech God that I may persevere in that I have hitherto held, for I will stand to mine answers. Hereupon the Bishop condemned him, and delivered him to the Sheriffs, who kept him a while in Newgate, and then sent him down to Chilmesford: After he had spent there some time in Prayer, he came to his Wife, and Six Children, saying to them, wife, and my good Children, I must now depart from you; and therefore henceforth know I you no more: As the Lord hath given you unto me, so I give you back again to the Lord, whom I charge you to fear, and to obey, and beware that you turn not to this abominable Papistry, against which I shall anon, by Gods grace, give my Blood. Let not the murdering of Gods Saints, cause you to relent, but take occasion thereby to be stronger in the Lords quarrel, and I doubt not, but he will be a merciful Father unto you: And so bidding them farewell, he kissed them all, and went to the fire, where he patiently, and chearfully ended his days.

At the same time there were Thomas Osmond, William Bamford, and Thomas Osborn, all of Coxshall in Essex, who were apprehended for not receiving the Sacrament at Easter, and sent up to Bishop Bonner. Against these Men many things were objected, to which they made answers after a godly sort: And being often urged to recant, they stiffly refused the same; whereupon the Bishop proceeded to condemn them, and delivered them over to the secular power, by whom they were carried down into Essex, and there burnt at several places.

About the same time that holy Martyr of God, Master John Bradford suffered Martyrdom, of whom see the Story in my First Part. With him also suffered John Leafe, an Apprentice of Nineteen years old, who being examined before Bonner, gave a firm and Christian testimony of his Profession: The Bishop assayed by all manner of ways to revoke him from the truth, to error: But notwithstanding all his persuasions, threats, and promises, Leafe continued constant, so planted upon the rock of truth, that neither words, nor deeds could remove him from the same. Hereupon the Bishop proceeded to his condemnation, and delivered him over to the Sheriffs of London, by whom he was carried into Smithfield, to be burnt with Master Bradford, where he finished his days with much comfort, and joy. At his execution there was one Master Woodrofe, one of the Sheriffs, who used Master Bradford very churlishly, as he had done Master Rogers before. He used also to laugh, and make himself sport at the sufferings of these innocent Servants of Jesus Christ, and to beat away the People which were desirous to take them by the Hands. But the Lord (who usually punisheth such cruel Persecutors,) shortly after strook him with a lameness on one side, that he could never turn himself in his Bed afterwards, but as Two Men in a Sheet used to stir him: He had also such a doglike appetite to his Food, that he could never be satisfied with the same: Both which judgments continued Eight years upon him, even till his death.

The next day after, Master William Minge, Minister, died in Prison at Maidstone in Kent, lying there in bonds for Religion; He yielded up his Spirit with great constancy, and boldness.

There was also one James Trevisam, dwelling in Lothbury in London, who being lame, and sick, kept his Bed; He caused his Servant to read to him in the Bible, and one day as he was reading, there came in a Promoter, and went up into his Chamber, where he found the young Man that read, and Three others, all which he apprehended, and carried to Prison: He would also have carried away the sick Man in a Cart, but that the neighbors by importunity prevented it, yet he caused him to put in sureties for his forth coming. The sick Man shortly after dying, they would not suffer him to be buried, so that his Wife was fain to carry him out upon a Table into Moorfields, and to bury him there.

About the same time there was in Kent one Master John Bland, a godly Minister, who had spent his younger time in training up Children in learning, and virtue: Afterwards being called to the Ministry, he was inflamed with an incredible desire to profit the Church of God. Two or Three times he was cast into Prison for it in Canterbury; and being delivered by the mediation of Friends, he still returned to the work of the Ministry, for which being again imprisoned, he might have been delivered, if he would have promised to abstain from preaching; But he would not accept of liberty upon those terms, Then was he examined by Doctor Harpsfield, Dean of Canterbury, who charged him for Preaching that the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Consecration, was not the very Body and Blood of Christ. Master Bland answered, That he perceived that he intended to ensnare him, and therefore he thought not himself bound to make an answer: The Doctor replied, That Saint Peter commands him to make an answer to every Man that asked a reason of the Faith that is in him. well, said Master Bland, I know what the Apostles meaning is: But for arguments sake, I am content to commune with you: And so they reasoned a long time about the Sacrament. A few days after he was again grought before Harpsfield, who charged him for holding divers hainous errors, and for infecting, and deceiving many with his evil Preaching. Then Master Bland said, I protest before God and you all, that my Conscience is not guilty of any error, or Heresie, or that willingly I have taught any such thing. Harpsfield replied, whereon dost thou ground thy Conscience? Let me here what thy Faith is.

Bland. I know no reason why you should examine me of my Faith, more than any other Man here present.

Harpsfield. why, thou Heretick, art thou ashamed of thy Faith? If it were Christian, thou wouldest not be ashamed of it.

Bland. I am not ashamed of it: For I believe in God the Father Almighty Maker of Heaven and Earth; and in Jesus Christ his only begotten Son our Lord, &c. And I believe all the holy Scriptures of God to be most certain, and true: More than this I will not confess.

Harpsfield. why, thou Heretick, I will proceed against thee, because thou wilt not confess thy Faith to me: Thou hast taught that the Body, and Blood of Christ, is not in the Sacrament, after Consecration. How saiest thou? Hast thou not?

Bland. Sir, you promised to confer with me about this, out of the Scriptures: But now I see you seek to bring me into trouble, rather than to win me. But pray you tell me: Is there in the Sacrament after the Consecration, Christs natural Body, with all the qualities of a natural Body, yea, or no?

Harpsfield.

nation.

Harpsfield. The same natural Body that was born of the Virgin Mary, and is glorified, is also in the Sacrament: But I perceive, thou arrogant Heretick, thou asked me the question, but wilt not answer thy self: And so after much other railing, and reviling language, he was remanded to Prison: And after divers other examinations he was at last brought forth to his condemnation, at which time Articles were exhibited against him, to which he gave his answers; yet they proceeded to read his Sentence, and so delivered him to the secular power.

His Prayer.

At the time of his death he made this Prayer: Thou Lord Jesus, for whose love I willingly leave this life, and desire rather the bitter death of thy Cross, and the loss of all earthly things, then to abide the Blasphemy of thy Holy Name, or to obey Man in the breach of thy Commandments: Thou see'st, O Lord, that whereas I might live in worldly wealth, if I would worship false Gods, I chuse rather the torments of Body, and loss of this my life, and have counted all things but dross, and dung, that I might win thee: which death is more dear unto me, than Thousands of Gold, and Silver: Such love, O Lord, hast thou laid up in my Breast, that I hunger for thee as the wounded Dear desires the soil: Send thy holy Spirit, O Lord, to aid, comfort, and strengthen this weak piece of earth, which of it self is void of all strength: O Lord as thou of thy goodness hast bidden me to this Banquet, and counted me worthy to drink of thine own Cup amongst thine Elect, give me strength against the fire, that as it's terrible to my sight, so to my mind it may be at thy Commandment, as an obedient Servant, sweet, and pleasant: And through this fire let me pass into thy Bosom, for this mortality, receiving immortality, and for this corruptible, putting on incorruption. Accept this burnt-offering, O Lord, not for the Sacrifice sake, but for Jesus Christ my dear Saviours sake: For whose testimony I offer this free-will-offering with all my heart, and with all my Soul. O Heavenly Father, forgive me my sins, as I forgive the whole world. O sweet Saviour, spread thy Wings over me: O God, grant me thy holy Spirit, through whose merciful inspiration, I am come hither: Conduct me into everlasting life: Lord, into thy Hands I commend my Spirit: Lord Jesus receive my Soul: And so he sweetly, and quietly slept in the Lord.

Nicholas Sheterden.

At the same time there was one Nicholas Sheterden, his fellow prisoner, examined before Harpsfield, who asked him the meaning of those words, This is my Body. Sheterden replied, That they must be taken spiritually, else when Christ saith, This Cup is my Blood, the substance of the Cup must be changed into Blood: After much other conference he was at last condemned to be burnt, together with Humphrey Middleton, and John Frankesh, Minister, who were both condemned also for the truth. Nicholas Sheterden at the Stake made an excellent Prayer, wherein amongst other things he hath these expressions. Thou knowest Lord, that if we would but seem to please Men in things contrary to thy word, we might enjoy the commodities of life as others do, as Wife, Children, Goods, and Friends. But seeing, Lord, the world will not suffer me to enjoy them, except I sin against thy holy Laws: Behold, I give unto thee my Soul, Spirit, and Body; and lo, I leave here all the pleasures of this life for the hopes sake of Eternal life purchased by Christs Blood, and promised to all them that fight on his side, &c. And grant, Lord, that at the Resurrection of the Just, I may enjoy again these Members then glorified, which now be spoiled and consumed by the fire: O Lord Jesus, receive my Spirit into thy Hands: And so they all Three quietly slept in the Lord.

Martyrs.

A few days after Nicholas Hall, Christopher Waid, Joane Beach Widow, John Harpole, and Margery Boley were all condemned for the truth by the Bishop of Rochester, and burned in Kent. Waid at Dartford: At the time of whole burning, a Fryer going up to preach, Waid called out to the People to take heed of the Doctrin of the Whore of Babylon, and exhorted them to imbrace the Doctrin of the Gospel preached in King Edwards days: This caused the the Friar to withdraw himself: When the fire was kindled, Waid cried, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit, without any sign or token of impatience: Thus he continued holding up his Hands over his Head, not only whilst he was living, but even till his Body was roasted to a Coal, to the great astonishment of his Adversaries.

Shortly after Dirick Carver, and John Launder of the County of Surrey, were apprehended, as they were at prayer together, and sent up to London, where they were committed to Newgate till Bonner could attend to examine them. After a while, the Bishop sent for them, and caused them to swear truly, and directly to answer to such Articles as should be objected against them: This they did, and Bonner after many persuasions asked them, whether they would stand to their Answers? Yea, said they, we will never go from our answers so long as we live: Afterwards they had sundry Articles objected against them; whereunto they made such answers that Bonner proceeded to condemn them, and so delivered them to the Sheriffs, by whom they were conveyed into Surrey to be burned. Dirick was a rich Man, yet his riches were no clog to him to hinder him from Heaven: He was so industrious that though at his apprehension he knew not a letter of the Book, yet before his execution he could read any Printed English. When he came to the Town of Lewes to be burned, the People called upon him, beseeching God to strengthen him in the Faith of Jesus Christ. At the Stake he stripped himself, and having made his fervent Prayers unto God, went into the barrel: They threw in his Book also, but he threw it out again to the People: whereupon the Sheriff charged them in the Queens name to throw it into the fire. Then spake he with a joyful voice, saying: Dear Friends, bear witness that I am come to seal with my Blood the Gospel of Christ, because I know that it is true: you all know, that it hath been truly preached to you, but now is not: And because I will not deny that Gospel, and be obedient to mans Laws, I am condemned to die: Dear Friends, so many of you as do believe in God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost unto everlasting life, see that you walk answerable to your profession: But such as believe in the Pope, or any of his Laws, do believe to their utter condemnation, and without Gods great mercy they shall burn in Hell for ever. Then said the Sheriff, Except thou believe on the Pope thou art damned both Body, and Soul: Adding further, Pray now to thy God that he may deliver thee, or else to strike me down to the example of this People. The Martyr answered, The Lord forgive your sayings. He also prayed, saying, O Lord God, thou hast said, He that forsaketh not wife, Children, House, and all that he hath, and takes up his Cross to follow thee, is unworthy of thee: Thou knowest, Lord, that I have forsaken all to come unto thee: Lord, have mercy upon me, for to thee I commend my Spirit, and my Soul doth rejoyce in thee: And so the fire being put to him, he cried, O Lord have mercy on me, and ended his days.

At the same time there was examined before Bonner, one Thomas Trefor of Godston in Surrey, Carpenter, before whom he made a good confession of his Faith: The Bishop labored by all means to draw him to a recantation: To whom he answered; I would not recant, and forsake my opinion for all the goods in London. I appeal to Gods mercy, and will be none of your Church, nor submit myself to the same: Yea, though there should come an Angel from Heaven to teach me any other Doctrine, than that which I have received I would not believe him: Hereupon he was condemned for an Heretick, and being delivered to the secular power, was burned, finishing his course with much joy.

Presently after there was John Aleworth that died in Prison at Reading for the Testimony of the truth of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and was buried in the Fields.

In these troublesome times there was one James Abbot, a godly young Man, who for his safety was forced to shift from place to place: But when God had ripened him for himself, he was caught and carried before the Bishop of Norwich, who after examination so labored with him, partly by threats, and partly by fair promises; that at last the poor young Man yielded to him; whereupon the Bishop gave him some money, and dismissed him: When he was departed, his conscience began to accuse him; and to shew him how he had displeased God, by yielding to their beastly illusions: So that being upon the rack of conscience, he went back to the Bishop and threw him his money, saying, that it repented him for that he ever gave consent to their wicked persuasions, or that that he took any money of him. Then did the Bishop with his Chaplains labor a fresh to win him again, but all in vain; For though he had played Peter before, through infirmity, yet now he was resolved, through Gods grace, to stand manfully in his Masters quarrel unto the death, which accordingly he did, being shortly after burned in Bury.

In the midst of these troubles there was one Edmund Tyrel, Esquire, and Justice of peace in Essex who coming from the burning of some godly Persons, upon the way, met with Master John Denley, and John Newman, both of Maidston in Kent, going to visit some of their Godly Friends in Essex: Tyrel suspecting them, caused them to be searched, and finding about them the Confessions of their Faith, sent them up to the Commissioners in London, who seeing they could prevail nothing by their persuasions, they sent them to Bishop Bonner, who examined them of their Faith, and used many persuasions to withdraw them from the truth: But Master Denley answered, The Lord deliver me from your counsel, and keep me in the mind that I am in, which you count Heresie; but I know it to be the truth: Thereupon he sent them to Prison. Afterwards they were brought forth into the Consistory, had Articles objected against them, and when they could not be removed from their steadfastness, were condemned; Master Denley was sent to Uxbridge to be burned, where in the midst of the flames he sung a Psalm: Whereupon Doctor Storrie commanded one of the tormentors to hurl a fagot at him, which hitting him on the Face, made it to bleed, so that he gave over singing: Truly, said Doctor Storrie, to him that hurled it, thou hast marred a good old song: Then did Master Denley sing again till he yielded up his Spirit.

A few days after suffered Martyrdom at the same place Patrick Packington, against whom amongst other things wherewith he was charged, this was one; that being at Bishop Bonnors Chappel at Mars, he would not put off his Hat till it was taken from him: The Bishop laboring to draw him to recant, he protested that the Church wherein the Bishop believed, was no Catholick Church, but a Synagogue of Satan, and therefore he would not turn to it.

Also John Newman was burnt at Saffron Walden in Essex. Richard Hook at Chichester.

About the same time William Coker, William Hooper, Henry Lawrence, Richard Collier, Richard Wright, and William Steele, Kentish Men, were all examined before Doctor Harpfield, and some others, who all of them sticking close to the truth, were condemned, and burned at Canterbury.

The Prisoners of London being now filled with Gods Saints; the Queens Commissioners intending to make quick dispatch with them, took out these Ten, viz. Elizabeth Warne, George Tankerfield, Robert Smith, Stephen Harwood, Thomas East, William Hale, Thomas Lyes, George King, John Wade, and John Laybford, and sent them to Bonner: He willingly received them, and examined them upon the usual Articles, especially about the real presence of Christ in the Sacrament; and when they confessed, and constantly adhered to the truth, he proceeded to condemn them: Elizabeth Warne said to him, Do what you will with me; For if Christ was in an error, than am I in an error, otherwise not: She was burned at Stratford-Bow, Tankerfield at his condemnation said to the Bishop, I will not forsake my opinions, except you confute them by the Scriptures, and I care not for your Divinity; For you condemn all Men, and prove nothing against them: And turning to the People he said, Good People, beware of him, and such as he is, for these be they they that deceive you: He was burnt at Saint Albans, where with much patience, and constancy, he ended his life. The rest were all burnt in several places, only George King, Thomas Lyes, and John Wade, sick'ned in Lollards Tower, by reason of their cruel usage, and dying in Prison were cast out into the Fields, and so were buried by night by the Faithful Servants of God.

Also William Andrew, being by Bonner cast into Newgate for Religion, died there, was cast out into the Fields, and privily buried by good Men.

William Andrew died in Prison.

Master Robert Samuel.

Master Robert Samuel Minister of Barfold in Suffolk, instructed the flock over which the Holy Ghost had made him overseer, faithfully, and fruitfully in King Edwards days, and in Queen Maries till he was put from his place: But when he could no longer preach publickly to his People, he did not give over the care of them, but instructed them privately, and by stealth. And when the Queen set forth an Act that all married Ministers should put away their Wives, yet Master Samuel would not do it, but kept her in Ipswich; instructing all about him as he had opportunity: This, Master Foster a neighbor-justice, and a cruel Persecutor, hearing of, sent forth his Emissaries to apprehend him, who watching their time, beset his House, took him, and put him into the Jail, where he meekly passed away his time with his godly Brethren whilst he stayed there: But shortly after he was carried to Norwich, to Doctor Hopton the Bishop, by whom, and his chancellor Dunning, he was most mercilessly used with out all pitty: For in Prison he was chained upright to a great Post in such fort, that standing only on tip-toe, he was faine to bear the whole weight of his Body thereby: They kept him also without meat or drink, so that he was cruelly tormented with hunger, and thirst; only they allowed him every day Two or Three mouthfulls of Bread, and Three spoonfulls of Water, rather to preserve him to further torment, then to save his life thereby. Oft would he in this miserable condition have drunk his own Water, but his Body was so dried up with long emptiness that he was not able to make one drop of Water: At last when he was brought out to be burned, which was an easie pain to what he had suffered before, he related to some Friends what had happened to him in Prison, viz. That after he had been some days pinched with this hunger and thirst, he fell into a sleep, at which time one, cloathed all in white, seemed to stand before him, which ministred comfort to him, saying, Samuel, Samuel, be of good chear, and take a good Heart unto thee; For after this day shalt thou never be hungry or thirsty any more. Which thing also came to pass: Yea, he said: That he had such wonderful comfort from Christ in his afflictions, as he could not through modesty utter the same. As he was going to execution, a Maid met him, took him about the neck, and kissed him, for which she was sought after to have been imprisoned, but it pleased God that she escaped: During Master Samuels burning his Body did shine as bright, and lookt as white as new tried Silver.

His glorious Martyrdom.

The next day after his Martyrdom, Two godly Women, Anne Potten, and Joane Trunchfield, were apprehended, and imprisoned in Ipswich; One of them before her apprehension was perswaded to fly from the danger, but she said, I know that it is lawful enough to fly away, but I am tied to an Husband; and have many young children at home: And I know not how my Husband, being a carnal Man, will take my departure from him, and therefore I am resolved for the love of Christ, and his truth to stand to the extremity of the matter. At their first imprisonment, one of them especially was much troubled in mind, by reason of her sufferings: But Christ, beholding the weakness, and infirmity of his Servant, came in with seasonable comfort to her, so that both of them remaining constant in the truth, suffered Martyrdom.

Anne Potten, Joane Trunchfield.

Seasonable comfort.

Also William Allen being imprisoned for the truth, and adhering constantly thereto, was condemned by the Bishop, and burned at Walsingham; In the fire he stood quietly without moving till he died.

William Allen.

Roger Coo.

Also Roger Coo, being apprehended and carried before the Bishop of Norwich, had with him divers conflicts, and at last was committed to the fire at Texford in Suffolk, where he most blessedly ended his days.

Thomas Cob.

Thomas Cob of Haverhil, Butcher, being carried before Dunnings, the Bloody Chancellor of Norwich, was by him examined whether he believed Christs Body to be really, and substantially in the Sacrament of the Altar? To which he answered, That he was taught in the Scriptures, that Christs Body ascended into Heaven, and he never read that he descended since; and therefore he did not believe it to be in the Sacrament: For this he was condemned, and burned in the Town of Thetford.

George Catmer, Robert Streater, Anthony Burward, George Brodbridge, James Turvy, Thomas Hayward, George Goreway.

In the Diocess of Canterbury, George Catmer, Robert Streater, Anthony Burward, George Brodbridge, and James Turvy, were apprehended, and carried before Thornton, Bishop of Dover, who examined them of Christs presence in the Sacrament, of Auricular Confession, &c. To which they made such answers, that they were all Five condemned, and burned in Canterbury.

In the Diocess of Lichfield, and Coventry, Thomas Hayward, and George Goreway, were condemned for the truth, and burned in Lichfield.

Robert Glover.

In the same Diocess there lived Two godly, and worthy Gentlemen, Master Robert Glover, and John Glover, his Brother, who being noted for Religion, process was awarded for the apprehension of John Glover, who was Heir to his Father, dwelling in the Town of Manceter. He was especially enriched with Gods Heavenly grace, which so wrought in him, that he, with his other Two Brethren, Robert, and William, not only embraced the light of the Gospel, but zealously professed the same. Yet it pleased God to lay his heavy Hand of affliction upon John, in inward troubles of mind; yea his pangs were so great, his torment so grievous, the boiling heat of Hell-fire in his spirit was so intolerable, that no Tongue is able to express it.

John Glovers spiritual afflictions.

Master Fox saith thus of him: In his youth I was twice, or thrice with him, whom, partly by his talk I perceived, partly with mine Eyes I saw, to be so worn, and consumed by the space of Five years, that neither almost any brooking of meat, any quietness of sleep, pleasure of life, yea almost no kind of senses were left him: So that if it had not pleased Christ sometimes to have relieved his poor Servant so far worn, with some seasonable consolations now and then betwixt times, it had been impossible for him to have sustained such torments, yet the matters for which he was so tormented, were of no great moment.

This was the chief; That he having been graciously called by the light of the Gospel, and having felt wondrous sweet tastes of Christs Heavenly Kingdom, his mind after that having fallen into some cogitation about his worldly businesses, was affrighted with that Text, Heb. 6. 4. For it is impossible that they which were once enlightened, and have tasted the Heavenly gift, &c. Upon consideration of which words he was fully perswaded that he had sinned against the Holy Ghost: This so wrought upon him, that if he had been in the deepest Pit of Hell, he could almost have despaired no more of his salvation. In this is intolerable grief of mind, though he never had, nor could have any joy of his meat, yet was he compelled to eat against his appetite, that thereby he might defer the time of his damnation as long as could be, thinking no less but that he must needs be thrown into Hell, so soon as Breath departed out of his Body: And though Christ as he thought, did pity his case, and was sorry for him: yet he thought he could not help him, because that truth must be fulfilled, It is impossible for such a one to be renewed by repentance.

But though he suffered for many years such sharp temptations, and strong buffetings of Satan, yet the Lord, who graciously preserved him all that while, not only at last did free him from his discomforts, but also framed him thereby to such mortification of life, as the like hath scarce been seen, in such sort, as he being like one already placed in Heaven, and dead to this World, both in words and affections, led a life altogether celestial, utterly abhorring all profane doings.

His unspeak-able joy.

Neither

Neither was his talk differing from the rest of his life, never using any idle, vile, or vain language.

The Bishop of Lichfield hearing of his zeal, and ardency in the profession of the Gospel, wrote to the Major and Sheriffs of Coventry, to apprehend him so soon as might be: But the Lord of his infinite mercy disposed otherwise of it, for his faithful Servant, who had for many years endured such extream torments, he would not heap more sorrows upon him, neither would deliver him to the flames of fire, who had been so sorely scorched already with the sharp fire of inward affliction. So that the Major having received the Bishops Letter, sent privately to John to convey himself away from the danger; who with his Brother William, were no sooner departed, but the searchers came into his House to look for him: At last coming into an upper Room, they found Robert lying sick upon his Bed of a long disease; yet presently they carried him before the Sheriff, who would fain have dismissed him, saying, That he was not the Man they sought for: Yet at the importunity of the Officer, he carried him away with him to Coventry till the Bishop came.

Master Robert Glover writing to his Wife about this his apprehension, faith thus, At the first sight of the Sheriff, nature a little trembled; but before I came to the Prison, through the working of God, and his goodness, my fears vanished: And when I was called before them I found little justice at their hands: But the less justice they shew, the more consolation I find from God, so that when I had been a while in Prison, I wept for joy, and gladness my Belly full, wondering much at the great mercies of God, and saying thus to myself; O Lord, who am I, on whom thou shouldst bestow this great mercy of being numbered amongst thy Saints, that suffer for thy truths sake! And thus, faith he, considering Gods infinite goodness, and my own vileness, and unworthiness of so high a promotion, I was as it were amazed for a while, and overcome with joy, and gladness, concluding thus within my self: O Lord, thou shewest power in weakness, wisdom in foolishness, mercy in sinfulness, who shall hinder thee from choosing when, and where thou wilt? As I always zealously loved thy truth, so I always thought my self unworthy to suffer for the same.

Master Robert Glover Letter to his Wife.

Joy in tribulation.

Whilest he was prisoner in Coventry some of the Aldermen would have released him if he would have put in sureties for his forth coming, but he refused it: And when they were gone, he said thus to himself, *I take God to record that I have from time to time moved all such as I conferred with to be no dalliers in the matters of God: But to shew themselves after so great means of grace, zealous, earnest, and constant in the truth, not giving place one jot to the contrary; and therefore if I shall withdraw my self, or by any shifts pull my Neck out of the Coller, I shall give great offence to the weak Brethren, and open the mouths of the Adversaries to slander Gods word, who will be ready to say, he hath encouraged others to be fervent notwithstanding any perils, but will give no such example himself: And therefore he thought it is duty, that setting aside all fear, and worldly respects, he should, by the mighty assistance of Gods Spirit, by his own example ratifie, and confirm what he had taught others, and with peace of conscience, willingly sustain whatsoever the Romish Antichrist should do against him. And thus he continued Prisoner till the Bishops coming, and then he was had before the Bishop, who amongst other things charged him for his not coming to Church, concerning which himself thus writes: *Here, faith he, I might have dallied with him, and put him to his proofs: For that I had been long out of his Diocess, &c. But I answered him, through Gods merciful help, that I neither had nor would come to that Church so long as the Mass was used there, to save Five hundred lives, if I had them. After some other conference the Bishop commanded Master Glover to be put into some Tower; saying, That he would weed out such Wolves.

His Confession.

A day or two after the Bishop would have Master Glover, and some other Prisoners to be carried to Lichfield, there to be disposed of at his pleasure. Whereupon Master Glover was much troubled, fearing that by reason of his sickness, and their cruel usage he should die in Prison before he came publickly to his answer:

He checks his infidelity.

answer: But, said he, I rebuked immediately, with Gods word, this infidelity of mine, saying, what do I make of God? Is not his power as great at Lichfield, as at Coventry? Doth not his promise extend as well to the one place, as the other? Was he not with Habakkuk, Daniel, and Jeremiah, &c. in their dangerouslest imprisonments? He hath numbered the Hairs of our Head. A Sparrow falls not on the ground without his will: Much more will he care for us if we be not Faithless, whom he hath accounted worthy to be witnesses to his truth, &c. These meditations so cheered up, and refreshed his Spirits, that hearing one say, that he could not get Horses for them; he said, Let them then carry us in a Dung-cart if they please, for my part I am contented.

They were sent forth of Coventry on the Friday in the midst of the Market, that so they might be the more gazed, and wondred at. At Lichfield they were delivered to one Jephcot, the Chancellors Man, who having the same night gathered a multitude to stare and wonder at them, had them presently to Prison.

Popish cruelty.

Master Glover he put into a dark narrow Room, next unto the Dungeon, giving him a bundle of Straw instead of a Bed, neither allowing him Chair, Stool, or any thing else to sit on. That night, saith he, God through Prayer, gave me great patience, so that if it had been his pleasure, I could have been content to have ended my life at that time. Yet afterwards Jephcot was content that he should have a Bed of his own providing: But notwithstanding his sickness, none were allowed to come to him to help him in any thing, neither were Pen, Ink, Paper or Books allowed him: only he had the comfort of a New Testament, and Prayer-Book, which he had privily stoll into Prison. Most of his time he spent in Prayer and meditation of the merciful promises of God made unto all that call upon him in the Name of his dear Son Jesus Christ. Yea saith he, I found in my self daily amendment of my health, increase of peace of Conscience, and many consolations from God by the help of his holy Spirit, and sometimes a taste, and glimmering of the life to come, all for his only Son Jesus Christ his sake, to him be all praise for ever and ever.

A Miracle of mercy.

His temptations and victory.

An excellent Meditation.

Indeed some temptations he was troubled withall, as that he was unworthy to be counted in the number of those which suffered for Christs and the Gospels sake; But he answered the Tempter thus, *Were not those whom God formerly chose to be Witnesses, and to bear his Name to the world, Men subject to the like sins and infirmities as other Men be? What have any of us but what we receive? Have we not all received of his fulness? They were no bringers of any good to God, but altogether receivers; They chose not God first, but he chose them first: They loved not God first, but he loved them first; Yea, he loved, and chose them when enemies, full of sin and corruption: He is still as rich in mercy, as mighty, willing, and ready to forgive sins without respect of persons to the worlds end as ever formerly. It is no arrogancy nor presumption in any to mind God of his promise, to challenge and claim his aid and assistance in all dangers and distresses; to call upon him in confidence not of our own works, but in his promises made in Christ, in whom, by whom, and for whose sake, whosoever approacheth to the Mercy-seat of the Father, is sure to receive whatsoever is expedient and necessary for Body and Soul in a more ample manner then he can either ask or think: He cannot deny his own promise, Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will hear, and thou shalt glorifie me. Psal. 50. 15.*

I answered the enemy also in this manner, saith he, I am a sinner indeed, and therefore unworthy to witness to his truth. What then? must I deny the Word, because I am unworthy to profess it? What shall I get hereby, but to add sin to sin? What greater sin is there then to deny the truth of Christs Gospel? as Christ himself testifies; He that is ashamed of me and my words before Men, of him also will I be ashamed before my Father, and his holy Angels. By the same reason I might as well forbear to do any of Gods commandments; These are Satans delusions which must be overcome by Prayer and by the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God.

Shortly

Shortly after, the Bishop coming to Lichfield, sent for him, who when he came and saw none but the Bishop and his Chaplains and Officers, he was somewhat amazed, wherefore he lifted up his Heart to God for his merciful assistance: The Bishop perswaded him to return to the Church of Rome, telling him, That his Church was not known till lately in King Edwards time: To which he answered, That he was a member of that Church which is built upon the foundation of the Prophets, and Apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the Head Cornerstone, and this Church, said he, hath been from the beginning, though it bear no glorious shew before the world, being usually under the Cross and affliction, contemned, despised, and persecuted.

His courage
and constancy.

The Bishop was so nettled at this, That he commanded him upon his obedience to hold his peace: Then did Master Glover desire him to convince him by the Scriptures: But he instead thereof, propounded sundry questions to him, which he refused to answer in private, but told him that he was ready to answer in publick: If thou wilt not now answer, said the Bishop, thou shalt to Prison again, and shalt neither have meat nor drink till thou hast answered me. Then Master Glover, lifting up his Heart to God desired that he might be enabled to answer according to the truth: And so they fell into a disputation about the Sacraments, how many they were, and whether Christ was really in the Sacrament of the Altar: After which he was returned to Prison, where he had divers conflicts with the Bishops Chancellor, and at last was brought out and condemned by the Bishop.

Two or Three days before he was to be burned, his Heart was very lumpy, and destitute of all spiritual comfort, so that he felt in himself no aptness, nor willingness, but rather a great heaviness and indisposition to bear the bitter cross of Martyrdom now ready to be laid upon him: Hereupon he much feared that the Lord had utterly withdrawn his wonted favor from him, and made his moan to a godly Minister that privately came to him, how earnestly he had prayed day and night unto the Lord, and yet could receive no glimmerings of comfort from him; The Minister exhorted him patiently to wait Gods leisure and pleasure, and howsoever his present feeling was, yet seeing his cause was just and true, he exhorted him constantly to stick to the same and to play the Man, nothing doubting but that the Lord in his due time would visit him, and satisfy his desire with plenty of consolation, whereof, he said, he was right certain and sure, and therefore desired him, that whensoever any such feeling of Gods Heavenly mercies should begin to appear in his heart, that he would shew some sign thereof, that so he might witness with him the same; And so he departed for the present.

on before
death.

The next day as Master Glover went to Martyrdom, and was now come within the sight of the Stake; although all the night before, praying for strength and courage, he could feel none, yet suddenly he was so mightily replenished with Gods holy comfort, and Heavenly joys; that he cried out, clapping his Hands together; Oh Austin (for so was the Minister called) he is come, he is come &c. And so went on with such joy and alacrity, that he seemed rather to be one delivered from some deadly danger to life, then one that was passing out of the world by a painful death.

His insatiable comfort.

In the same fire there was burned with him one Cornelius Bonney, a Capper, of Coventry, condemned by the same Bishop for the truth, which he cheerfully sealed with his Blood.

Cornelius Bonney

Master John Glover seeing his Brother apprehended for him, was so afflicted with sorrow, that he had small joy of his life, and would gladly have put himself into his Brothers stead, but that his Friends would not suffer him, shewing him that by so doing he might entangle himself, but could do his Brother no good; And thus he continued in much perplexity till towards the end of Queen Maries Reign; At which time there was a new search made for him,

Master John Glovers wonderful deliverance.

The Sheriff with his Officers came to his House, and bursting open the Doors, searched every Room for him; At last they came to the Chamber-door where he was, which was only latched, and he held down the Latch with his Finger; There one of the Officers had his hand upon the string to draw the Latch; but another coming by, bade him come away, saying, That he had searched that Chamber already, whereupon they departed, and went to search other corners of the House, and at last they found his Wife, and carried her away to Lichfield; where after much ado she was constrained to give away to their Tyranny

Popish cruelty
against the dead,

Master John Glover in the mean time, partly with care for his Wife, and partly by cold taken, when he was forced to lie out in the Woods for shelter, fell sick and died, and was privately buried, in the Church-yard. This the Chancellor hearing of, sent for the Parson of the Parish, and commanded him to take up the body, and to throw it into the High-way; The Parson answered, That having been buried Six weeks, the Body did so stink that none could abide the favor of it; Then said the Chancellor, Take this Bill, and pronounce him in the Pulpit a damned Soul, and at the years end, when the flesh is consumed, take up his Bones, and throw them into the High-way for Carts and Horses to pass over them. And thus though he escaped their malice in his life, yet could he not escape it after his death.

The like usage William, the third Brother found at their Hands, who dying at Wem in Shropshire, they would not suffer his Body to be buried either in Church or Church-yard, so that his Friends were forced to bury him in a Broom-field.

The like usage found one Master Edward Barton, Esquire, who departing this life the very day before Queen Elizabeth was crowned, the Popish Curate would not suffer him to be buried in Consecrated ground, so that his Friends were fain to bury him in his Garden.

Oliver Richard-dine.

There was also burned in Hartford-west in Shropshire, one Oliver Richardine, of Whitchurch.

William Wolfey
Robert Pigot.

About the same time William Wolfey, and Robert Pigot, dwelling in Wisbich, being apprehended for Religion, were carried to the Jail in the Isle of Ely: Doctor Fuller the Chancellor, with two other Doctors came to them in Prison, and said to Wolfey, That he was out of the Catholick Faith, and much more to the same purpose: Wolfey gave them the hearing a great while, and at last said to Doctor Fuller: Good Master Doctor, what did our Saviour, Christ mean when he said; Matth. 23. Wo be to you Scribes, and Pharisees, Hypocrites; For ye shut up the Kingdom of Heaven against Men, ye your selves go not in, neither suffer ye them that would to enter? Fuller answered: You must understand, that Christ spake to the Scribes and Pharisees. Yea, said Wolfey, Christ spake to you, and your Fellows here present, and to all other such like as you be. Then did the Doctor give him a Book to read, and so departed.

About Three weeks after he came to him again, and asked him how he liked the Book? Wolfey answered; I find it just as I expected. Afterwards a little before the Sizes, Doctor Fuller the Chancellor, came to him again, saying: Thou dost much trouble my conscience. wherefore I pray thee depart, and rule thy Tongue, that I may have no more complaints of thee, and go to Church when thou wilt, and if thou beest complained of, I promise thee so far as I may that I will not take notice of it. Wolfey answered, Master Doctor, I was brought hither by a Law, and by a Law I will be delivered.

Pigot was imprisoned for refusing to go to their Church: Whilst they lay together in Prison, there came to them the Bishops Chaplain, a French Man, called Peter Valentius, who said thus to them. My Brethren, I am come to talk with you, not to dissuade you from your Faith, but to desire you in the name of Jesus Christ, that you stand to the truth of the Gospel, and I beseech Almighty God for his his Sons sake, Jesus Christ, to preserve you in the truth to the end. And to this purpose he so enlarged himself, that he caused all that were present to shed tears. A few days after, these Two godly persons were called forth to judgment, before Doctor Fuller, Shaxton, Christopherson, and some others; who charged them especially for not believing in the Sacrament of the Altar: They answered, that it was an Idol, and that the natural Body, and Blood of Christ was not really in the same, and to this opinion they said they would stick, believing that the same was no Heresie, but the very truth. Doctor Shaxton said to them: Good Brethren, remember your selves; For I my self was of this fond opinion that you are, but now I am a new Man. Ah, said wolsey, are you now a new Man: Wo be to thee, thou wicked new Man, for God shall justly judg thee.

Wolsey con-rage.

After this, judgment was pronounced upon them both, and they were sent back to Prison: Upon the day appointed for their execution, one Peacock was appointed to Preach, after which they were bound to the Stake: Then came there one Collison, a Priest and said unto them: Brother Wolsey, the Preacher hath openly reported in his Sermon this day that you are out of the Catholick Faith: That you deny Baptism, and some part of the holy Scriptures; wherefore I beseech you for the satisfying of my Conscience, and the Consciences of some others here present, that you declare what part of the Scriptures you find fault with: wolsey answered, I take the eternal and everliving God to witness that I do erre in no point, nor part of Gods Book: But hold, and believe the same to be most firm, and sound Doctrin, in all points for our salvation, and for the salvation of all other to the end of the world, whatsoever mine Adversaries report to the contrary, God forgive them for it: Then came one and brought a whole Sheet full of New Testaments to burn them: O said wolsey, give me one of them, and Pigot desired another, which they clasped close to their Breasts: and so fire being set to them, they finished their course with joy.

New Testaments burned.

Their Martyrdom.

This wolsey was full of zeal, and so desirous to glorifie God by suffering Martyrdom, that being very ill in Prison, he feared nothing more than that he should die before the day of his execution, which he called his glad day, came. A Friend came to visit him in Prison, to whom he gave some money to be distributed, according to his appointment: And amongst the rest, he sent a noble to one Richard Denton, a Smith in Cambridgeshire, desiring his Friend to commend him to him, saying, That he marvelled that he stayed so long behind him, seeing that he was the first that delivered the Book of the Holy Scriptures into his Hand, and told him, that it was the truth, and therefore he desired him to make hast after him as fast as he could. This Six shillings and Eight pence being afterwards delivered to Denton according to his desire, together with the message which wolsey sent to him, his answer was: I confess it is the truth, but alas I cannot burn: But he that could not burn for the cause of Christ, was afterwards burnt against his will: For his House being set on fire, whilst he busied himself to save his goods, he was burned in the House with two others that were with him.

Gods judgment upon cowardise.

Presently after, Doctor Ridley, and Master Hugh Latimer suffered Martyrdom at Oxford, of whom see the story in my first part of the Marrow of Ecclesiastical History.

Doctor Ridley, Master Latimer.

About the time of the burning of these eminent Servants of Jesus Christ, a very remarkable judgment fell upon Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, and Chancellor of England, who having been an active instrument of much mischief in the Church, I shall here briefly set down his Story.

Gods Judgment on Persecutors.

He was born in Bury in Suffolk, and in his youth trained up in Cambridge, he had very good natural parts, especially a firm memory, so that he profited exceedingly in the knowledge of the Arts and Tongues, especially applying himself to such studies which had a prospect towards honor, and preferment. Yet together with these qualities, he had many, and great vices. He was very proud, and self conceited, crafty, and subtile, Towards his Superiors of a flattering, and fawning disposition: Towards his Inferiors, cruel: Towards his Equals, stout, and envious. He stood much upon his credit, and estimation. In his Religion he was variable, and changing, so that it was hard to say whether he was a protestant, or Papist. He was a great stickler about King Henry the Eighth his divorce from the Lady Katherine of Spain; whereupon he was made Bishop of Winchester.

Stephen Gardiner's life, and cruel death.

Gods judgment on Stephen Gardiner.

At the abolishing of the Popes supremacy, who was so ready to swear, so forward to write against the Pope as he? Afterwards, in emulation of the Lord Cromwells Estate, he was an utter Enemy both to him, and his Religion. In King Edwards time, he smelled of the Gospel and seemed to preach for it, but afterwards he turned from it, and became a cruel Persecutor of it to his dying day, for which he escaped not the just judgment of God in this life: For the same day that doctor Ridley, and Master Latimer were burned at Oxford, the old Duke of Norfolk came to Dine with this Bishop of Winchester: The Bishop deferred dinner till about Four a clock in the afternoon, at which time came one of his Servants, posting from Oxford to bring him the news of their death: Hereupon he came out rejoycing to the Duke, laying, Now let us go to dinner. The Table was immediately furnished, and the Bishop began to eat merrily: But he had eaten but a few bits, when a sudden stroke of Gods terrible Hand fell upon him, so that being carried from the Table, he was laid in Bed, where he continued for Fifteen days in such intolerable anguish, and torments, that he could neither avoid any thing by order or urine: His Tongue was swoln, and black, that his Mouth could not contain it, and his Body being miserably enflamed, he so ended his accursed life.

His profane nels.

John Webb.

In the beginning of his sickness Doctor Day Bishop of Chichester coming to him, began to speak to him about the merciful promises of God, and free justification by the Blood of Christ: To whom he answered, what my Lord, will you open that gap now? Then farewel altogether: Open this window to the people, and farewel altogether.

George Roper, Gregory Park, and two other Martyrs.

About the same time John Webb was brought before the Bishop of Dover, [Doctor Harpsfield] and some others, where such common Articles were objected against him, as against others, to which he answered, That he did believe that the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was left in commemoration of his death, and not that it was transubstantiated into his Body, &c. After which he, with George Roper, and Gregory Park, and Two other godly Men, were all brought forth together, who all constantly adhering to the truth, were condemned, and carried to the place of their Martyrdom: By the way they said divers Psalms. Roper at the Stake putting off his Gown, fetched a great leap; And so they all Three were consumed in the flames at Canterbury, abiding their torments most patiently, and rejoycing that they were counted worthy to suffer for Christs Gospel sake.

William Wiseman, murdered in Prison.

William Wiseman, a Clothworker of London, being cast into Lollards Tower, for the testimony of Jesus, was there, by the cruel Papists made away, and cast out into the fields, all being forbidden to bury him; yet did some godly Persons privately bury him in the night.

Master John Philpot.

At the same time Master John Philpot after much cruel usage in Prison suffered Martyrdom, whereof read the Story in my first part of the Marrow of Ecclesiastical History.

Thomas Whittle, Bartlet Greene, John Tudson, John Went, Thomas Brown, Isabel Foster, Joane Warne, Martyrs.

Anno 1556. They still continue their Bloody rage against the poor Servants of Jesus Christ, and in January, the first moneth of the year, these Seven Persons, Thomas Whittle Minister, Bartlet Greene Gentleman, John Tudson, John Went, Thomas Brown, Isabel Foster, and Joane Warne, were all burned together in one fire in Smithfield. The Articles objected against them were all the same. This Thomas Whittle was a Minister in Essex in King Edward the Sixths days: And in the beginning of Queen Mary was driven from his place; whereupon he went up and down preaching the Gospel, as he had occasion, and opportunity: At last last he was apprehended, upon hope of reward, by one Edmund Alabaster, and carried before the Bishop of Winchester in the beginning of his last sickness: The Bishop instead of rewarding him, asked this Alabaster, whether he had no Body else to carry such rascals to but him: Get thee gone, thou Varlet, out of my sight, said he, and trouble me with no such matters. Yet did this Alabaster, still gaping after a reward, carry Master Whittle to Bonner, Bishop of London and by the Bishop he was laid in the Porters lodg all night upon the bare earth: The next morning he sent for him to his Chamber and asked him many questions about the Sacrament, &c. to which Master Whittle returned such answers, as much angered the Bishop: whereupon he told him that he should to Prison, where he should be fed with Bread, and Water: And not content therewith, he fell upon him, and beat him with his fists, and then put him into a little Room, where he lay upon a Table Two nights: Yet saith he, I slept very soundly, thanks be to God.

Bonner buffeteth Master Whittle.

A few days after, the Bishop sent for him again, and gave him many fair words, appointing Doctor Harpsfield, to draw up some Atticles, unto which if he would subscribe, he should be dismissed. Doctor Harpsfield drew up the Bill very subtilly, only to this purpose: That he should detest all Heresies against the Sacrament of the Altar, and other Sacraments, and that he should believe the Faith of the Catholick Church, and live accordingly. To this Bill Master Whittle set his hand being much importuned, and counselled thereunto. The flesh, saith he, being desirous to have liberty, I considered not throwly, the inconveniences that might come thereby. But, saith he, after I had done it, I had little joy: For by and by, my Conscience told me by Gods word, that I had done evil, by so slight a means to shake off the sweet Cross of Christ. Oh the crafty subtilty of Satan in his members. Let every Man whom God shall deliver into their hand, take heed of them, and cleave fast to Christ: for they will leave no corner of his conscience unsearched, but will attempt by all guileful, and subtil means to corrupt him, and to cause him to fall from God and his truth.

The night after he had subscribed, he was greatly troubled, and through affliction of Conscience, could not sleep: For saith he, though I might have delivered my Body out of bonds, yet I could have no joy, nor comfort: but still my Conscience was tormented more and more, being assured by Gods Spirit, and his word, that through evil advice, and counsel, I had done amiss: And so, partly through my cruel usage, and partly through distemper of mind, I was very ill, lying upon the ground when the Keeper came: whereupon I desired him to send Doctor Harpsfield to me which accordingly he did.

When he came, Master Whittle told him that he was very much grieved in his Conscience, because he had subscribed: Adding, that his Conscience did so accuse him through the just judgment of God, and his Word that he felt an Hell in his Conscience, and Satan ready to devour him; and therefore he intreated him to let him have his Bill again, for that he would not stand to it. The Doctor courteously sent for it, and gave him it: Whereupon Master Whittle tore out his Name; and professed that now he was satisfied, and much rejoiced though he should die for it. After which he thus writeth: Being condemned to die, my Conscience, and mind, I praise God is quiet in Christ, and I by his grace am very willing, and content to give over this Body to the death for the Testimony of his truth, and pure Religion against Antichrist, and all his false Religion and Doctrine: And accordingly, within a few days after, he, with the other Six, sealed up the Testimony of his Doctrine with his Blood, which he willingly, and cheerfully gave for the witness of the truth. This Master Whittle is the Essex Minister mentioned in my first part in Master Philpotts Life.

His Martyrdom.

Mr. Bartlet Greene, above mentioned, when he was condemned, spent all his time in Newgate either in prayer, which he was much addicted to, or in Godly meditations, and exercises. When he was to die he went cheerfully to the place of his torments, often repeating this Distich.

*Christe Deus, sine te spes est mihi nulla salutis :
Te duce vera sequor, te duce falsa nego.*

O Christ my God, sure hope of health.
Besides thee I have none :
The truth I love, and fallhood hate
By thee my guide alone.

M<sup>r</sup>. Greens humility.

His charity.

He was a man of admirable modesty so far abhorring pride, and arrogancy, that he could not abide to have any thing spoken in his praise. When he was beaten, and scourged with Rods by Bishop Bonner, he greatly rejoyced in the same; yet was his modesty such, that he would never speak of it, till a little before his death, when he declared it to a bosom Friend. He was very charitable, and merciful, visiting, and relieving the poor Prisoners, that were with him in Prison.

John Lomas,
Anne Albright,
Joane Catmer,
Agnes Snoth,
Joane Sole,
Martyrs.

Immediately after followed in Canterbury, the Martyrdom of John Lomas, Anne Albright, Joane Catmer, Agnes Snoth, and Joane Sole. John Lomas being examined about his Faith, answered, That he believed so much as is contained in Gods Book, and no more. Agnes Snoth being examined about the Sacrament of the Altar, answered, That she believed that so many as received the Sacrament as Christ and his Apostles ministred it, received it to their comfort: But as now, said she, it is used in the Church, no Man can receive it otherwise than to his damnation, as I think. Anne Albright being examined about Auricular confession, and the Sacrament of the Altar, answered, That she would not be confessed; Saying that the Priests were the Children of Perdition, and could do no good by their Absolution. And for the other, she said, That the Sacrament of the Altar, was a naughty, and abominable Idol. The like said the other Two Women; whereupon they were all condemned: And when the fire flamed about their Ears, they sung Psalms till they resigned up their Spirits to God.

Dr. Cranmer.

Presently after followed the Martyrdom of Doctor Cranmer, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, the Story whereof you may read in my first Part of the Marrow of Ecclesiastical History.

Agnes Potten, and Joane Trunchfield.

Presently after in the Town of Ipswich Agnes Potten, and Joane Trunchfield were examined about their Religion, and their opinion about the Sacrament; whereto they answered, That in the Sacrament was the memorial only of Christs death, and passion: For, said they, Jesus Christ is ascended into Heaven, and there sits at the right hand of God, according to the Scriptures; And therefore he is not in the Sacrament: For this they were condemned, and burned; At which time, with comfortable words of the Scriptures, they earnestly intreated the People to intertain, and believe the truth of God, and not to trust the inventions, and devices of Men, and institutions of the Romish Antichrist: But to abominate him with all his Superstitions, and rotten Religion. In the fire they held up their Hands, and called upon God earnestly so long as life did endure, yielding up their Spirits with much joy and comfort.

John Maundrel.

His Study of the Scriptures.

About the same time, in the Diocess of Salisbury, John Maundrel of the Parish of Revel in Wiltshire, after the Scriptures were translated into English by Master Tindal, became a diligent hearer, and a fervent imbracer of the truth, delighting in nothing so much as in hearing, and conferring of Gods Word, always carrying a New Testament about him: And because he could not read himself, when he came into any Company that could read, his Book was always ready, and having a very good memory, he could recite by Heart most places of the New Testament: His Life, and Conversation was very honest, and full of charity: And thus he continued till Queen Maries days: And then when Popery was again restored, and Gods true Religion persecuted, he left his House, Houſe, and went into Gloceſterſhire, going up and down to ſuch as he knew feared God, and ſometimes remained as a Servant with ſome of them. At laſt he went to a Friend of his at the Vizes, declaring to him his purpoſe of returning to his own Houſe; His Friend would have diſſwaded him, but he told him that he muſt needs go home, and ſo did.
